The story is adapted from the book "Adios." It is of no concern how closely it has been followed. It's a western in costume, but with the costumes of the Spanish and Mexican era before 1850. Lots of riding, some shooting, enough love making and after the first 30 minutes Barthelmess becomes a Spanish Robin Hood, with the entire sympathy with and for him.

After the conquest of Lower California by the Americans, the Americans are disclosed as cheating and abusing the natives, stealing their lands through crooked land commissioners, and beating their prisoners.

Barthelmess returns to his parentless ranch, with his sister and uncle living on it. About to make a delivery of 3,000 head of cattle to the American land commissioner in the North, he is tied to a tree by the commissioner's orders, and as the commissioner starts to whip him with a belt the county's American sheriff intervenes and releases him.

Next is the big scene. The cattle are then delivered to the commissioner, but on a stampede. Animals wreck the small wooden built town as they stampede through it. But Barthelmess collects, nevertheless, for the delivery.

As a cattle stampede, the edge has been taken off by "The Big Trail," and the uniformity of the stampede isn't so hot. But it's a western scene that in its exact way has not been done previously and with a thrill as the cattle dash through the village.

Another and minor incident leads to the explanation of why Mexicans allude to Americans as "Gringos." This is involved in the secondary love roles, that of the Sheriff, Rennie, with Barthelmess' sister (Miss Nixon).

The finish is Barthelmess's ride on a horse down California to the Mexican border, changing mounts frequently, while pursued by a sheriff's posse for having killed the American land commissioner who had caused the shooting of Barthelmess' uncle and who had first drawn his gun on Barthelmess.

This story doesn't place the Americans in a very favorable light after the conquest of California, but it does give Barthelmess opportunities to be unusually heroic. Film is playing here in standard size, although it was also shot on Vitascope (65 mm).

As an action western of the first grade it should get over on its own. As a different sort of role for Barthelmess, who fits it, that makes "The Lash" in the saddle or on the ground. Sime.

ONLY SAPS WORK

Paramount production and release. Directed by Cyril Gardner and E. H. Knopf. Based on the play by Owen Davis and Donagh for the screen by Sam Mintz. Percy Heath and J. L. Mankiewicz. Rex Wimpy, cameraman. At the Paramount, N. Y., week of Dec. 12. Running time, about 70 minutes.

James Wilson	Leon Errol
Lawrence Payne	Richard Arlen
Barbara Tanner	Mary Brian
Oscar	Stuart Erwin
Horace Baldwin	Anderson Lawler
Simeon Tanner	Charles Grapewin
Dr. White	George Irving

Leon Errol and snap dialog freckle this picture with laughs, and most are due to Errol's handling. Excellent supporting case, with some good names, is an important contribution.

Frequently illogical, but always fast moving, this comedy should do fairly well for all houses.

Careful direction has eliminated much of the repetitious matter often found in themes of this kind. Stuart Edwin as dull-pan Oscar, the bellhop aspirant to a detective's rating, shares heavily on laughs. Anderson Lawler does a snob characterization which fits into the scheme of things.

For love interest, and incidental to the Errol antics, Mary Brian is teamed up with Arlen, when the latter is not working with Errol. These fast change-overs are an outstanding characteristic of the playwright, and the screen adaptors sacrificed none of them.

Truth About Youth

First National production and release. From the old Henry Esmond play, "When We Were 21." Directed by W. A. Seiter. Adaptors and cameraman not credited in press sheet. Loretta Young, David Manners and Conway Tearle co-featured. At the Strand, New York, week of Dec. 12. Running time, 62 minutes.

Phyllis Ericson	Loretta Young
Richard Dane, the imp	David Manners
Richard Dane	Conway Tearle
Col. Graham	J. Farrell MacDonald
Horace Palmer	Harry Stubbs
Mrs. Ericson	Myrtle Stedman
Kara, the Firefly	Myrna Loy
Hal	Ray Hallor
Cherry	Dorothy Mathew
Babette	Yola D'Avril

Still another of those pictures supposed to serve as the setting for popular young film players, but which turns out to be starving vehicles for subsidiary characters. A fairly entertaining old Esmond play and acres of pumped-up sexy billing are the tip-off that the sales department found the story too weak to stand on the scenario. As usual, the sales department is right. On the billing the film will do fairly well as hit and run, but adverse word of mouth bars it from week dates.

Original play was done on Broadway many years ago—around 1900, if you must know—with Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott and Harry Woodruff in the leading roles. It has been dressed up into modern guise, but it is still 1900 in essential ideas. Paint emphasis is put upon the night club angle and there is some under-the-surface stress on the wild youth theme, but the essence of the story is the ingenue's concealed love for her elderly guardian and the wild oat slant is merely a build-up for this phase. There never was any intent in the original play to stress the gay night life or youth's wildness. Another of those pictures that are mostly in the lobby.

Picture is nicely played. Miss Young makes an altogether charming heroine, playing satisfactorily a part that fits her. Tearle couldn't be improved upon for the handling of the old Goodwin part, but it was a mistake to give him so many closeups.

As the talker version unrolls, interest is somehow diverted to the Myrna Loy role of the cabaret hussy who lures the juvenile from his fireside and then gives him the gate when she finds he is poor, wrecking his happiness. A shrewd treatment of the play would have handled this unsympathetic character to alienate sympathy and it was a gross mistake to put it in the hands of a persuasive actress with several scenes where she seizes the center of the stage piece pretty closely, is no inshould monopolize friendly sympathies as rather sheepish onlookers.

Picture has been done in silent form, being released around 1916 by Paramount. This new interpretation which follows the original stage piece pretty closely, is no improvement on the inarticulate one. Rush.

SLEEPING PARTNERS

(ENGLISH MADE)

(All Dialog)

British International Pictures production and release. Based on French comedy by Sacha Guitry. Adapted by Seymour Hicks, who also directed. At the Colvin, N. Y., as half of double BIP bill, beginning Dec. 11. Running time, about 60 minutes.

She	Edna Best
He	Seymour Hicks
It	Lyn Harding
Emile	Herbert Waring
Elise	Marguerite Allan

Practically all of this action takes place on one set, and that action is mostly conversation. Posey, artificial and forced. It won't do for the States.

Seymour Hicks adapted and directed it, and so no alibi can be presented for his acting. An enthusiasm which quite often reaches such a peak that his voice nearly cracks, describes Hick's essay here. Probably if he hadn't directed that enthusiasm would have been restrained and his acting, although the best in the line-up, would have benefited.

FREE LOVE

Universal production and release. Herbert Brenon, director. Genevieve Tobin and Conrad Nagel featured. Adaptation and dialog by Edwin Knopf; scenario by Winifred Dunn. From Sidney Howard's play, "Half Gods." Hal Mohr, photographer. At the Roxy, New York, week of Dec. 12. Running time, 70 minutes.

Hope Ferrier	Genevieve Tobin
Stephen Ferrier	Conrad Nagel
Bush Bigelow	Monroe Owsley
Helena	Bernice Mack
Pauline	Ilka Chase
Judge Scruggs	George Irving
Dr. Wolheim	Reginald Lowe
Ada	Zasu Pitts
Dennis	Slim Summerville
Butler	Sidney Bracey

No action and extreme talkativeness makes this marital twister slide down running time. Lower pace before the midway mark and at the finish seems much longer than 70 minutes. That's its biggest handicap, besides the marital politic plot. Film early goes very much drawing room and stays there.

"Free Love's" strongest appeal should be for the women. But they'll not think so much of the gabby style either. The title and

Miniature Reviews

"For the Love o' Lil" (Col). Mediocre with a couple of laughs aimed principally for neighborhoods. Little action and mostly talk on marital angle. Main characters based on "Liberty" magazine covers.

"See America Thirst" (U). Will need strong support in big centers with others a question. Mostly slapstick on rum-runners and gangsters. Title may help.

"Free Love" (U). Conrad Nagel and Genevieve Tobin featured. A very talky talker, for women mostly if not only. Drags, and not a key week stander.

"Only Saps Work" (Par). Fast moving comedy and some well known names. Should do in most theatres.

"Under the Greenwood Tree" (BIP). No place for this in America except possibly in a few of the sure-seaters.

"Way for a Sailor" (M-G). John Gilbert starred, Wallace Beery featured. Cutting lessens picture's value. Where Gilbert exploitation is not likely to create interest, moderate grosses or less indicated.

Talking Shorts

WALTER CATLETT
"Aunt's in the Pants"
20 Mins.
Cameo, New York
Radio

If the producers intended a modern satire on "The Volga Boatman" they muffed in this pants pulling goofy piece that's fit for pop programs only and away from kids. Women also. Walter Catlett isn't given a chance and the photography and dialog can go by-by without a miss.

The most logical sequence is the finish where Catlett leaps through a window to get away from the whole thing. Idea had potentialities that were never realized fully. The humor is blunt and the laughs are forced mostly. Only one real laughter angle is when the psychopathic guards arrive and hustle all, or nearly all, to the hospital without asking. Shan.

"YOU'RE IN THE ARMY NOW"
Johnny Burke and Don Rowan
Comedy
19 Mins.
Loew's New York
Paramount

Quite a bit of production in this, and looks as though it carries more money than the usual output. It's another burlesque on the old army life. Just a new set of gags, with Burke carrying all the comedy. Plenty here to please better than the average, built on Burke's vaude monolog.

Burke uses a falsetto and dead pan to put his stuff over and it goes, despite that much of it isn't so humorous. Other bits are crossfire with the sarge, who is Rowan, playing straight. Also a military tap dance by three boys and bits of a male chorus in army songs.

Weave in one gag blackout that of Burke being sent out to bring in a wounded buddy on the front and returning to find out "how the devil do I put this gas mask on?" and a slapstick military drill, with Burke doing the drilling.

Finish one of those patriotic affairs, American flags waving, men marching, etc. Applause at the finish is for the patriotic splurge, not the short. Anyway, applause.

TOM DOUGLAS
"The Cheer Leader"
9 Mins.
Beacon, New York
Vitaphone No. 993

Fairy tale of college life. Kids will like it, adults will swing away from its incongruous continuity that has a Sanford football game attached in newsreel fashion. Photography is simple and recording okay. One set and cheap.

The cheer leader as played by Douglas might be. He is sick with spinal trouble and in love. The girl makes his room unknown as the boy is shifted to watch the big game from his dorm window. Ruminations follow. With his weak voice he encourages the team to victory on something like that. In ending he gets strong again through the same enthusiasm and everything is happy. Shan.

'IT HAPPENED IN HOLLYWOOD'
Comedy
18 Mins.
Circle, New York
Universal

An old-fashioned slappy. Swings on limp dialog and phoney zoo photography. As a surprise exhibit it's okay on pop bills if screened without warning. Recording is simple and photography fair.

A Peoria boob begins a studio visit in a miniature auto. He is chased by the studio cop through shooting scenes and scenic shots. Lions and circus ditto. Laughs, but they don't come consistently nor fast. Nothing new about it. Shan.

"TRADER GINSBERG"
Nat Carr
20 Mins. (Comedy)
Globe, New York
Radio

Familiar stuff in this and just as much that borders on the original. It is 50-50 in entertainment with some of the gags, including the swallowing of a miniature radio set by an ostrich, certain to get laughs from any audience.

A Radio magnate is trailed to his vacation spot, an African forest and lion shooting, by three inventors, including Trader Ginsberg, played by Nat Carr, the latter's expressions while riding on a camel are among the funniest.

"STRANGE AS IT MAY SEEM"
Color Novelty
10 Mins.
Cohan, New York
Universal

Looks like the beginning of a series. Multicolor process. Magazine novelty with an offstage voice similar to the newsreel method. Not up to newsreel standard regardless of color which will not add to value of the clips, providing they are carefully selected. Title of the series sounds as coming from a newspaper feature and may be linked that way. Filler.

This one has about four clips with the best shot, the last, of an Oriental magician spurting water from his mouth in real geyser fashion. First shot is scenic of Crater Lake in the Cascades. Of the other two one is of a bull calf with two mouths and three eyes, and the other showing a couple of hunters after goe-duck clams. These are long, bottle shaped shell fish that weigh around three pounds each. Shan.

"NO QUESTIONS ASKED"
Comedy
8 Mins.
Loew's New York
Vitaphone No. 4093

A comedy which shapes up as fair to middlin'. Idea is good and as handled this short is good for a giggle or two as one of the lighter comedy skits.

Wifey adopts a kid who is as precocious as they come. Hubby is fed up with the kid, for the youngster turns the house topsy-turvy and missus always blames him. Finally decides to teach the kid a lesson and hires a midget.

In the scuffles between the kid and the midge the latter gets the worst of it. Midge finally quits the job.

Midget does a good piece of work but wasn't seen as much as he could have been.

Rest of the support is okay.

'THE BLUFFER'
10 Mins. (Comedy)
New York, New York
Educational

This one, featuring Andy Clyde, hardly rates a showing in the daily changers, lacking comedy values of any worth and further handicapped by poor coloring.

Locale is a seashore resort with two young men suitors for Clyde's daughter, heir to his millions. One of the boys, who displays a chest full of medals, wins the support of the girl's father, with the other finally successful in showing him up as a phoney.

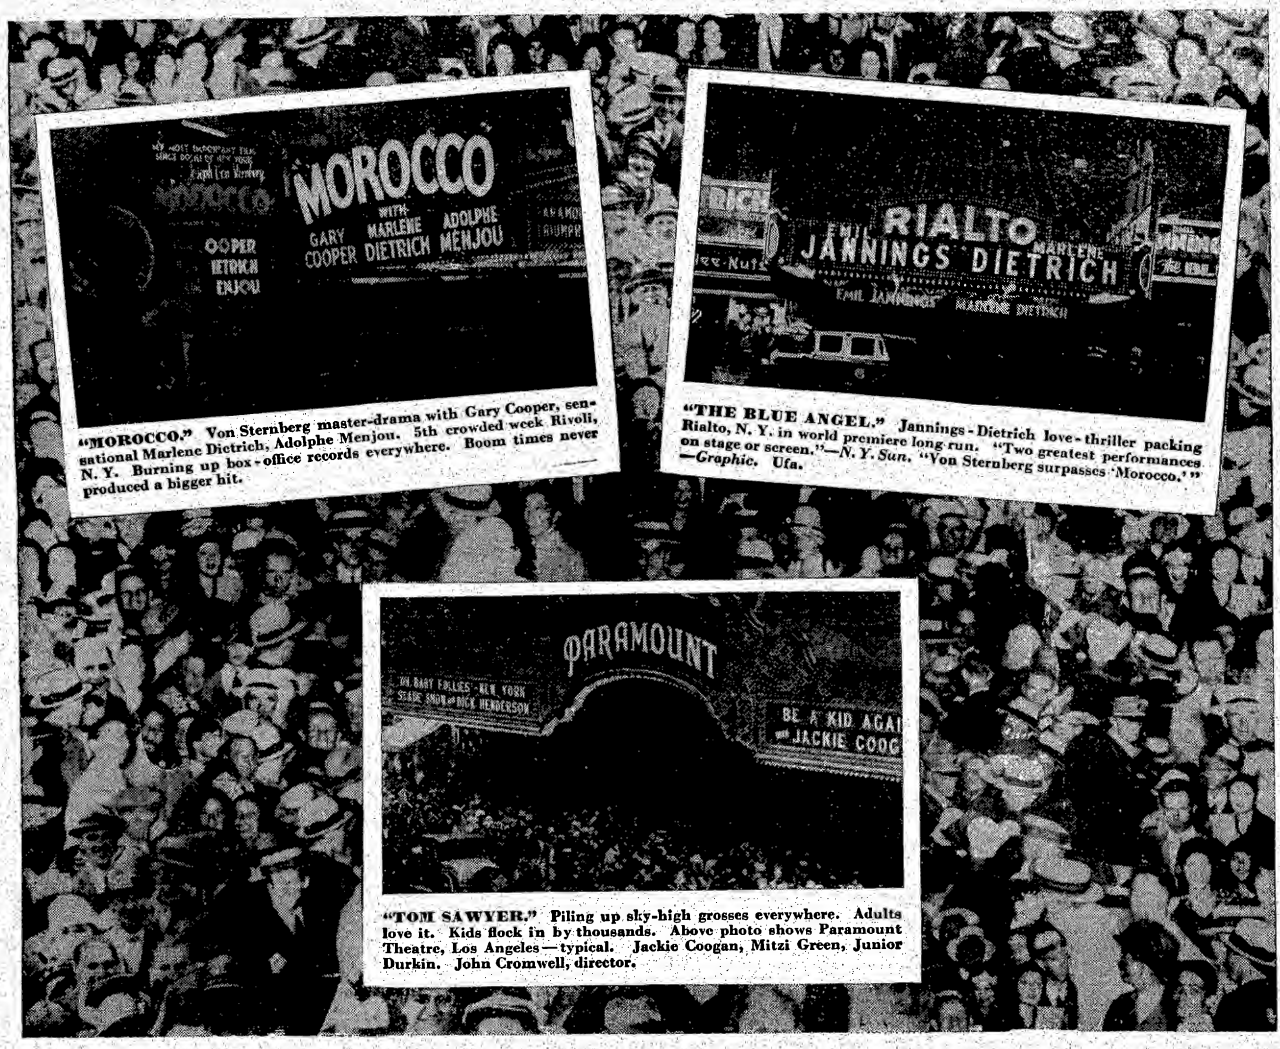
EDGAR BERGEN and Co.
"The Office Scandal"
Comedy
8 Mins.
Mosque, Newark
Vitaphone No. 1147

A travesty on Warners' own feature, "The Office Wife," this ventriloquial novelty holds enough laughs to qualify on any picture house program. It's Bergen's second comedy short for Vita.

In this one the dummy is a fresh kid applying for a job in an office. After being turned down several times he is finally given the job when he learns that the boss and the married woman, who is his secretary, are carrying on an undercover romance. Told to keep his trap shut, the kid spills the info to the husband, who drops into the office for a visit. That results in the kid getting air, but before leaving he turns to the group assembled in the office and bawls, "Aw, nuts!" Tag line used often in musical revues, drew a large quota of laughs here.

a take on the chin received by the wife from her husband should draw some interest. Not enough to get the picture over, however. Too often it is more of a long-winded phone conversation than an entertainment.

Wife is kayoed by the poke. It comes late in the running, after she has deserved it all along. Story is a mere matter of parting a couple with a wedge half comic and half tragic and then getting them together again. The director had a dead one to deal with and a couple of leads who are too lacking in color to loosen up a stiff yarn.



Conrad Nagel, doing a comedy stew, is something to ponder over. He doesn't do it well although capable the rest of the way. Not so Genevieve Tobin, from legit, and the other co-featured lead. After a short while Miss Tobin becomes a rather mechanical ingenue. Her cry scene on the phone is her best, and these sob things are the easiest of all histrionic emotions.

Nagel kayos his best friend when believing him a double-crosser before sorting his own wife. Otherwise Nagel was a lawyer with many problems and troubles of his own at home. The free love idea gets started after 24 minutes when the wife, following a quarrel with hubby, visits a psychoanalyst. He tells her to walk and live her own

AMBASSADOR

EXPLOITATION

This department is almost entirely made up of matter from "Variety's" own correspondents. Seldom are any of the exploitation notes sent out by the home publicity offices of the chains used here.

"Variety's" correspondents have been requested to report on all local press or exploitation stunts that fail or prove too expensive for results achieved, as well as those which get over.

Ordinary or expected exploitation not included in this department. Repetition in several cities also excluded, after first mention, unless new angle is later developed.

Popular Student Trips

Chicago.

Madeline Woods, Publix-Great States p. a., starts a free school kid trip advertising campaign through Illinois and Indiana Jan. 1.

Plan gives the 25 most popular high school students gratis trips to Washington, D. C., and surrounding points during the Easter holidays. Five of the winners also get free trips to Europe during the summer. All expenses being stood by the Emorp Travel Bureau.

Votes must be cast in the various theatres taking part in contest after holder has bought a ducat to see show. Merchants and newspapers in the various towns are also handing out ballots on purchases with these also having to be deposited after holder has his or her theatre ticket.

Plans are under way to extend the idea to embrace other Publix houses outside the Great States chain.

Free Xmas Tie-Ups

Chicago.

Tie-ups between toy and florist shops, by Publix Great States, is enabling the theatres to get their Christmas decorations without cost. Particularly true of the florist shops, which are decorating the lobbies and interior of the houses for the chance to pin their names in various spots on the holly.

Number of toy stores and manufacturers are allowing the theatres toys to be given as Christmas prizes by the various houses.

"Sunday Night Dinner"

Chicago.

At the Fox Crown (1,287-seater) in the Polish district, Manager Al Bachman has launched a "take-home-your-Sunday-night-dinner" gag for Friday and Saturday. About $50 worth of groceries, purchased wholesale, is divided into large bags containing everything requisite to a full course dinner.

Bachman also effected a tie-up on a pre-Christmas drawing for a four-piece parlor suite. Furniture company not only donated the furniture but also paid for 25,000 special tickets and a 212 foot trailer in return for the plugging of its name and address.

Good Will Benefit

Dallas, Tex.

Frank Starz, R-K-O p. a., tied up for a midnight show with WFAA for charity. Ducats at $2. Double program, vaude and radio stars, with fans getting chance to lamp popular aerial personalities. Proceeds for unemployment, with station peddling tickets.

Publicity plentiful and best benefit stunt of year. Everything free plus plenty of good will for house. Announcement plugged daily over WFAA for a week.

Portland's Dime Campaign

Portland, Ore.

"Bet a Dime on Oregon" to make a picture of the state for exploitation purposes is the angle of the Portland Ad Club which wired John D. Rockefeller for a thin dime and got it at the cost of $1.50 for the wire. So the Rockerfeller dime was put up for auction and sold for $50. Henry Ford's dime auctioned for $20.

Club figures that with dimes at these prices, it'll have enough dough by Christmas to make the wanted film for state boosting purposes.

Helping Xmas Mail

Dallas.

Successful last year, Publix has again made tie-up with W. B. Luna, Dallas' assistant postmaster, for a Xmas sub-station in the Melba theatre lobby.

Idea will be tried in other keys, such as Ft. Worth, Houston and San Antonio. P.O. execs are aware of the publicity medium for theatres, but don't kick as stations really help holiday rush. Stations only wrap and weigh packages, Uncle Sam furnishing the clerks.

Ambulance as a Gag

Pittsburgh.

In connection with "The Cat Creeps" (U) Stanley had an ambulance stationed outside the theatre for "use of patrons."

In daily ads, house also threatened to refuse anybody a seat during the last 10 minutes of the picture. Ran a trailer at feature's conclusion asking spectators not to reveal plot.

Always Welcome

Dist. Mgr. Doesn't Know, So Bandits Chase House Mgr.

Quincy, Ill., Dec. 16.

Sunday night (14) Perry Hoeffler, district manager for Publix, was held up by two armed men as he was getting into his car after leaving the Washington theatre. Hoeffler was told to drive to the north part of the city where they made him get out, took $45 in cash from him and demanded the keys and combination to the theatre safe.

Hoeffler told them he had no keys nor did he know the combination. Then the bandits compelled Hoeffler to drive back to the city, one keeping Hoeffler in the car with a gun poked in his ribs, while the other went out and drove what looked like a new car to where Thomas Robey, manager of the Washington, lives. When Robey came home, he was told Hoeffler wanted him. Fearing a holdup or a kidnap, Robey ran to his door where the bandit broke the glass and tried to slug him.

Hoeffler was then taken to a spot a few miles out of Jacksonville, 86 miles east of Quincy, relieved of the 60 cents cash he had and was left alone. He got to Jacksonville as quickly as he could where he notified the police and sheriff. No trace of the bandits can be found.

Last year Robey and Jansen, the stage manager, were held up in the Washington office and compelled to open the safe, resulting in a loss of $1,800.

U's Story Search

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Bob Harris, associate producer and scenario editor for Universal, will go east next week for story material.

U is after a flock of stories, experiencing a paucity in that direction. Harris's mission is to grab off as much as possible.

Denver Murder

Denver, Dec. 16.

W. J. Carter, 73, owner of the Jewel and Santa Fe theatres, here, was found murdered in his garage Saturday morning (13).

Robbery evidently the motive, as diamond ring and watch were gone and $20 was stolen from house.

Widow, Mrs. Catherine Carter, and son and daughter survive.

Niel as Col. Director

Columbia has engaged R. William Niel, former actor and writer, to direct a Buck Jones western.

Picture's title not set.

Novarro's "India"

Culver City, Dec. 16.

Metro has hired Lalla Hand Mehre as writer and technical adviser for Ramon Novarro's next.

Story, written by Alice D. G. Miller, will probably be called "Song of India."

Aileen Pringle In Western

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Aileen Pringle, former Metro star, has been penciled in as Buck Jones' lead in his next western for Columbia.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Universal is definitely off the French version of "Boudoir Diplomat," letting the cast go and scrapping the picture at a loss of about $20,000 after weeks of work.

Studio found difficulty in getting along with its French imports, as well as estimating that the production would run into more dough than previously figured.

U is probably off all French versions in the future.

Sayre's Troubles

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

George Sayre, who threw up his job in New York, to come out here believing he would succeed Bob Harris as Universal's scenario editor, has precipitated a show down with Verne Porter, U's eastern scenario editor, through Junior Laemmle. Sayre admittedly misunderstood Porter and came out here speculatively.

Al Lewis, of Fox, has offered Sayre an assistant's job.

Radio's Peak

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

With five pictures in production at Radio this week, the studio establishes its high mark in production for the year.

Pictures working are "Assorted Nuts," "Ladies for Hire," "Kept Husbands," "Private Secretary" and "Madame Julie." "Bachelor Apartment," with Lowell Sherman both featured and directing, goes into rehearsal next week.

Studio will average five companies working until after the new year.

Barrymore "Cheri Bebi" Lead, but Not Megger

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

When Lionel Barrymore is ready to go ahead on "Cheri Bebi" he will play leading role, but won't direct, according to latest plans.

Barrymore has been away from Metro on loan to Columbia for several months.

Quebec Passes "Angels," But Ontario Ban Stands

Ontario, Can., Dec. 16.

"Hell's Angels" was banned two months ago by the Ontario Board of Picture Censors but it has now been passed by the censors in the sister province of Quebec.

Production will be presented in Hull, on the Quebec side of the river opposite to Ottawa.

Can't Get Away

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Phil Goldstone, Tiffany production head, did not leave for the east Saturday (13) as planned. He is remaining here until completion of "The Single Sin," in production seven weeks, with most of the original cast changed since starting.

Goldstone expects to leave for a home office conference in two weeks.

Mayo Gets "Trilby"

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

As recognition for his directorial work on "Doorway to Hell" and "Illicit," Warners is giving Archie Mayo the meg on "Trilby," the John Barrymore opus.

Mayo has just returned from a three months' trip abroad.

Music for "Millie"

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Two song writers and two scorers are working on music for "Millie," Charles Rogers production.

Herb Nacio Brown contributed "Millie" and William A. Sullivan, also in the picture, wrote "I'd Love to Be a Geranium." Walter Lang and Ernest Klaphoitz are arranging the score.

Orntiz Out

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Samuel Orntiz, novelist, who had been a contract writer at Metro one year, was let out Saturday (13).

Preview Patter

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Sidewalk conversations after a preview:

"Well, that cutter certainly did make a bum out of me!...."

"What they did to my story!...."

"That shot in the trenches was my idea...."

"If that guy's a director, I'm Barrymore...."

"They said they could get along without gag men. See the results?...."

"It's gigantic; one of the best pictures we've made this year...."

"I'll bet they renew my contract after that one...."

"When they give me a story I make a picture. I liked this story from the beginning so I put my soul into the direction...."

"I dunno; it certainly needs something...."

"Our lab's o. k. But is that cameraman lousy!...."

"They can take my name off that credit title...."

"I says to him, 'You wouldn't listen to me, would ya'...."

"We'll see him first thing in the morning and I'll tell him that as your agent we want more dough. It'll be a pushover...."

"Your work was exquisite. I must have you in my next picture. By the way, can I take you home, or...."

"What it needs is more comedy...."

"Nothing happens after the main title...."

"You mean to tell me that mugg's gettin' three grand a week?...."

"A little cutting here and there and it'll be great...."

"Was that comic sad, I'm asking you?"

"Another name goes on his office door tomorrow...."

U Planning Ayres in "Baby Faced Killer"

Universal City, Dec. 16.

Warners "Doorway to Hell," for which Lew Ayres was borrowed from Universal, has prompted U to register the title of "Baby Faced Killer," with the Hays' office, with Ayres in mind for the name part.

FOX

WILL ROGERS

After giving a course of twenty lectures on personality, a noted psychologist saw Will Rogers on the screen. "That fellow," he said, "demonstrates in twenty minutes what I've been trying to say in twenty hours."

When Rogers was breaking into fame as vaudeville's cowboy philosopher, he'd often finish a story and a rope trick with the remark: "Good luck that time. The trick an' the joke came out jist even!" He made it look like an accident, but it's an art.

Everything that Will Rogers does is the perfection of casual, effortless, natural art. On the radio, as syndicated humorist and front page paragrapher, in musical revues and in movietone talking comedies, he captivates millions. He's an American habit and an international hit. Where there's a WILL there's a WOW!

Will Rogers was born in Indian Territory. Oolagah—which any baby can pronounce—marks the spot. He grew up without entering any beauty contests and became a ranch hand. When the steers failed to appreciate his humor, he went into vaudeville. Ziegfeld made him a star in the Follies. Today he is probably the most quoted writer in existence.

The advent of the talking screen beckoned him to a new pinnacle of fame. "They Had To See Paris," "So This Is London," and "Lightnin'" have permanently enriched the gayety of nations.

Film Stocks Join Slump

the turnover was above 1,800,000. At that rate the day's volume would have been nearly 4,500,000, instead of the actual figure of 3,430,000. It followed logically that support was being offered only to hold the market from a wide-open break, for which it seemed surely to be headed on the collapse of prices Saturday.

Support came into only pivotal stocks and a few specialties which had determined sponsors. The general run of shares made a pretty poor showing compared to the standards. Even many old time investment stocks broke to new bottoms and failed to come back before the gong. This applied to most of the leading rails and to some well-regarded issues which had done well up to then, but ran against urgent liquidation at last.

Speculative traders won't step into the long side on such a situation. The tradition is that major declines must ultimately go into a drastic shakeout—a sharp break on volume of 6,000,000 shares or something like it—and they won't be satisfied that the turn is near until that has happened. The longer the ticker reflects artificial stability, the longer will the speculative long play be deferred. Followers of that theory may be wrong in the outcome, but that's the way they feel.

Amusements at New Lows

Practically all the important amusement stocks hit into new lows for the year and all of them were in new low ground on the movement, accompanied by pretty heavy volume.

Most important was Paramount's quick drop to 36 flat, which is near its low in the crash of last fall, and its recovery from that dip to 37. Stock has determined support around these levels, support which seems prepared to take blocks as they come out. Monday the issue was pegged most of the time at the low of 36⅝ of last week. Nose dive of Par. from the high 40's to 36 has stunned traders in the film industry itself.

Only explanation at hand seems to be the uncertainty of earnings as the picture business moves out of its normally busy season into the gradually receding attendance of spring and summer. If that is all that is influencing the stock, it already has been over-discounted at current price levels, which at once creates the suspicion that something else may be operating against Paramount. What that can be is anybody's guess and nobody's knowledge just now. Idea is around downtown that there remains more stock to be taken up at 75 and 80 and this is advanced as a bearish argument in some quarters. The bearish angle isn't altogether convincing.

All that can be urged against the theatre buying transactions is that they were made when general conditions were better than they are now, but that same argument applies to pretty much all the deals that were made six or eight months ago in all businesses.

Loew's Movements

Loew was one of the stocks that still has defended its 1930 low, although on Monday, when it touched 42⅜, it was within a fraction of its minimum early in January of 42⅛. Just as partisans mustered strength behind Paramount the Loew crowd came through with support that stayed the drop and brought on a minor recovery to above 44. Stock closed the day with a fractional plus figure. The bear force arrayed against Loew appears from study of the ticker to be more determined than that operating against Paramount. Either that or there are defections among the Loew longs. Litigation between Durant and his brokers disclosed that at one time there were more than 16,000 shares of Loew in his brokerage account, the same account that was liquidated and that led to the law suits.

If that amount of stock in one account has been marketed since early October, it is easily to be seen that the issue has had plenty of pressure. It isn't apparent on the surface why the intricacies of the Fox and General Theatre situation should react against Loew, but that association has been a factor in the Loew decline. On its own merit, it doesn't seem reasonable that a stock which has just demonstrated its ability to earn $10 a share in a year, most of it in post-panic times, should be selling at 4½ times net, when the old measure of price to profit has always been 10 to 1.

In the instance of Loew as in many others, it is not a case of how good is the stock, but who has it and how far can he go in holding it up? Fox sank to a new low on the movement at close to 24, but of course its low for the year was the 16, touched when there was supposed to be imminent danger of a receivership. General Theatres was sold at 7 flat for the new stock and figuring its level at that price involves a new calculation. Low on the old stock was 14¼, which level now seems to be broken. Old stock is to be exchanged at the rate of one share of new preferred paying $3 and two shares of new common for each 3 shares of old common. With the new common at 7 and the new preferred at 27 on a "when issued" basis in Curb trading, the sum of two new commdn and one preferred is 41, which represents the three shares of old common in the exchange, or a price of 13⅔ a share on the former basis.

Columbia's Plunge

Columbia Pictures showed no disposition to move either way on the Curb, except by narrow fractions and in minimum dealings. It went to 16 flat Monday on one trade. Company is understood to be going on record high earnings and nothing is in sight to explain the tape performance, leading to the suspicion that manipulation is going on. In the absence of any bull demand it is a simple matter to let a stock drift downward by merely withholding bids.

Many inactive stocks have sunk far below their intrinsic worth since October, while in many cases company interests have kept nominal bids below the market in the hope of catching stock sold under pressure at an attractive price. Probably Universal is taking up as much of its old preferred $8 stock below 40 as it can get and holding it for retirement. Much of these old issues paying high rates are expensive in times of cheap money. Orpheum preferred is an example, and so is the old Keith preferred paying 7½.

Radio-Keith crashed through all lows since the panic Monday, being sold below 14 for the first time this year. Former low was 17½ except late last week, when it broke 16 for the first time. The fact that strong sponsors like that back of R-K-O permit their favorite to go to such levels is probably an argument that the necessitous liquidation is not yet completed. If, for example, the R-K-O clique were reasonably certain that pressure was near its end, it would do its best to get a short interest hooked in as high up as possible with the object of making them pay to cover. With stock overhanging the market, however, there is no point in maintaining upper levels and playing the goat for distressed longs.

Warners gave way to a new low at 12⅝, which almost equals the price of the old stock before it went into a zoom on the introduction of sound. Turnover was heavy, totaling 40,000 shares and stock coming out in steady sizable lots. Situation here is so confused by conflicting reports that nobody takes a position with regard to the stock, although chart makers maintain that the graph looks good anywhere from 12 to 15 for a buy strictly as a gamble.

Pathe's two issues went into new low ground, the common at 2 flat and the "A" stock below 5. Company's letter to the stockholders does not indicate what disposition is ultimately to be made of the duPont film option. The shareowners will vote early in January on the sale to R-K-O of all assets except the duPont interest.

Bonds suffered even worse than stocks during the week. Nearly all the issues previously under pressure receded to new bottoms. The list included Gen. Theatres, Pathe, the New Paramount-Publix and Warners, and on Monday the Loew debentures bearing stock purchase warrants were a fraction under its previous 1930 low. The debentures selling "ex warrants," however, held their previous level. Sale of the warrant-bearing bonds, of course, represents the decreasing prospect of making a profit from exercise of the privilege.

Summary for week endng Dec. 13:

Over 30% Midwest Houses Still Using Old Silent Trailers

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Though the last of the silent houses in the entire Midwest closed last week, more than 30% of the theatres are still using silent trailers. This is due to the fact that a large number of the smaller spots are using bootleg equipment for disc only, and can't afford the expensive disc trailers.

Iowa leads in this regard, due to the extremely numerous bootleg devices in that state. These theatres have been struggling along on disc product, but are rapidly being forced to install sound-on-film apparatus, as the available disc product keeps decreasing.

It is estimated that the silent trailer will be out entirely within six months, with the theatres switching to standard sound equipment when closing down for the summer months.

Modest Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Chicago, despite its rep as a gun town, is extremely modest.

During the recent showing of "Tom Sawyer" at the Chicago, the theatre used a moving cardboard cut-out in the lobby showing naked kids diving into the old swimming hole.

So many mothers squawked over the innocent display it was pulled after the first day.

ARMSTRONG JOINS WB

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Recently brought into the Paramount studio press department from the theatre end, Bob Armstrong has resigned to join the staff of Ralph Crabill, directing Warner theatres in New Jersey territory.

Armstrong left for New York Friday (12).

Building New Theatre

Quincy, Ill., Dec. 16.

Cecil Maberry, Chicago, and J. Weil, of St. Louis, have purchased the site of the old Star theatre, which burned Nov. 27.

They will build a modern picture house.

DRASTIC F-WC DEADHEAD CUT

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Over the entire Fox-West Coast chain the average of deadheads on passes is to be chopped to less than one-third of the present number. According to a compilation of the circuit's houses, the average on deadheads amounts to 1¾% of the average paid attendance.

This to be chopped to no more than one-half of 1% as a chain average, but will not mean that each house individually will be cut down to that.

Various key points like Los Angeles, Frisco and others now comprise about 60% of the total number of passes in their respective divisions, and naturally will not be trimmed to the low average.

Except for F-WC and other Fox exces, who'll get silver medal or card passes good for any house in the circuit at any time, all other passes will be in coupon form, that including papers, and will be good at only one house once weekly.

This is effective Jan. 1.

TORRINGTON START

Hobart Henley, who directed, finished it neatly. They're watching themselves make love on a film projected on a screen in the parlor by hubby. Figures on the screen embrace for the fadeout.

Zasu Pitts does her dumb housemaid in the usual way and for customary results, in this case the best laughs of the few in the picture. Monroe Owsley has a couple as the friend. Slim Summerville just straights in three shots for Miss Pitts.

Adult story received ultra-adult handling, construction and playing. So adult it fails to sparkle. Bige.

SEE AMERICA THIRST

Universal production and release. Directed by W. J. Craft. Features Harry Langdon, Slim Summerville, Bessie Love. Story and dialog by Edward Luddy and Vin Moore. Adaptation by C. J. Herwin. Photographers, Arthur Miller and C. A. Jones. W. E. recorded. At the Globe, N. Y., week of Dec. 12. Running time, 71 minutes.

Wally	Harry Langdon
Slim	Slim Summerville
Ellen	Bessie Love
O'Toole	Mitchell Lewis
Inspect McGann	Matthew Betz
Szumonl	Stanley Fields
O'Toole's Henchman	Lloyd Whitlock
McGann's Henchman	Dick Alexander
"Shivering" Smith	Tom Kennedy
Inventor	Lew Henry
The Attorney	LeRoy Mason

In the metropolitan centers this film will get its own laughs and support. Not an undue attracter, but a fair programmer. Picture looks as if it had been aimed at satire, but it pops travesty. Hitched together for farce, it pulls slapstick. That makes it curved for exploitation, with the romance angle not helping. Title should help.

Part of the story is great, at other times it is dull. More pantomime and less dialog for the Langdonian characteristics of misty eyes and pasty face would have created some subtlety that's wholly lacking. Instead, this system was used on Summerville. Langdon's voice is known through his shorts. This is his first feature to be released, and without too much talk he'd whizz by any time. He's from vaude, anyway.

Here he is a goofy hobo pal of Summerville, both being snapped up mistakenly for gangster killers and adopted by one gang to wipe out another. Funny things follow for complications, but the windup is blah. On the roof, where rival gang chieftains are imagined with French 75's, the film reverts to the old-fashioned hoke made acutely prominent by Harold Lloyd. Shows both Langdon and Summerville hanging in mid-air from the cannon mouths. There it's too long and half as much is more than enough.

Bessie Love plays the heart and has little to do. Summerville is the most serious histrionically. He acquits (as the biggest part, and on performance is okay.

Direction shows silent technique throughout, and is unmindful of the talker advent. Rub is that this system got reversed in the important sequences.

Maybe the fool that only one woman could have been used so slightly will hurt. Some cute stuff with unintelligible music also shown, but there seems only enough legit laughs to really punch for two and a half reels. Shan.

The Greenwood Tree

(ENGLISH MADE)
(All Dialog)

British International Pictures production and release. Directed by Harry Lachman. Thomas Hardy's work credited with story idea; Dodie Felce Green, continuity. At the Capitol, N. Y., as half of double bill, beginning Dec. 11. Running time, about 60 minutes.

Fancy	Marguerite Allan
Dick	John Batten
Shiner	Nigel Barrie
Phyllis	Lilly Shine
Penny	Robert Abel
Old Maid	Maud Gill
Parson	Wilfred Shine

If America had art theatres which went for antiques this might find a booking. Otherwise its booking opportunities are nil.

All of the old villainous mustaches and gadgets are in this one, as they should be, since it's based on the Thomas Hardy period of melodrama. But they've taken Hardy seriously for the screen, and that's why it occasionally displays some undesired comedy. Far too long, it reaches the height of tedium yards before the end. Waly.

FOR THE LOVE O' LIL'

Columbia production and release. Directed by James Tinling. Scenarist, Dorothy Howell. Adaptation and dialog by Bella Cohen. Cameraman, Ted Tetzlaff. W. E. recorded. At Loew's Lincoln Square, N. Y., three days beginning Dec. 10. Running time, 67 mins.

Wyn Huntley	Jack Mulhall
Sandy Jenkins	Elliott Nugent
Lil	Sally Starr
Eleanor Cartwright	Margaret Livingston
Mr. Walker	Charles Sellon
Mrs. Walker	Julia Swayne Gordon
Edward O. Brooks	Billy Bevan
Mrs. Gardner	Claire Du Brey
Chambermaid	John Standing

Mediocre programer. Story has taken two characters off the covers of "Liberty" Magazine, around which to weave the yarn. Simple dialog and lax on histrionics. The recording is good but the photography is off.

Some laughs, however, for the neighborhood fraus. Tale is about a young and bashful lawyer who wins a wife but has to be content with her crazy ideas on marital bliss imparted by one of her former boy friends, and a rich one at that. When hubby wants a house in the country, wife takes a long lease on a modernistic apartment with a bar and such things. A blonde Nemesis is included to help the plot but serves to make the chief character, the lawyer, more boobish without laughter.

Everything ends okay after a quarrel when the wife walks into her husband's hotel room and saves him from being pinched with the blonde as an intended plant for divorce action.

It may have been booth operation in this house, but it looked like bad cutting when the dialog abruptly breaks to begin anew on another scene at one point. But the big fault is that there is literally no action and the film is mostly talk. Mulhall is momentarily good while Nugent acts simply. Margaret Livingston, as the blonde, holds up, although not too strongly because she isn't given much opportunity for any real acting. Sally Starr, as the flapper wife, offers little for comment. Shan.

MEN OF THE NORTH

M-G-M production and release featuring Gilbert Roland. Directed by Hal Roach from story by Willard Mack. Screen play and dialog by Richard Schayer. Cast: Barbara Leonard, Arnold Korff, Robert Elliott, George Davis, Nena Quartaro, Robert Graves, Jr. Photography by Ray Binger. At Loew's New York one day, Dec. 9, as half double bill. Running time, 60 minutes.

Mildly diverting romance of the French Canadian wilds holding some fine shots of dog teams mushing through snowstorms carrying the Northwest Mounted. Rates as the better half of a two-ply program for the split and daily change spots.

Well balanced cast and good direction most of the way but the story lacks a sympathetic character during most of the footage. The final twist, which makes the villian the hero, apparently lacks the punch anticipated.

Louis LeBey (Roland) a Canuck trapper, falls in love with Nedra (Miss Leonard) daughter of a millionaire mine owner who visits his village in the snow country. Louis under suspicion of robbing messengers carrying gold, is being pursued by the Canadian coppers. Taking it on the lam he wins the love of the girl when he saves both she and her father in a snowstorm, as also the sergeant retailed to bring him in. Finally apprehended Louis clears up the mystery of the robberies by proving he is a half owner in the mine and was only taking that share of the swag that rightfully belonged to him. This sets everything for the final clinch.

Roland and Miss Leonard both turn in good performances ably supported by Arnold Korff, Robert Elliott and George Davis. Sammy Lee is given screen credit for the dances but all except a square dance held in a log cabin, which brings the love interest together during the early portion of the unreeling, have been scissored out.

IGDENBU

(RUSSIAN MADE)
(Silent)

Vostokkino production. Amkino release. At Cameo, New York, week Dec. 6. Running time, 79 minutes.

There may be a reasonable query on how come this film to a circuit house. One of Soviet's trick propaganda film with witless titles of a kind called "Shelley Hamilton," which begins to look like a native subterfuge the way his peasant-minded thoughts are slugged on celluloid under an American name. Slow moving, boring and outside of some outdoor photographic shots, mentally unwieldly as entertainment except to the slow witted and sluggish. It's a painful, resentful film record of how Soviet Russia must have harassed war-ridden and troublesome China with film propaganda.

Story is obviously faked and slanted to educate the coolies and nomads of China how Soviet took the long road to save a Mongolian tribe in the Tagia, or some place like that, in Siberia, from hunger and marauding Chinese traders and smugglers. Undoubtedly it would have cracked the ever wrinkling smiles of the poker-faced Chinese wherever it could have been shown. That it is shown in the U. S. is only Soviet's smirky way of saying "How!"

In that way it's the ricketts after all the comment that has been hurled the way of Sovietism to keep their patriotic film narratives on the innate goodness of Bolshevism to home. Were that done there could be no resentment. To shoot it out here will work havoc on Soviet's own aims in the way of a boomerang from even the half-intelligent. Nix as art.

No historical record is aimed for but obviously phoney situations on a planted romance of semi-barbaric Siberian couple to bring out the final flourish—the Soviet banner.

From it comes the gleaning that Soviet is turning tricky in its celluloid propaganda in peculiar times. This film begins as a travelog of Siberian life and for a part, is interesting that way although recalling other Russian films on the same outdoor angle. Wild animals in their lairs and a strange Mongolian tribe where tripping kids even smoke pipes.

If the Soviet film people intended this as an exhibition of its heart they muffed when showing the careless and pitiless way that the semi-barbaric tribe tracks and kills its game. Fish are shown gasping their last breaths in close up and the splinting of a small fur-bearing animal also. A young scion of the deer family is shot dead in its tracks. But here the scanty Russian women enthusiasts applauded the picture. That means maybe six. Monday—third day of film and house next to empty. Shan.

Das Land Des Laechelns

("The Land of Smiles")
(GERMAN MADE)
(All Dialog—With Songs)

Berlin, Nov. 28.

Richard Tauber production. Emelka release. Direction, Max Reichmann. Production management, Manfred Liebenau. Manuscript after operetta of same name written by Curt L. Braun, Leo Lasko and Anton Kuh. Photography, Reimar Kunze; sound, Lange. Recorded on Tobis. Starring Richard Tauber, Hella Krueth, Mary Losseff, Margit Suchy, Will Stettner. Running time, 102 minutes. At Capitol, Berlin.

This talker has really nothing to do with talking pictures, and one should lose as few words about it as possible. Producer, director, and authors have taken it as easily as possible. They have copied the well-known libretto of the operetta almost exactly, giving it a naive and most trivial frame.

If this picture will prove to be a financial success, perhaps even a big one, it will only be the result of the irresistible charm and attraction of that remarkable tenor, Richard Tauber. To hear this singer the public in the German province will certainly not fail, especially if it can be done for relatively little money.

But in this case could have been saved the big production cost—gramophone records would have done the same thing. Magnus.

(GERMAN MADE)
All Dialog

Ariel Film production. Deutsches Lichtspiel-Syndikat release. Direction, Harry Piel. Manuscript: Hans Rameau. Production management: Victor Klein. Photography: Ewald Daub. Sound: Charles Metain. Starring: Harry Piel. Cast: Hans Junkermann, Valery Boothby, Eduard von Winterstein, Olga Fried, Hermann Vallentin. Recorded on Tobis-Klangfilm. Running time, 87 mins. At U. T. Kurfuerstendamm.

There is hardly anybody who hasn't read in his early youth trashy literature such as the dangerous deeds of famous detectives and adventurers. The equivalent to such books is Harry Piel, in German pictures for years.

Harry has now appeared for the first time in a talker and his sonorous, manly voice is sure to delight young girls and boys and a large portion of the laboring people. What does it matter that this screen adventure is the product of fanciful visions by Hans Rameau and that the happenings represent unreal stupid utopia?

PUBLIX-U. A. QUIBBLE ON TERMS

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Possibility of a sharp battle between Publix and United Artists follows the first break between Publix-Great States and the producing organization on their inability to get together on terms for three ace towns, Rockford, Joliet and Waukegan.

Publix-Great States holds the United Artists franchise in each of these spots. Agreement is understood to be a guarantee and 25% split in the "A" houses. United Artists is reported to have squawked about that part of the agreement by which Great States can buy the pictures outright at the price of the guarantee plus 10% of that figure. At present there is no deal as far as these towns are concerned, although there is a contract, dated, it is said, from 1928.

Meanwhile, there are several reports among film men that UA is set to go into theatre operation for itself, in the midwest rumors are likely based on UA's announced Coast building intentions.

Dallas, Dec. 16.

Growth of neighborhood houses in Texas is becoming alarming to the major theatres. Recent statistics show 39 houses operating in Texas' four keys, Dallas, Houston, San Antonio and Ft. Worth. Dallas tops the list with 18 neighbs and two under construction. Three year ago the town had 12.

Of these 39, indies operate 38, with Publix retaining the only circuit operated suburb site, the Arcadia in Dallas. In San Antonio, five of the nine neighborhoods cater exclusively to the Mexican element. Houston, the state's largest city, has only six suburbans. Ft. Worth, smallest key town, has six, with one dark.

The alarming feature is that most of these houses operate on a 20c scale, which is anywhere from 30 to 40 cents less than the downtown houses. Many exhibs are organizing small chains, ranging from three to five houses, employing a regular p. a., house managers, etc., and playing heavy for the community angle. In Texas, where not so long ago many cities were still "communities," this tangent means lot in show biz for this sector.

Pioneer in Texas neighborhoods was the Dent circuit, now part of P-P. Louis Dent spent a wad of dough on his pet idea, and now the indies are beginning to profit from it.

Fire Beats Sun. Ban

Lake Mills, Ia., Dec. 16.

It required a fire, which destroyed the projection equipment in the Irving theatre, the only picture house in town, to defeat the Sunday ban. Management stood pat on its declaration that no repairs would be made or effort to reopen the house started unless the ban were removed.

In a referendum 562 votes were cast and the repeal proposition carried by four votes. The house will reopen at once.

Balto Staff Changes

Baltimore, Dec. 16.

Shift in Loew managerial staff here with S. E. Gosnell, manager of the Valencia, going to the National in Richmond, Va. He is succeeded at the Valencia by Joseph Cavanaugh, formerly assistant at the Stanley.

INDIE'S TELEGRAMS

Wires Signed Joe Brandt Try to Queer Fox-Publix Deal

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

A Joe Brandt, not of Columbia Pictures, but presumably an agitating indie exhibitor out here (although no one seems able to place him locally), is broadcasting telegrams to all independent exhibs to protest to the Dept. of Justice against the Fox West Coast deal with Publix.

Brandt calls attention to an alleged monopoly of Paramount product in FWC, mentioning the number of states it embraces, and adds that "powerful utility interests" are also involved.

$100,000 BLAZE

Dallas, Dec. 16.

Texas', new Robb and Rowley house opened in Palestine, was destroyed by fire last week. Damage around $100,000 with most of it covered by insurance. Execs announced it will be rebuilt soon.

Theatre was a model house of the indie wheel.

Receiver's Report

Shamokin, Pa., Dec. 16.

First report, covering the March-November period of Stephen L. Gribbin, Shamokin banker and attorney, as receiver for the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, has been prepared for the courts. Chamberlain company operated a string of coal region theatres and got into difficulties last winter.

Company, in the receiver's hands, in seven and a half months, totaled receipts of $265,747; expenditures, $236,903; balance, $28,844. Costs of receivership to date and expenses, $45,140.

KIDNAP MANAGER

Galesburg, Ill., Dec. 16.

Kidnapped from his home as he was about to put his car in the garage by two bandits, Edward Toerpe, manager of the Orpheum, was forced to return to the theatre with the holdup men and open the safe. There was only $100 in the safe.

Bandits forced Toerpe to accompany them as they drove to Peoria, putting the theater man out of the machine near the city limits.

Audience Wanted to Stay and Watch Fire

No panic. In fact it was with difficulty that some of the spectators could be persuaded to leave the building. They wanted to stay and watch the fire.

Besides the loss of projection machines and sound equipment inside the booth, furnishings of the theatre were damaged by water. Loss placed at several thousand.

House, operated by Phoenix Amusement Co., will be closed two weeks.

$150,000 BLAZE

Ottawa, Ill., Dec. 16.

Gaiety theatre was destroyed by fire, with loss of $50,000, night of Dec. 9. Fire starting in a beauty shop, adjoining, made headway in the theatre before it was discovered.

An explosion followed, and the block of six shops and stores was soon a mass of flames. Total loss will exceed $150,000.

No Garage Fate for House; Stockholders Will Try Operating

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Stockholders of the Ambassador theatre, on the West Side, are going into show business on their own. Have taken over the theatre and will open it with pictures Christmas Day.

House has had a hectic career as a stock spot. Has been closed for some time, and has been threatening to go garage or golf.

Will be managed by Dave Rice, indirectly related to the Balaban family.

Fashion Laboratory First Step in RKO Idea for New Act Incubator

R-K-O's Fashion Bureau is working on two innovations which Mrs. Mindlin believes will greatly facilitate the work of her department and, in the long run, will stimulate a new and far-reaching interest in vaudeville.

In the near future she hopes to have a lighting studio adjacent to her office in the Palace Theatre Building. On a stage fitted with miniature lighting equipment, it will be possible to study the effect of light upon color, to find out if a gown and make-up, under certain lighting, will melt into the background or be thrown into relief that quickens audience attention.

This will be the first step in the establishing of the production department Mrs. Mindlin dreams of. She hopes, one of these days, to have R-K-O turn over to her an old, untenanted theatre as an experimental studio.

Varied Aids at Hand

This will be Vaudeville's workshop. The stage will be available to actors desirous of working up new material, eliminating the present necessity of orginating in dingy rehearsal quarters and hall bedrooms. Musical and dance directors will be available for advice, tightening routines, making them click. A writing staff will be on tap for the origination of topical skits and novelties. Construction will be stimulated by localizing it in one center.

"The trouble with vaudeville today," said Mrs. Mindlin, "is that it has ceased to create. It is a succession of stereotyped acts, built on the same pattern, using the same methods and duplicating material. Novelty acts and topical skits that really answered the description of "Variety" have gone into limbo. Vaudeville needs new ideas. They can't be generated merely by talking about the need of them. They must be the outcome of definite action to stimulate interest.

"No artist can see his material from the audience viewpoint—he's too close to it. He needs to be told how to improve his ideas and encouraged to stop copying and start to originate."

The second idea is more immediate and may, at first, meet with the disapproval of vaudevillians. Mrs. Mindlin hopes to incorporate in the contract of any actor given a long route, the stipulation of a complete change of wardrobe for the last half of the tour.

Fresh Dress Needed

"By the time a show reaches the West, it is shoddy. Out-of-town audiences rightfully resent the fact that they are given second best. At the end of a long route costumes are necessarily worn. Substitutions of fresh costumes should be made.

"This will not entail greater expense. Acts now spend anywhere from $100 to $200 for costumes, which many times, are not worth half that amount. With the connections I have made through my department, I can get them better costumes at a maximun price of $75. If acts will come to me first, I can get them a double wardrobe for the price they pay now for their present, and sometime ill-chosen, ones."

Through the critics department, a national R-K-O organization formed to co-operate with the New York Fashion Bureau, Mrs. Mindlin is enabled to check up on costumes throughout a route. College girls in each town where R-K-O has a theatre are appointed critics who catch the show from the audience viewpoint and comment on the general condition of wardrobe, making costume improvement nation-wide.

NAVARRA'S RETURN

After trying the brokerage biz for three years, Leon Navarra is returning to the stage.

$10,000 HOTEL SUIT

Ejected From Room, Dancer Says Lady Was His Wife

Leland Frank Mattison, vaude dancer, professionally known as Leland Frank, has started suit against the Hotel Manger, New York, asking $10,000 damages, through his attorney, Julius Kendler, for "mental anguish" caused him when he was ejected from his room in the hotel. In addition to the ten grand judgment sought by Frank, he also requests return of $2.50 he paid for the use of the room.

Frank charges he paid for the room in advance and that while his wife and several other people were visiting him two employees of the hotel forced their way in and accused him of improper conduct, ejecting him from the room and later from the lobby.

Denying alleged accusations and declaring the lady with him was his wife, Frank claims the distress and humiliation can only be soothed by a judgment of $10,002.50.

Dallas Drives to Keep Benefits for the Poor

Dallas, Dec. 16.

Charity graduated into a racket in this town. The unemployment relief committee has put thumbs down on benefit tie-ups outside of those indorsed by itself and the mayor.

Attack is aimed at press agents and promoter who take advantage of the percentage benefit idea with their cut sufficient for plenty of gravy. Committee was swamped with propositions after the initial week.

New ruling limits any benefit, outside relief agencies, to regular theatres.

Harry Howard's Doubling

Harry Howard, the vaude comic, invested his dough some time ago in a fleet of taxicabs and three big limousines as a side line. After operating them for the past two years at a loss, he sold the flock of them and is now doubling as a clothier and haberdasher with his first store on the lower east side, New York.

Howard plans another store for Times Square.

GIRL'S DEATH SUICIDE?

Dallas, Dec. 16.

Dorothy Birdwell, chorus girl from New York, committed suicide here last week, despondent, police say, over a head injury received in an auto accident several years ago. Her body was found by road workers under a lonely bridge, a bullet wound through her heart. Home was here.

She had worked mostly in musicales and vaude units.

$250 FINE FOR KID ACT

Birmingham, Dec. 16.

Vernon Reaver, manager of Ritz here, was fined $250 on a charge of violating the child labor law by permitting Baby Rose Marie Kelly, 6, to appear in person.

Case will be appealed.

Bachman at Saranac

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Fred "Bones" Bachman left Thursday to join the N. V. A. Sanitarium colony at Saranac, New York. He has been at the Winfield Sanitarium, near Chicago, for the past couple of years.

Previously Bachman was a producer and dance director for numerous cafes around Chicago, including Marigold Gardens, and also managed the House of David band. He is a brother of Dan Bachman of "Variety's" Chicago staff.

INLAND AGENTS' NICE LIVING

Smaller Profits, but It Means Something—Position in Community—Good Times — Independence—Reward for Initiative

MAYBE AN OUT?

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Slow starvation in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, or comfortable independence and decent living in the smaller inland capitals is a proposition that's beginning to interest some of those who are feeling the squeeze of the big city booking organizations.

That good incomes can be obtained without any particular cash investment in such provincial spots as Indianapolis, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, Cincinnati, Toledo, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, etc., is best proved by the fact that many are already doing it.

An analysis of the revenue and the methods of the inland showmen, most of whom are entirely unknown outside their particular territory, indicates, however, that it's quite a different set-up from the aforesaid New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

Private entertainments, clubs, stags, possibly a few Sundays for vaudeville, conventions and county fairs are the sources from which the bush leaguers derive their living. It requires patience, plugging, salesmanship and business acumen, but it is generally quick and sure pay, a minimum of competition and most of the big burg headaches are missing.

Additionally, an income of from $5,000 to $10,000 a year means something in these inland spots, where in New York and Chicago the same sum amounts to just getting by. There are, of course, the disadvantages of the small town, the dearth of theatrical associations. This is pretty well counterbalanced by the economy angle.

Personality Counts

Appearance, affability, personal trustworthiness are real assets in these towns, while the opposite is apt to be a liability. It's almost necessary to have a social grace or two and be able to meet and mingle with nice people in their homes. Old-time sloppiness in speech, manner and dress doesn't jibe. Those who are now forging ahead in these towns are generally well groomed and smart conversationalists whom everybody knows and likes.

Unlike show business in the big burgs, the dealings of the inlanders are chiefly with non-theatrical persons. Merchants, bankers, realtors, farmers are the principal customers. They are accustomed to transact business with dignity and ethical standards.

Acts Scarce

A major trouble is getting acts. Particularly on an occasion like New Year's Eve the amusement purveyors are desperate for the means to fill their bookings. Almost every small town hotel, not to mention those in the provincial capitals themselves, want a cabaret on this night, with the result that every amateur in the community is sure to work at least once a year.

County fairs continue to be fairly profitable, although it's well known that the big state fairs are on their last legs. Some of the agencies book as high as 40 or 50 turns over a circuit of fairs every autumn. Inquiry establishes that whereas the big Chicago fair agents were badly nicked this year by "welshing" fairs, the smaller agents in St. Paul, Detroit, Kansas City, etc., had little or no difficulty in collecting.

Ideal set-up for the inland

District Atty. Finally Hears About Some Indie Vaude Booking Methods

Among rackets under investigation by District Attorney Crain and his Committee of Public Safety in New York is one involving the workings of theatrical agents representing vaude acts and bookers. The district attorney became interested in this racket as a result of numerous letters from performers who claim they have been swindled repeatedly. The prosecutor refused to divulge the names of the complainants or the persons against whom the charges stand, but explained how the swindle is carried on.

An act engages an agent to book it out of town. The agent obtains a week at some theatre and gets his percentage before the performer receives his money. The booker for the house demans a cut and before the first performance the actor has already paid out a large slice before receiving a cent in salary.

According to the many letters received by the district attorney, the manager of the theatre at the end of a week is often unable to pay the acts and a result is that the performers are not only out the salary he contracted for but also the agent's commission and booker's cut.

The complainants claim agents and bookers have been carrying on this form of graft for some time and contend that although the bookers and agents demand and receive their percentage they don't bother to investigate to find out if the management of a theatre is financially sound, so that the salary contracted for by the act is assured.

One act, according to a letter received, including 15 people, was engaged at a salary of $2,200 for a week. At the end of the week the manager of the act received $200, the theatre being unable to pay the remaining $2,000.

Labor Note

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Success of an act here is judged by the number of requests the house manager gets for free showings at picture parties.

Can't Find Solution For Farnum Vanishing Into Desert Wastes

Mysterious disappearance of Ralph G. Farnum into Death Valley, Cal., as reported Sunday to Police Commissioner Mulrooney of New York by the sheriff of Death Valley Junction, was a complete shock to the agent's intimate friends in New York.

Conflictions between advices possessed by Farnum's eastern friends and the report of the Death Valley authorities made any solution more difficult. General belief is that Farnum, wanting solitude, went deeper into the desert than is considered safe and will return when ready.

The Death Valley sheriff informed Mulrooney that Farnum, riding a burro, went into the desert in November. Several days before word of his disappearance was received in New York the burro was found wandering on a street in Furnace City.

Farnum's office in New York last heard from him a little over a week ago. That discounts the story that Farnum has been lost or away from civilization since November. Reports that the agent had seemed despondent or depressed in recent letters to friends could not be checked.

West in October

Farnum, about 34, has been suffering with severe sinus trouble for the past two years. This has kept him in a highly nervous state. For that reason he had the bedroom sound-proofed in his New York apartment. Before leaving for the west in October, Farnum leased the apartment to Irving Tishman and

Agent Doubles

Arthur Ashley, former legit leading man who quit the stage about two years ago to become an agent with the William Morris office, is back acting this week with George Bancroft at the Paramount, New York.

The day before Bancroft opened at the Broadway picture house it was found necessary to add an opposite heavy to his troupe. With no one else available on short notice Ashley, as a member of the agency which booked Bancroft for the date, stepped in.

Denver Mystic's Error

Denver, Dec. 16.

Tajmah, former Denver mystic, was arrested in San Francisco and probably will be returned here to face charges of operating a confidence game.

He broadcast over local stations and his "off-the-air" name hereabouts is Gordon H. Bryant. It is alleged an investor gave him a block of stock to sell and he left town without an accounting.

Hurt in Subway

Mrs. Herbert Faye, former partner and wife of Herbert Faye, vaude, threatens action against the B.M.T. over injuries received in the subway station at 49th street and Broadway.

Mrs. Faye alleges that on Dec. 7 she tripped on the stairs of the station and suffered bodily injuries.

Mildred Roselle's $330 Fox Judgment Stands

Fox Brooklyn theatre's appeal against the judgment for $330 secured by Mildred Roselle, vaude singer, last May, was denied by Municipal Court, New York.

Judgment was increased to $400 for costs on the appeal.

"Keep Vaude for Town's Good," Is What DeKalb, Ill., Merchants Ask

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Fargo theatre in De Kalb, Ill., is now definitely set a policy of vaude and pictures after an attempt to do away with the weekly stage show almost resulted in a municipal revolution.

After four weeks of vaude the managers decided to test the public's actual demands, and cut off the acts for one week. The town literally blew up. A large number of the citizens drew up a petition protesting against the slicing of vaude and threatened to boycott the theatre entirely.

Main street merchants also got together for a petition and solemnly advised the house to return to its vaudfilm policy for the good of the city, stating that the acts brought into town hundreds of weekly visitors from the neighboring sticks.

Fargo is independently operated against Publix opposition at the Egyptian.

Chicago, Dec. 16.

William Jacobs, the R-K-O agent, left Chicago suddenly today (Tuesday) to catch the "Moroni," sailing Dec. 20 from San Francisco for the South Seas.

On a previous trip Jacobs lined up an unusual native attraction, a troupe of fire-walkers. His present hurried trip is on cable advices to close the deal and arrange to bring the act to America.

HALEY AS ST. LOUIS M.C.

Jack Haley goes into the Ambassador, St. Louis, as m. c., starting Dec. 26. The engagement is for six weeks with a six weeks' option. Haley replaces Harry Rose at this house.

R-K-O SCRAPPING B'KLYN BILLPOST PRINT PLANT

R-K-O will dispense with its Brooklyn bill posting plant, a relic of the days when the circuit was Keith's and later Keith-Albee, at a saving of about $75,000 annually.

When vaude abounded in New York and the east the circuit-owned plant paid for itself as printer of advertising sheets. Since R-K-O commenced to drift from the billboard form of ad display the Brooklyn undertaking has been a losing proposition.

Rather than maintain it at a loss, or run it for public printing, R-K-O will let it go altogether.

Units' Pamphlets

Detroit, Dec. 16.

Weekly issue of a mimeographed pamphlet, in the form of a house organ and entirely written and published by members of the troupe, is being done by some of the Fanchon & Marco units. Written on only one side of the paper, and consisting of four sheets counting the cover, one page is sold as advertising to one of the acts on the bill.

Features are gossip about the members of the unit and the towns played. Another is the inside info dept. Advice to the lovelorn is also not neglected.

Joe Rose, acrobat with the "Rhythmatic" unit, is the editor, and Bert Lloyd, dancer, is the assistant.

Brooklyn Par's Lobby Act

ILL AND INJURED

Mildred Cozierre, who collapsed at the Gotham (Bronx) during a song, recovering from an attack of influenza.

Mrs. William A. Fields, wife of the press agent for Green & Gensler, was operated on Dec. 12 at the French Hospital, New York.

Ray O'Connell, St. Paul R-K-O city manager, recovering from auto crash injuries but not yet out of danger. He suffered a fractured skull a week ago.

Mrs. W. H. Crane, widow of William H. Crane, is in a Los Angeles sanitarium for dietary treatment.

Eugene Dale has recovered from pneumonia, and little Dorothy Dale is still sick with grip and tonsilitis. They are the children of Johnny and Loretta Dale (vaude).

Elbrown (vaude) was operated upon for appendicitis in French Hospital, N. Y., last week. He's with the Norman Thomas Quintet.

Milwaukee, Dec. 16.

Beginning Christmas Day, L. K. Brin, local independent, will add stage presentations to his feature films. Sixteen Carla Torney girls will make up the background for William Morris booked vaudeville playing the Publix circuit. Buddy Fisher and his orchestra will supply the musical end of the new departure. Prices of 35 cents for matinees and 50 cents nights will prevail.

Majestic is in the heart of the downtown shopping district and was first operated by the Orpheum circuit as a vaudeville house. Brin took it over several years ago. Lately has been flopping as straight sound house.

The Garden, the other Brin house, will continue with pictures.

WB's New Year's Eve Specials for 35 Acts

Warner booking office will use 35 extra acts New Year's Eve for special midnight performances to include vaude instead of the regular straight picture bills.

Houses and towns and the number of acts for each spot, are: Central, Jersey City, 5 acts; DeWitt, Bayonne, 5; Lincoln, Union Hill, 5; Danbury, Conn., 8; Ritz, Elizabeth, 3; Hackensack, N. J., 4; and Norwich, Conn., 5.

Park Plaza's Return

Vaude resumes at Fox's Park Plaza, New York, starting Dec. 20, with four to six acts on a split. House went straight films with other Fox stands last summer.

NEW ACTS

Midnight Revels (6), flash act.
Wells, Cherie and Fields (3).
Bebe Morris and Boys (6).
Emil Casper (formerly Casper and Morrisey), and Dearing and Smoke (3), blackface.
Guyer and Duffy (2).
"Dumbbells" (6), featuring Jules Black and Lew Ross.
Marie Eckhardt, single.
Jack Gamble and Joe Desmond.

Will Singer Moves

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Several switches in managerial line-up within R-K-O's western division have been made by Division Director William Elson. Howard Kingsmoore becomes city manager of Milwaukee with Will Singer to take charge of the Riverside there, replacing Everett Billings who will be reassigned.

Ed. Masters, who has been manager pro tem at the State-Lake, moves over to the Palace as assistant to Frank Smith. Matt Shure becomes manager of the State-Lake.

LAMBERT'S WB SHORTS

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Eddie Lambert, vaude comedian, has been taken by Warners for a series of shorts.

G. & E. Parks Again

Gracie and Eddie Parks are reunited. They separated theatrically for a while, when Eddie tried a four people act with Tom Smith.

8-ACT NEW YEAR BILL EXPERIMENT IN BALTO

Baltimore, Dec. 16.

Maryland theatre, owned and operated by Fred Schanberger, will play an eight-act vaude show for six days starting Dec. 29. Since dropping vaude a year and a half ago the house has been playing legit shows.

The odd six-day try during New Year's week is in the nature of an experiment by Schanberger to determine whether Baltimore is still interested in vaude.

L. A. Paramount Will Continue Stage Shows

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Stage presentations in connection with orchestra overtures will be continued at Paramount, with Jack Partington engaging outside talent.

Rather than doing only one a month, Paramount is planning three in a row at present, with a "flesh" act built around "The Peanut Vendor," pop hit, starting Thursday (18).

Myrna Kinch, late of "Temptations" (local musical) will be featured.

Price Battle Among Fall River Houses

Fall River, Mass., Dec. 16.

Even with widespread unemployment in this mill city the theatres are engaged in a price war. The battle started a couple of weeks ago when W. J. Dunn, the city's highest individual taxpayer, reopened the old Academy of Music, under the management of William Purcell, with a double feature policy, using Warner films almost exclusively.

The Durfee, Capitol and Empire, all Nathan Yamins' theatres, met the issue and the price cutting resulted Saturday, in elimination of five acts from the Empire.

Freeman's Trip

Charlie Freeman is expected to return from Chicago the end of this week after viewing the R-K-O booking situation in the west.

A reported motive in the R-K-O booking head's trip is to line up several of the present Chicago-booked towns for the regular intact road show route. Milwaukee, from accounts, may be the first to go off the Chi books and onto the unit route.

Orders for a complete "hands off" policy in regard to booking office matters have been delivered to all R-K-O house and division managers under a joint arrangement between the circuit's vaude booking and theatre operating departments.

Among former duties of which the managers are now relieved are the censoring of acts to suit local tastes and the inclusion of personal opinions in the regular house reports on acts. Hereafter in reports, the managers have been advised, all that is desired by the booking office is information on how the acts are received by the audience.

Customary procedure for R-K-O managers in reporting on vaude acts up to now has been to combine advice as to audience reaction with their personal thoughts. Among them, whether they personally liked or disliked the act and whether or not the act can repeat at the theatres. Gathering of this information is now left entirely to the R-K-O vaude bookers on the contention that nothing further than information of audience reaction is needed as a booking guide. All other info regarding the acts is already familiar to the booker, or should be; if not, the booker is not capable, according to R-K-O's new theory.

Less Power

House managers' personal powers as official censors of stage material in the R-K-O theatres is also reduced by this arrangement. Material will be originally censored by the booking office when acts are viewed in New York for further time.

Once out of town, the acts are now being warned, they may resort to objectionable material upon penalty of cancellation. Henceforth, if a house manager considers a gag or piece of stage biz too rough or blue for his house and audience, he must receive permission from the booking office before touching the act. The orders keep division and house managers out of the R-K-O booking office and off the "floor" at all times, unless on special duty and with permission. Interference by managers with the bookers is barred.

Nate Blumberg, assistant to Jos. Plunkett on R-K-O theatre operation, as contact between the circuit's booking and operating departments, is the only member of the latter with free entre to the booking office. Any complaints or suggestions from managers regarding vaude booking matters must be delivered through Blumberg.

Specialists are reported agreeing for such low salaries on the Coast the F. nobin & Marco booking of acts for its units, produced out there, has dropped to hardly any. The F. & M. stage shows seem to manage with those specialists, backgrounded and costumed well. F. & M. was the first to go after this style of production. Lately though F. & M. started to go in for more substantial acts, but with the better specialists in the west willing to work under the other acts' salaries, the booking of acts with F. & M. started to fade.

Instead of chiseling around at the studios for a week or two of work, agents and actors on the Coast are keeping an eye strictly to longer routes, such as shifting people to Fanchon & Marco instead. This means 40 weeks instead of a couple of weeks and higher, but very irregular money. Rather than gamble on picture possibilities and chance an extraordinary click, everybody has an eye more to the general batting average per season.

Not a single dramatic sketch to be found on any of the indie vaude bookers' shows in and around New York. A few comedy skits are being played around, but rarely.

Two that have survived are "Poor Jim" and "Oh, Doctor!" They were going big 15 and 20 years ago.

Helen Kane is holding over at the Palace, New York, this week at $4,250. It is $1,000 less than she received last week at the same house. Miss Kane is said to have made the proposal of the cut, as she wanted to remain two weeks at the $2 Palace to prove her draw.

agency is a man or woman who can entertain or m. c. on the side. This is almost necessary, particularly the m. c. part, as disappointments are almost a regular problem. Number of ex-actors among the agents has always been large. By grabbing off some of the choicest bookings for themselves they then get the whole salary, net.

Still Show Biz

While the cities herein listed run from 250,000 to 500,000 in population, smaller towns such as Grand Rapids, Topeka and Little Rock, frequently can and do support one or two local theatrical enterprises. Of course the bookers sometimes have to sell insurance on the side, but still they get three squares a day, have nice homes, send their youngsters to good schools, and manage to remain in show business. And whether recognized or not, it's show business.

If the Xmas week try in the four towns is successful, vaude may stick.

THREE IN FREEHOLD

Policy will be three acts on a split, booked by A. & B. Dow.

Radio Acts for W B

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Several radio attractions have been booked by the Warner circuit here as the first step on their return to flesh.

Quinn Ryan, Mike and Herman, Louie's Hungry Five are now touring the 15 larger Warner houses in town. Business at spots already played reported as much as doubling ordinary grosses.

Loew Places M. C.'s

F & M. Circus Act

An all-circus act of 30 people, headed by the Hanaford Family and Clown Peppee, has been assembled by Fanchon & Marco for some Fox met house dates, starting Dec. 19 at the Audubon, New York.

Fall River, St. Pcts.

Bills were New York booked by the Fisher agency since summer. Straight pictures is the new policy.

Girls Told to Keep on Move After They Squawk

Cheseleigh and Gibbs, two-girl comedy team, were advised by R-K-O upon arriving in New York that if failing to proceed to Charlottee, N. C., this week as booked they would lose the balance of their time on the circuit.

Girls were reported as objecting to the amount they are receiving from their salary in the R-K-O theatres against the share going to Bennett & Carlton, vaude producers and owners of the act.

FARNUM MISSING

Jimmy O'Neal, vaude producers, stating he expected to be away several months.

The trip west, he declared, was for the purpose of taking a rest and regaining his health.

Farnum's last important deal as an agent was his booking of Will Mahoney in the road company of Carroll's "Sketch Book." Mahoney advised "Variety" on Monday (15) that he has not heard personally from Farnum since the "Sketch Book" road opening late in September. Mahoney is in New York this week on a six-day layoff.

Four years ago Farnum married Mabelle Griffith, non-professional, of Baltimore. She is said to have accompanied her husband west as far as Coffin Creek but is now understood to be at her home in Baltimore.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Ralph G. Farnum, well known theatrical agent, may be fatally lost in the wastelands of Death Valley on the Californian-Arizona line. Deputy Sheriff Harvey Goper, of Death Valley Junction, states there is enough water and game in the valley to keep a sturdy adventurer alive. For this reason hope has not been given up entirely.

Farnum, who had no guide, came out here seeking to improve his health and the Los Angeles Missing Peoples' Bureau has been assured that Farnum's disappearance is no press stunt.

Alarm was first created for the missing showman when one of his burros, emaciated, staggered into Furnace Creek.

Los Angeles friends are exasperated at Sheriff Goper's attitude that as soon as he heard from New York that Farnum had not returned there, he would send out a searching party. Local friends of Farnum may hire a search plane and scour the country.

tinued, and evidently on one of his pet subjects, "because naturally, and if she'd let herself alone, a woman has so much appeal and so much to sell. Why,a woman has 50 times more chance of getting ahead on the screen than a man. It's easier for her because she is more attractive and interesting to the public. Look what she can do with clothes.

"Just give any nice looking girl some good looking clothes and she can pull them around her, pose a bit, and look like a million dollars. And look at the publicity they can get without any effort. Newspapers would rather have the picture of any pretty chorus girl than a picture of me. It's hard to make papers take pictures of men no matter who they are. They only want men's pictures to fill in with."

George had forgotten about the draughts that might harm his chest. He threw his blanket off and ended his story of why a he-man likes a he-man's woman by saying, "Girls are charming little things, but they don't know what's good for them."

Eddie Leonard's Return

Eddie Leonard is coming back to the R-K-O books. He and his minstrel act of 12, after a long absence from R-K-O, will split the week of Dec. 20 between the Franklin and Yonkers, New York.

two-for-one newspaper ads once every week or two weeks on Tuesday and Thursday nights, the dead spots.

Par's Free Snacks

Seattle.

Santa by Train

Indianapolis.

Lyric stirred up interest in 2,000 homes with a Santa Claus stunt. Khris Kringle was brought to town on a train, the kids meeting him at station and parading to the theatre.

Badges given to all kids attending the previous week, admitted them to special Saturday show. Each youngster also got a box of candy. Adults accompanying youngster paid admission. Cag cost in all about $150.

Free Mag Distribution

Louisville.

Jack McCoy, manager Mary Anderson, has been getting results from giving away copies of "Ace High" magazine, which carry a special ad for the theatre on the back cover. Understood mag cost house nothing.

Manager Stubblefield, Strand, is giving away pairs of passes for the best rewrites of the theatre's advertisements appearing in the "Herald-Post."

Des Moines, Ia.

Phoney Bills

Birmingham, Ala.

Phoney money was passed out by Trianon ballyhooing "Big Money." Bills had pictures of James Gleason, Eddie Quillan and Robert Armstrong, and were printed in denominations represetnig $100.

On the reverse side of the bill were cuts in each corner made from stills supplied for press.

Free Transportation

Pine Bluff, Ark.

Alamo theatre has made arrangements with the street car line to bring and take back patrons of their show on presentation of ticket bought at one of 15 drugstores or other places in the city. It has helped to increase box office receipts.

Makes the ride to and from the show free to the showgoer.

Balcony of Toys

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Manager Harvey Cocks, of the Paramount, transformed the entire balcony of the house into a Santa Claus workshop, with a complete array of toys and children's novelties.

Ushers were in charge of the display visited by patrons following shows.

Contests and other plugging features were used by the management.

1,000 Kids Bring "Old Clothes"

Kingston, Can.

One kid was so anxious to attend the "Old Clothes Matinee" at the Capitol here he took the bundle of family washing just delivered to his home by the laundry. A hurry-up call was sent to Manager Ernie Smithies with the result that the clean collars and shirts were rescued from the pile in the lobby. 1,200 children attended and two trucks and eight autos carried the parcels for distribution among the poor. Smithies got a column of publicity in the local newspaper in the form of a human interest story.

All Civil War Vets Free Guests

Toledo.

Valentine theatre management tied up with Toledo Blade and gave free admittance to all Civil War vets (Reb or Union) when "Abraham Lincoln" played. Another exploit stunt was giving free admission to any person with clothing for the needy. Bernie Lustig, p. a., arranged the stunts.

COLOR PRICE FIGHT

highly significant in view of this company currently handling approximately 65% of the world's film lab work. Several other independent companies are planning to get into the color market, each with a more or less different process, but all claiming production cost far lower than Technicolor.

Universal is among those who believe they can turn out color films at a cost of less than 10% additional to black and white. Its process is the invention of Roy Hunter, U technical chief, and William J. Kelley. Universal has made one Slim Summerville two-reeler so far with its process. Pathe and Sennett also are continuing experimentation with their individual processes, and all toward cost lowering.

Color's Wrong Cue

What is thought to have impeded color was the heavy cost coming at a time when theatre business was being affected, as were other industries, by general conditions.

The case of "Gold Diggers of Broadway" (WB) was cited by a color expert as exemplifying what the producing-distributing companies are up against in regard to color as it stands. Had "Gold Diggers" been released in black and white the costs for prints would have been $63,000. The same number of prints in color cost Warners $451,000. To this was added the cost of the daily rushes. Black and whites would have totaled $23,000; color rushes cost $115,000.

Tremendous difference, producers claim, is not compensated for by the pulling power of color. There is no advantage to the boxoffice, it is held, unless the added cost is below the 10% mark.

Hence the race which is under way. Besides which there is the time angle, color companies being notably slow in completing prints for release. This situation is claimed to have been somewhat remedied in past months.

News From the Dailies

This department contains rewritten theatrical news items as published during the week in the daily papers of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Hollywood and London. Variety takes no credit for these news items; each has been rewritten from a daily paper.

NEW YORK

Flo Lane, former dancer (Mrs. Florida Volck), plunged to death from the sixth floor apartment of her parents at 151 East 81st street. Her father told police that she had been ill for months and believed she fell from the open window when she leaned out for air. Miss Lane was with Ziegfeld in 1926. On Aug. 5 of that year she was married to Morris Roderick Volck, non-pro., from whom she was divorced in 1929.

Edgar Allen lost his action against "Peaches" Browning for $15,000 commissions on her theatrical tour. Mrs. Browning lost a countersuit for $4,000 allegedly owed her by Allen.

Helen Lee Worthing Nelson, ex-showgirl, obtained a legal separation from her husband, Dr. Eugene Nelson, Negro physician of Los Angeles, she revealed last week from her bed in the Neurological Institute, 706 West 168th street, New York.

She said that before her marriage she never knew Dr. Nelson had Negro blood in his veins and that he had never admitted it to her.

A new home entertainment device, combining radio receiver, electric phonograph and talkin' or silent motion picture in one unit was demonstrated at the offices of the Visionola Manufacturing Co.

Last week the employment plan of R-K-O was put in operation throughout the United States. Plan is designed to provide employment for 16,861 men and women as sellers of tickets.

Two detectives from police headquarters canvassed sidewalk theatre ticket speculators on Broadway, asking them if any policemen had forced them to part with tickets or with money or if the specs had voluntarily given bribes to policemen. Detectives were attempting to check up on charges made before Isidor J. Kresel, special counsel in the Appellate Division's investigation of the lower courts, that 200 sidewalk specs were regularly "shaken down."

When apprised his wife had sued him for divorce in Los Angeles, Tom Mix, stopping at the Biltmore Hotel, New York, said that if she is certain she wants a divorce he will not oppose it.

Norman Hallenbeck, 25, acting assistant manager of the Paramount, Plainfield, N. J., and Sally Young, 18, cashier, were missing from Plainfield. Theatre safe, to which Hallenbeck had the combination, had been robbed of $1,500, the police said. Hallenbeck, with a wife and three children, was promoted recently from head usher to assistant manager.

Borrah Minevitch plans a recital at Carnegie Hall in February. His harmonica orchestra, now 16 pieces, will be expanded to over 100.

Because American and English laws hold illegitimate children heirs to their mothers' estates, Joseph Kay Boyle, 3, love child, may inherit the $80,000 estate of Kay Laurell, showgirl, who died when the baby was born. When she died in childbirth three years ago she left a six-line will giving all her property in England to Joseph Whiteside Boyle, of London, said to have been the father of the child. Will said nothing about the American estate.

Word from Toledo, Ohio, said that more than 100 girls ranging in age from 14 to 21, crowded the lobby of the hospital demanding bulletins every 10 minutes on the condition of Charles (Buddy) Rogers, operated on Dec. 13 for appendicitis.

Daniel Frohman underwent an emergency operation Sunday afternoon in the Park East hospital. Condition announced as satisfactory.

LOS ANGELES

Victor McLaglen sued for $2,674 in San Diego over an auto accident last summer.

Wylie A. Hill, former evangelist is suing "Bluebeard" Watson, San Quentin lifer, for misleading him as to the location of an $87,000 buried treasure. Hill wants $25,000 for five years wasted searching for the property of Watson's murdered wives.

Mrs. R. M. Murphy is suing the Winter Garden Ice Palace for $1,900 worth of headaches and a $20 doctor's bill. Says she was hit on the head by a puck at a hockey game.

Dorothea Gray Johnston, dancer, was all set to marry Robert Parvin Forbes, pictures, when her parents dashed down from Oakland and dissuaded her.

Helen Ferguson, writer and pictures, will marry Richard L. Hargreaves, Beverly Hills banker, sometime before Christmas.

Suit to annul his marriage to Pauline Frederick has been filed by Hugh Chisholm Leighton, hotel man. He alleges he is a husband in name only. Married in New York last April.

Helen Lee Worthing, formerly legit and pictures, has separated from Dr. Eugene Nelson, physician whose Negro ancestry was not generally known until a year ago. Miss Worthing is under treatment at the Neurological Institute, New York.

Mildred Zukor Loew obtained a divorce from Arthur M. Loew at Reno Dec. 8. She obtained custody of their children, Jan, 8, and Arthur, Jr., 3. Grounds were extreme mental cruelty.

Clifford W. Smith, New York sportsman and husband of Claire Luce, was given Pasteur serum after being bitten by a mad mutt owned by Warren Hymer, pictures.

Bert Lytell was fined $100 for partial evasion on his 1925 income tax. U. S. Attorney recommended the small fine, saying that Lytell has paid over $25,000 tax penalties already.

Caroline Looney, former vaude aerialist, identified a suspect as the masked bandit who robbed her of $1,000 worth of diamonds and tried to sell them back for $600.

Divorce suit against Emil A. Flugrath, father of Shirley Mason and Viola Dana, has been renewed. Door-slamming and sulking is charged by Marie Flugrath.

Aimee Semple McPherson summoned to give a deposition concerning her one time intentions and authorizations for a talker enterprise. Roy Stewart, indie producer, seeks to establish his rights in regard to the evangelist and Cromwell Ormsby.

Al St. John, pictures, summoned to court about $1,100 back alimony, said he had had no work. The court gave him 30 days' grace to get work.

Lillian Lane, pictures, granted a divorce from George Stoddard, attorney. In awarding $100 a month alimony the court warned her it was temporary, as there are "plenty of opportunities for a talented young actress" to support herself.

Alyce Paula Dera, in Hollywood from Connecticut for extra work, slashed the wrist because work was scarce. She'll recover.

Luther Reed, alimony budget down to $75, with $25 on it as his weekly payment to Jocelyn Lee. Naomi Childers has temporarily waived her back alimony claim from the director.

Delores L. Salazar, on and off picture extra, who committed a de-

Edward R. Harris, sound recorder, asks divorce from Genevieve M. Harris, saying she required him to support a "star boarder."

Thelma N. Davidson, pictures, asks divorce from George A. Davidson, alleging he gambled with her earnings.

Victoria Forde Mix renewed her efforts for a divorce from Tom Mix, charging cruelty. She says he stayed home only two days after returning from his circus tour in October. Mrs. Mix sought a divorce in Paris two years ago.

LONDON

New car regulations generally tightening up on driving, came into force rather suddenly this week.

De Forest Phonofilm, pioneers of talking production here, is in the hands of the official receiver. After running at a loss for three years the unit sold out to British Talking Pictures.

Gaumont British have been steadily closing and redecorating the cinemas in the United Picture circuit, the management of which they took over six months ago.

"The Borrowed Life," new play by Gwladys Parrish, is to be produced by the Incorporated Stage Society, with Glen Byam Shaw featured.

Frank Vernon is to produce "To See Ourselves," comedy by R. M. Delafield, to follow "The Grain of Mustard Seed" at the Ambassadors. Nicholas Hannen has the lead.

Historic Sadlers Wells theatre, which is to reopen after years spent trying to raise a public fund, is now rebuilt and is scheduled to start Jan. 6 with Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night."

Net profit of $250,000 was made on the year by Madam Tussaud's Exhibition and Cinema, subsidiary of Associated British. Profit $50,000 up on previous year.

Four talkers planned in British studios at present deal with the newspaper theme.

"The Smoky Cell" is announced as an Edgar Wallace play "in preparation," to follow the ill-starred "The Mouthpiece" at Wyndhams.

Three Sherlock Holmes stories have been bought by British units, thinking to cash in on the boom established here by Paramount.

them seem more intimate and friendly to the suckers. The police, on the other hand, figure the customers are just a bunch of college kids having a party, so aren't so finicky.

The club raided was called Sigma Rho fraternity. It occupied the entire 14th floor of a storage building and had been running for some time before police got wise. Customers were all men and boys of college age. It was the biggest raid tried here in a long time and kept police busy till morning.

College organizations claim these clubs in many cases have taken names of real frats, which have their titles registered legally. They say it is hard enough to get permission of parents for freshmen to enter their fraternities without the illegitimate organizations making it worse.

Back From Vaude

Eddie Lloyd, principal comic with Lew Talbot's Mutual show last season and who went into vaude this year, is returning to the wheel to replace Jack Montague with Mutual's "Flapper Follies" in two weeks.

Lloyd for several years was second comic with the Frank Damsel show.

TOUGHEST AUDIENCE

Rockne and two members of his football team. All the ladies wanted to dance with the pigskin tossers. Some were successful.

The gentlemen who sit back with frozen mugs at social affairs are the same guys who go for horseplay on the set when cameras are being loaded.

Any time they appear in public as society addicts they leave the sense of humor at home with the wife. But if anyone told them they have no s. of h. they'd suggest swords for two.

The only time they'll laugh in a dress suit is when the boss does his clowning. To that extent, Hollywood is lousy with straight men.

Table Comics

Every local restaurant has its quota of table comics who panic the lay-offs and moochers. Most of these comics go sour in front of a camera, but when carrying their own audience they're riots.

Nothing but sour faces at a Hollywood opening. They have to be on the square for their public (held back by ropes). Nothing frivolous about the big shots then.

When the big he men and comics stalk up the carpeted sidewalks to chant into a microphone (20 station hookup), they wear full regalia. That's what makes them late for the openings, spending the early part of the evening mastering expression No. 7.

Tax Gigolos Now

tion to dance can buy a "host card" for 35 cents which entitles her to three dances with these answers to a maiden's prayer. If she yearns to talk as well as dance, she can rent the services of a "host" at $2.80 per hour.

The head hostess arranges an introduction, for the proceedings are conducted very properly. The lads who have qualified for the position as hosts are young men between 28 and 32 years of age. They must be men of the world, intelligent, handsome, good dancers and brilliant conversationalists, capable of making any woman feel she is a knockout.

Hosts Earn $50-$75 a Week

The weekly earnings of the hosts possessing these attributes range from $50 to $75 a week. Tips go to the hosts for the same reasons hostesses get them, but the hosts get a better break. They don't have to protect themselves against insults.

They are supposed to build up personal followings among the girls, just the way a good hostess does with the boys. In the afternoon they wear business suits, but for the evening sessions they must appear in tuxedos.

Clients of these hosts are mainly middle-aged women beginning to realize what they have missed in life. But these lads look forward to women who hire them for an entire evening and take them to the theatre and then to a night club.

Some 15 years ago male dancing partners on the loose could be stalked by the stepping at both Churchill's and Healy's. Elderly women being piloted around by paid escorts is also far from new. But the appearance of the gigolo in a public dancehall, or ballroom, carries a modern twist.

Wary of Newcomers

doesn't know them, and how the studios found that out.

"It's a slow process, which needs a definite publicity campaign in the background. Meanwhile, directors are afraid to take a chance with the screen unknowns, despite any legit reputation they may have. More than once a studio exec has to battle with a director to use a stage performer. The director's side is that he, too, wants to protect himself by using a known personality or type.

"That's why it's so tough for the legit people. They've got to come along slow for a new audience which never heard of them. And it seems it is the only way, as a rule, with the usual number of exceptions.

UNIONS RUN BURLESQUE STOCK ON CO-OP BASIS

Columbus, O., Dec. 16.

Inaugurating a "work plan" which it is expected will soon be followed elsewhere, Columbus members of the musicians' and stage hands' unions this week took over the Lyceum theatre and are presenting musical stock. The pay roll is on a co-operative basis.

The Lyceum closed seven weeks ago after a losing season with Mutual burlesque. Fifty was a crowd in the burlesque days. The opening day of the new stock saw more than 300 turned away at each of the two performances. Prices now are 50 cents top, compared with a burlesque top of $1.50.

FILM AND SHOW AT 10c SPREADS IN NEW YORK

The first reported as having a 10c gate on a grind and to include pictures is being set for the old People's on the Bowery at Spring street. This is the onetime Miner meller house. The same stock operatives at the People's also plan to install another Co in Miner's Bronx.

Wheel Gaps Closed

The Lyric, Dayton, O., becomes a week stand on the Mutual Circuit, starting Dec. 28. House will close up the open week between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

When the Plaza, Worcester, Mass., starts playing Mutual shows Dec. 22, the open week between Boston and Providence will be filled.

Providence, Dec. 16.

Wrestling matches are being billed at the Modern theatre, burlesque, to spruce grosses. Stunt was tried last week.

Burlesque has been playing at the Modern for two seasons and is not satisfactory to its backers.

BURLESQUE CLUB NITES

Bohemian nites are to become a regular feature of the Burlesque Club operation. Idea is to bring in new members. "Guests" will be admitted at a fee of $2. The first is set for Dec. 20.

The club's new address is 112 West 48th street.

New Acts

HARRY HERSHFIELD
Monolog
13 Mins.; One
State.

Harry Hershfield's wide experience as a story teller, gained before all sorts of audiences in all sorts of places, is his asset in this salaried vaude playing for Loew's. On the stage of the State he was perfectly at ease, at home and at his best. Hershfield's best is pretty good. And he didn't look bad under his grey hair and in the middle of a tux.

Hershfield exhibited none of the nervousness shown by other columnists who recently preceded him in vaude. That made it easier to talk smoothly, with all of his yarns necessitating smooth delivery. Besides which the Abie Kabibble creator knew his material. His change of pace, unconscious or deliberate, alternated the strong and not so strong stories.

For an opening the cartoonist doubled at his own trade to draw a bust of Abie. Then stepped to the foots and stayed there the rest of way. His position was in front of the lights, quite dim as a spot for a straight talker but possibly the best way since it always suggested nonchalance. He wasn't made up, which is in his contract.

All but one of Hershfield's stories were the Yiddish dialect type he specializes in everywhere, and enough of them highly laughable. He sets the pace for himself with right handed gestures. The left stayed in his pocket.

His monolog idea is a bit old fashioned and slow for current vaude demands, but his name is there to offset such a handicap. Hershfield is a name for vaude in New York with sufficient entertainment value to evade the usual classification of being a freak.

Biye.

BERRY BROS. (2)
Dancing
6 Mins.; One
Palace (St. V.)

Berry Bros. were recently in "Blackbirds" and carry that billing with them. They are at the palace this week without vaude standardization in between. The strenuous eccentric dancing by this pair of colored youth is the sort that secures applause enroute and is generally pretty sure of a spontaneous outburst at the finish.

At the Palace, No. 2, they were on but six minutes. If continuing in vaude it would be advisable to add two or three extra minutes. An encore would take care of that.

Taller boy features one trick, a speedy twirl ending in a double knee-drop. This is the best remembered part of their dancing, though none of it far behind. More playing probably will give them a better perspective of vaude routining.

Biye.

SEVEN GORDONIANS
Acrobatics
9 Mins.; Full
Hippodrome

Five men and two girls march on stage and go into ordinary tumbling. The first serious trick had Tom Gordoni standing on one end of a teeter-board. A second man jumped on the opposite end of the board and threw Gordoni into the air, supposedly to land on the shoulders of a nearby "understander," Gordoni missed his man at the first show Saturday and landed on the stage on his head in a bad spill which was only partly broken.

Second trick, somewhat similar, was also muffed. Third stunt had Gordoni jumping backwards from a perch to a rebounding table, then into the air for a somersault and an attempted landing atop a two-man balancing combo. Gordoni filed to land squarely on the shoulders of the top man and slid down the backs of the two balancers, again landing on his head.

After some more tumbling and cartwheels by the girls the male quintet repeated the first three efforts successfully. Gordoni was announced as the only man to accomplish a triple somersault in the air from a rebounding table, landing in a chair held on an understander's shoulders.

FOUR SINGAPORIANS
Banjo, Piano, Songs
10 Mins.; One
Lincoln Sq.

An Oriental quartet. They may be Eurasians or pineapples. They look Chinese; wear colorful costumes. Though not well organized please with their four banjos and alternating piano single and musical saw soloist.

But that's strictly on the novelty angle which will make anything these do either look funny or litterish. One of the boys sings a Chinese chorus. About five numbers and over here in No. 2. Likely for the pop houses.

Shan.

REGAY and DONAHUE
Talk, Songs and Dances
15 Mins.; One
Jefferson

This two-combo comprises Billie Regay and Walter Donahue, young brother of the late Jack Donahue. Starts off with some fly exchange, with a song and dance routine and some rough handling of Miss Regay by the elongated Donahue for comedy effect. Some solo stepping by Donahue also is acceptably injected.

Miss Regay takes a number of falls, largely productive, especially in house-lace the Jeff. The act on its presentment here needs working.

The best or perhaps biggest improvement could be made in the talk exchange. A few of the gags are a trifle blue and that submarine crack should go out.

BOBBY JARVIS (4)
"The Best Man"
Comedy Skit
18 Mins.; One and Full
86th St.

This musical skit by H. C. Greene and Carey Morgan is a weak sister from any angle. Four people in support of Bobby Jarvis, the comic, are Audrey Christie, Evelyn Kindler, Edna Bare and Jack Donahue.

Weak opening has Jarvis as the best man at a wedding of his pal offering his condolences on the steps of a church as the happy couple start on their honeymoon. Scene then shifts to full stage, a living room in the home of the married pair a year later. Jarvis, supposedly still a bachelor, enters and two girls try to get him in a spot for a marriage proposal.

Before they had succeeded and start to fight over Bobby when the phone rings and Jarvis is informed he has become a father. More phone calls and he learns its twins and then triplets. Still another call and the phone goes up in smoke, with Jarvis taking a header out the window.

Not only the plot of this farce, but also the lyrics and music interpolated, are of no great consequence. Jarvis and the people in support show signs of ability in handling lines, and several are capable specialty dancers. In this skit they are handicapped by poor material which will need plenty of revamping to get by consistently in the intermediate houses.

LOU CAMERON
Comedy
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Lou Cameron working without any clowning comedy stuff on the bikes. With him appears Ruth Marvin who is rather attractive and helps Lou get a breathing spell with a little vocalizing. On general results here Cameron has a laugh-getting routine.

He's a hard worker, clowns most of the time, wise-cracking with modern flippancy that modern audiences demand a lot of these days, and succeeded in garnering rather consistent laughs.

Nothing unusual, but pleasing and amusing.

RUCKER AND PERRIN
Comedy
12 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Once more John Rucker and Sidney Perrin are reunited doing a comedy act which scored all the way at the R-K-O uptown New York house. Since Perrin and Rucker separated neither seemed to get very far without the other. This time they have slapped together an amusing bit of comedy byplay along former lines.

The two comics, one as a Chink and the other just a straight colored man but doing comedy through his facial contortions and gagging, get considerable out of their apparent scrap over anything that comes into verbal exchange.

John Rucker always had about the funniest mouth in vaude and he still has it and knows how to use it. Rucker may have slowed up a bit in dancing but he doesn't do enough to hinder the act's comedy score as Perrin follows with his modernistic hoofing, more pronounced.

JACK CONWAY CO. (2)
Comedy, Songs
14 Mins.; One (Special)
Lincoln Sq.

Simple routine for the pop neighbs. Conway looks like he knew his burlesque once. The girl and the straight with him about the same. The two twitter about nonsensically and the girl comes on with a trick mike that shoots off while the trio stands before it to-sing.

Nothing much on the singing and Conway depends on his mugging and Irish terrier talk for humor.

Girl could be developed to foil better. Her voice falsetto on the deep soprano or something that's not good when very low. But she has personality when the makeup isn't too heavy. No. 3 here and good hand on five-act layout.

Joe DONAHUE and Nellie BREEN
Comedy, Songs, Dances
81st St.

Joe Donahue, the late Jack Donahue's brother, has been in vaude as a single for some time, beside working in legit and last season in pictures for Warners. Miss Breen was best known in vaude as the partner of Lester Allen. Both can do better than their present act suggests.

Turn starts slow. Miss Breen, as a prop, goes into some crossfire with Donahue, comedy song and then a tap dance. While she's off for a costume change, Donahue does some eccentric hoofing. Miss Breen returns in street wear. Then follows more crossfire and a good gag tune, "Well, What Are You Waiting For." Winds up with both dancing.

Until Miss Breen makes her change the act drags. After she comes back the material is better and it really gets some place. Evidently the material is now the anchor, for they haven't anything solid in the line of laughs.

A little overhauling, some substitutions, additions, and playing is needed.

JOSEPH B. STANLEY & Co. (3)
Comedy, Songs, Dances
18 Mins.; One
Englewood, Chicago

Taking an elongated contortion femme dancer and a short girl, Joseph Stanley attempts to show the grief a vaude producer goes through. It makes pretty fair entertainment, with Stanley jumping in and offering a new sort of dance, where the orchestra switches from a song melody to dance music, causing plenty of laughs. A hot idea which, when ironed out, will go strong.

As an opener the producer is stopping for a girl partner. First the long one then the short one, both good comedy. Next a violin bit by one of the girls, a smart Greenwood leg-swinging type of dance by the tall femme and a wind-up of hoke comedy.

TAM O'SHANTER GIRLS (14)
Band Act
16 Mins.; Full
Hamilton

Another female band act, this one using elaborate arrangements, calling for heavy work on the part of the brass section, with the energetic girls there blasting away with trumpet solos at frequent intervals. They are dressed in colorful pajama suits with berets to match, and on the whole seem to be a capable group of instrumentalists.

Nice arrangement of "Otchi Chernii" gives most of the girls a chance to show their wares. Three on for some fast legomania in unison help matters along, but the band's impression of Cab Calloway combo playing "St. James Infirmary Blues," with a vocal chorus megaphoned by one of the hoofing trio and a medley of Dixie songs for a finish, are weak spots in the routine.

FLORENCE WHITNEY and Co. (3)
Dances
12 Mins.; Full (Special)
58th Street

A pair of mixed doubles go through an ordinary routine, following which one girl does a solo acrobatic. Same girl back on after a quick change for a number with the two boys in a slightly changed routine that includes the conventional fast steps of the collegiate. Should shape quickly for the neighborhoods as an inexpensive flash.

Miss Whitney is evidently a ballet school product and a good one. Her first solo ends with a fast twirling finish that goes across. One boy and first girl offer a Russian peasant dance. Miss Whitney gets another hand for a ballet-type solo similar to her first, excepting that she changes costumes.

Turn closes with another Russian number, this in flashy outfits, merged into a finish featuring Miss Whitney's spinning.

LEWIS AND BETH Dancing
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Mixed couple with a hoofing routine along the usual lines, opening with a high hat and cane specialty. Thereafter the girl concentrates on high kicks while the boy shows to advantage in eccentric legmania.

Finish is an impression of a couple going through a dance routine learned by correspondence, that leading into some lightweight knockabout acrobatics and falls.

Talk employed prior to and during the low comedy biz is of the obvious sort. Turn is a mild deucer for the intermediate houses.

FOUR HAAS BROS.
Trapeze
81st St.

A corking trapeze act that's fit to open the better bills. All four are smooth workers. Two of the boys do comedy and the others straight.

Set-up has three lower trapeze bars and two more above. Mostly flying bar work, the men swinging from one stick to another.

PALACE, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 13.

There never has been a cockroach, a rat or a mouse in the Palace theatre, upstage or back, according to Frank Smith, manager. So it was deemed best to chuck the free lunch idea to be given on the mezzanine floor, out of the door before it got started. Several eat shops, across the street from the Palace, had complained that the serving of free coffee, sandwiches, cake and ice cream by this R-K-O spot wasn't quite fair. At any rate, all this free grub, which was to have been given away daily starting Saturday, isn't to be.

To take its place George Brown has arranged for three of this week's turns to go on the air. They are Jack Pearl, Zelda Santley and Dainty Marie. Last named will appear each P. M. in the foyer of the house and amplify her athletic radio talks.

Morton, Keppel and Betty are the opening trio. They offer some robust and vivid hoofing atop a toy bus, something new which was appreciated. Betty, as the solo feature in a torso twisting number, clad in men's garb, brought out a few new dnfficult steps and added more hand warmers to this trio's following. Closed with excellent stair dancing.

Ed. Ford and his fox terrier, Whitey, after a draggy opening, got going strong with the drunken dog bit. Saturday afternoon children went into roars at Whitey's antics.

Jack Pearl, assisted by two men, in a sketch running 26 minutes, went after belly laughs. The skit is built around Pearl's dialect when he tries to buy a car in France. A go-between helps. The Palace stage hasn't had a German dialect act for ages. It went over with a bang.

Zelda Santley, with the aid of a cap, a scarf, a monocle, a piano player and a few odd brushes of her hair went through impersonations, as seen at Rubens, of Eddie Cantor, Fannie Brice, George Arliss, Maurice Chevalier and Helen Morgan. Each one brought out her skill more sharply to the folks out in front. On her last of Morgan, who has been in Chicago recently with "Adeline," she clicked strong. Her closing number was "Ten Cents a Dance," done almost every week on the Palace stage.

Dainty Marie and Co., the closer, with Marie going through her routine tricks with a vigor that won her plenty. Her three assistants, one a stout girl and one a thin girl, and a man, supply the laughs early in this turn, which is timed with the 18-day diet and slimness to hit every femme in the house.

The bill came intact from Cincinnati.

"DREAM'S MEMORIES" (8)
Dance Revue
15 Mins.; Full Stage
Hamilton

Just another name to cover one of those combos with the adagio dancers, a prima donna and the rest. Not a bad outfit, with the work of two men tossing a young woman about as though she were a football the standout; some real circusy throws here from one man to the other, all giving th audience a chance to do a little gasping.

Girl takes chances, but they make the act as the rest of the turn is just so-so. Has some dancing girls who prove acceptable time killers.

Mark.

CHANDLER FOUR Songs and Instrumental
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Quartet consisting of three men and a woman, the latter spotted at the baby grand, while two of the men pick away at guitars and sing. Off to a slow start with a special song in which the name of the act is plugged, the quartet shows to better advantage with a comedy song.

Nice harmony work, and the attempt to get away from the Ukelen track in the selection of song material should gain this turn fair results in the neighborhood houses.

Stock at Crescent

New Broadcasting Act

Lillian Jay, formerly staff accompanist at WMCA, has teamed with Freddy Whiteman, professional manager for Fred Fisher. They will tour the western broadcasting stations beginning late in January.

PALACE

(St. Vaude)

Benny Rubin, Ken Murray and Helen Kane, holding over, were the foundation for the current bill which has Ruth Etting as principal addition and headliner. That gives the Palace an extraordinary four-ply name combination for amusing and drawing. Miss Etting, one of the real Palace favorites and always a certainty at this box office, was probably counted on to make up for any drawing power the h. o. ing trio might lose in their second week, with the added possibility of the trio remaining attractive enough to repeat as draws.

Last week's gross hit $31,000; big for the Palace, with a good bill on the stage. Money always shows up at the Palace when the show's there. This one should duplicate for dough and while not as strong at the first show, might be with two or three performances behind it.

Big fault Saturday afternoon was the failure of Murray and Rubin, m. c. combo for the second week, to kick things along at the necessary rate. It was their material. Made the first part drag and look bad, with the million bucks worth of talent involved not seeming that expensive. No real encouragement till late. It arrived in the second spot of part two, held by Miss Etting, whose own click led to the show's next best sock, a weighty comedy interlude in "one" by the comics. They staged a dancing contest between themselves for heavy laughs and applause and brought on a brace of specialty kids to finish it.

In the Misses Kane and Etting the bill had a woman singing single for each half, something extremely odd for the Palace nowadays. Not many first grade singles to go around today. Two on the same bill this week and not another in sight for weeks. That best reflects the present Palace booking problem. It happened Ruth Etting and Helen Kane were both available this week and rather than lose either, apparently, the Palace booker grabbed 'em both.

No confliction, in style or results. Miss Kane's five numbers closing the first part were not as suitable as the previous rep and all showed this much imitated girl is drifting away from her own idea, slightly but noticeably. The tricky ending of one song might have interested Miss Etting had she been standing in the wings. Murray appeared again with Miss Kane in the final song and for the second week contributed an ideal finish.

Making it stronger, Rubin followed Murray opposite Miss Kane for more sound comedy. She ripped his shirt into threads in the last chorus. Done so nicely as to appear spontaneous. The other Murray-Rubin in-between bits during the first part weren't nearly as good.

All showed typical first show nerves and need of playing. As did the "Bill Sykes" burlesque by the comics and Miss Kane in the closing spot. This was the satire on Owen McGivney's protean act, placed third, as done by others in vaude for the past eight or nine years as "The Wager."

"The Wager" was framed in a Keith theatre in 1922 or thereabouts as an afterpiece to a bill then comprising Bert and Betty Wheeler, William and Joe Mandel, Dotson and McGivney. It was so successful these acts played intact in all theatres for months. Later it was played by others with McGivney.

Having Murray and Rubin, comedy experts, involved, it possessed more than the usual amount of original laugh stuff here. But as worked, it showed more than anything else on the bill the need of a few performances. It closed the bill somewhat abruptly. Might have been more properly placed at the start of the second section, with Miss Etting moved up to close. The Rubin-Murray dance bit could go anywhere. Roy Cummings wasn't at home as the intermish opener. He was the No. 3 natural for the bill, with his knockabout best suited to an early showing. Cummings was a last minute entry to sub for the Runaway Four, out due to illness.

In Miacahua, opening, the Palace has the best of the femme wire walkers, after having Coleano, best of the men, recently. The Brazilian girl's work on the tight thread is always interesting. Berry Bros. (New Acts) are here directly from "Blackbirds," which folded last week.

Some of the applause upon Murray's first entrance, following the Berrys' was for the comic and some for the deucer. Enough of the latter to bring the boys back for a bow, then Murray went into some talk. After a few gags illustrated the results of constant use by going wide, Rubin entered and thereafter the two were teamed.

Ahl, the coocher, was the recognizable half of the tw. specialty dancers on without billing in the Murray-Rubin hoofing affair. Other was a long-legged boy in a loose dance. Ahl is doubling from Joe Lewis' cafe in her repeat Palace date. She's a smooth and inoffensive twister.

In his quick-change turn McGiv-

TEATRO DEL LAGO

Chicago, Dec. 12.

This is probably the only house in America built to cater entirely to automobile trade. The house has been standing four years this approaching April and in that length of time not over seven people any one day by actual count of the management, Sam C. Meyers, who is the owner, and G. G. King, house manager, have ever approached the del Lago on foot. But the Teatro del Lago and its 1,200 pews have other claims, quite as important as the carriage trade.

It is also the only house about Chicago and environs that thumbs its nose at the censors. No matter what the city censors chop out in the Loop and nearby towns, the film, when it unwinds at the del Lago has all the chopped bits back in it. It gets away with this unusual situation because it is located in "No Man's Land," and pays only taxes to the county.

The strip of property upon which this theatre is built lies a few feet north of Wilmette, a ritzy suburb just out of Chicago. Here at night the weary millionaires and cattle owners come to lay their weary heads in rest, and if the film is attractive enough, to oust the gaunt-feud and have him drive the family to the Teatro del Lago. Neither the city or state has anything to say about this "No Man's Land."

On the strip Mr. Meyers has sunk about $500,750. In 18 stores, a 36-apartment building, 50-car garage and the plain Spanish style theatre. As Mr. Meyers is a brother-in-law of Abe Balaban he was expected to make a success from the start, although many took the opportunity to declare him a bit off when the venture was first started. However, Mr. Meyer drives about in a Rolls-Royce today, has no other theatres to worry about, and generally has a pretty good time. He claims he is boss of "No Man's Land." His early theatre career had him build the Highland and Marquette in Chicago.

Early in Mr. Meyer's career with the Teatro del Lago he tried to ape the ways of the city, and when the censors announced a pink ticket film, Mr. Meyer's stuck up the sign in "No Man's Land" no children would be admitted.

First week he learned his lesson when some 35 haughty mothers steamed up in large cars and asked Mr. Meyers point blank just why he thought he could say what children around the spot should see. That first evening some 100 youngsters demanded admittance to the theatre, despite the pink ticket idea, which didn't mean anything in the territory, but which Mr. Meyers thought might be good biz.

The upshot of the whole thing is the house now runs in its ads, for pink ticket pictures, the wording, "we do not recommend this show for children." If the kids want to come, okay. In any case the mothers don't feel, any longer, Mr. Meyers is trying to tell the youngsters, and their parents, what films they should and should not see.

Again contrary to city theatre rules the del Lago gets its biggest play during the summer months. It does a comfortable biz during the fall and winter, but in the summer it sticks on 15 to 20 extra boys who help on the parking space that can care for 720 cars.

As a matter of record the del Lago service make the de luxe houses about Chi keep their heads. If it happens to be raining when the best of the northside go out to the theatre, they find a boy with a flashlight and umbrella helping them park their car. If they want their car after the show, they have but to inform one of these numerous lads and he brings it around, and all with no tip or fuss. It helps part of the theatre's policy.

The line-up of the theatre's drawing includes about 800 from Wilmette, 2,000 from Kenilworth, about 9,000 from Winekate, 4,000 from Glencoe, and about 2,000 from Highland Park. All these suburbs are class A, so far as the western 400 and Chicago concerned.

When the house first opened Mr. Meyers had a mailing list of 20,000, all who were sent mail first class. This has dropped to 8,000, with not a name added in two years.

House uses De Forest sound and changes bills four times a week. Back stage they have dressing rooms, which house seven people. Off night in the house is Thursday, which is maid's day out in the suburbs, with many matrons and others having to sit home and care for the children. Mr. Meyers, however, points out this custom is fast passing, with the kids driving up in their mammouth cars and having the chauffeur call after the show. This makes everyone happy, with the young generation fast grasping this fact.

Mr. Meyers, to make his house seem like the Loop, has one vending machine in the outer lobby. It's been pushed in a corner, out of sight, as the trade doesn't go for such items. They laugh long and loud at anything that pleases them, and probably more dough is represented in the del Lago of an evening than even the Civic Opera.

Prices are 40 cents and 15, with a personnel of 30 required to operate.

PARAMOUNT, N. Y.

New York, Dec. 13.

It's a wise-cracking show from start to finish here. Even Leo Reisman goes in for it with a song, exaggerated by much hair pulling and waving. George Bancroft, personally appearing, is the only one who gets serious. The rest is laughing a lot or applauding vigorously.

Street scene is a "one" and gangster den in a "two" are flashed for atmospheric introductory of Bancroft. The rest of the star's time is taken up by a recitation of the old school and barroom type. Bancroft could be used to far greater advantage.

Ted Leary is usually fast moving, even some stage gags getting over. There's a lot of big-between stuff in Leary's jabbering, which only saves itself by a thin veneer from being in the category of crank burlesk material. Leary also works with Aurdele Craven, after the little girl dances and sings.

Chic Sandor ensemble contributes to the Harry Link Publix production called "Town Topics," with several demonstrations of tapping and costume changes. One of the offerings has been seen many times on the stem. It is the blackout ghost dance.

As the m. c. Frank Jenks is showing improvement each week. He should become a permanent.

Jessie Crawford does his turn at the organ with three pop numbers, one of which gives him an opportunity to exhibit all of the "musical instruments" that compose an organ like that in the Paramount.

CAPITOL, N. Y.

New York, Dec. 13.

Capitol hasn't followed the lead taken here and there in the sticks by giving John Gilbert subordinate billing in the Metro talker, "Way for a Sailor." The star's name is on top in the marquee lights and on all house billing.

Attendance light Monday night. Coldest weather of the season thus far might have kept them away from downtown and probably one reason for the biz.

Stage unit, "Catching Up," is more a specialty bill than the usual Loew presentation unit. It went into "one" in the middle for Stan Kavanaugh's comedy juggling routine, down to eight minutes, new, about half of his customary vaude running time, but purely a vaude type of act all the way. Show ran vaude fashion on full stage also.

To verify the title Dave Schooler, house m. c. steps before the traveler at the start to announce that the show is running late and in order to get back on schedule the various turns would have to cut. There follows a speedy series of specialties by acts and the girl line, of which the endings only are used, including a blackout containing just the closing punch line. The idea holds for several minutes, but there the show goes routine and stays that way.

Toy Wonders was the first specialty, a good acrobatic dance by a nice looking girl and Emilie and Romaine's followed. Hard working adagio pair with their double work superior to most of the trio and larger combination stuff still around but passing out. This may mark a return to the former and neater type of turns since it's a leg catch of the girl around the man's neck preceding a fast twirl, the impact seemed terrific.

Chester Fredericks had better locate some talk that will suit his flip nut style if he must talk between dances. Schooler came in most handy here as Fredericks straight and often polished the stuff when polish was needed. Fredericks might also toss that cigar. It suggests he can't decide whether to go into a blackface monolog or his dancing. An acrobatic dance and a cigar coming together a bit later, don't mix. Fredericks is a gingery youth with a big fund of leg ability and a pleasant manner. He could use both to better advantage.

The Great Yacopis, teeter-board troupe of seven men and two girls, work fast in their few minutes of bounding. Three-high leaps from the board are features, with the two-and-a-half into an elevated chair played down in the middle here instead of featuring as the finisher, as is customary with this sort of act. That the Yacopis can top that stunt is their edge.

Kavanaugh grabbed enough before the drapes, but all secured by his juggling. The stream of chatter drew just a couple of snickers. In the smaller vaude theatres his talk almost rivals the juggling for response.

A red and silver set dolled up the stage with rich effect. Band stand moved up on the rails for the orch's one number. Yasha Bunchuk led the pit crew through a medley of Cuban compositions, the smash ending drawing the usual heavy applause.

A Laurel and Hardy Metro short, "Another Fine Mess," had a scream spot along with the newsreel and feature. Bibo.

MILDA, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 10.

This is one of those neighborhood passes that coined money with Gabe in the years gone by, and which with biz weakening sadly under the present all sound policy, once more in the market for a lessee. Have sent a little encouragement and they'll be back in the column; all they want is a little assurance that they'll get a bit of co-operation from the I. A. T. S. E., the A. F. M., the A. C. and the bookers and they're set.

Three years ago this house used to play 16 acts of vaude and was one of the most consistent money-makers in the city. Situated in the heart of what's known as Bridgeport or sometimes as the Central District, the neighborhood is soaked in the aura of the stock-yards a few blocks away. The odor seeps through the cracks in the doors, crawls through the closed transoms and sneaks in through the ventilators. No amount of perfume can chase it from the house.

For four weeks Billy Pearl brought his tab show into the house. Business was excellent with a Sat. midnite show necessitated by the trade. And when Pearl crammed the neighbors squawked. Management has been telling them that he's conferring with the proper vaude agency now and that flesh shows are just around the corner. It's a cinch that variety will be back on the stage here soon after the first of the year, mainly because the Fox Midwest around the corner is threatening a return to vaude, and so does the Ramova, four blocks to the south.

Housed is arranged perfectly for vaude. Rather large, 1,000 seats in the main floor and balcony, but everything close to the stage. Money is tight in the neighborhood, and the balcony is getting a greater play than the first floor. Prices run like the old tariff, 10-20-30.

There's no doubt that the neighbors here are getting a lot fed up on the drawing room English dramas hitting this screen, with the older people being forced to bring their school taught children along to interpret some of the sequences. But vaude is universally understood, and in a neighborhood that has a tradition for vaude, and has been weaned for it since the advent of sound, it looks like flesh is the only course.

It's an indie house. Another break for vaude, since it's the indies which are going to take the first leap back to flesh. Flesh is a gamble as things stand now, and the circuit men are afraid to or can't gamble for fear of getting it wrong when the hiring-hats. The indie manager is his own boss, and has no fear of being let out.

Feature here was "Playboy of Paris" (Par), also a Burton Holmes (M-G) short. House is getting a protection break, being spotted as a C-pre-release stand. But even with that angle, business was only fair on a good theatre night.

ORIENTAL, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 12.

Quietly unpretentious, yet unusually pleasurable for the beholder is Will J. Harris' "Babes in Joyland," which brings again into sharp contrast the results achieved by the Chicago production department on comparatively short money.

This unit has three vaudeville turns, Jones and Hull, Flo Mayo and Williams and Charles, as its mainstay. Jones and Hull have a musical novelty that adapts easily and successfully to the picture house stage plus the additional booking value of being away from the routine.

That goes too for Flo Mayo, who gives a first rate demonstration of strength and skill on a trapeze that moves from one side of the proscenium to the other. All the while Miss Mayo keeps up a line of chatter somewhat in the pert manner of Una Merkel in pictures and Nydia Westman in legit.

Williams and Charles, cleverly convert exceptional acrobatic prowess to comedy ends. Their appeal is universal since they depend not at all upon the spoken word.

A Krazy Kat ballet was in keeping with the holiday stress on things juvenile as was the prevailing laff-from motif of the unit. Benny Meroff leading the band contributed a few representative samples of his hooting. Benny was somewhat in the background this week probably because next week the show is planned to be all-Meroff as the trailer put it: "By, for and with Benny Meroff."

Feature was Metro's "Passion Flower" with Charles Bickford, Kay Francis and Kay Johnson. Up to the second show Saturday there was no evidence that it meant much to the Chicago public. They stay away in this burg. Land.

Hollywood, Detroit

Detroit, Dec. 16.

Good show this week and plenty of hoke entertainment. Nothing classy except Steve Savage, who can go anywhere, but lots of laughs that stood well with the factory hands out here. Show pretty much devoid of talk, with Savage contributing a few tag lines that were carefully chosen and fitted. Otherwise a little heavy on singing. In addition to the Dawn Sisters Three Singing Globs sang entirely and the Savage turn used three vocal numbers.

Loughton in a Spanish costume looked well and a few words used as straight fitted in for a nicely sold show. This boy has the gift of selling an act and putting the act and audience at ease. The sort of training that might cull him a long given, I and contributed an arrangement of "Memories of You" with the help of Bob Clark at the organ. The effect was a little different and scored.

Savage is a home town boy. Working in the various auto plants most of his time here before he hit the stage in the Amateur Nights and then to his own act via night clubs.

In addition to his dancing he has a mugg and uses it to advantage. Mugging resembles the rubber mouth of Joe E. Brown and to best advantage. Although burlesque aesthetic dances have been done around here before, never just like these two. They have lyrics that sell the idea and scored heavily with falls and all.

Three Globs contributed a type of singing that has been missing for some time now, but still goes here. In this neck of the woods every lodge and fire station has its own singing trio and they go for this stuff.

PARAMOUNT, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 11.

It's up to the pictures at this house now. Stage shows, organ unit, orchestra and other dressing has reached a standard that needs no further attention except to maintain that quality. If New York doesn't get panicky and start to trim the nut out here, there'll be no trouble from the stage end.

Lou Smith, auteur-chief here, squirrely behind stage shows and exploiting them 100%, has unquestionably drawn new faces past the Paramount box office. Little by little since eastern units came in, other features have been organized until Smith now is providing shows with a class-close publish.

Nut is running high here through Smith's determination for class presentations but if it was sheared unwisely the house never would get anywhere after the way it's been run into the hole the last few years.

Picture this week is "Along Came Youth" (Par), with the Buddy Rogers name only for b.o. bait. Not likely to shoot house into big figures.

Unit is "Harem Hokum," staged by Louis McDermott and featuring standard vaude act of Morris and Campbell. Their regular vaude offering is split up by other numbers including a line routine that don't seem to fit in right but puts in a nice punch, nevertheless.

Publix has built an atmospheric Turkish set for the second half of the Morris and Campbell routine here, bringing in Sunny, Eddie and Eddie, crack colored dance and hammy band leader. Sunny Monde, who shows remarkable skill at tearing novel patterns out of big pieces of folded paper.

Seems McDermott wanted Joe Morris and Flo Campbell on hand most of the time to more effectively build these and other specialties, Idea has worked out satisfactorily with plenty girls also around the stage as always well dressed. Jack Partington, local dressup expert, adds girls to make the shows bigger and probably had something to do with flashing up that Turkish set.

Beatrice Gardell's snake dance with the outstanding item stuff something very different and clever, with local fans going for it.

Running time, 49 minutes. That's long for a stage show but no padding spots on in this case.

For Oscar Bann's first week here as pit conductor the house has an overture production in connection with "Martha," a prima donna and 16 dancers, making this comic for something. Very nicely staged. Thursday night audience gave the overture presentation a hand.

They don't sing for exercise, either, which makes it a tough job for Earl Abel at the organ, but he's trying hard and building up. A prima donna, Florence Foyer, off-stage went through Abel's first number.

Rhythm Boys booked for matinees and all day Sunday as an extra attraction in line with plan to slip in early like this now and then for b.o. draw, stopped the show Thursday afternoon. Act was spotted in line ahead of Morris and Campbell's in-one scene. Char.

ROXY

New York, Dec. 14.

Excellence and heft of the current Roxy stage show partly covers a weakness on the screen. The stage fare is reliable insurance against anyone walking out dissatisfied.

The last of four separate stage items, called "Blues," is in line with the new and more jazz-al stage policy at the house. Included is the Norman Thomas Quintet from Canada. This is a colored combination of piano, trumpet, hot drums and dance team, with a baritone on intro for a solo. Cut down to just the meat there, and meaty enough for a decided click. Bruce Johnson Serenade is sound classy, but arrest. They play piano, melodica, bazoo and washboard. The washboard is strummed by thimbled fingers and produces a weird rhythm.

Ballet and Markert's Roxyettes, after previous separate appearances, combined for the finale of this item. A rising stage effect background for the 48 girls. Last number for once making the Roxy costume seem natural most girls, girls went through a Harlem hot dance drill under their blackface makeup (masks), dressed in colorful silver and blue costumes. Noise and gling-a-ling galore.

Roxyettes on their first appearance were in a mechanical soldier routine impressing as the best line number at the Roxy this season. Stopped the running order, a feat at this large theatre. This finished the presentment, titled "Fantasie Russe." Opened with a Russian folk skit, musical along the lines of those played before centerpiece fan-rises in "chanve-sauris." Seemed like an argument over a check in a restaurant, but not so clear.

In "Les Papillons" an introductory solo dance by Patricia Bowman led to a most generous display of phosphorous costumes on a dark stage by the ballet. This type and grade of costuming and staging isn't to be found anywhere but at the Roxy. To anyone not familiar with grosses it is probably a standing question of how the Roxy can lay it on the stage so heavy at pops.

Pit overture, selections from "Faust," double with accompanying stage vocalizing. Mario Valle and Harold Van Duzee were the song soloists in front of the house chorus, all working behind a scrim. Stage portion was split into three sections, and the orchestra filled the pauses.

EMBASSY

New York, Dec. 15.

It being quite unlikely that Dr. Clarence True Wilson might have a substantial radio audience in Manhattan, the chances must be even slimmer that he could headline in films—of any kind. The Fox clip in which the persevering prohibition advocate warned the audience against the judgment of the "Jazz" trend jaw brought resentful guffaws from a half house of customers at supper time. This clip may have spoiled some dinners. That's strictly on the New York angle and the observation of customers' mien. Bill ran to 43 minutes, usual.

Wilson spoke slowly for 2½ minutes, one of the longest of the 28 or so clips shown. Against his thin Gen. Hans von Speckt, another propaganda film, also by Fox, spoke three minutes.

Far more Fox clips than Hearst on this run, which, when not propaganda, were highly magazine. The Hearst Mr. Average guy-and-Fearpiece. This time ringing in a supposed prosperity broadcast by Uncle Sam himself. Maybe that's theatre.

About four Christmas clips of the usual variety and coming in a bunch. One showed choirines dancing on the island in Times Square, opposite the Palace, for the Salvation Army. These choristers are a newsreel's conception of sex appeal. Palace (R-K-O) marquee clearly visible and a plug. President and Mrs. Hoover and V.-P. Curtis also get clips. Footage showing German grandkins playing bounce ball to radio; just a gymnast class and not important.

Sir Thomas Lipton speaks on receiving the Sportsmen's Cup from the hands of Mayor James Walker. Also a plug for the U. S. Steamship Lines and the Leviathan, which has a clear booking record with the newsreels, shown so often. Army and Navy football game displayed a number of empty seats at Soldiers' Stadium. Though photography is blurred there was keen work on the various plays, especially the run for a touchdown.

PARADISE, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 13.

Now being plugged as the only house with a stage show on the entire west side, this spot is clicking. Always a reliable house as to gold to be depended on coming through week after week to regular profits, it's theatres beating its former figures and running far ahead of the Marcus around the corner, which is trying to scrounge by without flesh.

When people talk about the Para-ney does five characters from "Oliver Twist." He is now exposing the changes to give the act a new slant. Added to the former values, it helps a lot. Some showmanship in the black mask makeup of his two dressing assistants. Just as interesting to see how it's done as to wonder why.

Murray laid aside his regular support almost entirely for this week, using only Milton Charleston of the bunch who played straight instead of stooge in a few bits. One was the poker game in which Murray, Rubin and McGivney also participated. It had two solid laughs along the way and a dropping finish.

Miss Etting's six numbers reached peak with her standby, "Ten Cents a Dance," and "I'm Funny That Way." She was a spine-chiller with the latter and a smash all the way. Bige.

LOEW'S STATE, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 12.

"Topical Tunes," Fanchon & Marco unit running efficiently without the help of Eddie Peabody until near the close, is the stage half of a good money bill which drew a short line for the last show Thursday. Evidently fearing "Holiday" on its second run wouldn't pull in the Christmas shoppers, house is protecting with this better than average stage show.

Peabody, an old favorite here, where hundreds of kids were members of his Eddie Peabody Club, didn't do a thing but lead the orchestra till the Caligary Brothers, featured, were through. Then he began operating on his banjo, playing two selections and three audience requests. Enthusiastic applause, especially for his "St. Louis Blues" rendition.

Band is practically hidden throughout, being on tiers behind a black velvet curtain picturing a bar of music.

Boy Buroff, with Eula Buroff, also sang a number. He was followed by one of the Caligarys for a tap. The Alexander Sisters, in top spot and lending lots of class to this show, did a song-and-dance routine that stood out. One sister then did a solo. Very well received.

The female impersonator number of a solo Caligary was really a burlesque on this type of act. It carried a humorous wallop.

Eula Buroff on next, and then the prima donna singing "Just a Little While." Miss Buroff and partner came on for a flying waltz, gracefully done. Alexander sisters followed with a tricky dance routine. One sister then displayed a difficult bit of hoofing backed by the Sunkist girls.

Caligarys' best number came here when, after clowning, they go through a slow motion hold-up and fight.

After another chorus routine with girls in clown costumes, the blonde Alexander—other is red-headed—had another song spot. Peabody then came from up-stage where he had stayed out of light a good deal for an m.c.

The Boutttes finished with a novelty routine on drums, led by the Alexanders. Added more meat to a well-filled bill.

This is Peabody's second and last week here. Program is one of the best Loew's State has had for some time. Along with "Holiday" on the film bill were Movietone News and a fashion feature.

86th ST.

With Gus Van topping and mopping and "Sin Takes a Holiday" (Pathe) as screen feature, the bill at this Yorkville house holds sufficient strength to satisfy the steady clientele. Balance consists of three acts, all light on comedy and overboard on dancing, but fair enough in vaude values.

Van, a great favorite in this Germanic stronghold of New York, got a fine reception, closing the vaude portion with 30 minutes. With his own conductor in the pit, Van pitches into his special material, omitting gagging talk, but registering solidly with his Hebe, Dutch, Negro, Irish and Wop dialect singing.

Opener held the Robbins Family, three men and two women, whose specialty is acrobatic stuff, all of it nicely executed, but bearing the stamp of too much repetition. Off to a slow start, then gathers momentum toward the close. Elderly man introduced as head of the family, closes it up with his dad speech at the finish.

Bobby Jarvis (New Acts) in a comedy skit with music was third, just managing to slip by with light-weight material assisted the comic and the supporting cast of three girl and a man.

STATE

Apparently the advent of Harry Hersfield (New Acts) as an actor hadn't been noised about sufficiently to cause any b.o. stampede early Saturday, but biz began to pick up before Harry bowed on for his second show.

State bill as a whole looked bad. Hersfield couldn't hold up the rest of the bill. Lally McConnell's "The Bridge Game," and the Stuart and Lash two-in-one combo, held comedy, but there was something missing, and the result made it easier for Ed Wynn in the feature, "Follow the Leader" (Par).

Four Polos opened with their circus display, just so-so, followed by Charles Stuart and Harry Lash out in "one" for hoke comedy, roughhouse and talk, on a bit too early in this big house. Their mauling of each other and the whamming the comic takes, which had been sure-fire in the R-K-O houses, seemed dull here. The laughs were scattered.

While the audience was a little better when Stuart and Lash came on later to close the show with their band, the Cavaliers, it was hard work to obtain spontaneous response. The act closed up considerably better.

Miss McConnell's skit started out so quiet before her entrance, it seemed out of place here. It's at the State direct from a week at the R-K-O Palace. But Miss McConnell stepped right into everything she had, and once she built up her stew the returns were all right. Miss McConnell has made a comedy gem out of the loquacious femme who grabs like a streak. Nobody quite like her now in vaude and doing the lady souse in her way. Mark.

HAMILTON

Ten acts of vaude here Monday night, three of them added for the final show to give the bookers a peek at new material and the customers a vaude bill at bargain rates. They like bargains at this uptown house, which filled to capacity early and held them to the end. Screen feature, "Sin Takes a Holiday" (Pathe), running 80 minutes, while the acts burned up 116. Enough variety in the lineup to satisfy most any neighb clientele.

Topping the bill, Sam Hearn with his hick comedy characterization, registered solidly. His chatter about men, women, marriage and politics, though a little risque in spots, rating as sure-fire material as sold inoffensively. Comedy song, violin solo straight and an impression of a vampire scene with sound effects are all handled in showmanly style by the rube violinist.

Spotted fourth, Doyle and Donnelly with a timely routine of talk and acts rated high in the applause scoring. Boys make a neat appearance, have a good sense of comedy values and harmonize a couple of pop numbers effectively. Mary Sawyer, shapely blond looker, is in support for some brief bits of clowning and contributes a corking tap routine. Looks like these boys with their present material are due to step up into faster company.

Joe Lane and Pearle Harper in the deuce with songs and talk pleased, their best bit being a baseball scoring system with each taking turns at pitching gags, and getting a good quota of laughs. Another mixed comedy team, Smith and Hart, clicked, with the blond girl a natural nut comic, carrying most of the burden, while the black haired boy stands out on appearance.

Field and Bell, two boys, depend on face slapping, knockabout and grotesque posturing to just about slip by in sixth position, while the Tam O' Shanter Girls (New Acts), spotted fifth, have another mild girl band act to sell. Chandler Four (New Acts), harmony quartet, were eighth with a fair routine of songs and instrumental specialties.

Lewis and Beth (New Acts) opened with a lightweight dancing turn and Van Cello and Mary rounded out the bill with a well executed juggling display by the male half of the team.

R-K-O, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 11.

Unit this week carries the billing "Two Headliners." Not indicated which two are the bill toppers, but Ford and Price, Don Zelaya, Keller Sisters and Lynch and Buster West are in the unit, so they can take their pick. It's good vaude. About the best variety lineup here in several months.

Ford and Price were not open. Nothing new in their routine but they sell it all. Four legit bows impressive for an opener.

Another sole man, Don Zelaya, followed. The "Don" (meaning Mr.) was tacked on here for the benefit of the Latin population. Zelaya managed to hold them through 10 minutes of strolling between two piano solos and finished strong with a Spanish number. He begged off with a speech.

Keller Sisters and Lynch sang their "rough-dried" numbers to a unanimously receptive mob. Plenty of class here, with the trio stacking ace-high in their line. Explanatory trailer that "Vincent Lopez presents," etc., fell on barren ground. Lopez is strictly an exmotion picture promoter in these parts.

Buster West closed, his hoke rounding out the bill that was lacking in democratic comedy up to this time. West's routine left them with sore sides. John West and an unprogrammed girl did good stooging.

"Talkable David" (Col), Pathe News, cartoon comedy and no end of trailers about next week's show, bargain dresses, midnight mats and professional try-outs took care of the flicker appetites. Call.

Liberty, Terre Haute

Terre Haute, Ind., Dec. 10.

This house and this town offer a fair sample of vaudeville operating under restrictions of budget, capacity and stage space. In a city of 77,000 population with nine theatres, the Liberty is Terre Haute's only temple of breathing actors. It plays six acts weekly, divided between a three-day first half and a four-day last half. Budget for the vaudeville is $400 weekly.

Under the circumstances Dick Hoffman of the Western R-K-O booking office has his problems. On top of the salary consideration, a stage never large has been reduced to hardly more than 10 feet in depth by the permanent and unmovable obstruction of vitaphone horns. This means three-quarters of all the novelty turns requiring full stage are rendered unavailable to the house.

To balance these handicaps from the performer's standpoint there is the not inconsiderable advantage that the stage crew of two is uncommonly obliging, with ditto for the orchestra boys. Performers run into all types in their travels, and the spirit of co-operation is rare enough to command special mention.

Perhaps a measure of the explanation at this house is that the manager, Clyde Willard, unlike most managers nowadays, is vaudeville-minded. He gives his acts almost as much prominence as the pictures, and, in view of Terre Haute's over-pictured condition, that would seem the better part of wisdom.

Because the tendency of the Terre Haute citizenry is to keep their pleasurable reactions a secret, Willard is trying to educate them to applause. A burg so accustomed to getting its entertainment from a can forgets that actors in person are supposed to be given the mitt if and when liked. Willard wants actors to force bows as part of the educational plan.

There are 1,400 seats in the Liberty with a 35-cent top nights and two bits in the afternoon. That explains why the budget can't be high. House belongs to the Fourth Avenue Amusement Co., a chain of 23 locations that branches out from Louisville, Ky., and is represented in several Indiana towns, including Lafayette, Logansport and Indianapolis.

Attendance was pretty good both matinee and evening on a drizzling day mid-week. Lupe Velez in "East is West" (U) was augmented by Bristol and Brewster, Joe Baldwin and Polly's Cellar, a total of five men and three women, to the vaudeville end.

Terre Haute has felt the business depression in about the same measure as the average American small city. Land.

58TH STREET

First half bill of five acts badly needed a strong support in the middle; it was decidedly end heavy with the applause distributed that way.

For novelty the Gym Jam Girls are there and they are one of the best lineups of dancers and acrobats around. Girls do everything expected from the Arab troupe type of act, but better. They use the full stage and are garbed in attractive Oriental costumes before a special drop. The whole turn was so unique it shouldn't have been used as an opener when none of the three following acts equalled it in entertainment value.

Brady and Wells, second, with material that was unfortunate. The girl looks like she could stand alone as a torch balladist. Man bents a ukulele, plunks a guitar-uke and plays the piano, where he does a fair solo while his partner is making a change.

Irvin O'Dunn and Miss Day were spotted next and gagged ineffectively for the greater part of 13 minutes. Dunn crowds his little partner out of the spot most of the time.

On next-to-shut, Florence Whitney and Company (New Acts), had two mixed teams of dancers with little to distinguish between the girls as to billing excepting Miss Whitney's fast-twirls on her toes. At present looks like a safe bet if spotted early.

Pathe News, Aesops Fables and Technicolor fashion short were added. House was less than half-filled.

Since last week, when this house went on the grind after three years of two-a-day reserved seat policy, matinee biz has picked up quite a bit, especially over the week-ends. House is playing three shows Saturday and four Sunday. Also drawing more customers at night.

Five acts, running to over 70 minutes, generally entertaining although a lack of comedy made it appear slow at times. Conrad and Eddy, who closed the bill, was a much needed act since his hokum pepped up the proceedings.

Joe Donahue and Nellie Breen (New Acts) spotted third, breaking in a new act, didn't live up to their possibilities. Have a slow start and both are capable of being much funnier than they are. It's the material, with work needed.

Four Haas Brothers (New Acts), opened. A sure fro starter anywhere. Sybil Vane followed and didn't sound up to her own standard. Pianist takes the spot twice for solos. Miss Vane does four songs, all pop ballads and all interpolated with bits. Too much of the same style.

Helen Lewis and band, 11 girls, pleasing, novel band outfit. Miss Lewis has made a few changes in material since last seen hereabouts. A girl tagged Teddy Sawyer is the soubringer of the outfit, using a crooning style of delivery. A slightly different arrangement of "St. Louis Blues" precedes the closing number, Russian musical fantasy wherein Miss Lewis leads both the pit orchestra and her own, and uses some striking stage lighting effects to put it over.

Conrad was cinch. His low hoke and piano gagging was a constant laugh. Girl who assists lends more than ordinary support and is plenty helpful, both for comedy and song numbers.

Pathe's "Sin Takes a Holiday," feature.

HIPPODROME

An exceptionally well balanced eight-act bill with plenty of strength throughout had to work hard in the half-filled Hippodrome Saturday afternoon to get enough applause for the usual bows. That some of the turns went ahead with encores was due only to their expertness in milking an audience of its last hand-clap.

A. Robins, next-to-closing, gave his neat vocal imitations of musical instruments in front of an effective drop portraying a giant grand piano. His flute, violin, cello, banjo, mandolin, saxophone and Hawaiian guitar interpretations went over individually. Robins relies on at least a dozen complete costume changes, all of them eccentric, and the withdrawing of a gross or more papier mache bananas from one of his pockets, for comedy.

The Gordonians (New Acts), openers, missed their first three tricks for nasty falls, one of the men cracking his head on the floor after failing to land on the shoulders of a second balancer in a jump from a rebounding table. Closed strong after several daring stunts. Five men and two girls who are mostly atmosphere with a couple of cart-wheels.

Henry J. Kelly, in the deuce, doesn't need the freak Mexican rig and make-up with a voice like his. With more tuneful and familiar songs, presented as class with sophisticated comedy instead of gutter gags, this tenor could stop proceedings anywhere. Girl with dark and figure does good Mex and acrobatic routines. She's a real asset but shouldn't be announced as Mrs. Kelly.

Dalton and Craig, on third, have put their "telephone" booth material in moth balls and now rely entirely on smart cross-patter to carry the act with a song by Dalton for a starter and a surprisingly good soft-harmony number for a walk-off, to good returns.

Gordon's Comedy Canines follow in one of the smoothest working animal acts around. Seven dogs are perfectly trained and apparently do exactly as they please while Gordon urges them to jump hurdles or balance on a swinging bar. His feigned exasperation is good for laughs from beginning to end.

Reed and Le Vier are next with comedy instrumentation. Lew Reed plays the violin and is the straight dancer, Paul Le Vier, the banjo and guitar and pulls laughs with almost no effort. His eyebrow raising mannerism soon becomes infectious. A classical number by Reed sets him as an accomplished musician.

Placed fifth, Ardine and Tyrell have a song and dance flash in two scenes that holds a fast pace. Opening in "one," three girls sing a routine chorus of introduction and exit with a snappy dance. Ardine and Tyrell set the act's idea in a few words and off to return in second scene, ship's interior. Gertrude and Helen Keeler, sisters of Ruby (Mrs. Al Jolson), are announced as such for a hand and do tups. Helen Tobin does remarkable acrobatic control stuff. Turn closes with a whirl of dancing after a harmony number by Tyrell and Leo Stone at the piano and a Mexican-Apache dance by the billed pair, with the boys taking all the worst of it.

Pisano, rifle wizard and formerly billed as "General," closed with marksmanship, assisted by a girl and a man who evidently thinks mance actions are still funny; they're out of place here.

"Madonna of the Streets" (Col.), "Trader Cinderella" (Radio comedy) and a Pathe News on the screen fare. Dave Love and his R-K-Olians rated mention for the "See America First" overture in the pit.

dise they mean the Mark Fisher house, for the m. c. has become identified with this spot, and established here since the house was built. Fisher shares with Benny Meroff the long-run m. c. record. Fisher started as banjoist with the Russo-Florito orchestra at the Edgewater Beach. He started to grab a name for himself on his display of vocal abilities, and when the m. c. craze began was sent into the Senate. That was almost five years ago.

He's very popular at this house; they like him a lot. In spite of because of the fact he's been here for some years now, he still gets a reception, and he's yet to sing a number without being forced to give 'em an encore. The man has a neat pair of pipes, and the wonder is how he can keep them in such great shape for four and five shows a day.

In this show, "Russian Rhythm," the Will Harris unit which started out at the Chicago two weeks ago, Fisher is singing two songs—"Russian Lullaby" and "Song of the Flame.

Webb and Douglas, hoke comedy team, are still leading the show, getting not as many laughs as they try for, with their gags. Webb is working as an audience plant, though the act would go better if he did his interrupting bit while on the stage, when they could see him. Morosco Brothers have switched back to straight evening clothes for their drunk dance, and it's going over bigger than ever. Russian Art Trio, of the Shauve-Souris quiet burlesque type, are an excellent novelty and welcome after dozens of straight vaude turns.

Fisher is on and off through the show, announcing, leading the band numbers, singing, playing straight for the comics, and clowning on his own. He's a sincere worker and an established m. c. fav in Chicago.

Business was very good at the first evening show Friday, with "Life of the Party" (WB) feature. Overture, four Par sound news clips and "Dixie Chase" (Pathe) sport-light completed.

Second Hollywood Bank

were not being honored, when aware of something awry, took care of themselves privately and without tip-off, on the theory of not contributing towards a premature "run."

Not So Wise

The most popular complaint among the picture weisenheimers, many of whom have come to "Variety," is the interrogation how, allegedly, wise muggs went into an institution which was without a Federal Reserve System or a Los Angeles Clearing House affiliation. Nobody could answer that. The best answer was a manifestation of convenience of location.

Beesemyer had become a glorified banking deity in the abstract. Sam Kress, vice-president of the B. of H., even now is highly regarded by many who aver that if Kress has anything to do with it everything'll come out alright. That answers the personality thing. Kress, of course, is not involved in the criminal plight as is Beesemyer, who was indicted on 10 counts for grand theft.

Optimistic reports mentioning several strong chain banks as taking over the B. of H. are now quiet.

Some went after Louis B. Mayer to take the bank over, but the Mayer angle is cold. He was interested at one time but upon further investigation lost interest.

Screen Vets' Comeback

Blue on Saturday, for example, got set with Columbia on "The Flood", which James Tinguling will direct.

Others like Eleanor Boardman, Esther Ralston, Robert Warwick, Clara Kimball Young, et al., are doing similar come-backs. Almost all were noted for his or her disinterest through being financially okay.

Anti-Sex Campaign

country's largest houses during the recent economy waves, is also held partially to blame. The old time indie exhib comes in for his quota, but without an alibi.

Advertising copy is now supposed to be white-washed from this week forward. All the big boys went on the record as enforcement agents in the matter and the situation has been taken out of the hands of the ad men, where it formerly reposed.

Press Agents' Answer

Meetings called later in the week by chief executives of the various film companies, following their own session in the Hays office, found publicity directors being told to "lay off" the sex angle in advertising.

Press sheets with cuts of women in peculiar postures were pointed to as being out under the clean-up campaign. More than one company was shown sheets gotten out by another as examples of what not to do in the future.

There is, however, a reaction among some of the leading press agents which brings up the matter of the Hays Code. These boys want to know why they can't duplicate what's on the screen. Some of the publicity minds point to the fact that the public right now, as much if not more than at any other time in the history of pictures, is sex-conscious and goes for the films which possess this ingredient and are so exploited.

Wide Film Out

drops in attendance is not included and will reflect in the next report of the industry's books. Hence these tightening up orders are prompted through the mutuality of the cause.

No Money Year

Any interpretation of Wall Street, from individuals or otherwise, that 1930 has been a money year for filmdom is declared "absurdly ridiculous" by some of the industry's most important executives—men who know and are responsible for the figures.

The Wall Street thing has gotten so often into print that film leaders want it thoroughly understood that during all of their inside dealings with the "Street" not once have the financiers attempted to dictate the policy of a distributor, producer, or circuit operator. Conceding that Wall Street now and then comes to the aid of a film company, filmdom's spokemen, including those who have invest ment at stake, declare that the Street isn't interested in the way pictures are made; that all it wants is to get its money back with interest. Film men make all the decisions, whether or not Wall Street is interested.

As a whole, it is pointed out, the Street never has done any talking. Individuals have made comments without knowing what it was all about, here and there, while elsewhere a very few have attempted to opinionate. One good film man could take all of the Wall Street "talkers" into a room and pipe them down one after another, uptown claims.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Out here they even ballyhoo death.

Getting an eyeful of cemetery lot peddlers' literature and listening a couple of nights to the arguments over the air, you almost look forward to passing in the checks and that "peaceful lot among those romantic surroundings of Blah Blah Park."

In every other mail comes a circular describing those wooded dells; every second knock at the door heralds an oily ex-bond seller, who goes into further ecstasies on the refining influence of his particular burying ground. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why the city of angels is so high on the suicide list.

Genteel Titles

Yet there's nary a cemetery within miles of the burg. They're all memorial parks and sleepy hollows.

On the air any night is a funereal selling argument starting, "What if your little child should die tonight?" Sometimes the routine is changed so Aunt Min and Uncle Joshua get a play.

Selling grave lots became popular when speculating in real estate stopped, being an every man's pastime here. Real estate men got left with subdivisions on their hands.

Aimee's Blessed Hope

About this time Aimee Semple McPherson saw gold in them thar hills north of her temple and tied herself in with a crowd of burying hole promoters. With the femme evangelist's endorsement, selling six by fours in Blessed Hope Memorial Park to the parishioners of the Four Square Gospel was a cinch.

When the idle realters piped the ease of burial lot sales there was a mad scramble for cemeteries.

The artiest of arty types of circulars were printed, a rush was on for select mailing lists and the air became a nightly jumble of competitive pessimism. It was a bonanza for the unctious door-to-door seller. Bond salesmen and ex-ministers can write their own tickets.

Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce advertises that this is the greatest place in the world in which to live. Six weeks here and it's hammered home to you that L. A. is a better spot to die and "repose amid the fragrant, cultural, scenic surroundings of Pleasant Dell."

DANCER WENT GUNNING FOR ACTOR, ARRESTED

Lucille Lavelle, 19, student and dancer, of 138 East 38th street, was arraigned before Judge Max S. Levine in General Sessions Monday (15) on an indictment charging her with felonious assault. The girl pleaded not guilty and was freed under $1,500 bail for trial.

Miss Lavelle was arrested Dec. 1 at 62d street and Central Park West when Herman Seagert, a taxi chauffeur, called a policeman and charged the girl with having pulled a gun on him. The girl turned the revolver over to the officer after saying she did not wish to harm Seagret, but was on the lookout for Rudolph Cameron, film actor and former husband of Anita Stewart.

A few days prior to her arrest, Miss Lavelle had brought charges against Cameron that he attacked her. The charge against Cameron was dismissed. Miss Lavelle, who claimed she was about to enter a convent, decided Cameron should be punished, and if the courts would not do so she would do the punishing herself. She obtained the gun and had visited several places vainly seeking Cameron when arrested.

MORON CHARGE DISMISSED

A charge of annoying a 12-year-old girl while in the Tivoli motion picture house on Eighth avenue, Dec. 6, was dismissed by the Justices of Special Sessions against Frank Kurer, 22, a waiter, of 330 West 46th street.

Kurer was arrested after the child had reported to the manager of the theatre that Kurer had constantly bothered her while she was seated next to him in the theatre during the picture.

Faces 5 Yrs. for Nite Club Shakedown Racket

Convicted of attempting to shake down patrons of a former night club, Jay Herman, 29, salesman, living at the Times Square hotel, faces a five-year term in Sing Sing when he appears before Judge Donnellan in General Sessions tomorrow (Thursday) for sentence. Herman was found guilty of attempted grand larceny.

Specific charge on which Herman was arrested and indicted was on the complaint of Edward J. Crowe, lawyer of 1215 Carroll street, Brooklyn, who claimed that on several occasions Herman had demanded by letter and phone calls the payment of a bill for $144 which he said Crowe owed the management of a night club at 156 West 54th street. Defendant declared Crowe had signed a check for this amount at the club on the evening of Nov. 5.

The lawyer informed the police. Latter advised him to request Herman to meet him at the Manger. The appointment was kept and when Herman identified himself to Crowe he was arrested by Detectives George Creed of the Third Division.

Investigation by police revealed Herman had worked the same game successfully on several other persons, it was alleged. The night club mentioned burned down a month before Crowe was supposed to have visited the place.

Herman has a police record, several convictions for minor offenses.

Actor Relays Shirts as Layoffs Clean Laundrymen

Everybody's having troubles. Even the laundries. One shirt washer on west 43d street was listing his woes the other day.

"There's more ways of cheating me out of a laundry bill these days," he wept. "You can't tell who to trust any more.

"One guy came in here a couple weeks ago, an actor, I know him. He leaves a package of laundry. A few days later he comes back and asks for one shirt. He ain't got money enough for the whole bundle so he wants only one shirt. All right, I give it to him. I still got four of his shirts. A few days later he comes back. He wants another shirt. Well, I don't like it, but all right.

"Sure, I still got a couple of his shirts, but what good are they? They ain't even my size."

Money-Back Tailor Is Actors' Disappointment

Billy Taub, Broadway tailor, well known among the show people and sporting circles, is being sued for $45 in the West Side Municipal court.

Wilkie Ward, vaudeville actor, is bringing the action. Ward bought a $45 suit at Taub's, impressed with a sign in the shop reading, "If dissatisfied bring back the suit in three days and money will be refunded."

Ward wasn't satisfied with the suit and took it back and asked for his money. It was not forthcoming. Then Wilkie pointed to the sign.

Taub's store is at 1387 Broadway. He has pictures of Dempsey, Benny Leonard and every fighter of note in his display window. Taub was formerly in Harlem and held in high esteem in the trade.

Paris Cafe Grief

Paris, Dec. 7.

Plain cafes like the Fouquets and the Berry, devoid of any gyp, drawing considerable night trade from the night clubs in the Champs Elysees section, resulting in night clubs trying to retain patronage by other means. Lido, not breaking even on the likker, is evidently using the restaurant as a draw for the game club.

Embassy is trying to boost up the regular floor show by obtaining free aid of well-known players under pretence of galas, bringing it beaucoup publicity.

Toy Economy

Even toy electric trains are feeling the depression. Last year a Sixth avenue hardware store ran a set in its windows with one engine and a dozen toy cars.

This time just the engine and one car.

Cop Saw Finaglin

A charge of cheating at gambling was dismissed in Special Sessions Monday when police failed to appear in court to press the charge against Frank Kelly, 24; John Gilroy, 22, and Joseph Francy, 23, all salesmen.

The three were arrested by Policeman Joseph Stiglin of the 3rd Division on Aug. 25 in Bryant Park. Officer accused the men of using loaded dice in the game. The defendants, according to the officer, were the only ones allowed to throw the dice while the "suckers" did the fading. Before he stopped the game, Stiglin said defendants cleaned up.

DIZZY JOB TO CHATTER WITH PROTEAN ACTOR

Owen McGivney, the only living Protean Artist who portrays all five characters in a dramatic playlet, was seated in his dressing room at the Palace theatre, A "Variety" sobbie breezed in and immediately Mr. Givney became ten other people.

"Oh, ho," said Sobbie, knowingly, 'you cant' escape me that way, Mr. McG. I've heard about you Protean Artists."

Mr. McGivney swept all his make-up off the shelf in an infuriated gesture of welcome.

"So nice of you to drop in," he said as, transforming himself in a twinkling from Fagan to Bill Sikes, he brandished a gnarled club by way of making Sobbie feel thoroughly at home.

"This Protean art isn't all it's made up to be," said Mr. McGivney, slipping in a flash, into the uniform and beard of John Philip Sousa. "The more it's perfected, the less are people willing to credit it. Even newspaper people said I couldn't possibly go out the door as Nancy Sikes and come in the window as the Artful Dodger."

"It's disconcerting," said he, flaring up. "I've had to reconstruct my act and make all my quick changes in full view of the audience, and even now detractors claim I have plants in my act."

To illustrate his point, Mr. McGivney became a Cactus.

"I used to do dramatic recitations," went on Mr. McGivney, as the Boy who stood on the Burning Deck," but the gallery gods in the English Music Halls didn't like serious things. So I decided to incorporate my acting ability with my aptitude for quick changes. And there you have it," said the Protean Wizard, dashing into the red wig and pale complexion of Elinor Glyn.

"Martin Beck brought me to America in 1912," continued Mr. McG., turning into a forty-two weeks contract, "and since then I have played all over the British Isles, Australia, South Africa, America, and New Zealand. Suiting the character to the country, Mr. McGivney became in rapid succession the Spirits of Britain, Australia, South Africa, America, and New Zealand.

By this time he was pretty well fed up.

"I'm sorry, you'll have to go now," he said, turning into the antithesis of Grover Whalen.

Sobbie looked around to say "Good-bye," but Mr. McGivney had disappeared. He had turned into a "Variety" story continued on another page, and now he probably never will be found.

STENOG. FORGIVES

Charged with annoying Mildred Greenspan, stenographer of 12 Crown street, Brooklyn, in the Selwyn theatre, Lawrence Lynn, 23 years old, of the Lincoln Hotel, received a suspended sentence from Magistrate August Dreyer in West Side court.

Lynn apologized to Miss Greenspan and it was found the entire affair had been adjusted.

Anti Hey-Hey Rule in L. A. Scaring Big Spenders Away, Biz Men Squawk

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Heavy reaction is being felt here against the city administration's policy of keeping the town's lid shut tight. Reaction in the main is coming from business houses and hotels which are feeling the pinch through lack of the usual tourist influx.

For some time this burg has been taking dictation from a flock of reformers. These boys have made it their business to keep the city dry and righteous to a degree in accordance with their own personal likes and dislikes. Meanwhile L. A. has hopped into third place on the country's major crime list.

Blue Nose Immigrants

Liquor, gambling, cafes—anything that would attract the dough spending travelers—are strictly taboo here. Individual who want sunshine and have money to spend find that Florida is a much more attractive spot than Los Angeles. About the only people keen on Southern California are the middlewest crowd who are inherently blue nose.

They come here with a few hundred dollars to tide them over the winter months. This money is spent for bed and board and the business houses in the town get the short end.

Business houses doing the beefing have been trying to get to Mayor Porter and his associates in an attempt to have him lay low on provincial activities.

Bulls Off Snooping

Campaign has netted fair results. The mayor's personal flock of snoopers, harness bulls who operated out of his office and spend most of their time raiding clubs, cafes or any spot showing symptoms have been ordered back to pound beats. So in this respect, cafe and club operators are breathing easier.

The grand jury investigation of Porter's activities during his year in office is reported to have been advocated by the more liberal elements in town in hope that they would be able to blow him down.

Recent election of James Rolph as Governor of the state to succeed C. C. Young, ardent dry and anti-everything, has given the liberals a renewed hope that after all, the state may have a chance to blot out some of the unpopular laws, toughest of which is rigid state inforcement of prohibition.

For some time local business has cried its eyes out over the amount of money that goes from here over the border to the Mexican resorts.

'Shipwreck' Down in Even 13's; Telescope Side NSG

When all hope of realizing any dough on the stunt faded Alvin "Shipwreck" Kelly, holder of the world's endurance record, shinnied down the flagpole atop the Paramount hotel, New York, where he had perched for 13 days, 13 hours and 13 minutes.

Kelly, a war veteran, went up Dec. 1 as part of a plan to relieve financial distress among his buddies and raise contributions to the Unemployment Committee of the United American World War Veterans. The vets were to have sold pamphlets of Kelly's life and look through a telescope with the human fly receiving the short end of a 75-25 split on the gross.

During the first five days and nights of his stunt no vets made their appearance, but on the fifth day a half dozen congregated in Times Square with a telescope and the booklets. Business was so poor that on the sixth night Kelly came down for a conference.

After three hours "Shipwreck" returned with assurance that his split would be forthcoming on time and in substantial amounts. This failed to materialize and except for a small cut in on the take of telescope operators (not of the Veteran's organization) he received practically nothing. The telescope and binoc end was controlled almost entirely by one with whom Kelly did business.

The hostelry furnished a room for Kelly, his wife and their three-year-old son, Alvin "Shipwreck," Jr., and meals.

Kelly was tentatively booked to start an R-K-O vaudeville tour in Newburgh, on Jan. 5, at a salary of $1,000, but that date's cold.

Complaint of a couple of the indie telescope boys with itching fingers selling looks at "Shipwreck" said the sitter did okay, but the chumps didn't gaze long enough.

Twice in Same Place Bad Burglar Practice

Wilda Ganeau, 23, actress, of the 44th Street hotel, 120 West 44th street, appeared in West Side court to prosecute Joseph Holmes, 21, Negro porter at Town Hall, in West 43d street.

Miss Ganeau was formerly of Earl Carroll's 1927 show. Holmes, she said, entered her apartment by climbing a two-story extension and raising the window. More than $1,000 was taken in gems and personal belongings. All was recovered.

Miss Ganeau was asked to change her room following the burglary, by the manager. "Not me. The bird that entered this suite will return and I am going to play sleuth," Miss Ganeau told the manager.

While she sat in her room reading, she testified, the window began to raise. A form started in, then backed out when she raced to the window. It was Holmes, she said.

She and the detective searched places in the block where any Negroes were employed and the girl identified Holmes when they came to Town Hall.

Golfie Hostessing Is Better'n 10c a Dance

Golf hostesses are being engaged by some of the minnie cours-s as an impetus for business. The men pay for their girl partners' rounds and the girls get half of the sum.

The girls have no hours. They can come to the course anytime and play around with any men who want them as partners.

It is a little more lucrative than ten cents a dance, but youth and at least a trace of good looks are also necessary requirements for a golf hostess.

Quite a number of older ladies who did not realize this fact have been applying for jobs at various courses. Lady ping pong partners are also available, but not often wanted for this game.

COURT NEWSREEL CREW BALK AT JAIL THREAT

The postponed hearing of former Judge Ben B. Lindsey of Denver in West Side Court on the charge of disorderly conduct before Magistrate August Dreyer proved a keen disappointment to many sexologists, churchmen, writers and others who came as early as ten o'clock to get a good seat. Bishop Manning did not appear but Charles H. Tuttle, former federal prosecutor and defeated candidate for Governor, stated that the Bishop would come immediately, if needed.

More than a hundred sob sisters, male writers and camera men sought points of vantage in order to cover the expected hearing. The courtroom was jammed and the aisles were crowded. The telephone in the court began to ring as early as ten o'clock, mostly women, who wanted to know the time of the hearing and whether it would be necessary to have a ticket.

A police sergeant and several cops together with court attendants endeavored to maintain order. An evening newspaper sought to have the hearing broadcast but Chief Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan vigorously declined.

Then a gang from Pathe News tried it. Chief Magistrate Corrigan again said "no." But the Pathe "boys" rigged up their wires. They intended to take a chance. A court clerk whispered in their ear that Judge Corrigan would surely punish them and the Pathe "boys" dismantled their setup.

When the complaint was read it was found to be faulty and the hearing was postponed.

"All Quiet"—Not

would have been agitated in the same measure if the same situation had arisen outside the capital, considering the present political situation.

The super-censor has also suppressed certain pictures made by the Nationalistic organization called Stahlhelm on the ground they endangered public safety.

In spite of the decree of prohibition Hugenberg gave a private showing of the subjects to his Nationalistic friends in his film theatre, Universum, owned by Ufa in Berlin.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Universal's plan to shift the burden of its foreign production to Europe has received a setback and there is little likelihood of switching the editions to Europe for at least a year, if then.

Berlin had been favored by Universal for centering the bulk of its foreign production aside from Spanish.

Studio is now definitely set on making all of its big German product here next year, although a few films will be made abroad, probably through other companies, to answer quota requirements.

With good returns from "Cat Creeps" in Mexico, Universal has the same feeling regarding Spanish talkers that other majors had: currently the best returns from versions are from the Spanish. It was this realization that brought about soft pedaling European production plans.

Universal, due to the nativity of its exec personnel, was electing itself to carry the bulk of the Hollywood invasion into Germany. With the banning of "All Quiet" and the reception accorded its Spanish editions below the border, a policy of waiting was instituted instead.

Nevertheless the studio will follow the lead of the other majors and survey European production possibilities. Intention is to send Paul Kohner, now heading the foreign department here, to Europe some time in February for the look around.

Vienna, Dec. 16.

The extreme Austrian Nationalists have made known their intention to fight for the exclusion of "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U). from the country. The Front Fighters' organization, the Student League, and other Nationalist bodies, threaten to repeat the Berlin methods if the film is offered in Vienna.

This threat was sufficient to bring a cancellation of a proposed engagement at the Apollo theatre to introduce the picture. The house is owned by a syndicate which has close associations with the Socialist city fathers.

In all probability the police will forbid the screening of the film in Vienna, acting on their privilege to take measures to prevent public disorder.

General public opinion is against the "die hard" nationalists in their campaign.

extend wiring. Due to the present limited possibilities it is suggested that for the time being American producers restrict their talker product to English, French and German versions. The other nationalities are not sufficiently developed in wiring and other phases to show a return on the production outlay.

(2) Local American production for languages other than those named (and even for them) is viewed with some uncertainty at this time. Besides the limited number of equipped houses, there is also the possibility of overnight legislation adverse to foreign production. As a result of this angle the conferees believed it would be safer to confine production to the States.

(3) American interests should have a wider working participation in foreign houses which are properly equipped for talkers, these to be located in the European key cities.

(4) The quality of American-made sound equipment is superior to European and is holding every advantage over foreign equipment.

(5) The advent of talkers resulted in an increase of grosses in all Continental centers with the exception of Germany where current box-office figures are below those of silent days, following the high demands of Tobis which amounts to a monopoly. Because of this situation competition is weakened and the outcome is inferior quality native production which means poor entertainment. Native production outside of Germany is improving materially. In Germany the recording is good, but the reproduction is inferior.

The Musical Show's Premiere

By Joe Laurie, Jr.

"Well, fellers, what do you think we got" Now don't all of you say 'lousy' at once. Of all the shows I've ever produced this is the worst. Nothing went right. Now wait a minute, don't go blaming it on each other. I'll take up one department at a time, I don't want to waste all night.

"Bill, I'm paying you to be a stage manager. What was the idea of the girls missing that Hinky Dee number? You can imagine how it looked when a half dozen strolled on after the number was started. Why didn't you keep 'em off altogether? Oh, when you motioned for them to stay off they thought you meant for them to go on? They are the dumbest looking dames I ever saw. Get the address book Arty and see what we can dig up of the ones we okayed at the auditions. I'll fire a couple of girls and show the rest that I mean business. You can go, Bill.

"Now Jack, what was the matter with that plush traveler? It fouled? Well what do you think I'm paying dough to all these stage hands for? I got 10 guys too many on now, and they're getting in each other's way. There was a five-minute wait on account of that traveler fouling. I know it can happen to anybody but why pick my show out on an opening night? Don't bother with it tonight, the overtime money is big enough now. Give me a smooth show tomorrow night and get after those fellers back there will you Jack?

"And you Benny, you had your lights all wrong in that first act comedy scene. You had blues on instead of whites. How can you play a comedy scene in the dark? A fuse blew out? Can't you see that the fuses are O. K. before the show starts? Alright go on home.

Looked Pretty Bad

"Bergman, who did you think you were making the scenery for, a tab show? I know I okayed them but they didn't turn out the way you said they were going to. The lights were bad, but the sets are worse. Maybe it's better the full lights weren't put on 'em. Put more color in them, jazz it up, this ain't a dramatic show, although it sure looked like one tonight.

"Fix 'em up, I don't care who was satisfied with your stuff I'm not, and you don't get another cent until I get what I'm supposed to. I don't care if you gotta put 20 men on.

"And as for you Conlin, you are supposed to be a costumer, not a rag picker. That stuff you had on those girls looks no more like the plates than I do like Little Billy. You only had six clown hats. Yeh, the wardrobe lady forgot to unpack the others? And I had to open tonight without the bridesmaid's dresses. I can't tell the critics and the public that we were supposed to have some beautiful costumes in the finale but because one of your men missed a train we had to do without 'em. I don't know why all you fellers picked me out to be the patsy.

"And Sammy, those dance routines go in stock burlesque. I'm paying you 1% of the gross. That aint marbles. I can get a chorus boy to put on better numbers than those. Don't blame the music, I'm talking about how they looked. Give me something new or I'll throw your stuff out and get me a troupe. And don't forget you put the numbers on yourself, not your assistant.

"And talking about the music what was the matter with you Carl? You were slow on picking up cues, you played too loud and didn't get the encores fast enough. Your getting a new trumpet player? Why wasn't he here today? Well you'll need more than a new trumpet player to make that music sound good to me. You'd better get rid of the whole orchestra and just whistle the tunes.

Words and Music

"And you two guys! So that's what you call lyrics and music. I told you the tunes were lousy but you kept saying that they would sound oke with an orchestra. They did, even lousier! When you steal tunes steal good ones. And you boys better get busy and write a new number for that comic. I know he can't put over a number, that's why I want an actor-proof one for him.

"Now about the book. I have enough notes here to write another show. Those alleged comedy scenes smell bad. Don't go blaming it on the comic. I know he left out a lot of stuff; he has a memory like a mirror, I'm surprised he remembered to show up. I told his agent that I thought the guy was too old, but no, he kept telling me he is better than ever. If he is, then he must have been terrible. I got to replace him before we open in New York. But you also must replace a lot of this book. You got a piece from every bit of the past 10 years in it and yet it doesn't go. I guess you didn't remember the way the gags were pulled.

Standing Off Notices

"Say Nat, did you talk to those critics after the show and tell 'em to give us a break. I'll throw a little party tomorrow night and you

WB's Golf Dubs Pant for Jones' Arrival on Lot

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Bobby Jones doesn't know it, but while his contract for 16 shorts on "How I Play Golf" for Warners calls for camera work strictly, he'll be impressed into service by Daryl Zanuck, Bill Koenig, Hal Wallis and C. Graham Baker of the WB-FN executive bunch.

Hints as to how badly each of these execs needs expert tutoring are the following quotations on last year's WB-FN golf tournament: Zanuck turned in a score of 220 for 18; Koenig, 218; Wallis, 210. Baker was considered good with 190. Allegations are that an adding machine didn't accurately record all of the strokes.

As a further warning to the golf champ, the execs are whetting their whistles these days at the Lakeside Country Club, at Burbank, near the FN-WB studios, where everybody eats now until the new commissary is completed. Lakeside will probably be the location for the Jones golf series.

They start work in February.

"If I Fight Again It Must Be Quick"—Dempsey

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Jack Dempsey states that he is amenable to a fight come-back, but that "it will have to be pretty quick." He intends getting set on this within the next couple of weeks.

The ex-champ is still in training at his Hollwood residence plus some extra work-outs worrying about his Ensenada (Mexican) resort which has precipitated internal squabbles.

Dempsey's outer house on his estate is flooded with expensive furnishings, props, etc., which had been ordered locally for shipment below the border line. Until the internal squabbles in the Ensanada corporation are adjusted, however, the ex-champ is keeping the valuable furniture and tapestries in this country.

Estelle Taylor (Mrs. Dempsey), who went east on a flying trip just in time to be at the bedside of a dying relative, got back this week and may hook up with Dempsey for show business again if his fight plans go awry.

Ice skating is a new fad in this town. Down here where zer weather is a freak, many have never seen an ice skater in person.

Gardne. ice rink opened recently with heavy biz, most of it from those trying to learn. Management spicing menu with some exhibition hockey teams from east.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Numerous formerly classy private homes in Hollywood have been converted into dress-making establishments, millinery shops, etc.

Some even take in laundry.

BATTALINO CLICKS IN GARDEN DEBUT

By Jack Pulaski

Another fistic favorite gone wrong at the Garden, Kid Chocolate, had the featherweight crown within his grasp Friday night but was outgamed by Chris Battaline-Battling Battalino, or whatever they call him up in Hartford. It recalled that story: "Give my regards to the governor," and the Conn. governor was present with a thousand other nut-neggers who gave Bat a college cheer.

Couple of months ago word came that this Battalino was the new champ. One of those "elimination things with Chris in a soft spot. The guy never fought in New York and they figured he was some sort of phoney. Well, as a boxer he's not so hot. Chocolate had it all over him in that department and it was figured the Cuban was getting the crown on a platter.

Dope ran true to form in the first round when the Kid socked Bat around something fierce and down went the Hartfordian. Looked like a quick kayo but the invader weathered the session and Chocolate couldn't do anything more about it. Battalino fought in a daze for several rounds but at the end of the fifth it looked even.

Same was true in the 10th, with Bat boring in constantly, covering up to get at close range and then socking to the body. Chocolate started the wilt about that time. Slams to the tummy almost doubled him more than once but he was winging with a long right hook. Seemed that Battalino had an iron stomach.

Aggressiveness won for Bat. Chocolate's fight was a counter battle for the most part. A New Haven sports editor sat at ringside and agreed with plenty of others that the affair was close and did not deny that the Cuban actually won. However, the referee and both the judges gave the award to Battalino. Latter was conceded to have put up the best exhibition of his young career.

This Chocolate fellow, touted as the best man of his weight in the world, has been consistently losing important decisions. Singer beat him and not long ago Kid Berg gave him the business. Cuban appears to have made up his mind to hit hard and score quick knock-outs if possible, that being the surest way to win. He nearly did it Friday but almosts don't count.

Semi-final was a bear of a socking match. Mateo Osa of the Chocolate stable took a pasting from Ralph Ficcuello in the first round. But in the third, as Ralph was coming off the ropes, Osa caught him with a choppy right on the button and down went whosis. A left smack sat him down again and he didn't believe it. For a third time Ficcuello toppled, this time dangling on the ropes. That was enough for referee Arthur Donovan, who stopped the event. The men are heavies. Osa started in asking for the best there is in the division. But he is easy to hit and will doubtless find plenty of trouble before he is much older.

Film Cage Results

Fox quintet downed the Warner five at the inter-film basketball league game Friday night (12) at Commerce High School gym. Score was 38-16. Same night the Metro bunch defeated Columbia 28-14 in their opening league game on the U. S. S. Illinois Wednesday (10).

This Friday (19) all teams of the film basketball league will play benefit games on board the training ship. Fox faces Metro, Pathe plays Columbia and R-K-O meets Warners.

Games will be followed by a dance and the proceeds donated to the "Film Daily" fund.

At present Fox and Pathe are leading the league, both having won their two games.

No Fixing Without Gamblers

A discussion whether hockey can be framed brought up a couple of opinions. One belief said it could be through the very speed of the game, while a positive opinion was that hockey or other games not infested with professional gamblers have no need for framing. Arena or grand stand betting in minor amounts not counting as by pro gamblers, despite the number of wagers that may be made that way. The betting to influence gamblers and possibly the games they bet on must be concentrated and of sufficient volume. Hockey doesn't appear to have as yet reached that state.

Gamblers tried fixing for football a few years ago but the first try ended in such a distinct flop, it has not been since repeated. The football coach of a fairly nationally known university was in New York. He was approached, sounded out and seemed agreeable to a frame for his own team. The fix as agreed upon was that he should put in his second team for a certain game or sufficient of the second team to weaken his line up. The coach was declared in for 40% of the winning without any advance payment.

The gamblers bet around $25,000 between the two towns contesting and in New York. On the day of the game the fixed coach's full first team went in and won. No explanation could be asked, nothing was said and the gamblers took their loss quietly. They don't know yet the why of the seeming cross, but the chances are that if the coach had not been kidding the gamblers from the outset, he thought more of his job and prestige than the money and possible exposure.

Boxing of course is a natural fix, always, and always has been. If there's one fight out of five on the level, that's a big percentage. The fix has been going on openly in New York for years, from the days of the old Garden. Anyone betting on a fight the way the late Arnold Rothstein did, would usually win, although Rothstein would often bet the other way himself publicly, to throw off, while his commissioners were doing his actual betting. The last few fights at the Garden in New York suggests the panic is on with fight promoters and they know it is dangerous to take a fix chance at this time, with not much support left to boxing. Other sports will drive out boxing in time anyway.

The bike races of course are a hippodrome all over the world, as they travel. Though it seems but a waste of time to watch a big race, it has its rabid followers with the racial leaning the bike race's strongest angle. Not much pro betting on bike races, naturally.

Baseball has had its scandals with a pretty close guard now kept on any pro gambling in the ball fields.

The big and ever present fix is in the gaming rooms. This centres mostly upon the wheel games, with the fix worked either by the dealer being wired for contact with the wheel direct, or the wheel operated by remote control. By remote control, however, the roulette wheel is only susceptible to direction in the sectional numbers (there are three) and not distinct numbers as by the wired croupier.

One of the best know gambling joints in this country is claimed by gamblers to be operated on the wire system. In Europe at the noted casinos it is said the play is so steady and heavy as a rule the house percentage is sufficient, without a fix. But gambling is gambling and the house expects to win.

Pool Room Betting Away Off

Betting on the horses as evidenced by the daily gross amounts wagered in the betting pool rooms all over the country is said to have fallen off 50% since the suminer of 1929. Compared with the amounts bet in the same manner in 1926, the decline is 80%.

This kind of betting, which somehow secures a desperate hold on its victims, may be the most accurate guide thus far to the dread of financial privation in these times amongst that large group of medium salaried people all over who say they take a chance on the races now and then, but in the past have been daily addicts.

Betting has dropped to such an extent, away from the tracks, that those in command of the biggest betting centres, really controlling the pool room betting, are in a tight spot themselves for money. While at such tracks as are now open or within the past two months, the only ones betting with near the liberality of other days are those hooked up with booze running.

Wayburn's Newest Dance School

Ned Wayburn's newest dancing school in New York, which he characterizes as "the dream of a lifetime," opened Dec. 1. It was dedicated with ceremonies Friday (5). Wayburn has taken a 10-year lease on half of the third floor in a new building at Madison avenue and 59th street. Space represents 10,000 square feet, at $30,000 annual rental.

School has nine teaching studios and one radio room, latter representing a reported investment of $16,000, to be used to teach radio technique. Dancing studios are all on one side of the building.

Wayburn's new school has a staff of 60, evenly divided between clerks and instructors, working on day and night shifts. It is said to represent a total investment of $100,000.

Wayburn has tied up with Saks Fifth Avenue for a "Ned Wayburn corner" in that store, to sell his dancing materials and courses. Saks also has a retail counter for shoes, etc., at the dancing school.

To Be an Usher

When a Broadway theatre advertises for ushers, the streets around the theatre are crowded with all types of men anxious to land a job. Some are young boys and others middle-aged men, all more than willing to grab the chance of making the $15 or $18 per week the job of ushering offers.

Rivoli was the scene of the latest unemployed mob Monday (24). Men stood waiting in a row running the complete length of 7th avenue, from 50 to 51st streets for hours.

Elaborate Barn in Village

The Village Barn at 52 West 8th street is an offshoot of the Village Nut Club, at 95 7th avenue, both under the direction of Meyer Horwitz. The Barn is new, elaborately decorated in the simple bucolic way and the farm scheme carried out even to gagging signs all over the walls as though knifed out in the woodwork. The John Martin-Franklin Cliftons, who did the Nut Club, also designed and executed for the Barn.

The Barn, with Leon Chilton usually found over there for Horwitz, carries a $2 minimum night check, but for dinner has a $1 table d'hote.

Inside Stuff—Sports

Roller Hockey Chief

Albert W. Keane, sports editor of the Hartford "Courant," resigned as president of the American Roller Hockey league, due to the fact a shift of the geographical centre of the circuit from Connecticut to New York State made it impossible for him to keep in touch.

It is understood the league's vice-president, Charles F. Young, sports editor of the Albany "Evening News" and of the "Knickerbocker Press" (Gannett papers), could have succeeded Keane, but did not have the necessary time. The club owners elected William C. McCorry, manager of the Albany quintet, as prexy.

Razzing The Home Town

SEATTLE

(A series of stories on the inside show end of key cities, without giving the cities any the best of it.)

Seattle, Dec. 12.

Seattle is more famed for the show executives it has put forth and the big theatrical circuits it has given birth to than for stars of the stage or screen that may have been induced to leave the "Charmed Land," to conquer new worlds.

Then, too, the town is noted for having tried a woman mayor for a term, and then getting next to itself, putting at the helm a genuine showman. Like Portland, a rival for Northwest leadership, an ex-showman is mayor of each town. Frank Edwards is the fellow who learned so much running neighborhoods and the downtown Winter Garden, here, that he found the job of running the city mighty soft.

While Edwards cashed into the mayoralty the first time, he crashed in the second time, for his first term record was so good that it was easy to be re-elected. Fact is this showman-mayor is getting by so nicely that he looks to be in for a long run.

Dreams

This town is just about as far away from New York as it can be, and still be on the U. S. map. Yet it loudly tells the world it is the coming New York of the west, or some such place. This is still a dream, but if the Chinaman or Jap or Hindoo would add an inch to his shirt tail it would mean so-and-so to Seattle and make the dream come true. Seattle also dreams of becoming a picture production center due to closeness of Hood's Canal, Mount Rainier, and Vancouver, B. C., where a glass of beer is beer.

Be that as it may, just now Seattle is anything but a New York. Being the youngest city in the universe for its size, there is still hope.

Just now the town is a tough spot for the show biz. It has lots of seats and overhead.

Try to keep the lights burning until midnight and see what happens. Back in the halycon days of the Klondike rush the town was wider awake during the night than in the day time, with honky tonks and hurdy gurdies going full blast. Not so now.

Cut-Rate Driving

Most of the auto driving schools are offering cut rate driving courses to the unemployed. Always a dearth of new taxi men in the city.

Vancouver and booze are close to the north—some 150 miles—and the night hawks sometimes find diversion up that way. The local market is shot due to too many Federal trials of bootleggers and prohib officials.

John Cort cavorted about these premises booking most of the civilized western world out of Seattle, with his Northwestern Theatrical Circuit road shows. Alexander Pantages, along in 1902, when Cort was going great guns, came to the front with his variety houses that soon checkered the continent with Seattle the hub. Pan was squeezed out of the North by the gold rush and landed in Seattle with his pockets well lined with dust, after making good as a waiter in the Klondike saloons and honks.

Anyhow, those were the grand days for this neck of the bottle. But bdby Seattle has had its bottle taken away from it. The baby is about 80 years old and sauntering along with 375,000 pop, and far from contented.

All in the Past

Stock flourished here—in the past. Legit did well here—in the past. Vaude was going big here—in the past. Big bands played in show houses here—in the past. Lights burned for night life here—in the past.

She's a nice town and in spite of her past, not such a bad show town. Then there is always a future to think about—the Chink may add an inch to the length of his wardrobe; the Orient may increase its commerce with the western world, and be it known that Seattle is the gateway to that mystic oriental treasure chest of world commerce.

Its menu is called The Daily Deed Bag. Larry Funk has a dandy dance orchestra, all in modern dress, however, and there are a couple of rube acts as entertainers.

The Village Nut Club, with its $3 minimum, has long sinc gone to a turnaway. It was to catch the overflow that started the Barn. The patrons of the two places are slipped back and forth.

No selling at either place. That's the strictest rule in both; so strict, waiters are not permitted to uncork brought in bottles.

Bouncing in Mid-Air

The failures on the east and west coasts of three banking institutions produced some ironically humorous complications.

Outstanding instance was a Hollywood personality, his funds tied up in the Bank of Hollywood which was taken over by the State Bank Examiner, wiring a pal in New York for some ready cash. New Yorker wired back he was air-mailing funds on a Bank of United States check. Meanwhile that New York bank also lowered its curtains.

Picked the Wrong Bank

Joe McGee, formerly blackface actor, and now stage carpenter with the Jack Randall vaude act, is the hardest hard luck guy up to the present. Joe has been saving what he could out of his weekly salary all season. He finally got $50 together and decided to start a bank account, so he mailed it to the Hannibal Trust Co., In Hannibal, Mo., his home town. Three days after mailing he suddenly had need of it, and was about to mail the bank a letter asking for the return of his money when receiving a letter from his sister there stating the bank had closed.

Story With No Moral

Two years ago a kid, graduating from a California university, was stuck without funds but a yearning for an art education in Paris. He decided to go into the bootlegging biz in Hollywood on a grand scale.

His polished ways afforded entree to the picture mob and he later branched out as a class legger, guaranteeing all stuff imported. He never delivered less than case lots, and refusing to cut, he got the fanciest prices on the Coast. In the two years he made $150,000 and wasn't pinched once.

Last week he retired, took a boat for the Orient for a layoff and will go to Paris in the spring to take up his art courses.

Champ Tendon Rubber

Show business has a literal play doctor in Philip Kohnstamm. In some programs he is listed as the "Company Physiotherapist," but in most instances he is the unseen power that makes it possible for the show to go on.

When over-rehearsing stiffens the chorus and threatens postponement, a hurry call is sent for the Doc who bakes and rubs muscles until they're as good as new. When a tendon is pulled or a prima donna has hysterics just before curtain time, the physio hustles his equipment over to the theatre and all is well in a short time.

Kohnstamm's longest emergency trip has been to Florida when Ziegfeld was ill there. The Doc went to pay a call and stayed two months.

BUGLES GUESTS IN PUSS NIGHT AT THE FRIARS

Ha Cha, what a panic at the Friars were Jackson, Clayton and Durante, Saturday night. It culminated a big week for the three schnozzles, who cleaned up the new "The New Yorkers," Broadway's newest musical bit.

The club's battery of humorists flanked the boys on the dais and the crowded grill was in constant laughter. When the speakers and others stopped, the Durantes entertained as only they can and cleaned up.

It was planned to have Bugs Baer as m. c., his nose to match Jimmy Durante's, but Bugs was taken ill suddenly. Nearest nose in point of contour was Capt. Irving O'Hay and he batted in fine form—as always.

Durante and 2 McCulloughs

Dean Izzie Herk nicely introduced the trio. They have been together seven years and he figured they must be real friends and of the same calibre. O'Hay started right in, commenting on the fact that the Friars affairs have honored singles, doubles and now a trio—"or shall I say Durante and two Paul McCulloughs."

While O'Hay was talking the schnozzles were taking nips from bottles and snatching the laughs. Noticing that O'Hay mentioned "the hopeless decadence of the American theatre," Jimmy got a roar by asking: "What is that decadence?" The captain, referring to Clayton told of seeing him trounce a fellow who belittled Lou's religion.

"And as for that other weird creature (Jackson), well I was the speiler for the Malachi Snake Dancer at Coney Island one summer and a young man there serving beer—it was Jackson, I thought that he belonged in Harlem and I still think so." Then followed a tribute to the boys and how "the most graceful thing in life is to be a great winner—success—these boys are the same now as they were when they worked in dumps. We will do our best to make them feel uncomfortable." Eddie Miller brought forth a roar by singing "Ole Man River." A telegram from Atlanta was opened. It was addressed to Jackson, Clayton and Durante, but read: "Dear Jimmy, if you can make those hard-boiled Friars laugh as you made me cry at Monday's premiere you are a wonder."

Hershfield's Tux

Harry Hershfield was a wow, in a tux and just over from Loew's State where he turned actor. The humorist told how long back his line of people got and claimed: "My people were at the second table of (the Last Supper." His twillem story drew a scream.

"Big Pants" Bobby Clark went into action next: "I am pinch-hitting for a young magician Joe Laurie, who so cleverly laid an egg on the dais (and wanted to know why Harry Cooper and his nose was not on the platform). Mr. Clayton as I remember him is essentially a crap shooter and the only man around Times Square that threw a seven with one dice.

"Mr. Jackson came into this world with nothing and has held his own ever since. He hollers while Clayton dances. As for Jimmy Durante the data is very interesting and slightly vulgar. At the age of six he climbed a tree with a red hat on. A farmer thought he was a woodpecker and took a shot at him. After some trouble with a cow, he rolled up his nose and came to New York. We should not make remarks about other people's facial peculiarities, but I'll say that Jimmy certainly can pick his nose." Right there Gus Van got a great hand and came through with the timely "Here Comes the Sun." He was announced as the next guest of honor.

Jimmy's Broken English

"Sure Fire" Bert Hanlon started: "These speakers around here are getting too damned good for me. This is puss night at the Friars, as you may have observed, in fact, compared to some of the kissers on this platform, I am a Japanese sunset. Durante is the only American whose English is broken. He never wanted to work if an honest dollar could be made otherwise. He played piano up at the old Alamo club, and was 48 before he got south of 110th street. Clayton's the big manager of the trio, is an excellent golfer. Some people think that Jackson is the star of the trio, some rate Durante that way but everybody is positive that Clayton is the manager."

Inaccurate Biographies

Lewis Ayres

By Claude Binyon

Hollywood, Dec. 13.

Weighing more than he should and thinking more than he should, Lewis (Listen To Me) Ayres at the age of 10 moved with his family from Minneapolis to San Diego.

One look at Ayres' expression would convince anyone that he was not particularly elated about being dumped into a strange city. Even an ordinary boy has considerable difficulty establishing himself in a new neighborhood, and Ayres was not ordinary. He was fat and he took piano lessons.

Deciding personal safety was of paramount importance, young Ayres stayed in his own front yard. And having no one with whom to play, he chose sleep as a pleasant consumer of time. His awakening was almost immediate.

"Hey!" came a voice from the street. Lewis opened one eye and looked at the enemy. The enemy was tall, thin and thoroughly freckled. Lewis closed his eye.

"Hey!" called the enemy again. Then it added, more familiarly: "You, Fat!"

Lewis became annoyed but diplomatic. He sat up and stared sleepily at the intruder. "Hullo," he said.

The tall, thin boy entered the front yard and surveyed Lewis more closely. "My name's Turk," he said. "I can lick you."

"Sure," agreed Lewis.

"Where you from" asked Turk.

"Minneapolis."

"You're a fat Swede," decided Turk.

"Sure," said Lewis.

"Let's go down to the beach," Turk said, "I want to drownd you."

"I can't," said Lewis. "I hafta take my piano lesson."

"You're a fat Swede sissy," said Turk.

"Sure," conceded Lewis.

"Hello!" came another voice from the street; a soft, liquid voice hinting of rose gardens and the scent of lettuce flowers. Lewis turned and saw limpid blue eyes, black hair with the sheen of gunmetal, lips full, red and quivering, as though poised for soup. Obviously the girl's name was Joaquin, and just as obviously she would become a wrecker of men. With queenly stride she entered the yard and smiled upon Lewis.

"I live next door," she said. "Are you going to live here?"

"He's a fat Swede sissy," commented Turk.

"I am not," said Lewis.

"I can lick you!" shouted Turk.

"You can not!" screamed Lewis.

Deliberately Turk planted a foot in the receptive stomach of Lewis. Grunting in pain, Lewis jumped up and aimed a fist at Turk's head. As he aimed, Turk connected with his chin and Lewis plopped to the ground. Majestically Turk stalked out of the yard.

Lewis arose and grinned sheepishly at Joaquin.

"What a washout you are," said the girl coldly.

"Say," said Lewis, "I fought that guy for your sake!"

"For my sake?"

"Certainly. I didn't want him to call me those names in front of you. It's all your fault."

Joaquin's nostrils dilated. "You—fat—Swede—sissy," she rasped.

Lewis swayed as though stunned. "I'll show you!" he blubbered. "I'll get famous and come back here and have you run out of town!"

The ensuing years passed unheeded by Lewis, whose fat dropped from him like hen's eggs as he labored to make a success of himself. In highschool he turned a deaf ear to the pleadings of girls anxious for a little fancy necking. He learned to play the banjo, the guitar and resumed his piano lessons. He even took up the flute, but looked at it and laid it down.

From high school Lewis hopped to the University of Arizona for a career in medicine and supported himself by playing in the school jazz orchestra.

Lewis' duration as a potential doctor was only one year. He happened to talk to a senior medic who had just come from the university laboratory.

"How funny you smell!" exclaimed the medic shortly.

"Been working on a stiff."

"What's a stiff."

"A corpse, chump. The county hospital sends 'em over and we work on 'em. I was on liver today."

"You mean—" gulped Ayres.

"Why not? You'll have to do the same thing if you ever want to be a doctor."

"But," said Ayres, "I didn't want to be that kind of doctor. I wanted to be one of those doctors who come over to your house and give you pink pills or castor oil. Of course I'd carry a thermometer—"

"Listern, kid," interrupted the medic. "Take my advice and scram. They don't serve ice cream in this racket."

"I know sump'n easier 'n this," mumbled the drummer one day as he brushed an imaginary fly off his snare. "It's pitchers."

Not averse to the easiest way, Lewis started visiting the casting offices. That wasn't a pipe, so he got himself a manager and sat at home while the other guy tramped around the studios. A six-months Pathe contract finally materialized, and during the half year Ayres played only one bit.

"That drummier was right," Ayres sighed comfortably. Next he went to Metro and played with Garbo in "The Kiss."

"What a life!" he chortled. He approached Garbo on the set one day. "You take sun baths, don't you?" he asked.

"Yes," said Garbo.

"I take sun baths, too," Ayres hinted.

"Yes," said Garbo.

"Let's take sun baths together," said Ayres.

"No," said Garbo.

So Ayres went to Universal and got the lead in "All Quiet on the Western Front." He became a name and offers poured in on him.

Between assignments Ayres made a hurried trip back to San Diego and called upon the chief of police at his home.

"No doubt you've heard of me," said Ayres, seating himself in the chief's easy chair.

"No, doubtless," said the chief, a tall, freckled man.

"There's a girl in this town, said Ayres.

"No!" exclaimed the chief.

"I want you to run ——"

Joaquin entered the living room and placed her arm about the chief of police.

"This," said the chief, "is my wife. Now, you were saying something about some girl you wanted me to run—did you mean run out of town?"

"No," said Ayres, rising. "I wanted you to run and say hello to her, but—I guess I've forgotten her name or something." He grabbed his hat and headed for the door. A razzberry floated from the living room—a feminine razzberry. The chief of police came into the hall.

"I can lick you," he said.

"Sure," agreed Ayres.

"You're not fat any more but I think you're a sissy," said the chief.

"Sure, Turk," agreed Ayres. The chief slammed the front door.

Ayres walked to the street and picked up a huge rock. He turned toward the house again and noticed a policeman on the side-walk, staring at him curiously.

"This looks like a good specimen of coral," mumbled Ayres. He dropped the rock.

"Take it if you want it," said the cop.

"No, I guess I don't want it," said Ayres.

"Take it," commanded the cop.

Ayres picked the rock and staggered down the street.

"Good night," called the cop.

"You said it," panted Ayres.

Irving Cesar then clicked with a Yiddish folk lyric.

Sam Lyons said Durante and he were brought up together on a farm at Minsk, then explained his sass: Joe Frisco stuttered about O'Hay being a sergeant: "It took two wir and a Stalbert unit to make him a captain. I would like to have Jimmy's nose full of Austins."

RITZY

In view of the fact that Frederick A. Muschenheim is proprietor of the Hotel Astor, where so many show people congregate, it is only fitting his sons should marry theatrical celebrities. William recently wed Elizabeth Bodanzky, daughter of Artur Bodanzky, conductor of German operas at the Metropolitan, and Carl previously married Haroldine Humphreys, actress.

Natalie Hays Hammond, heiress to millions, has incorporated her own company, controlling a secret process for metalizing any object. She maintains a magnificent apartment near Sutton Place. Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hays Hammond, of Washington, she first thought of becoming a professional dancer, later exhibiting her paintings and sculptures. She designed settings and costumes for one of Nazimova's vaudeville acts, and assisted in fashioning a revue sponsored by Leighton Rollins.

Stage and Royalty

Just as society and the stage are entwined in America, so is the peerage and the theatre involved in England. Patricia Crawshay, debutante niece of Violet, Duchess of Westminster, comes to New York to visit Major and Mrs. Robert M. Stuart-Richardson. Violet was a Miss Nelson, and divorced Lieut. G. R. F. Rowley and the Duke before marrying Col. Frederick H. Cripps, retaining the "courtesy" title of Duchess.

The Duke was first divorced by Constance Cornwallis-West, and finally married Loella Ponsonby. (Constance was related to George Cornwallis-West, who married the American widow of Lord Randolph Churchill and later married Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the actress, being much younger than either of these dowagers.) Westminster was for years expected to marry Gertie Millar, English actress, but Miss Millar, widow of Lionel Monckton, finally married the Earl of Dudley. The Duke then became attentive to Gabrielle Chanel, Paris dressmaker.

Cecil B. DeMille is to direct a talker of "The Squaw-Man." When this melodrama by Edwin Milton Royle was produced in 1905 William Faversham was starred and William S. Hart had a leading role. Warner Baxter stars in the movie version. Baxter hails from Columbus, and became a salesman for farm implements. Oliver Morosco engaged him for a part in "Lombardi, Ltd.," and the day the show opened Baxter married Winifred Bryson.

Fairbanks Guest

The Duke of Sutherland is visiting Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford in Hollywood. After the death of his father, the fourth Duke, his mother married and divorced Brig. Gen. Percy FitzGerald, and later married Lieut. Col. George E. Hawes. She is still called "by courtesy" Millicent, Duchess of Sutherland, and has also visited the Fairbanks in Hollywood. She is a sister of the Earl of Rosslyn, who acted in New York a generation ago as St. Clair Erskine. The second of Rosslyn's three wives was Anna Robinson, American actress, who has a spectacular career in Europe, and died in poverty. The present Duke is a brother of Lord Alastair Leveson-Gower and the late Viscountess Ednam, who was killed last summer in an airplane accident.

Viscount Ednam is accompanying the Prince of Wales on his forthcoming travels. Leveson-Gower married Elizabeth Demarest, of New York, whose sister, Charlotte Demarest, married Count Edward Zichy. During their honeymoon the Zichys danced professionally in cabarets in New York and Atlantic City, but later settled in Paris. Millicent, Duchess of Sutherland, wrote a spectacular novel, "That Fool of a Woman," and later dramatized it, without success.

Last week's "Razzing the Home Town" dealt with Portland, Oregon, but omitted the name of that long popular dramatic star, Blanche Bates.

Society Following

Hope Williams, of "The New Yorkers," was in the Social Register as a daughter of the late Waldron Williams and the late Mrs. W. Eugene Kimball. She remained in as the wife of Dr. R. Bartow Read.

Dix, when she went on the stage and obtained a divorce, she was dropped. However, her sisters, Mrs. John T. Terry, Jr., and Mrs. William Ross Proctor, are still regarded, also her nieces.

Cole Porter, who wrote the music for "The New Yorkers," has a society following, although not in the Register. He married Linda Lee, first of three wives of the late E. R. Thomas, millionaire sportsman who owned "The Morning Telegraph." Miss Williams, who in private is known as Mrs. Williams Read, attracted the fashionable contingent at the opening of the Broadway theatre, headed by Mrs. Vincent Astor, and is counted on to attract the smart set.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Somers Roche, who may some day attain the Social Register, were among the first arrivals at Palm Beach this season, as during several seasons past. They have also been in evidence at Newport during several summers. He has written novels and plays, the former much more successful than the latter. His "Crooks Convention" opened and closed, and his "Move Over" never got over! She has written under the name of "E. Pettit."

Dillmans Going South

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Dillman plan early in January, not having been at Palm Beach last winter, as they were on a tour of the world. Hugh was McGaughey, of Columbus, and was on the stage many years, finally becoming leading man with Marjorie Rambeau, whom he married. Later she divorced him, just as she had divorced Willard Mack.

Dillman then married Anna Thompson, widow of Horace E. Dodge, of Detroit, automobile manufacturer. Mrs. Dodge inherited $37,000,000. Her son, Horace E. Dodge, was divorced and remarried, and so was her daughter, Delphine. Delphine divorced James H. R. to open their magnificent place Cromwell and married Raymond T. Baker, after he had been divorced by the widow of Alfred G. Vanderbilt. The present mode of life of Dillman is very different from that when he played bits in "The College Widow" and "The Boys of Company B!"

Ruth Etting at Palace
A Single Sans 'Requests'

At the Palace Ruth Etting cries the blues with a directness of attack that catches and holds attention. All her numbers are heart-songs, their stories made important by simple, sincere delivery. She wastes no time over unimportant announcements, refrains from mentioning requests for favorite numbers and thoroughly entertains.

Her gown is in blue velvet, paler than the rich velour of her voice, with brilliant shoulder straps that are inadvisable under spotlight and a bad waist line giving a hippy effect.

Helen Kane should either get new songs or always carry Ken Murray and Benny Rubin around with her. Her material is unimportant and audiences are pretty well fed up with boo-poo-pa-doop's even when booped by the originator. Her gown of white chiffon is not a good choice to disguise threatening avoirdupois.

Miacahua is the "Brazilian Girl Wonder" whose billing does not exaggerate when, toward the end of her act she not only executes flashy wire tricks but appears to remain every inch a lady.

Mix Own Perfume

First perfume "bar" in Paris with perfume blends mixed according to customers tastes, is run by Jean Patou in his dress-making establishment.

COMPETITION IN APPLE TRADE SPURS VENDORS

Competition among the unemployed apples has forced the vendors to use their heads in disposing of their wares. All starting at scratch, now the wise ones have emerged from the throng, and the seller who still depends on just the sign "Unemployed Apples" has a tough time of it. The ingenuity the smart guys are showing in getting rid of their stock proves they weren't apple sellers all their lives.

Apple salesmen in the Times Square sector give a theatrical touch to their job, dressing up in high hats, tying trick dogs to their box, letting go a spiel that would make a carnival barker an honest man. One enterprising fellow at Forty-sixth and Broadway during the Shipwreck Kelly boom added a free look through a battered pair of binoculars with every apple bought. Some have added gum and candy to their stock; most of them carry a line of tangerines to augment the apples.

Women Vendors

Lady apple sellers are way behind the men in salesmanship, relying only on the pity the sight of a woman on the street engenders. Sad faces are all they have contributed so far to the apple campaign. Vendors who can empty three boxes a day, now that the novelty has worn off, do it on their own initiative. It takes brains to call attention to a box of apples nowadays, and the boys who are beating the public's apathy to apples are using theirs.

Most Legs Need Silk

All the little girls on the 86th Street hill chose to omit stockings. Too bad. There isn't a leg on the American stage that can achieve bare what it could do with silk to flatter it. The Robbins Family daughters dress like good children, obedient to their elders; girls who let their maiden aunt from Emporia pick out their clothes, object: modesty. Hair done in rigid little waves and timid little ties on their white blouses will not help these young women to enchant the onlookers.

When the Bobby Jarvis act opens, things look hopeful for a moment. The girls are bridesmaids in simple satin, fitted nicely to good figures, and their hats match exactly the color of the dresses. They change too soon to nondescript costumes, and away goes the initial good impression.

Gus Van closes the bill looking every inch the smart wedding guest. Self confidence in correct formal clothes, crisp diction, and tried and true material stamp him a headliner who has earned the billing. He revived the audience, which until then still seemed listless.

Film Heroes Can't Lose

Picture fans are not alarmed, in "Danger Lights," by the announcement of Jean Arthur's engagement to Louis Wolheim. They know that such ill-matched marriages are never performed in movieland, and that the heroine will ultimately trip up the aisle with Robert Armstrong, a more neatly cut rough diamond.

"Danger Lights" is swell. It combines magnificent scenic shots of unusual depth with a good enough story, tensely told. It is a majestic epic of locomotives and freight yards, of steam and steel.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold R. New, in Polyclinic Hospital Nov. 25, son, Jr. Father with Ager, Yellen & Bornstein. Mother formerly Dorothy Donnelley with C. B. Maddock acts.

Timid Sheik, Dowdy Vamp Slay "Sleeping Partners"

Misguided persons who wander into the Cohan theatre this week led on by the title "Sleeping Partners" and the term "risque" will be cheated just as they deserve. Film fans should have learned by this time that the hotter the title, the milder the picture. "Sleeping Partners" is a very tepid affair, concerned with rigid observance of all the proprieties, wherein even a kiss is given only on the hand.

Edna Best hesitated for hours, it seemed, before she threw all caution to the winds, my dear, and came to the naughty bachelor's apartment, and he only had the noblest intentions toward her. Clad in an ill-fitting and demode evening dress of the up-in-front vintage, who could possibly believe that anyone so dowdy could be a bold, bad vamp?

Seymour Hicks, as the wicked, wicked man, fluttered so that this reporter lost all her illusions about the supremacy of Continental men in the fine points of love making. Mr. Hicks was more like a dear but timid old uncle, set in his ways and fussy about his slippers, than the bold, bad gentleman with seducing tendencies he was trying to be. Looking at Miss Best with what was meant to be a most predatory gaze, the effect he produced was only that of pity that a lady as charming as she, despite her clothes, couldn't pick off a more rugged, exciting prospect.

"Sleeping Partners" won't satisfy the promises of its title. The American girls must be given a more romantic hero to dream about.

It's Not Too Good
At the 58th This Week

Strange things happen in the name of entertainment—baffling, bewildering stuff. Anything goes, but why, what is it meant to be?

The curtains part at the 58th Street theatre, six girls squat before a desert tent in vaude oriental garb. Sahara Roses all, yet three are blondes. Suddenly they rise, to do a good wriggling cooch, of course. But no, they are acrobats. No, they are tumblers. No, they are contortionists, that's what they are. Lovely womanhood standing on its hands, bouncing on its head, twisting its torso with painful, straining lopes. It looks hard, it's done well, but, is it art? The Gym Jam Girls, they dub themselves, but "Little Women, in Africa" would do, too.

Brady and Wells follow in songs. The man plays the ukulele, the guitar, and the piano, and even sings a little. The girl is pretty, dresses simply in black crepe and then blue brocade, and has a nice freshness about her. Free delivery and grace. Things look brighter, till Irvin O'Dunn comes on, with an act that spends most of its minutes on the stage complaining to the audience that it isn't appreciated.

Well, perhaps Florence Whitney and Company will make amends. Starts like a flash act, as two male dancers rush on side by side with a girl, do a bit of tapping, then leave the girl alone to do her contribution to feminine hand-standing. A brave little creature, all done up in blue taffeta faced with pink, trips in carefully executing all the toe steps she learned at dancing school. Although everybody changes costumes as quick as that, the act harbors only four dancers. An atmosphere of mystery settles over the proceedings. Which one is Florence Whitney? They all do their best, but that's still not enough.

REDSKINS PARADE

been adding objects from these stores to their homes. It is doubtful, though, if the desire for redskin goods ever reaches the craze of several years back, when many people were exchanging their homes for teepees.

At any rate, these original whoopee girls and boys are using modern methods of personal advertising. You can see lots of Indians on any Hollywood corner.

BANCROFT, THE MIGHTY, IS SWELL CUT-UP, TOO

All the women who squeezed into the first show at the Paramount to look at that great big strong man, George Bancroft, were quite content with the figure he made. The he-man of pictures seemed even bigger in the flesh, stronger, more virile, but withal, of great charm. His entrance was fittingly dramatic. Gang of thugs, shouting to get their man, rushed across the stage, set as a tough street corner. Curtains parted to a cellar set, duplicating the one in "Ladies Love Brutes." Same thugs, still boasting of what they'd do to their man when they got him, registered surprise when Bancroft entered. Before they could draw guns, he'd knocked the leader out with one blow. Then he strolled over to a table as the rest of the gang cowered in fear, touched a switch, and down went the gangsters through a trap door.

Whereupon the great Bancroft walked off, laughing that hearty, ominous laugh that always gets into his pictures. The ladies loved it. Back to acknowledge the ovation, Bancroft ingratiated himself further by fixing a curtain that had fouled, just like a regular fellow. No stand offish-airs about him, even if he is a genuine picture star. The women leaned forward as he told a dialect story, and when he began a dramatic recitation about Dave Sloan, the Australian bush, and a wicked old snake, the audience not only stood for it, they were enthralled. George Bancroft is a great guy with audiences.

Leo Reisman came through with a wily bit of showmanship singing "You're Driving Me Crazy," with his back to the audience. Slowly he swung round as the tempo got faster and the song got hotter, climaxing in the best Jolson manner as he went crazy, appropriately "maddened" by the orchestra and the song. Stage show opens smartly with girls in orange polka-dotted blazers, boys in blue dotted blazers, against a gray drop, but becomes sadly tinsel in the full stage set.

Feature picture, "Only Saps Work," has the girls laughing at the swell delivery of Leon Errol and yearning for the fine young leading man, Richard Arlen. Mary Brian is sweet enough to make up for her lack of initiative in the thin love interest allotted her. Her clothes are demure yet becoming, not quite smart, but so youthful!

It Takes Virile Actor
To Sock Wife Right

The effective treatment for recalcitrant wives, according to "Free Love" at the Roxy, is a clean sock on the jaw. This startling theory meets with the audience's approval, however, for Genevieve Tobin, as the selfish wife, has it coming to her. Any woman who awakens in the morning with her hair beautifully sleek and shiny, no mascara smudges under her eyes, and her nightgown miraculously unrumpled, deserves to suffer.

It's a bit hard to believe that anyone as chivalrous Conrad Nagel always is on the screen would hit a lady, but Mr. Nagel does other equally strange things, like getting drunk, and complaining to his best friend about his wife's conduct. As a nagging husband who goes into a tantrum over a gas bill, as an old meanie who gargles his throat with the bathroom door open, a low wretch who pulls up the bedroom shades when his wife wants to sleep, Mr. Nagel is thoroughly believable. That desperate sock which knocks his wife cold would be more convincing applied by someone who is more the swinging type.

Miss Tobin's affections are hard to take, but at least she maintains them consistently throughout the picture. She looks fetching in conservative array of becoming clothes all in good taste, Ilka Chase gets across with the few lines left to her part, and Zazu Pitt's painful hesitancies and indecisive hands wring audience laughs at will.

Roxy's knows just as well as anyone else that the Parade of the Wooden Soldiers is sure fire, but Roxy puts it on just a little bit neater, bigger, and fancier. Their "Blues" number as the finale proves the Roxy stage is mighty large for the Norman Thomas Quintet. The Roxyettes close doing the St. Louis Blues in black masks, black tights, and lots of feathers and rhinestones.

The Parisian Front

By Christine

Paris, Dec. 7.

All the regular featured, expensively dressed debutantes of Paris—whether English, French or American—turned out for the second concert of Jack Hylton and his boys. Jazz jammed one of the best theatres in Paris, so that beautiful gowns and correct Tuxedos lined even the sides of the stage. Patou silks and laces found themselves seated on nothing more elegant than plain theatre stair carpet.

Frankly it is amazing how Hylton can put across not very extraordinary jazz, and be applauded uproariously into the bargain for every one of his songs sung in English. Of course it isn't only the jazz that gets him the raves, it's the sense of showmanship that both he and the men in the orchestra possess. He's got a couple of excellent end men who know how to both clown and play at the same time; he has a tall, good-looking youth with a very smooth voice, and he has one of the best xylophone players ever heard, who also has a very neat and delightful sense of comedy. As for himself, he knows his orchestrations and can project with apparently no work at all the kind of personality in keeping with the music he directs.

Nevertheless, with a middle class or lower class French audience, Jack Hylton would be made ridiculous. The concierges and bus drivers are not yet educated up to the thrills of "Piccolo Pete" well played, nor is their kind of sentiment subtle enough for the pathos in "A Cottage for Sale." It takes the butlered classes to appreciate the refinements of jazz, the others prefer the boisterous songs in their own language, which always sings of the old libido but very seldom honeymoons and nests for two. Jazz over here, especially now when the French musicians are in an uproar, has to be handled very delicately and in swank concert fashion with prices for the fish, to be really successful.

Brainy Gals See Paris

The Personality and Brains Girls have already been here and departed. They came from the various newspaper contests conducted in Philadelphia, San Francisco, Dallas, Milwaukee, Syracuse, Toledo, Denver, Kansas, Indianapolis, Newark, Cincinnati and Minneapolis and they did Paris, Fontainbleau and Versailles in five days, or rather four, because they had one day in which to do as they pleased. Some won the contest by subscriptions, others said solely on those slightly-difficult-to-classify virtues as Charm and Brain.

But however they got the trip they all seemed overjoyed with it, although it certainly didn't take up much time out of their lives. The next contingent gets slightly longer—ten days, maybe. One of them gave out in an interview that she loved France and all that, but she didn't think champagne could ever mean much more to her than so much ginger ale. She must have won by subscription.

There was a theatrical party as a sort of adieu to Chevalier the other night. It began around 1:30 when all the actors in town had washed off the makeup and got into their best clothes. Alice Cocea, who is the most delicately blonde actress in France and whose present stage role is Catherine of Russia, sat directly across from Josephine Baker, her swarthy escort and Italian husband. Chevalier was of course with Yvonne Vallee. Jack Forrester with Edmonde Guy.

Mistinguette not far away from Chevalier, and St. Granier with a lovely dark lady. It was a complete scene of that interesting and glittering quality known as theatrical chic. Fowler and Tamara danced, and so did the Tiffany Twins and Drena Beach. The French actors made tender speeches of farewell a good way into the dawn, but otherwise did not perform. The menu was an elaborate one with favors for the ladies. Nevertheless Chevalier didn't look too happy, and left for England next day with some justified bitterness against the way Paris has received him.

Cocktail Party De Luxe

Paris is full of princesses and the princesses full of ambition apparently. Last night Prince and Princess Lallo Bederkhan whose father, before he was massacred (so the story goes) was an m. c. in the Turkish court. She is very tall, handsome rather than pretty, and a mite too heavy for dancing. But her costumes are very beautiful and expensive, she had an adequate orchestra and the whole thing went off more professionally than most of them do. She is coming to America soon, and if she swanks it in New York as she does in Paris, she may be a sensation for something more than just dancing. Here she has just bought a new house which is certainly one of the most striking in the city. It's exterior is black and white, and the first room you enter to the left of the hall is silver, grey marble and green. It's the bar which itself is built into one side of the room on a sort of little stage. Down three steps brings you into the main room which has for decoration twin fireplaces of dark grey marble and a long refectory table of the same.

A cocktail party at the Princess' house is an event worthy enough to go into the old diary, the silver trays of sandwiches have certainly exhausted somebody's imagination and there is every thing to drink at the bar except coca cola, and the princess will probably remedy that when she comes back from America. By the way in case any of you copy that room for your own apartments, the gown to wear in it should be heavy black velvet, very full and long, with a flat wide collar of steel brilliants. Gives that Lucrezia Borgia effect.

Paris Has Whalen, Too

Gilbert White being the self appointed Grover Whalen of Paris got together a brilliant party to receive the Messmore Kendalls and Arthur Hornblow, Jr. He had an Hawaiian orchestra banked behind a flock of lilies, and the center of his enormous studio was a buffet. No cocktails but some mighty potent punch. The Kendalls came over here for several reasons—one so that Messmore could see how the English are playing the Maugham piece he intends to put on himself in New York next spring. The other, so that Mrs. Kendall could have a vacation from the latest Kendall heir—five weeks old to date. Arthur Hornblow says he wishes now he had taken the translation of the Sexe Faible upon himself, and Bourdet seems equally regretful that he didn't.

A letter from Berlin where James Rennie is enjoying the beer tells why he and Dorothy Gish have had such a perfect married life—he gives this information for the free use of all married actors. When Dorothy was in the movies James remained on the stage, but when Dorothy went on the stage James hurried into the films, in other words they do a Jack Spratt with their temperaments.

Opposite Willie Haines Sounds a Bit Tough

In "Remote Control," Mary Doran is an ungracious, ill-tempered heroine—not surprising since the hero is William Haines, up to his old elan-brickbat tricks. What else can a girl do but look annoyed at the Haines laborious attempts at comedy?

Polly Moran's shabby genteel talent is worked into one short and thankless scene. The picture is otherwise a destruction of good melodrama, in an effort to create a star part for Wisecracking Willie.

Dumb Film Bachelors

"The Truth About Youth" deals with bachelor blindness, that particular optical weakness of which the stage and screen are so fond. No one can be less perceptive than a bachelor who will not realize that he, instead of the handsome juvenile, is the object of the heroine's affection. The poor girl has to do everything but hit him over the head to lead him to the altar.

Loretta Young is charming in the hard-working assignment. The audience knows at her first mooning glance that she is head over heels in love with Conway Tearle, but he refuses to see the point until the final sequence. For a bachelor who spent a fair youth in Paris, he is remarkably

Did You Know That—

Inez Courtney has a new ermine wrap.... Carol Dempster Larson is all excited over the decoration of her new pent house.... the Charles Freemans are planning a Mediterranean cruise.... Barbara Newberry Foy looked sweet at luncheon the other day, in a black velvet turban, mink coat, and a very smart black frock.... Frances Williams has never looked more attractive than she does in the "New Yorkers".... Hope Williams, of that show, gives another swell performance.... Phyllis Haver Seemon was lovely in a royal blue ensemble trimmed in silver fox at a farewell at Grand Central recently.... diamonds have hit a new low this Xmas.... Charlie Morrison and Eddie Largo will leave soon for a short vacation.... Billy Gaxton auctioned off an autographed football (benefit of the unemployed) at the Mayfair, Saturday night; it was a very gay evening.... Rudy Vallee was there flutter, flutter.... Mr. and Mrs. Nick Schenck, Evelyn Herbert, Jimmy Walker, Naomi Johnson, Louis Shurr, Fannie Ward Robert Halliday, Ona Munson, Alex Ahrens, Ernst Lubitch, Dorothy Hall, Dick Keane, Florence Eldridge (in a lovely turquoise satin gown), Frederic March, Betty Compton, who wore rust lace with a tiny cap of the same material; Lois Moran, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Schwab, Paul Gregory, Verree Teasdale, Bill O'Neil, young Sailing Baruch, Peggy Fears, in a very unusual gown of pearl grey souffle in soft petals; Eddie Buzzell, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Einfeld, Percy Helton, Kendel Lee, Joe Wagstaff, Red Cagle, Dick King (of Army), Madeline Cameron, who had on a stunning black velvet with the new cross straps in the back, and Sue Carol and Nick Stuart.... Now, if only Mr. Mayfair would change his supper menu.

This Guy Hershfield Appeals to a Sobbie

Harry Hershfield, looking like Theodore Dreiser cut down, heads the State bill. He's artfully chosen gray and maroon for his color scheme, the gray suit and shirt to accentuate his battleship gray locks, and the maroon tie with matching hanky to give that touch of the debonair, gay but always restrained. Of all those struggling to shake the State audience out of its lethargy, he comes out on top.

With every prop the State possesses on the stage for a parlor set, Lulu McConnell adds to the confusion in a bright red chiffon dress. There are plenty of varied shades of red in the set, but Miss McConnell's is away the reddest. The honest rowdiness of her act is sure-fire, but it goes off like a damp firecracker at the gelid State.

Stuart and Lash worked like mad to penetrate the reserve of the audience. The girl wears dresses as form-fitting as can be, as typically vaudeville as anyone; she taps, toe dances and sings, but nothing matters. The State won't budge. Even when the opening act, The Four Polos, seem to miss a trick and trying it over, at last succeed, the audience doesn't care.

Gilbert Almost Lisps As Film Roughneck

John Gilbert fans who go eagerly to the Capitol in response to trailers announcing "Th New Jack Gilbert—You've Never Heard Him Talk Until Now," are doomed to disappointment. The Gilbert who emerges in "Way For A Sailor" has still not found his screen metier. His diction has improved, his voice has good quality, but he never more than assumes the rough manners of a ne'er-do-well sea man. He should be cast in slick, sophisticated roles. Nothing could be less tough than the way he pronounces "oh, baby" and "kiddo."

The explanation of Lelie Hyams' Canadian birth gives reason for her lack of English accent, conspicuous against a cockney background. Screening beautifully, she plays the Joan of the story with thorough sincerity.

Near the Pacific

By Grace Green

Hollywood Dec. 13.

ELSA MAXWELL'S GUESTS IN MAKE BELIEVE GARB

The prance for going to one of Elsa Maxwell's parties is having to think up a clever costume that will out-shine all others. This year's invitations to the Ritz made things simple for the guests with the instruction to come as "someone you are not."

Broadway crashed the Madison Avenue shindig in generous numbers and make believe costumes. Adele Astaire appeared in the paradoxical garb and halo of an angel. Grace Moore choose staid black velvet to represent Mrs. Flimsy, wife of Bishop Canning. She was followed closely by Mrs. William May Wright, as the Bishop himself, in clerical garb.

Fannie Brice went as Madame de Bum-bum-bumpadour; Georgie Jessel, as an old New Yorker, was in his pearl gray "Sweet and Low" costume; Roger Davis was the City Slicker, in nifty togs and a 24-sheet waist-coat; Tillie Losch was an Oriental dancer, and Justine Johnston, Wanger every inch a champion as Gene Tunney. Walter Wanger proved himself Paramount's foremost character delineator—with sound—by appearing in the flowing robes and beard of Rabindranath Tagore.

Ann Pennington dressed as the one and only original Ann Pennington; Bill Morris, Jr., was up the pole as Shipwreck Kelly; Cole Porter went as the Guest of Honor, disguised in football dress and enormous nose gear; Maury Paul was Peck's Bad Boy and Charles Hanson Towne was a Butter and Egg Man.

Helen Lewis' hand act, at the 81st St., rethins traces of its recent Publix tour. Costumes are the same as those used at the Paramount neat regimental dresses in white satin, scarlet velvet and just enough gold braid. Miss Lewis conducts with plunking Paul Ash gestures and plenty of heel-tapping, and to complete the resemblance, the finale flares up with the burning of Moscow, a favorite cinema house trick.

When band costumes are elaborate, they should be thrown into relief by simple dark drapes, but the background of the Lewis act is cluttered up with everything but the Chrysler Tower. Gold piano covers, silver and blue back-drop, black and silver cut-outs, confuse the pattern and submerge the orchestra. The instrumentalists are good individually and collectively. Wanda Harte is a delightful soloist, crooning softly in the megaphoned Vallee manner, but the entire act could be tightened by the elimination of the unnecessary announcements that preface every number.

Nellie Breen, teamed with Joe Donahue, does the familiar dumb comedy that overcomes her partner's protests against songs, recitations and funny sayings. Her first costume is a cunning thing in red and green chintz, her second a neat yellow sports ensemble.

Cynic News Reel Fans Razz Dry's Kind Words

The Newsreel theatre, which occasionally has the sauciest audience in town, is this week the scene of unhesitating irreverence toward a gentleman—Dr. Clarence True Wilson, to be exact—who firmly believes Prohibition is getting somewhere.

With the Dr.'s first naive crack, the listeners start getting silly, and by the time he has rounded out his discourse, they are making rude noises. No serious hooey gets by Newsreel audiences—not even "Mr. Courage" and "Mr. Fear" who firmly believe that Happy Days Are Here Again.

That Courage and Fear combination is beginning to develop the comedy possibilities of an Amos 'n' Andy, but it takes a spirited audience like the Embassy's to find lurking in cynical laughter at them. "Mr. Courage" is the hero optimist and bright as a three dollar bill, while "Mr. Fear" is locally dishearteningly spineless with a tendency to be very overly a mouse-like gent.

Why all the picture colony doesn't support Olsen's Culver City night club is something to wonder at. For dance music, there is none to beat it. The room is nicely decorated, the food is good, the girls are beauties and, the entertainment is above par. It is especially good this month.

An Apache number done by Jack Shutta and June O'Rourke is the funniest burlesque seen in these parts. That little girl is a comer. She possesses personality and is a comedienne.

Another personality girl does a hot, graceful, rhythmic rumba as no rumba has been done before. Her costume of red and silver, with a silver girdle effectively tightened around the hips, was apropos.

Still another, also picked for s. a., was the girl who did the Spanish number in a figure molded, tangerine satin gown with numerous gold ruffles starting low on the skirt.

Grauman's Cabaret.

Since Sid Grauman has taken over the active management of the Blossom room of the Hotel Roosevelt more stars and celebrities are seen there than ever before. On a night that is generally considered an off night in Hollywood a few were spotted, among them Bebe Daniels and her husband, Ben Lyon, looking unusually happy for married people.

William Powell, that debonair "It" man who has so many feminine hearts palpitating, was engrossed in the sparkling personality of Carol Lombard, who looked most charming in a black ensemble.

Barry Norton, who was so outstanding in "Wings," is putting on too much weight, or perhaps it was the extremely tight fitting English collar on his tan shirt that gave that effect.

Matt Moore's blonde moustache is most becoming. As was the blonde his brother, Tom, was dining with in the Brown Derby.

Zasu Pitts, Christmas shopping, looked charming in an Alice-blue polo coat and a matching dress and hat. (Hope the check wasn't on the Bank of Hollywood.)

Marjorie White dashing along Santa Claus Lane (Hollywood Boulevard has been changed to Santa Claus Lane to inspire that Xmas spirit), wearing a delft-blue tailored suit. Her energetic gum chewing kept pace with her rapid strides.

Fanchon & Marco's "Gondolier Idea" at Loew's State was nicely carried out with a scene reminiscent of Venice. The Sunkist beauties were particularly effective in the rose hoop routine in which the girls wore soft chiffon gowns of pink.

The femme half of the Romeros was appropriately attired for their whirlwind dance in a full skirted ruffled white satin gown. Her other change to delft blue was also becoming.

Climate Rave.

The Broadwaytes may rave about Hollywood being this and doing that, but there are many who would go for it in a big way, especially at this time of the year. This perennial Spring and California sunshine isn't hard to take. And that doesn't mean that this confirmed New Yorker has gone Hollywood either.

How those acts playing the R-K-O route figure this a vacation spot and hate to leave for colder climes. Particularly reluctant to go were Jackie Osterman, his lovely wife, and his equally lovely mother.

U. S. Grant was an enthusiastic theatregoer. He witnessed the performance at the Standard, New York, of "Sharps Flats."

P. T. Barnum took in as partner James A. Bailey, at the same time combining with the Barnum show the Great London shows and Sanger's Royal British Menagerie. P. T. took great areas of advertising space to trumpet the magnificence of the new aggregation in breath-taking superlatives.

After studying the batting averabes of the past season baseball league campaign, "Clipper" goes into an argument against the percentages as a guide to players' excellence, maintaining that the batters of high average are those who worked only for personal showing, while other batsmen of a lesser rating might have been more useful to their side.

Moody and Sankey, the Billy Sundays of the day, were conducting a revival in Frisco and finding that tough town a staggering problem.

A California longshoreman named Ehred Zapt, who claimed he was the father of seven children born to Lotta Crabtree, was taken to an insane asylum. (When Lotta died in Boston not long ago, another story of secret heirs was exploited in the probating of her will.)

Princeton and Yale, having played each other to a tie, and both being undefeated that season, both claimed the intercollegiate championship.

Oswald Stoll turned over to the British Government more than $100,000 obtained by theatre benefits for war charities. Report was around in London that he would be knighted.

Film producers began to figure that high salaries for legitimate stars was a losing practice. They pointed to Theda Bara, who had been in pictures only for a year, had no stage background, and was one of the premiere box office attractions.

Arthur Buckner was sentenced to three years in Atlanta for mail fraud. Buckner had sold too many half-interests in his fake school of acting on Broadway.

One of the reigning successes on Broadway was "The Boomerang," at the Belasco, with Wallace Eddinger. Was grossing $14,000 a week. Other high grosses were "Common Clay," $12,000, and "Fair and Warmer," $11,000. "Bunker Bean," with Taylor Holmes, was doing capacity in Chicago, $9,500 gross at the Cort.

Joe Leblang was bitten by the picture bug as a result of a flyer in a war film venture. In partnership with Billy B. Van, he organized a company to make one- and two-reelers.

Clara Kimball Young started suit for separation against James Young in New York, charging cruelty.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Downtown in these days the sale of business for $5,000,000 is an achievement. That's the way the bankers see the disposal of Pathe, in part, to R-K-O at that figure. The deal was engineered by Joseph P. Kennedy for Pathe.

When Kennedy assumed the direction of Pathe about two years ago it looked hopeless. Pathe then had about $4,000,000 in assets, but was way in the red. At present, after two years with Kennedy, the Pathe assets are estimated at around $14,000,000. This is inclusive of the $5,000,000 R-K-O purchase price, the 49% of the Pathe-Dupont raw film holdings, and the Pathe talkers release with their proceeds going back to Pathe.

Pathe showed a loss for 1930 operation although it is ending the year with three big money pictures to its credit. While they are big money at the box office, they are not big money in return to Pathe. Their Pathe rentals are absurdly meagre in view of this box office size. That is probably why the sale of Pathe stars, newsreel, plants and library came about.

It's doubtful if Pathe's "Holiday" will gross to Pathe over $700,000. It should have gotten $1,250,000. "Her Man" will probably not get $600,000, while "Sin Takes a Holiday," the other of the Pathe big money getters, will also probably fall short of $700,000. It has been a situation beyond anyone's correction.

In one house where "Holiday" broke the house record with $34,000, Pathe's rental was $1,200. It should have been $8,000. In another theatre, "Sin" drew around $20,000 and Pathe got $800, from reports. Pathe has been a distributor without theatre attachment. It left Pathe in the position of thankfully booking before releasing.

Kennedy gave up active participation in the affairs of Pathe about nine months ago. He remained as chairman of the board merely to guide it out of any difficulties and preserve its assets. An outstanding figure in filmdom, although with but three picture concerns during his show business career, Kennedy is likely to retire in a blaze of glory for his latest coup in disposing of the Pathe proposition this time, although it is understood Kennedy has never made a dollar out of Pathe, nor will he benefit at all by the sale or the liquidation of Pathe.

Meanwhile, uptown the show people say R-K-O picked up one of the best show bargains of the past 10 years in its Pathe buy. Picture producers estimate the future value of the Pathe stars alone to R-K-O, if provided with good pictures, more than the price R-K-O is paying. Additionally, R-K-O through its own Radio Pictures, and Pathe as its other producer, places itself in line with the major producer-distributor-exhibitors, with its own full source of film supply. Between Radio Pictures and Pathe, R-K-O can now depend upon from 50 to 60 full length talkers as its own output. With the independent producers, Columbia and Universal, R-K-O holds a contract for product, with those contracts renewable. This gives R-K-O first call on about 100, or perhaps more, talkers a year.

In its week stands R-K-O requires 52 talkers; in the split weeks 104, leaving R-K-O from the present outline in a very pleasant spot for product. The same outlook for it in the middle of last summer was quite dismal, especially when all of the main circuits bought into each other and away from R-K-O up to the split between Paramount and Warners.

Both the producers and Wall Street while admittedly feeling benign towards a Hays hammock in Europe similar to the M. P. P. D. A. here, are officially askance at the idea or the aim if any such there be. Official spokesmen from both ends slay the idea as being both impracticable and impossible.

The obstacles to such a scheme and the objections on the same are many. One is given as a sure clincher against. This is that Europe with its many nationalities, languages and countries offers its own complications, in addition the obstacle presented in the variant duties on film imports with every government in that part of the world.

Else the big boys figure one M. P. P. D. A. is enough and the foreign film production by American companies is too embryonic so far to figure on an association for any of its European subsids when and if they have any.

Both sides admit foreign production on native soils is a requisite, but as such their European subsids will be allocated to suffer that way, according to the whims of the business, with the one condition that they coincide with governmental regulations and attitudes wherever they may be.

When banks fail depositors who may be Warner employees, have an out. After the Bank of the United States closed last week, Harry Warner went from floor to floor and spread the word that Warners would reimburse employee-depositors for 100% of their totals. This permitted two suddenly postponed marriages to take place on schedule.

It isn't the first time the Warner head has played Santa Claus. When it was decided to discontinue that stock company organized for the particular benefit of Warner employees, because of the uncertainty of the market, the firm returned not only all of the original dough but an extra 6% besides.

"Sawyer" is a Paramount picture, made for the children and decidedly successful in that objective. But the children go to the matinees at the low prices, with the Mark Twain story seemingly not holding the same interest for their elders.

This brings up once again the complex question of bringing in the children and their parents simultaneously. While a talker like "Sawyer" works for the good of the entire film industry, it but draws average grosses, leaving it open whether a picture producer can continue to produce a hit when hits are so scare, for merely the average gross return. Or if a sufficient number of children's pictures can be put on the screen without affecting the night patronage.

A story will be written for "Variety's" Anniversary number in an attempt to bring out that vaudeville on the stage, without interfering with picture production, is the only certain way to secure and hold children in the theatre.

A circuit divisional manager, and a millionaire in his own right, has been blushing plenty because of a squib last week by a New York columnist which intimated that a wealthy theatre executive would wed a screen actress who was making personal appearances in one of the exec's houses.

Seems the truth is that a Coast film lad and the girl are taken with each other but the film boy and the theatre exec, are fast friends and have been for years. So when the actress came to town for a week of personal appearances, the theatre man was constantly in her company, and very probably talking up his pal all the time. Anyway, the circuit official is reported to have a sweetheart of his own on the Coast.

So, when the squib came out, the theatre boy had plenty of explaining to do—first to his boy friend and then to the little girl in Hollywood.

A story about Ruth Chatterton and pictures says that when Miss Chatterton first made Paramount talkers, she wasn't so hot. Her playing seemed all right but the public couldn't warm up to her. The studio boys knew there was something wrong but couldn't put a finger on it.

Deciding to have a talk with the legit actress, the studio bunch met the girl, finding her amiable, speaking to them naturally and there was some good natured kidding. Then the Par boys looked at each other. They had discovered the reason. On a nod, one became the spokesman. He said:

"Miss Chatterton, we think if you will be as natural in your poise and speech before the camera as you are with us now, there will be quite a difference in your national reception."

Miss Chatterton is said to have accepted the hint, dropped her screen pose and discarded her English accent, with the aftermath w. k.

Recent trip of J. R. Grainger of Fox to the south was followed by stories in that section that Fox might build in Texas. It's unlikely. Fox's product contract with the Interstate Circuit expires in August, next. The Interstate in Texas is now of R-K-O, while Fox has a general product agreement with Paramount. The Saenger circuit houses on the Paramount string includes some Saenger-affiliated, besides Paramount Publix houses in Texas. They will probably be supplied with Fox pictures under the Fox-Par contract, after the Interstate goes to R-K-O pictures exclusively following the August expiration.

Grainger was in Texas for nine days, covering a part of the state in that time by auto. It takes a fast train 28 hours to cross Texas at its widest, with but two five-minute stops.

With "Hell's Angels" reported drawing very big in its opening weeks in the popular price picture houses, showmen say they see an error in the attempted $2 road shows with the picture. They claim the difference to Howard Hughes through the road shows is at least $750,000. This takes in the single road show loss item of $150,000 in Los Angeles. "Angels" in its two Broadway theatres may have shown a net. The other $2 stands went into the red.

With the actual cost of the air picture $2,800,000, there must be recovered by Hughes, after distribution costs, $3,500,000 before his books will balance on this particular effort. A large gross is expected on the special from abroad.

In inner circles, West Coast showmen, particularly those in the operating and distributing end, are beginning to feel that this part of the country is so far away from New York the home offices no longer take it into confidence as in past. This has partly resulted, it is claimed by inside spokesmen, from jamming things up every time home offices have started to interfere too much.

Coast showmen are of the opinion they have to run the Coast themselves and that when New York tries to do it instead, mess-ups frequently follow. Lately, New York home offices have taken the tip, even to point of not informing West Coast in advance about matters affecting it.

Somebody at Balaban and Katz, Chicago, issued an order last week that critics' passes were not to be honored Saturday and Sunday, but the rule was quickly rescinded after the first effort to apply it on Hazel Flynn, critic of the "American."

Miss Flynn was stopped at the door of the Chicago theatre Saturday afternoon, but by chance Max Balaban happened to pass at the time and corrected the situation. Thereafter, it was impossible to find out who issued the order originally.

Sidelight to the affair is that Hazel Flynn is the author of a sketch in "Three's a Crowd," Broadway musical, kidding military picture house ushers.

Open Sundays for Trenton, N. J., have been in observance for six months now, but Trentonians won't support the Sabbath shows for which they fought. Paradoxically enough, however, the managers are finding the Sunday enterprise a profitable one.

Check up reveals that hundreds from Philadelphia, where the blue laws have a firm grip, motor each Sunday to Trenton, 35 miles distant, to take advantage of good roads and the Sunday performances in Trenton. Town usually gets its feature runs before the Quaker City.

Also helping are the Jersey farmers for miles around. Just another one of those queer things that manage to keep the managers here bufaloed.

Western Electric is making a big secret of the gadgets and how they work in the improvement to its recording system which irons out squeaks, squawks and the miscellaneous other noises. The reason is simple. Western hasn't its patents yet and isn't taking anyone into confidence.

At a cost of slightly over $2,000, the noise eradicator can be installed in a studio. This much W. E. admits, also that the device cannot be

Inside Stuff—Legit

Out of the 3,000 boys and girls holding active membership in Chorus Equity, not more than 2,000, it is estimated, are presently working in musicals in New York or on tour. Since Chorus Equity was started in 1919 the organization has had more than 30,000 names on its membership rolls. In order to protect members in good standing but out of work Equity is asking its members who have been delinquent in dues during the past three years to pay a dollar or more on account before asking for any more extensions. Many of these delinquents are now anxious to get back in show business because of loss of jobs which lured them out of the chorus line.

Chorus Equity, through its employment bureau, is engaged in trying to find work for its members in other lines of endeavor, since casting for musicals now is at a low ebb, while several musicals in New York and on the road are operating on a week to week basis. At least three musicals are expected to fold before New Year's, while only one, Arthur Hammerstein's "Ballyhoo," is due on Broadway before that date. Two musicals, "Sons o' Guns" and "Of All Things," folded out of town last week, adding more than 100 chorus people to the list of those at liberty around New York.

When Charles Hopkins read the reviews on the opening of "Mrs. Moonlight" he predicted a first week's gross of $1,500. Instead the take hit $3,750 and the show, generally considered wobbly but rated b. o. by "Variety" on the strength of "women's tears," has built steadily until tonight (10) it celebrates its 89th performance. Gross is averaging over $8,000 weekly. This is phenonemal, considering the Hopkins theatre seats only 299.

Hopkins had had this play for some time before he was finally able to cast it. Now Edith Barrett, Haides Wright and Sir Guy Standing are drawing capacity at the $4.40 top, reduced to $3.85 for matinees.

"Mrs. Moonlight" is emotional. It is a love story that has them laughing in the first two acts and weeping copiously at the final curtain. Mr. Hopkins believes, as "Variety" predicted, that tears in this case are his surest bet for a healthy run.

The Shuberts propositioned almost every film possibility for the lead in "Wonder Bar," the Viennese musical. Wires were broadcast to people ranging from Eddie Cantor to Maurice Chevalier.

The withdrawal of Marc Connelly as director of the Bela Blau production, "Overture," written by the late William Bolitho, was caused by a disagreement with the author's widow who objected to changes in the script proposed by Connelly.

Mrs. Bolitho complained that Connelly's changes would entirely de-

League Critics Complain Postal Is Just Another Ticket Agency

Broadway's Theatre League, formed to control prices of tickets and foster interest in the legit theatre, continues to have its troubles from within and without.

Postal Telegraph, adopted as a new agency for the sale and distribution of tickets, is just another agency, as pointed out, and is charged with falling into the same routine as the longer established agencies holding out choice locations for its preferred charge account patrons. That might explain Postal's recent fight to regain the front row allotments for the hits.

Postal's approximate sale of 6,000 tickets weekly is principally for the hits. The idea that it would aid the general theatre trade has not been demonstrated nor even claimed.

From a practical viewpoint the Postal allotments have been proven to react at the box offices. Time after time customers have been turned away from box offices, no matter how far in advance the request, only to find that on the day or evening of a performance a bundle of tickets is returned from the Postal.

One of the managerial leaders in the League stated, however, he got different reports. He mentioned that a friend at the Lotus Club has easily obtained four tickets in first rows for two hits from Postal. Also that when that patron asked for "Tonight or Never," which is not in the League, Postal suggested some other show, which he accepted. The case in point may have been a preferred Postal customer. There is no doubt that direct sales are made, but there is a suspicion that tickets reach the hands of gyps indirectly via Postal—when the demand is there.

Also a matter for thought by managers is whether the score of agencies not in the League do not prefer to boost for certain attractions to the detriment of others, perhaps in need of agency aid.

The actual process of selling tickets for hits looks easy but it has to be handled carefully. Supposition and theory as practised by the League is bringing out that joint to managers who at first desired to give the League a free hand. There is no doubt that agencies outside the League are buying tickets as they need them, and few managers will question a customer in these times.

League Changes

Several amendments to the League's constitution have been proposed. One would place on the board of governors at least one producing manager and an actor. While there are producers on the board, they are only technically so. Ownership or leasehold of a theatre is the real requirement for membership. Frank Gillmore of Equity is chairman of the board and is invariably in the chair during the weekly sessions.

Whether the League intends entering into activities other than tickets is not clear. But under the provision of the clause covering amendments, should the League's field be widened, each theatre is entitled to a vote. Otherwise only one vote goes with each member. This provision is a protective one insisted on by the Shuberts, and it has been pointed out that if the League goes into other activities the Shuberts and their allies might dominate.

Another amendment would give power to the board to assess members to cover losses.

Morris Green and Louis Gensler, who have scored two successes to date this season, are reported having switched from Belanger's to the Shuberts as a result of differences over the ticket situation. Green and Marcus Heiman, of the Belanger office, have clashed several times over ticket allotments for "Fine and Dandy."

Spoofing Hizzoner

"Night Court," a satiric comedy by Mark Hellinger and Charles Beahan, goes into rehearsal next week. Edward Blatt will produce.

"Night Court" is said to do to the magistrates what "Once in a Lifetime" does to the films. It will burn many local celebrities if gossip is right when it opens in the latter part of January.

'First Night Club' Gag Aid to Weak Sisters

Cleveland, Dec. 16.

"First Night Club" is new box office trick invented by local legitimate theatre to assure a large house on opening nights of weak plays.

Club consists of clerks and stenogs who can't afford high legit prices. When a coming attraction looks like a weak sister, manager sends form letters to members, offering them $1 tickets for opening night, providing they're bought before preceding Thursday.

Theatre has been jammed every Sunday or Monday night since the gag was originated, giving play a successful send-off and great word-by-mouth publicity for rest of week.

BACK STAGE BAN UPON CLEVELAND'S WINCHELL

Cleveland, Dec. 16.

Failing to persuade him to use the soft pedal, theatre managers got together and agreed to exclude the "Press" theatrical reporter from back-stage.

Ban on Andorn came as result of several juicy, insinuating news items on actors and managers. Latter believed that such news did more harm than good to theatres.

Andorn has been told to stay out of the Shubert's Hanna, but the war between him and a manager of a Loew house is even more bitter. Winchell's imitator got in wrong when in print he kidded manager about using powder puff after shaving.

Recently chorines' mamas made loud squawks after finding through his column that their nice babies were making whoopee after hours with this theatre's musicians. That brought edict from front office that any music-tooter would be given gate if caught dating up the girls. The crowning boner came when Andorn wise-cracked about farewell beer party given back-stage for two departing actors.

All the managers declare that Andorn's inaccuracy and unethical stand in printing inside dope is responsible for the ukase against him, but they are really burnt up over his wise-cracking.

Tarkington's Premiere

Columbus, O., Dec. 16.

Booth Tarkington's new play, "Colonel Satan," based on the life of Aaron Burr, will be given its world premiere at the Hartman theatre here Dec. 26 and 27.

New "Success" Lead

Harriet Lake replaces Irene Delroy in the new Schwab & Mandel show, "Success."

Evelyn Hoey is also in the cast.

Miss Delroy may go back to the west coast to appear in films for Warner Bros., to whom she is under contract.

MISS KIRKLAND'S OPTION

Culver City, Dec. 16.

Muriel Kirkland, formerly in "Strictly Dishonorable" on Broadway, and now in "The Greeks Had a Word For It," may land in pictures on completion of the latter play's run.

Metro has taken an option on her for talkers. Followed several tests recently made in New York.

KAMSLER WITH PAR.

Don Kamsler, from legit, has been engaged by Walter Wanger, Paramount's eastern production manager, as an assistant p. m. at the Long Island studio.

Kamsler will be used principally as a talent and material scout.

DEFER "NEGRO WORLD"

"Negro World" did not resume rehearsals as reported last week, but will be held in abeyance until after the holidays.

Carey Productions, Inc., continue as producers.

At Low Ebb

Casting for legit shows for Broadway seemed to strike a new low last week, with few casters doing anything and not many producers lining up.

2 MORE LEGITS GOING TALKER

Oliver Bailey withdrew from legit theatre operations last week, and the conversion of the Republic on 42d street into a picture house was announced. Another legit, the midget President, formerly the Edythe Totten, also went talker recently.

With 65 legit theatres in New York, and more than twenty of them steadily dark, legit producers all claim a superabundance of stage theatres. Producing shows to fill them has only run up more losses.

Republic is the second house on 42d street to go talker, other being the Wallach. Lyric is also dark, awaiting some sort of disposal. Forty-second is conceded to be one of the best streets for theatres.

Opinions as to the ideal number of legit theatres for Broadway average around 50, the balance to be disposed of. Fact that there are plenty of film houses now complicates the problem.

BACKSTAGE HOLDUP

"Lysistrata" Payroll Stolen in Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 16

Just as company manager, John L. Peltret, was about to pay off the actors in "Lysistrata" at the Majestic Saturday afternoon, three bandits followed a member of the cast backstage and copped the $3,500 payroll.

This is the first time bandits have gone backstage instead of tying the box office. Two shots were fired to intimidate the mob back stage into obedience by the yeggs.

Seattle, Dec. 16.

Edith Ransome gets her chance to come back. She is being heavily billed for next at the Moore (Bainbridge Players) as guest star in "White Cargo." She created the "Tondeleyo" role in this and was in Seattle with the road show. Early sell looks like another good week.

Local interest in Miss Ransome heightened by her recent escapades in the Orient. She says she was shanghaied, after some club work in Honolulu and suits for damages are pending. Others claim she was stowaway. When brought to Seattle on Pacific liner, she was first placed in jail, then in hospital.

Frohman Injured

Dan Frohman, veteran manager and head of the Actors' Fund, who was hit by a taxi Sunday afternoon (13) was reported improving yesterday (Tuesday). He is at the Park East Hospital.

Frohman, on his way to a tea at the home of Fannie Hurst, suffered a broken collarbone, also lacerations and bruises. It is expected he will be confined to the hospital at least two weeks.

Despite severe pain, Frohman made a brief speech at the tea before being taken to the hospital.

Cruel Juice Man

Mrs. Florence Davis has started action against Theodore E. Davis, head electrician at the New Amsterdam theatre, for separation, charging cruelty and non-support.

Guild's 1st Shakespeare

Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," first Shakespeare play attempted by the Theatre Guild, went into rehearsal Monday (15).

Opening date, mid-January.

Gazzolo's Squint

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Frank Gazzolo, Chicago legit producer, is here surveying the territory.

Chas. Hopkins' "Success" May Mean Title Clash

Charles Hopkins' next production will probably be an A. A. Milne play entitled "Success." Hopkins has had the play for some time and is attempting to cast it. He also has in view another Milne play, promised to him by the author but not yet delivered.

Hopkins also has on hand a Galsworthy play, entitled "Roof," which was to be his next. He is holding off on it, however, because of a similarity of treatment with "Grand Hotel."

AUTHORS' LEAGUE LINES UP IN CENSOR FIGHT

Although no plan proposed by Equity to forestall state or political censorship hit a snag when the Author's League balked at the idea, indications are that show business will get together on the matter. The present movement is a reaction against the charges of several church dignitaries that Broadway has several indecent shows. They refrained from naming the attractions.

A three-way committee has been named—managers, Equity and authors. For the managers: Lawrence Langner, William Harris, Jr., and Brock Pemberton. Equity: Frank Gillmore, Priestley Morrison and Arthur Hohl. Authors' League: Elmer Rice, Edward Childs Carpenter and Arthur Richman.

Gillmore pointed out that if the prediction of the churchmen was correct, state censorship and its hardships would further handicap stage presentations. Also that if New York passed a censor law, other states would follow. It is recalled that state censorship was sought in the Middlewest two years ago. The proposed bill made such requirements that the measure seemed ridiculous. However, it was introduced in all seriousness. Equity's efforts resulted in the bill being tossed aside.

In addition to participation with the managers and Equity, the authors' body has accepted the support of the Civic Liberties Union in the censorship fight. The Author's League opposed Equity's plan for the formation of a citizen's jury, the identities to be secret. The Arbitration Society had tentatively agreed to supply the "jurymen." Authors objected to any type of censorship, but are in accord with the effort to change the present Wales or so-called padlock law, which makes actors liable to prosecution for participating in allegedly indecent shows.

The attacks on the stage from the church came from Cardinal Hayes, Bishop Manning and Rabbi Wise. Since verbally berating the stage the church elements have not been inclined to say more, and especially since Equity started the present movement.

Party Petter Divorced

Pittsburgh, Dec. 16.

Ola Knapp Deickmann, 26, who appeared here a couple of seasons ago in "The Desert Song," was sued for divorce here by Ewald Deickmann, 31, of Don Bestor's band, now playing at the William Penn Hotel. Husband was granted a divorce by Judge Harry H. Rowand.

Mrs. Deickmann received the attentions of other men and on several occasions embraced them at parties before her husband and other guests, Deickmann further testified.

PAR'S 2 FROM LEGIT

Roberta Beatty, last in "Frankie and Johnnie," and Junior Cook, from legit, go with Paramount for "Sex Is Business," to be made at the Astoria, L. I., studio. Features Claudette Colbert.

Picture is expected to go into work within the next ten days. Mike Connolly, of the M. S. Bentham office, has control.

It is estimated that 90% of the legit touring attractions are laying off this week, not including the larger key cities. Under the Equity contract provision, shows may stay shut the weeks before Christmas and Easter without salary obligation. That includes stock companies.

A check-up shows that whereas 68 stocks were operating last week about 40 are laying off this week. Some stocks are operating on a cut salary basis until the holiday period is over, on the principle that a little money is better than none.

Indication is that there are less than 100 theatres playing legit and inclusive of stocks are open this week. Broadway is figured in the count. There are 35 attractions in all operating in the theatre zone, there being a greater percentage of dark houses than at any time since legit theatre building movement reached its peak.

At least five shows shut down suddenly last Saturday and two will resume here next week (Christmas). The other trio will start to the road at that time. A number of shows are laying off between stands out of town and some are idle, awaiting opening on Broadway next week.

Legit Troupes Rehearse On United Artists' Lot

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

United Artists studio, while dark for pictures, has one legit company rehearsing and another casting this week. The new one is "Once in a Lifetime," for which Freddie Scheussler, UA casting director, started picking players Tuesday (16). Rehearsing is Harry Green's "The Shyster," in which Joseph M. Schenck holds half interest.

Schenck says he is not interested with Sid Grauman in the George Kaufman-Moss Hart play, and did not know anything was being done about it on the lot, and that Sid evidently just helped himself to the UA caster.

Third UA contact with legit comes next spring when Norma Talmadge plays in William Harris, Jr.'s, western road company of "The Greeks Had a Word For It." Later she will do the picture for UA, as will Green with "Shyster."

New Sat. Nite Club For Casino in Park

Newest Saturday night dance affair for professionals is called the Ninety and Nine and is of the so-called "The Women's Theatre." Said to propose opposition to the Mayfair event, the Saturday evening fixture at the Ritz.

New organization will hold forth in the Casino, Central Park. Initiation is $25 a couple and the tick for each affair is $15.

"All Things" Folds

"Of All Things," musical produced by Aranze Productions, new outfit, folded Saturday (13) after one week in Atlantic City. Piece was written by Robert Woolsey and R. C. Lilley, with Basil Ziegler, Adrian Samish and Ken Friede on the score.

Ziegler was the actual "Things" producer, with backing reported from Michael Aranzo and Mac Arnenburg, newspaper owner.

DUAL BREAK FOR COOK

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Don Cook, legit, never before in films and engaged in New York by Warners, gets a double break on his screen debut through first being borrowed by Paramount as the lead opposite Ruth Chatterton in "New Morals."

Cook then starts for Warners.

DONNELLY AS VOICE

Les Donnelly is doubling for Ann Harding and the Pagan Lady" in the Paramount studio in New York. At the latter he'll be working on closeup shots.

Donnelly, without billing, is doing the Voice stuff for the Pat Carter-Edmund Lowe pictures.

Paris Goes Puritan, Lyrics Washed Although Nudity O.K.; Films Watched

Paris, Dec. 7.

Paris is getting blue nose, but in different ways, according to whether it is on the screen, stage, street department or literature.

On the stage, apart from total nudity, which caused a dance of Collette Andrys to be cut from the Casino de Paris, keeping on a timid rosebud, gets the act an okay.

Lyrics are more edited than any kind of stage business. This is instanced in the current revue at the Concert Mayol, where the title in itself, "Nue Sonore—Seins pour Seins parlants," is a raw pun. Some old French songs are used in the revue, words of which now appear of extreme crudeness.

Against th' timidity the sadistic flagellation of women is very realistically staged, probably affecting more minds in the audience than could do any amount of dialog. It is pretty difficult to draw an exact limit as to what can be staged in Paris, since apart from unprintable words, the sky seems the limit of absolute nudity.

This is now vastly different in pictures, probably due to the fact that American film habits are still permeating local producers' minds, but signs point to the fact that since talkers have made local pictures more local, they will by and by get nearer to the stage standard. The fact that more children go to the pictures than to theatres may be a slight bar on rawness, but several shots, which certainly would bring photographer and exhibitor to jail in America, have been freely screened in Paris in some arty pictures.

Plenty of Stage Undress

Despite this excessive freedom, Paris is daily getting more puritanical where out-of-doors manners are concerned. There is far more undress on the stage than 20 years ago, but women on the streets are less open with their trade. The police are trying to eliminate them from the boulevards, but without much success, and their current attempt at driving out of the Bois de Boulogne open air nudists parties, simply results in shoving them further away.

Latest moral drive is mostly affecting literature, particularly illustrated literature. There is now no limit to what illustrations are printed by publications openly sold on all newsstands. Naked women are the least objectionable. At one time a senator named Berenger founded a league against street obscenity, including posters and publications. The league has not been hard at work for a long time. The man who now and then gets a press notice is the priest, the Abbe Bethehem, who acts as a censor by divine right, and now and then destroys obscene publications he finds on sale, is taken to court and regularly acquitted.

ROMAINS' RECORD

Paris, Dec. 7.

Jules Romains holds the unprecedented record of a playwright as having four shows in Paris at the same time.

He authored "Donogoo," currently at the Pigalle, "Boen" at the Odeon, "Musse" at the Ateller, and his former success, "Knock," will be revived shortly at the Champs Elysee.

MARX IN COLOGNE

Cologne, Dec. 1.

Director Jules Marx, of the Berlin vaudeville concern Scala, intends taking over the Cologne opera house.

There are to be mostly variete performances at low admission and special performances with film and opera stars.

SHINING POSTERS

Paris, Dec. 5.

New kind of poster invading Paris is made of metalized paper, mostly silver or gold.

Result is not particularly striking in daytime) but at night it glitters and is free of the luminous advertising supertax.

"Last Mile" in Paris

Paris, Dec. 7.

"The Last Mile" will be done in France under the title "La Chaise Electrique" ("Electric Chair"). Adaptation is by Mouezy-Eon and Mrs. Eisy Monjardin.

Even Budapest State Opera Hit by Slump

Budapest, Dec. 5.

Secretary of State Meszaros has been appointed to control the budgets of the Budapest Opera House and National theatre, state-subsidized institutions, on account of a general economy scheme of the government. There is a panic among actors and opera singers, as an engagement with either of these theatres was always considered as good as any government job, not too generously endowed but a safe income for life. Now there are rumors of reduction of salaries and many dismissals.

Lessee of the community's theatre building, Varosi Szinhaz, has had to give up his lease. The building has just been leased by Karoly Ferenczi, who has had to take $50,000 of liabilities.

Amusement tax, income tax, police tax, lighting, firemen, insurance mean such a plus that until a radical reform is made on that score no producer can be expected to make money. The government and the municipality can't be made to see it. Hence many bankruptcies and precarious situation of actors.

Same trouble applies to motion picture exhibitors, with the addition of import and censor taxes.

The Musical Premiere

invite them over, maybe that will help. Order some booze, Arty and reserve the ball room at the hotel. And Nat, get some of those nude pictures in the papers; that ought to counteract the notices. I want everybody on their toes tomorrow, rehearsal at 10. I'm all in, this show has me worn out, so I gotta get some rest.

"Good night all. Don't you go, Arty, I want you to do something for me.

"Well, Arty, I think we gotta good show with a little work on it. Of course I can't tell those boys that 'cause they'll all lay down. All we need on this one is some new tunes, scenery, cast, dances and costumes and an entirely new book and it'll be o. k. I'm not worried. Don't forget to wake me in the morning. Good night, Arty."

Leslie Revue Echo

Giuseppe Radaelli, tenor, has filed suit against Lew Leslie, producer of "International Revue," for $4,950 salary alleged due on a $500 a week contract for that show and on which he has only been paid $8,800. The contract, made Oct. 16, 1929, according to the tenor's affidavits, guaranteed him 25 weeks, or $13,500.

Leslie, represented by Attorney Julius Kendler, claims to have performed his end when he offered Radaelli opportunity to keep earning the $500 in other ventures, but Radaelli would not accept.

Tellegen in French Stock

Tom Conway, producing manager for the Theatre Des Arts, Montreal, organized a complete French stock company via Paul Scott office in New York. It opened in Montreal Monday night (14).

The company includes Lou Tellegen, Joseph Romaniny, Robert Aubert, Ralph Cataly, Frederic Rudini, Hedda Koppe, Mauricette Ducret, Henriette Amiard, Emerine Nadeau, Evelin Merlin, Jules Epailly; director, Eugent Robidoux resident manager.

"LILACS" PRELIM TOUR

"Green Grow the Lilacs," which the Guild is now playing on the road, previous to coming into New York, will play four more weeks before showing up at the Guild theatre. Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore will occupy the time.

On the strength of his recent book on business writing Arthur H. Little has landed in the editor's chair of "System." That mag is one of the very few in this country heavier than the "Saturepost," and a Little fellow now carries it.

WOULD BAN WIDE FILM

Indie Ehibs In England Organizing to Stop It.

London, Dec. 7.

Indie exhibitors here are attempting to organize against wide film.

A West of England Branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, mainly composed of indie exhibs, has adopted a resolution asking the General Council of the association to ask the government to prohibit the importation of wide film. Idea is it would put nearly every indie house out of business.

So far, wide film has made little or no impression in this field, and the first specimens of its work have yet to be seen here.

Owing to technical difficulties in equipping the key theatre with the wide screen, opening date is indefinite, and will not be until the new year.

AMERICANS IN ITALIAN RUNAROUND REVUE JOB

Paris, Dec. 7.

Several American performers came back to Paris with a sad tale of a booking they had received here for Italy. They had been signed from Paris for a revue at the Salamberto theatre in Rome, to be staged by two German producers. The contract was for three months.

After several days' rehearsing in Rome, during which time they were surprised to see no Italians in the revue—only Germans and Swedes—they were told they would get warmed up for the Rome opening by an initial 10-day vaude tour. When they returned to Rome they discovered their contracts for a revue were only so much paper, and in addition they would have hard work collecting for the 10 days on tour.

After hanging around Rome as long as possible two of them returned to Paris with about $40 apiece on the whole booking. American acts in this washout were Earle Franklin, Wanayo, dancer, and Madeleine Harrison.

British Film Notes

London, Dec. 5.

Julius Hagen, who made "House of the Arrow" for Warners, after dickering with several other American concerns here for releases, has made a deal with W. & F. end of Gaumont-British to make six features.

With United Artists off the deal with Sir Walter Gibbons to use Leicester Square Theatre, and Warners taking a shot at the house for "Viennese Nights," theatre rushed out story it would run all Warner product. What-the-hell cable from New York put different construction on story, and relations between Gibbons and Warner outfit here don't look so cordial.

John Maxwell's tenancy of Alhambra expires around Xmas, and, apart from this, John has already switched to a weekly program change at Regal.

Paramount, now admitting buy of Astorias and being after others, going to put in a set of theatre offices in town. Look like being located in new building on Dean street, opposite Radio headquarters.

Leon Wynbergen, who went to Radio as general sales manager when the outfit began, resigned. Succeeded by Ralph Hanbury, formerly circuit manager with P. D. C. (Pathe).

Looks like those threatened Gaumont-British resignations may yet become effective. Around February.

Lyons' company, tea shop chain, gone talker with Western Electric sets. Taking films round provinces teaching waitresses how to attend to customers. Shell Oil has an RCA portable, running round selling gas to drivers.

London Society of Motion Picture Engineers has split from main American body by 24 votes to three. After long huddle with London officers and Kenneth Hickman, H. T. Cowling and J. I. Crabtree, of Kodak Rochester, as to why London branch, contributing $35,000 in a year, only got $3,500 and the society's journal.

Isidore Schlesinger's De Forest Phonofilms company turned over to official receiver broke, with only asset 463,376 shares in British Talking Pictures, another Schlesinger concern, considered to have no value, according to court estimates. Phonofilms was registered as private company in July, 1923, with capital $250,000, and made public company in April, 1926, turned over to British Talking Pictures when stock was offered to public in July, 1928, with capital $2,500,000.

Secretary of State for India, Wedgwood Benn, told House of Commons this week, government of India censors had rejected 25 films in the past year, eight American, including "The Very Idea," "The Letter" and "Black Watch." Others banned were two British: "Silent House" and "Shiraz"; one German, Volga Volga"; one French, "Passion of Joan of Arc," rest native and Russian.

Stiff Tap

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Imported foreigners have already cost four major studios around $1,000,000. Players cost an average of $1,500 each.

Part of this average is for fare both ways, the rest representing salary for six weeks guaranteed work.

Topical Burlesques at Budapest Bar Pull Biz

Budapest, Dec. 5.

New York Bar, Budapest's smartest, has a novel kind of attraction. The New York is the meeting place of theatrical people. The place's clever proprietor, Tarjan, former journalist and cabaret singer, presents a parody of the current successful play every month, with himself, all the waiters, the doorman, the cloak-room girl, the band and a few professional actors who turn up after the theatre, taking the parts.

"Wonder Bar" parody was a roaring success, now they have a parody of Molnar's "Good Fairy" still running, although the play itself has closed. Much of the fun is very local, but the spirit and tempo are first-rate.

Another popular attraction, at the Royal-Bar, are Lily and Emmy Schwarz, German sisters, pianists and singers. Pretty girls who itch with rhythm. They were discovered here last winter and have just returned for a month, filling the place every night, although times are bad and amusement business flopping.

Another girl over whom Budapest has gone crazy is Dela Lipinskaja, Russian diseuse, appearing in Terzkoruti Cabaret. Auburn-haired and piquant, her renderings of Russian, Polish and Yiddish songs are firing audiences which don't understand a word of them. Lipinskaja was formerly with Jushnij's Oiseau Bleu Russian Cabaret, but is now touring on her own in Central Europe.

A. B. C. Adds Flesh

London, Dec. 4.

Douglas Murray, lately out of the Roxy organization in New York, took over supervising in Associated British Cinemas (British International's circuit) Dec. 1.

He will parallel the work done by Francis Mangan for Paramount's theatres here, and starts off by adding stage shows to programs at the Regal, London, an A. B. C. house, which has previously kept off vaudefilm.

Slight U. S. Players

Paris, Dec. 5.

American acts over here that get a break in the films suffer a tremendous blow to their vanities. As the only American spot in the film they are treated like royalty during the making, invited to the rushes of the film, etc.

When the film actually appears on the boulevards, however, they find but they have either been cut entirely or their spot has been so hurried they are lost.

Plaza's London Deal

London, Dec. 7.

F. W. Shelley, one of the directors of Grosvenor House (Park Lane), Limited, is over in New York conferring with the Plaza Hotel to either purchase the Grosvenor House property or cut in on the management.

Grosvenor House is the most modern hotel in England—some say in the world; but it has been affected by the present world depression.

BUDAPEST COMEDY SEEN AS PROSPECT FOR U. S.

Budapest, Dec. 5.

"Francie on Tour" ("Ferike mint vendeg") is the title of a new play which has in it all the ingredients of a world success. Authors are Bus Fekete and Sandor Goth, the latter one of this Budapest's leading comedians. He and his wife, Ella Goth, play the leads.

Story is about a yellow-haired, scatter-brained old-time musical comedy soubrette, the pet of provincial audiences 30 years ago. She had been the good little wife of a country doctor, but fell in love with the handsome leading man of a second-rate stock company and ran away with him to the fairyland of stage lights, leaving the doctor and a ten-months-old son. Now she has retired to a modest pension with memories of the time when she was the most fascinating Merry Widow a provincial stock company ever knew.

Tony, the gallant leading man, is still her fiance, and Francie is content with the situation until their daughter, engaged to be married, is in danger on account of a money mess that her father, incorrigible bohemian, has got into. To find the money, Francie goes to see her son whom she deserted as a baby and who has meanwhile developed into a famous doctor and rich man. The old comedienne is ungraciously received by the aristocratic household. But she wins over the doctor's carefully nurtured children by performing to them songs and dances out of her repertory.

The children, kept in cotton-wool, have never seen anything as amusing and their enthusiasm influences daddy who makes it up with his prodigal mamma, and keeps Francie in his house, trying to re-educate her to society ways. But Francie, big child that she is, demoralizes the household, sets the house on fire, brings her disreputable old friends to call and finally returns to her memories of past triumphs and to Tony, her "silver fiance" of twenty-five years' standing.

A brilliant part for a good comedienne, of the type of Mrs. Fiske or Marie Tempest, running the gamut of comedy and sentiment, with all the romance and fun of provincial actors in days gone by, as a background.

Another play with an old-time actress as a central figure is "Wise Mamma," a musical vehicle for Sari Fedak, at the Kiraly Szinhaz. No more young, but still famous and lovely prima donna's two daughters quarrel with their respective husbands, one, because husband is a sit-at-home dull fellow and wife drags him about, the other because husband wants to be up and doing all the time while she prefers keeping house and darning stockings. Wise Mamma gets the news of trouble brewing while in a conflict whether to succumb to the attractions of a very young author who is madly in love with and writing a play for her, or to give in to elderly beau who has been after her for years. She packs them both off and goes to rescue the situation of both daughters. She drags the lively son-in-law to so many places that he is glad to sit at home with the darning wife for the rest of his life, and gives the poky son-in-law such a dull time that he insists on his wife going out with him every night. Wise Mamma thereupon marries elderly suitor, since grandchildren in sight make her realize that time passes. Play is based on a good idea by Bela Szenes who did not live to write it.

Pay-as-Enter Tyros

Paris, Dec. 5.

This season is showing big profits for concert hall managers because of the unusual number of femme dancers willing and rich enough to pay for the privilege of appearing solo in Paris.

Ordinarily these dancers pay less money for a spot in a big revue, but to date four have appeared in large concert halls, with plenty of paid publicity, press agents and almost entirely paper houses.

BELLACHINI DIES

Marburg Lahn, Dec. 5.

The well-known juggler and magician, Bellachini, a member of the famous juggler family, Bellachini, died almost on the eve of his 70th birthday.

England Again Shuts Down on Acts and Bands

London, Dec. 16.

The Home Office is tightening up on enforcement of regulations governing employment of foreign acts again, refusing them permission to remain while laying off. Rule applies even if the acts have booking ahead.

Acts already affected are Reno Bros., Jimmy Ferguson and "Big Boy" Taylor, who were directed to return home without any reason being given.

Jane Sells was refused a permit on her first application to open at the Palladium (vaude), but this action was later withdrawn and the date goes through.

The privilege formerly enjoyed by foreign bands to supplement their earnings by doubling from cabarets into vaudeville and by playing private party dates has also now been withdrawn. One instance is that of Nobble Sissle and his Ambassadors band, current at Ciro's. This organization has been notified that it may not play elsewhere.

The Minister of Labor in England has placed a ban on all American bands entering England for the rest of this season, according to a cable received by William Goodheart (M. C. A.), from the owners of the Kit Cat Club, London.

Goodheart had Henry Santry booked over there for 10 weeks starting Jan. 10, and was negotiating for the labor permit when the cable arrived. The ban was placed by the Labor Minister on Dec. 5, and action was taken, according to the dispatch, because of the British unemployment situation.

London Mgrs. Will Submit Bill for Full Open Sundays

London, Dec. 16.

The Entertainment Protective Association, which embraces practically all the theatre and music hall managements of London, has prepared a bill for Parliament calling for Sunday openings of all classes of entertainment.

Measure is designed to nullify the ancient Lord's Day Observance act. The London County council last week recommended an appeal against the recent decision of the high courts which prevented the Council from permitting Sunday openings of English cinemas.

An appropriation of $3,000 was made in the interests of the appeal.

Empires and General At Odds, Is Report

London, Dec. 16.

Nervo and Knox, opening at the Victoria Palace tomorrow (Wed) in a new revue, have dates with General Theatres and Moss Empires, which were asked to give the team a release.

The request was refused, giving rise to the story that the two circuits are at odds.

Harry Lauder, however, was released last week by Moss Empires from Sheffield to oblige the Palladium management.

Newcomb Play Quits

London, Dec. 16.

"A Marriage Has Been Disarranged," starring Mary Newcomb, closed at the Royalty Dec. 12 after seven performances.

Hopkins' Circus Play

Vienna, Dec. 16.

"Intermezzo in the Circus," which has been successful here, has been acquired for London by Hopkins.

Moissi So. American Tour

Vienna, Dec. 16.

Alexander Moissi has been engaged for a tour of South America starting between now and Jan. 1.

Tour is over ground he has covered before.

Dutch Turn Down Music Ban Request Due to Reciprocity

The Hague, Dec. 16.

The Dutch unemployed musicians who appealed to the Government against the influx of foreign jazzists received a negative reply. The authorities refuse to exclude foreign artists on the ground that many Dutch musicians are working abroad and foreign nations are entitled to reciprocity. Besides which it is pointed out, foreign nations probably would organize reprisals.

In additions, the ministry states, many first class restaurants and cabarets which have dancing cannot prosper without good foreign bands who supply a style of music which the Dutch organizations cannot give.

HOLLAND SHOW TRADE TAKES BETTER TURN

The Hague, Dec. 16.

Theatre attendance has shown such brisk improvement in Holland that one company in Amsterdam gave two premieres in a single week and both prospered. Company is the Nederlandsch Tooneel.

New productions are "The Man in Possession," adapted from the London success, and "Le Professeur Anglais," by Regis Gignoux, translated in Dutch by Mensink.

At the same time the Amsterdamsche Tooneel offered the Hague premiere of the Russian play, "Prof. Storizyn," by Andrejef, translated by Mrs. Kosloff. Star of the occasion was Devries, Dutch notable, and also known in the States.

DANCE ACT TROUBLES

American Steps Regarded As Outmoded When They Reach Paris

Paris, Dec. 7.

American ballroom dance acts over here attribute their difficulties in finding engagements to the fact that Paris is so far advanced in ballroom dancing they are almost old-fashioned. That is to say that when the dance acts get over here with what they consider the newest steps in suave tangos and slow refined waltzes, the French who are more accustomed to that sort of thing on the regular dance floor than hot steps and fox trots think the American act is just not working at all.

The only thing that satisfies them is to see the act finish their dance with limp collars and ruffled coiffures after a series of interpolated acrobatics. Only the very high class resort hotels with a cosmopolitan crowd and a ditto night club (where the floor is usually too small for dancing anything), are willing to book the better type of American ballroom dance team.

German State Tightens Jazz Rule, Censorship

Berlin, Dec. 16.

The Thuringian ministry of the interior (the same which first forbade the showing of "Two Worlds") has published new rules governing jazz music, and also is tightening up on picture censorship.

All jazz music, Negro songs and Negro dances are prohibited and new censor regulations have been published.

Golfie Sweeps Land

Buenos Aires, Dec. 16.

The midget golf craze is sweeping Argentina. There are now 50 spots in Buenos Aires alone.

Fad is spreading into the outlying districts and all courses so far opened are reported making money.

Chevalier's Sailing

London, Dec. 16.

Maurice Chevalier starts a provincial tour of England Dec. 29, covering Manchester, Liverpool, Leicester, Brighton, Bristol, Cardiff, Newcastle and Plymouth, all one-night stands with the exception of Manchester. Melville Gideon and orchestra of 15 accompanies the tour.

Hit Is B'way Bet

Paris, Dec. 16.

Femme de Minute" ("Midnight Lady"), opening at the Nouveautes, looks like a bet for Broadway. It is a comedy with songs and is authored by Andre Barde.

Piece is extremely well done both as to production and acting, and its amusing quality is making it a real hit.

ACTS WARNED AVOID PARIS

Paris, Dec. 16.

Bookings of acts in France are so bad at this time that agents themselves are advising foreign performers to stay away from the French capital.

Charlie Ahearn, now in Buenos Aires, made known his intention to return here when his South American engagements have been played. He was promptly advised by cable of the situation and told the prospects here were not bright.

Film Rivalry Forces Paris Vaude Houses To Spend More Cash

Paris, Dec. 16.

Picture opposition is smothering other attractions in Paris, particularly the vaudeville attractions.

The Empire is conspicuous in the new condition. It has engaged Sophie Tucker for two weeks, starting Feb. 20. The current bill is a noticeably stronger one than the usual run of offerings.

12 HURT AS STAGE COLLAPSES, 20 FALL

Capetown, Dec. 16.

Portion of the stage at His Majesty's theatre in Johannesburg collapsed Saturday night (Dec. 13), when Ali Baba Baba Panto company posed for a photograph.

Some 20 people fell into a deep pit under the stage and 12 were injured, Phyllis Turner seriously.

British Pug Sails

London, Dec. 16.

Kid Berg and his manager, Sol Gold, are sailing for New York on the "Olympic" today (Tues.), but making no announcement of their designs on the U. S.

Berg, a boxer of some note here, has played a number of vaudeville dates to indifferent returns. Likely the American trip will aim at ring engagements rather than stage dates.

Gold is also taking with him Johnny Peteru, undefeated English bantam.

Weaken Closing Law

London, Dec. 16.

Leslie Boyce, M. P., is bringing in a government bill today (Tues.) amending the Sunday Observance Act under which a woman is claiming heavy penalties for the Sunday opening of cinemas.

The bill aims to prevent claims for penalties and if passed will considerably weaken the former law.

UNION'S NEW HOUSE

Capetown, Dec. 16.

African Theatres' Opera House, Capetown, with its interior rebuilt and beautified and its capacity enlarged to 1,200, opens Dec. 22 with "Mr. Cinders," musical comedy.

Cairo Concert Stars

Cairo, Dec. 16.

Among the international stars booked for the Korsaal here are Hulicinska, Niltoska, Drozdoff and Bonifacio, forecasting a brilliant season.

London Legits Slip Back from 15 to 20% in Christmas Decline; $86,000 for Chevalier's 2 Weeks

RIVIERA TRADE OFF

Cannes Calls Off Feature Booking, Result Dull Business

Paris, Dec. 16.

Business along the Riviera is beginning to duplicate the situation of this time a year ago, when the Wall Street crash shot trade.

The Casino at Cannes has called off vaudeville booking of feature acts, due to desire to economize during the slump.

LONDON'S NEW STARTERS MILD

London, Dec. 16.

Latest batch of stage attractions here disclose nothing that promises a long run hit. Additions to the pre-Christmas list are mostly arty offerings.

Last entry is "The Borrowed Life," opening Sunday (14) at the Prince of Wales, under the auspices of the Stage Society. It's a gloomy Russian play picturing the life of Turgeniev, the great writer in exile in the '60's, before the author was born. No chance here or anywhere else except maybe Russia of another day.

Repertory Players gave a Sunday night performance of "The Merchant and Venus," by Joan Temple. Piece was well acted. Story deals with a cockney who accumulates wealth and tries to crash society.

An impecunious woman agrees to marry him in name only for two years for a cash consideration and, instead of the expected finish, the characters become caricatures and what had started as a satire becomes broad farce.

"A Marriage Has Been Arranged," opening Dec. 9 at the Royalty, is a comedy by Leonard Ide, designed to exploit the talents of Mary Newcomb. The actress is cast in the rather outmoded character of a woman who after living for five years with a man who has promised to marry her when he is free, finds upon his wife's death that he has changed his mind.

Since the man was providing for her family also, a problem is created. The difficulty is solved by her marrying another man in the last act.

Piece seems to have small chance for a long run in London and even less for Broadway.

"Caviare" at Little

"Caviare," satirical revue in design, is now at the Little theatre. It proved rather inane and is looked upon as having practically no chance at all.

"To See Ourselves," opening at the Ambassadors Dec. 11, is a dramatization of a novel. It has to do with the marriage of a middle aged couple. It is developed in a genteel comedy vein, but is insufficient in vigor of action to make a play. Small prospect for financial success or duration.

Clark and McCullough, Ada May with Cochran

London, Dec. 16.

Clark and McCullough will co-star with Ada May in Cochran's 1931 revue.

Contracts specify that their names shall be first in the billing.

Robt. Steel in Dutch

The Hague, Dec. 16.

The American baritone, Robert Steel, made a mild impression in concert.

JOE TOLANO DIES

Sydney, Dec. 16.

London, Dec. 16.

West End legits dropped 15 to 20% in grosses last week, attributable to the usual pre-Xmas slump in theatre attendance. Generally, the managers strike the attitude that it is only the seasonal influence, and are taking it with some degree of complacency, while others are getting nervous. Last Saturday (13), was the poorest day of the month for a weekend.

Week's Grosses

Adelphi — "Evergreen." A weak Monday matinee just prevented the attraction from going under $30,000. Averaging $33,000.

Aldwych—"Marry the Girl." Averaging $13,000.

Cambridge—"On the Spot." Has pretty well exhausted its possibilities and is moving out next month after a sturdy run. It goes on tour with Charles Laughton, bookings being for 14 weeks.

Comedy — "Twelve Hours." A weak sister doing around $2,500.

Daly's—"Little Tommy Tucker." Did about $8,000, which represents a net loss of around $1,000.

Dominion — Chevalier's fortnight drew $47,000 on its first week of 11 performances and on the second week was off to $39,000 on 12 performances. Libraries sold $50,000 of tickets over the fortnight.

Duke of York's—"Her First Affair." Is doing poorly in spite of its management's glowing claims.

Gaiety—"The Love Race." Did around $9,000, which represents a minor loss. Piece presently vacates, going on a provincial tour.

Garrick—"Almost a Honeymoon." Still in the money around $5,000.

Globe—"Street Scene." Eased off to around $6,000, but is looked to survive the period of low grosses.

His Majesty's — "Bitter Sweet." The long stayer, dropped slightly, but still is going $20,000.

Phoenix — "Private Lives." Is maintaining its level close to $16,000, which represents capacity.

Playhouse—"Cynara." Is down to around $6,000, which just about lets it get by.

Prince Edward—"Nippy." Opened to a real smash, doing $20,000 the first week, but thereafter takings tapered off to around $16,000.

Prince of Wales — "The Queen Dec." Is lingering along, but is likely to fold at the end of this week (20).

Princess — "Oh Daddy." Got a panning on its premiere from the newspapers, but is doing fairly well around $10,000.

Queen's—"The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Is practically unaffected around $12,000.

Savoy — "Wonder Bar." Around $10,000, which is about an even break. Most of the trade is downstairs, natural since those seated in balcony and above have a poor view of the proceedings.

St. James—"A Murder Has Been Arranged." Near $6,500

Shaftsbury—"Leave It to Smith." Slumped as low as $7,250, but bookings show some healthy signs.

Whitehall — "The Way to Treat a Woman." Demonstrating the strength of this stayer at $7,000.

BANKHEAD'S PALLADIUM SKETCH WEAK VEHICLE

London, Dec. 16.

Tallulah Bankhead's opening in vaudeville at the Palladium yesterday (Monday) revealed her sketch, "Always Apologize," as an exceedingly weak vehicle for the venture. The turn barely got by.

Haynes and Beck went over splendidly. Attendance was poor, another manifestation of the holiday slump.

Buenos Aires Venture

Buenos Aires, Dec. 16.

Juan Reforzo, amusement promoter here, has taken a lease of the local Odeon for one year, with an option for two more years.

He proposes to bring in Spanish, Italian, and French companies, as well as importing stars for concerts.

CLASSICAL FRAGMENTS

The Hague, Dec. 16.

A troupe called the English Classical Players is making a tour of Holland giving an evening of short scenes from the plays of Shakespeare and Goldsmith.

Taking over shows, finished on Broadway, and producing new ones to fill subway circuit houses has resulted in 120 lay-off actors finding employment.

Two Broadway plays have been taken over, another may be, one old one is being revived and a new play is being produced by William and Harry Brandt, owners of four suburban legit houses.

Brandts have taken over "Frankie and Johnnie" with 26 in the cast; "Subway Express," with nearly 50, and are reviving the eight year old "Steve" with 20 actors. Shows are being routed around the four sub houses and "Express" is playing Chicago.

Advantages

More than 20 are in "Mysterious Dr. X," which Brandts are producing for their theatres. Another company will shortly go to work when the brothers take over "The Last Mile."

While salaries in these shows may be smaller than those given for Broadway engagements, legit actors are frank in saying subway work is an unexpected source of income. All claim the rest of the season past has been a question of few jobs at heavily cut salaries. One known legit claims he has been offered a role plus the assistant stage managership of the company for less than the salary he usually gets for acting alone.

Five Shows Going Out

Half a dozen closings occurred last Saturday night. Two attractions are laying off this pre-Christmas week, but the other four definitely stopped. At least one more will close this week.

"Hello Paris," a Shubert musical, folded at the Shubert after a bit less than five weeks. Scale was reduced and went into cut rates soon after opening here. Lays off this week and resumes on tour.

HELLO PARIS
Opened Nov. 15. "The comic possibilities of nausea completely eluded this reporter," Mantle (News). "An epochal bore," thought Atkinson (Times). "Very dull and routine," Brown (Post). "Variety" said: "Looks headed for early departure."

"Bad Girl," presented at the Hudson by Robert Newman, dropped out suddenly after playing 11 weeks. Credited with turning a good profit and ducked the pre-holiday slump. With cast changes goes on tour.

BAD GIRL
Opened Oct. 2. "Excellent play," Lockridge (Sun). "Probably will draw crowds," Darnton (Eve. World). "Monotonous evening," Anderson (Journal). "Variety" (Ibee): "Feminine draw indicated for a moderately successful engagement."

"Light Wines and Beer," an independent offering, stopped at the Republic. A cut rater for the four or five weeks it played, having opened at the Waldorf. Show originally presented here several years ago as "The Good Old Days."

LIGHT WINES AND BEER
Opened Nov. 10. "Feeble little Comedy," Smith (World). "Intermissions more enjoyable than the performance," Rathbun (Sun). "Worthy offering" (American). "Variety" said: "Worth no more than a couple of weeks."

"As Good as New" will close at the Cort Saturday, which ends its seventh week. Originally played the Times Square under the sponsorship of Charles Dillingham who turned the show over to Joe Leblang. Top around $6,000, although first figured to have a chance.

AS GOOD AS NEW
Opened Nov. 3. Good notices almost all around. "Lends laughter and color to a sad autumnal season," Garland (Telegram). "Witty and clever and bright" (American). But Wilella Waldorf (Post), second-stringer, guessed better with: "Wearying to this reviewer." "Variety" said: "It's clearly a hit."

The presentation of "The Merchant of Venice" was called to a halt last Saturday, too, at the Times Square. "Nina Rosa" and "Up Pops the Devil" are laying off, and due to resume next Monday.

Will Sell Theatre Stubs Like Apples Along Street

A plan to sell theatre tickets by means of the unemployed, similar in nature to R-K-O's recently tried out idea, will shortly go into effect for four subway circuit theatres operated by William and Harry Brandt. Plan is to have 1,000 girls sell tickets, 50% of the intake going to the city's unemployment fund.

Queens Unemployment Fund has already taken over the Boulevard theatre, Jackson Heights, next Tuesday (23), when "Devil Is a Lady" will be current.

'FAT' COLLINGE RETURNS

Patricia Collinge, absent from the legit stage for several seasons, will return via "Affairs of Anatole," which Bela Blau, Inc., is producing, and in which Joseph Schildkraut will be projected as star.

Miriam Hopkins and Walter Connolly have also been engaged for the piece which goes into rehearsal next week.

Communists Pay for B'way Medium; Others Spread Ideas Free

Communistic propaganda, as disseminated through Broadway plays, has reached a record high peak. It's something new for Broadway, and is acting as p.a. to the Communistic party. Number of plays associated with the red doctrines is three.

Theatre Guild's "Roar China," Bela Blau's "Overture," and "Brilliantenn," produced by Workers' Theatrical group at the Princess, are the plays. "Brilliantenn" is one of a series which the producing group, known also as Artef, is doing, all with Communistic theories, backers and actors, in the hopes of spreading their doctrines.

Artef hopes to make the Princess, which they have taken over on a lease until next year, one of a series of Communistic theatres throughout the country. Making money, which they have not done yet, is just incidental.

Artef actors, mostly, pay for the privilege of learning how to act, with the manager of the group getting highest pay, $35 weekly. Seizing this opportunity to spread radical theories, Artef actors are said to be the most enthusiastic troupers on Broadway.

Gordon Off 'Evergreen,' Has Another Musical

Max Gordon is reported out on the production of "Evergreen," London musical which he had been scheduled to do over here in association with Charles B. Cochran, who made the production abroad.

Instead, Gordon will do a new musical, "Lucky Seven," with book by Howard Deitz. Composer of score undecided upon as yet.

Minneapolis Figures

Minneapolis, Dec. 16.

Both the Metropolitan and Lyceum were dark the past week, but will be relighted New Year's week, the former getting "Michael and Mary" and the latter "A Month in the Country."

DILLINGHAM'S 'PENNY'

Charles B. Dillingham has acquired production rights of "A Bad Penny," comedy by William Anthony McGuire.

Glenn Hunter is being angled for as star.

Shows in Rehearsal

"Strange Interlude" London Co. (Theatre Guild) Guild.
"The Life Line" (Leo Bulgakov) Craig.
"Rock Me, Julie" (Green & Gensler) Harris.
"Made in Hollywood" (Brock Pemberton) Avon.
"Black Sheep" (Charles Farwell) Bryant Hall.
"My Twin Sister" (Shuberts) Shubert.
"Life Is Like That" (Curtis Emery) Little.
"You Said It" (Holtz & Yellen) 48th St.
"Colonel Satan" (Erlanger's) Erlanger.
"Philip Goes Forth" (Lawrence Weber) Times Sq.
"Babes in Toyland" (Shuberts) Imperial.
"The Devil Is a Lady" (Lew Cantor) Ritz.
"The Gang's All Here" (Green & Gensler), Comedy.

SHUBERTS BOOK GREEN'S "GANG"

Contracts between Shuberts and Morris Green, calling for the latter to produce for the former, have been signed. Green & Gensler have, after over a month's difficulty, split with Erlangers.

"The Gang's All Here," musical being produced by Green & Gensler, has been booked into Shubert's Imperial, original booking in Erlanger's New Amsterdam to follow "Vanities" having been cancelled. A similar booking switch goes for "Rock Me Julie," also opening in January.

Reported the Green-Shubert deal calls for the formation of another of the many Shubert corporations, this one to be headed by Morris Green, with a capitalization around $500,000.

Green will produce, according to reports, over a dozen plays annually, and will have full control and all say sc's on production. According to one manager, Shuberts have been after Green for more than five years.

Whether Lewis Gensler or A. L. Jones, partners of Green, are in one on the deal was not known. Jones is now dickering on a play, while Gensler is interested in both "Gang" and "Julie."

Split between Erlangers and G. & G. came after disagreements between Green and Marcus Heiman, of Erlanger's. Heiman had been handling ticket distribution, with Green dissatisfied and wanting to take it over.

Revived Revue in Spring

Proposed revival of "Music Box Revue" has been set back until next spring by Sam H. Harris.

Previous reports scheduled it after the holidays, but it has been set back because of Hassard Short, set to stage the show, having other assignments, including the direction of the London production of "Three's a Crowd."

Harris' smash, "Once in a Lifetime," is current at the Music Box, New York. Harris figures the spring and summer a better spotting than in holiday time.

"Steve" Closing

The Brandts' revival of "Steve," starring Eugene O'Brien, will close Saturday (20) in Jamaica after two weeks out of town.

FUTURE PLAYS

"The Last Mile," Herman Shumlin's prison drama, which closed recently in Chicago and is now in the storehouse, may be taken over shortly by William and Harry Brandt to play their four subway houses. With the exception of Spencer Tracy, original cast will be used.

"Frisco Kate" is next in line for Mae West after "Flaming Mae" completes her current tour in "Diamond Lil," which is figured to end after the holidays. Shuberts, who have been operating "Lil" since the take-over from the Linder outfit, which produced it originally, will also be in on the new one.

Keller will spot the show on wildcat dates through upper New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Piece now casting and goes into rehearsal in two weeks.

"A Well Known Woman" which George M. Cohan produced for try-out earlier in the season will be given another try in January.

Cohan scrapped the piece for repairs and has been revising the script between performances of "The Tavern" in which he is appearing on tour.

"Kept," another of Vina Delmar's novels, is being dramatized, with the authoress making her own stage adaptation and with Robert V. Newman scheduled as producer. Newman is producer of "Bad Girl," dramatization of another Delmar novel current at the Hudson, New York.

"The Chalk Circle," a Chinese play, due for series of matinees, will have Anna May Wong of the "On the Spot" company at the Forrest, N. Y., as principal femme. Miss Wong, according to arrangements, will continue in the Edgar Wallace play as per contract.

Piece is a sequel to "Young Sinners" and goes into rehearsal in two weeks under direction of Stanley Logan.

"Greenwich Village Scandals" went into rehearsal last week and when ready will relight the Grove Street, Greenwich Village. Charles Seivers, producer.

Original production of the piece was sponsored by Boothe & Gleason two years ago with it folding after the brief New York run.

George White will recast his last edition of "Scandals" and project the piece as a road show attraction in short stand dates through the midwest and south.

"All Aboard Ireland," musical by John MacDonagh and produced by MacDonagh and John McGraw at the Knights of Columbus last November, will be recast by McGraw for a Broadway showing in January.

"Queen at Home," called off for revision a month ago, by John Henry Mears, producer, will go into rehearsal again next week. Piece was written by Shirley Wade and Vivian Cosby, with Sylvia Field heading cast.

"Gulf Stream," by Thomas Mitchell, with the author also in for the directing, is being cast by Crosby Gaige and slated to open out of town in January.

"The Way Out," which was scrapped for revision several months ago, has been taken over by Edward Riley and goes into rehearsal next week (22) for a fresh start.

A. H. Woods' "Five Star Final" will open cold at the Cort theatre Dec. 29. Play is by Louis Weitzenkorn, former "World" Sunday editor, and is about newspaper work.

"The Baby in the Case," farce by Anita Hart and Maurice Braddell, is to be produced by Thomas Kilpatrick with a Broadway premiere in view. Kilpatrick's last N. Y. venture fizzled out when "Old Time Minstrels" failed to draw.

"Hobo" by Frank Merlin is to be given a New York production by James Elliott.

A new show, yet untitled, will be produced by Samuel Shipman and James Elliott with Margo Methot starred.

"Affairs of Anatole" by Arthur Schnitzler is next and second for Bela Blau, going into rehearsal this week. Cast is headed by Joseph Schildkraut, returning to legit.

Ralph Kettering, general western manager for A. H. Woods, has co-authored play called "In Hock," with Henry Rosendale the other author. Piece goes into rehearsal this week, Rosendale producing.

"The Woman in Red," also by Rosendale, has been taken for production by Gus Hill.

STOCKS CAMPHORIZE TO BEAT CHRISTMAS

Chicago, Dec. 16.

With the holidays rushing in, stocks all over the midwest are ducking the Christmas week slump by putting up the shutters, some permanently, others just till the new year.

Obrecht Sisters troupe, managed by Jim Sullivan closed last week in Wisconsin. Al Jackson closed his stock company at Madison, Wis. on Saturday (13), and expects to reopen Jan. 1. George Meeker stock at the Orpheum in Easton, Pa., closes this coming weekend (20).

Opening after the first of the year is the Edmond Hall-Jones company at Winnipeg, Can. Harry Minturn is finally set in Fort Wayne, Ind. opening at the Temple on Dec. 28.

AUTHOR STAGES PLAY IN FINAL SALES ARGUMENT

Washington, Dec. 16.

Mrs. Louis Compton Fuller had written "Cypsy April" last year, Margaret Anglin had played in its stellar role, had taken an option on the play and then let it expire.

Recast and retitled, the play was put on in a special performance Saturday night for the special benefit of the Shubert's, and the Erlanger offices; both of which had representatives present. The play is called "The Sting of Deborah." The Erlanger report on it went direct to George C. Tyler.

Picture Possibilities

"Alison's House"—Unfavorable

"ALISON'S HOUSE (Drama, Civic Repertory, Civic Rep.). Theme of deceased poetess exerting influence ten years later impossible. Character studies but no action; depressing.

"Overture"—Unfavorable

"OVERTURE" (Drama, Bela Blau, Longacre). Serious drama on the Communistic movement in Germany after the war. Doubtful of appeal. Ibee.

"Petticoat Influence"—Favorable

"PETTICOAT INFLUENCE" (Comedy, Gilbert Miller, Empire). A dialog play which might be used for program release. Presented in London and screen rights may be controlled there. Ibee.

New Broadway Leader Arrives in Theatres' Worst Week of Year

Broadway's business dived last week. That was expected with the close approach of Christmas. The decline in grosses may be more marked this season because of general conditions.

There are 31 theatres dark and 35 open, Broadway being virtually 50%. However, last year the week before Christmas there were 30 dark houses, indicating the bottom of the depression in the legit may have been reached. The real difference this season is that there has been a greater number of theatres consistently untenanted since the start of the season.

Despite everything, a success will draw the crowds in New York, as evidenced by "The New Yorkers," which opened the Broadway (formerly Colony) last week. Takings were not far from $60,000, which is something of a record, despite the $16.50 premiere and a $7.70 top Saturday night when the Army and Navy football crowds were in town. Saturday night's intake for the new hit bettered $10,000 alone.

All Fell Off

"New Yorkers" tops Broadway, without a close contender. The other leading musicals slipped as much as $6,000 on the week and none sold out. "Smiles" and "Girl Crazy," under $40,000; "Three's a Crowd," about $33,000 and not so much affected; "Fine and Dandy," estimated under $30,000; "Flying High," under $25,000 and soon leaving; "Vanities," $23,000; "Sweet and Low," $22,000.

Only two shows on a capacity basis were "Grand Hotel," which by playing an extra matinee claimed close to $31,000, and "Once in a Lifetime," holding to $23,000; "Tonight or Never" up with the leaders over $19,000; "Vinegar Tree" about $17,000; same for "Elizabeth the Queen"; "Green Pastures," $16,000; "Greeks Had a Word for It" and "Lysistrata" down to $15,000; "That's Gratitude," "Oh, Promise Me," "On the Spot" and "Roar China!" around $12,000, and all others less.

Two shows are laying off this week, to resume Monday. Those, with seven or eight fresh attractions next week, will make for holiday list of more than 40 attractions.

Added to last Saturday's closings: "Bad Girl," Hudson, which gets "The Inspector General" next week; "Hello Paris," Shubert; "Light Wines and Beer," Republic, and "Merchant of Venice," Times Square. "As Good as New" will close at the Cort this week, that house relighting New Year's week with "Five Star Final." Other entrants next week are: "Ballyhoo," Hammersteins; "The Life Line," Vanderbilt; "Life Is Like That," Little; revival of "Babes in Toyland," Imperial; an indoor circus, Jolson's, and Ruth Draper, Comedy.

Estimates Last Week

"As Good as New," Cort (7th week) (C-1,043-$3.85). Final week; liked, but grosses light; last week $4,000, from cut rates.

"Bad Girl," Hudson. Closed suddenly last Saturday after playing 11 weeks; made money but dunked pre-holiday slump and goes on tour.

"Brown Buddies," Liberty (11th week) (M-1,202-$3). Only colored show current; bettering an even break and may go through winter; claimed $11,000 to $12,000.

Elizabeth the Queen," Guild (7th week) (CD-914-$3). Holds to excellent business with average around $18,000, partly from subscriptions; moves to Beck after another week with "At Midnight" (in the Meantime), the next attraction here.

"Fine and Dandy," Erlanger's (13th week) (M-1,531-$6.60). None of the musicals sold out last week until Friday and Saturday, when football crowds helped; this early bit slipped further with indicated gross under $30,000.

"First Night," Eltinge (4th week) (C-D-803-$3). Getting very little money, but management hopeful; last week under $3,000.

"Flying High," Apollo (3rd week) (M-1,168-$4.40). Two weeks more and then to the roads; another "Scandals" mentioned for late winter; business around $25,000; last week less.

"Grand Hotel," National (7th week) (CD-1,164-$4.40). An exception to the rule; pre-holiday slump had no effect on new dramatic smash; extra matinee sent gross to $31,000.

"Girl Crazy," Alvin (10th week) (M-1,387-$5.50). Eased off somewhat like the other musicals and closed week strongly; raced about $37,000.

"Greeks Had a Name for It," Harris (13th week) (C-1,060-$3). Favored comedy well out in front; slipped downward last two weeks; $15,000 last week.

"Green Pastures," Mansfield (43d week) (CD-1,050-$4.40). Holdover hit ending its 10th month; ought to go into spring; about $16,000 last week.

"Hello Paris," Shubert. Closed suddenly last Saturday; less than six weeks to poor business; back to road.

"Kiss of Importance," Fulton (3d week) (C-913-$3.85). Started better than expected, but in doubt for real coin; indicated pace $10,000.

"Lysistrata," 44th St. (29th week) (C-1,323-$3.85). Slipped but no notice as reported and date indefinite; got about $15,000 last week, lowest gross to date.

"Man in Possession," Booth (8th week) (CD-708-$2.85). Fair business last week with takings $8,000 to $9,000; should recover and stick.

"Nina Rosa," Majestic (M-1,717-$5.50). Laying off this week; completed 12 weeks Saturday; resumes next Monday; around $20,000 mark last week, which isn't good for high-scaled musical.

"Oh Promise Me," Morosco (4th week) (F-893-$3.85). Stood up well enough and finished last week to capacity; takings slightly under pace at $12,000.

"On the Spot," Forrest (8th week) (D-1,015-$3). Eased off like the others, but making very good money; estimated around $13,000 last week.

"Once in a Lifetime," Music Box (13th week) (C-1,000-$3.85). This show and "Grand Hotel" only sell-outs last week; usual $23,000 claimed.

"Overture," Longacre (3d week) (C-D-1,019-$3). Given unusual attention in the press, but business only moderate to date; got $8,000 last week and good advance sale claimed.

"Pagan Lady," 48th St. (9th week) (C-969-$3). Has been slipping lately, but pace is profitable and engagement indefinite; about $12,000.

"Petticoat Influence," Empire (1st week) (C-1,099-$3). Presented by Gilbert Miller; written by Neil Grant; rated a hit in London; opened Monday, sole premiere this week.

"Roar China," Beck (8th week) (D-1,188-$3). Goes out cheap and other weeks; got about $11,500 last week with subscription period over; "Elizabeth" moves here from Guild Dec. 29.

"Stepping Sisters," Royale (35th week) (F-1,118-$3). Moved back here from Jolson's; has been shoved from one house to another, but seems to get along; $5,000 the indicated pace.

"Smiles," Ziegfeld (5th week) (M-1,622; $6.60). Not up to expectations, but rep of producer and name players provide a draw; under $40,000 estimated last week.

"Strictly Dishonorable," Avon (66th week) (C-830-$3.85). Leaves after two weeks more; run leader; got about $8,000 last week.

"Sweet and Low," Chanin's (5th week) (R-1,413-$5.50). Claimed around $22,000 last week; moderate money for new major musical.

"That's Gratitude," John Golden (35th week) (C-900-$4.40). Highly regarded comedy; first three months to big trade and still making some money; about $12,000 last week.

"This Is New York," Plymouth (4th week) (CD-1,042-$3.85). Some difference of opinion over this new one; business fairly good at $11,000, however.

"The Vinegar Tree," Playhouse (5th week) (C-968-$3.85). Claimed capacity trade for comedy hit; scale up for football crowds Saturday; $17,000.

"The New Yorkers," Broadway (2d week) (R-1,900-$5.50). Broadway's new leader; with a $16.50 top on opening night and high prices Saturday, gross went between $59,000 and $60,000; near Broadway record.

"Three's a Crowd," Selwyn (10th week) (R-1,067-$5.50). A real ace among the musicals; virtual capacity right along, with last week's gross about $33,000; that was a bit under normal.

"Tonight or Never," Belasco (5th week) (CD-1,000-$3.85). Belasco's new winner and among the non-musical leaders; paced at better than $19,000.

"Up Pops the Devil," Masque (C-700-$3). Laying off this week; played 12 weeks; fair business after good opening weeks; under $8,000 estimated last week; resumes Monday.

"Vanities," New Amsterdam (25th week) (R-1,702-$5.50). Comparatively better than some other musicals in present bad going; got about $23,000 last week and may go through winter.

Other Attractions

"Twelfth Night" and "Art and Mrs. Bottle," alternating, Maxine Elliott's.

"The Merchant of Venice," Times Square; closed last Saturday.

"Light Wines and Beer," Republic; closed last Saturday.

Frisco Grosses

San Francisco, Dec. 16.

With but four legitimate theatres operating, business was anything but good at three of them. The four, the Geary with "The Apple Cart" in its last week piled up a bigger gross than preceding weeks, hitting close to $13,000.

Henry Duffy's Alcazar with "Stepping Sisters" in sixth week dropped to around $4,500 which is about the nut. Duffy's President with "It's a Boy," first week, hit around $4,000, poor.

Richard Marshall's Tivoli theatre with "The Whole Town's Talking" dropped some but still safe at close to $3,000.

Erlanger's Columbia and the Curran both dark.

ED WYNN TOPS CHI AT $26,000

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Legit trade started to feel the pinch of the pre-Christmas buying, but in general the list held up quite well. Cut rates dominate practically everything.

It is not certain what destiny the Blackstone will pursue after the pending three-week George M. Cohan engagement in "The Tavern," which starts Sunday. Theatre Guild seems washed up at that spot. Guild came in this season with an invitation to its subscribers to put up their money and take whatever came along with few hints as to what that might be. This didn't help any.

Endless complications from a box-office standpoint arise through the subscription angle, although the Blackstone, immediately adjacent to the Ritz-Blackstone Hotel, is the ideal Chicago spot for the Guild. It is generally believed Harry J. Powers will not renew, in which case some arrangement with subscribers will be necessary. In such an eventuality the Shubert Dramatic League would probably be a beneficiary.

Less "Art" Helps

As now standing, Chicago has four major enterprises operating on subscription, namely, the Opera, Theatre Guild, Dramatic League and the Goodman Repertory. Previously the Goodman has been a negligible factor so far as commercial competition was concerned, but under the new regime they have put over two local hits—"Hedda" and "Hay Fever"—this season, and if keeping up their present pace will have to be reckoned with in the box-office situation. Wisely dropping their amateurs in favor of trained professionals, nobody regrets the loss of "art" in the gain of entertainment. Margaret Wycherly is current guest star in "Hay Fever."

Ed. Wynn, a Chicago favorite, drew a sell-out premiere and excellent notices, with "Simple Simon" deemed a natural here, particularly for the holidays and the kids. Fred Stone will also be on hand to get some of the juveniles over Yuletide, Harris' scaled drama in town.

Estimates for Last Week

"Dracula," Selwyn (2d week) (D-1,056-$2.50). Town has an abundance of theatregoers who like creaky, spooky things, with this piece getting around $8,000, considered fair, as it marks the second visit to the city. One more week, then out for "Berkeley Square."

"Lysistrata," Majestic (5th week) (D-1,997-$3.50). Held up at $18,000. Is one of the few pieces in town not cut rating. Getting a big play from out-of-towners, many of whom are making special trips for the thrills. Highest scaled drama in town.

"Michael and Mary," Harris (2d week) (D-1,084-$3). Slightly under $12,000, substantial for Dramatic League before the holidays.

"Mendel, Inc.," Adelphi (5th week) (C-1,110-$2.50). Going good at $14,000.

"Old Rascal," Garrick (5th week) (D-1,276-$3). Holding at $14,000, with prospects of remaining until after January. Using the cut-rate method, with enough William Hodge followers to keep the business up.

"Simple Simon," Grand (1st week) (M-1,200-$4.40). Led the parade with between $26,000 and $27,000, ideal holiday play for kids and adults, with a strong plug along this line from all the local critics at the openings.

"Subway Express," Erlanger (4th week) (D-1,319-$3). Fell off a little to under $12,000, but considered strong enough to hold piece over for some time.

"Three Little Girls," Great Northern (11th week) (O-1,365-$8.85). On a cut-rate basis over $14,000 which, with the cut backstage in holding the show over. Medium-priced seats left out here daily.

"Young Sinners," Apollo (11th week) (CD-1,443-$3). Ample money at under $13,000, which is not up to the previous weeks, but considered O. K. for the short-cast group.

DUFFY HOLDING LEGIT FORT IN L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

There's no bottom to this legit business. It looked tough with only four out of 11 legit houses open two weeks ago, but with "She Had to Marry" failing to open at the Vine Street last Monday, only two houses were tenanted this week. El Capitan and the Hollywood Playhouse are holding the fort.

At the El Cap Henry Duffy and his wife continue drawing very well, collecting over $7,000 for the third week. By a curious turn, both houses open last week are operated by Duffy, whose production death knell was supposed to have been tolled some six months ago when he came a cropper financially.

"The Bad Man" on its second and last week at the Hollywood Playhouse did a nose dive to $4,600, about two g's less than the previous week. Blame for the slip was laid at the closed doors of the Bank of Hollywood, which tied up some of Hollywood's cash.

Civic Repertory at the Hollywood Music Box opened "Peter Pan" Monday. Draw is expected from the youngsters, who will be in on cut rates.

Estimates for Last Week

"Michael and Mary" (El Capitan). Third week. Originally in for two weeks, returns have prolonged the run to four, $7,200 last week, good.

"The Bad Man" (Hollywood Playhouse, 2d final week). Folded to $4,600, about average. Theatre dark for 12 days, with "Stepping Sisters" opening Christmas night.

Seattle Stock Clicking, Does $6,800 with Alice

Seattle, Dec. 16.

The second week of reorganized Bainbridge Players, under banner of Bainbridge-Bostick combine, and at the Moore theatre, with guest star policy, set up a record. Gladys Hulette, "Little Belle" with Alice Brady that did the biz. Well publicized with "children under 18" not admitted unless with elders, this held the spot and the week's intake makes it look like the Players will sojourn indefinitely in this benign clime. Estimated at around $6,800.

Management is selling season tickets, $11 value for $10.

Guild as Trail Breaker

San Antonio, Dec. 16.

"Strange Interlude" clicked to a nice $6,000 with one performance at municipal auditorium on Dec. 8 week. $4,000 in audience figured as record legit stand here.

This was first play to try house in several years and successfully smashed doubts about spoken voice not being heard well. Results expected to help draw for "Cherries Are Ripe," Barry-Laltoonge vehicle spotted for Christmas night, and "Flying High," White musical, on Feb. 2.

Shumlin Under Knife

Philly Goes for Shaw, Dramas, While Musicals All Fare Badly

Boston Grosses Hold Up in Pre-Xmas Week

Boston, Dec. 16.

Legit houses here had a good week, considering the season.

"Street Scene" in its new home at the Majestic slid the most. Quercie Smith in "The Street Singer," at the Shubert, held up fairly, though in its third week. Show will remain for fourth week.

"Purity" — Plymouth. Second week, $7,000, fair.

"Street Singer" — Shubert. Good, $13,000.

"Blue Ghost" — Lyric. Poor, $5,500. Closed in 5th week.

"Street Scene" — Majestic. Fair, $7,500.

"Dishonored Lady"—Wilbur. Real bright spot; did $17,200. Now in second and last week.

"Green Grow the Lilacs"—Tremont. Good; $15,000. Now in second week.

Philadelphia, Dec. 16.

Philly has first two legit houses open this week, and both of them are offering highbrow dramatic pieces (Shaw and Pirandello). For these three days of this week there will again be only a pair of shows on tap, this time both musical. Two more musicals here in Christmas night, and another current attraction, "As You Desire Me" (Walnut), reopens on that date. Two houses will be dark Christmas and two following days, a most amazing situation here.

Last week saw one musical fold up after a single week on a proposed fortnight's booking, and another goes out to poor biz after splendid first week's showing. The three dramatics fared much better.

The musical that folded was "Sons o' Guns." Word of mouth was favorable and attendance gained steadily all week, but the show had already lost so much on the road and was geared so expensively that it was decided to close, anyway.

"Sketch Book," after hitting over $30,000 in first week at the Shubert, then nose-diving to $23,000 in second, dropped as much again in final week, despite fine notices and generally favorable word of mouth. Hard to figure why $3 top didn't help put it over, with all the talk about the need of lower prices.

The Theatre Guild's "The Apple Cart," led the dramatics, but didn't do anything to cheer about.

Belasco's "It's a Wise Child" held to around $11,000 in third and last week at the Broad. Fairly profitable run, but should have been much better financially with all the favorable attention and word of mouth it received.

"As You Desire Me," rated as an uneven show plenty in need of fixing, surprised by getting almost $12,000 in second week at the Walnut, as the third offering of the Professional Players. Considering notices and weak second act, the fact that Pirandello play bettered first week's figure is about one grand was considered quite an achievement. Sale this week is good, too. Piece closes for three days before Christmas, then reopens for final three days before going to Chicago. This decision was made after opening week's trade was good, management is inclined to be sorry. However, with show on subscription basis, change of mind will be difficult.

No openings this week and only activity is two matinees of Ruth Draper at the Walnut, also under Professional Players' auspices. First one (Monday) was complete and solid sell-out with turnaway.

Next Monday the Erlanger reopens with "Sweet Adeline," length of run indefinite. "Artists and Models" also relights Shubert, dark this week.

Christmas night, new Lou Holtz musical, "You Said It," comes to the Forrest and "Blackbirds" comes to the Chestnut.

The Broad will reopen Monday, December 29, with Bobby Newman's dramatic tryout, "Storm Song." The Theatre Guild's new offering, "Green Grow the Lilacs," comes to the Garrick on the same date, and "Topaze," fourth Professional Players' attraction at the Walnut, will be the third new one.

Jan. 5 "Flying High" is booked at the Shubert and on the 12th "Street Scene" and "Strictly Dishonorable" are reported with "The Gang's All Here" a probability.

Estimates of the Week

"The Apple Cart" (Garrick, second week). Led dramas but not what Guild was used to getting last year. About $16,500.

"As You Desire Me" (Walnut, third week). Despite adverse notices and weak second act, Pirandello play gained in second week, getting close to $12,000.

"The Broad"—Dark this week, got around $11,000 with the third week of "It's a Wise Child."

The Forrest—Also dark, may have reached $18,000 with "Sons o' Guns" which picked up all week. Show was so far in red it was decided to end tour after single week here.

The Shubert, also dark, got very disappointing third week's gross after great start in first week at $32,000.

Pittsburgh Box Office

Pittsburgh, Dec. 16.

Legits had two Broadway hits last week and business, though, fell off due to pre-holiday seasonal depression, fairly good.

Nixon, with "Sweet Adeline," at $4.40 top, claimed close to $30,000. "Berkeley Square" at Alvin had entire week up the superlatives. Original cast drew three nights all week to profitable $12,500. "Bird in Hand" current, with "Sketch Book" Xmas week and "Bird Girl" New Year's.

Helena Schewerington.....Vera Korene
Jane Cartault.....Madeleine Roland
Tipperary.....Suzanne Dubois

Despite the fact that the war is now more or less taboo, this is a play which takes place in the German Intelligence Service during the struggle. It is doing poorly despite ushers seated in the back row doing claque. Story would probably have been more suitable for the screen than the stage.

Action deals with a French officer representing himself as a deserter entering the German Intelligence Service established in Spain and being of great help to it later in Paris by helping a German prince to escape. This he does in order to win the confidence of the Germans, accompanying the prince to the German headquarters in Belgium. Eventually he is found out, and only escapes because he has won the love of a German woman spy.

M. Boucard, one of the authors, is a specialist in the spy business. During the war he was public prosecutor on the court martial who sentenced to death several well known spies. He has written numerous books on the matter, and has much special knowledge of the question.

There are 10 tableaux, but not 10 sets. Staging is above local average, but in the church scene backstage light should be avoided, which make transparent a linen stone wall. The effect is ridiculous.

Abel Tarride, who acts the part of a German general, head of the intelligence branch, tried three parts before he found the one he liked best, which apparently is his privilege as theatre manager. He acts well, but most of the German officers over-act. Henry Bosc as the French hero and Louis Scott as the French intelligence officer, are fair. On the women's side Vera Korene acts well a part which seems to have been written for Alice Terry, at times reminiful of "Mare Nostrum." Barencey, as a German major, slightly over-acts, but nevertheless is funny. He is enormously fat.

The real trouble with the play is that as an expose of the German spy system it is no longer timely, and on the other hand it can't stand on a love story alone. Mazi.

SPRING SONG

Pasadena, Dec. 11.

Drama in three acts by Bella Spewack, starring Vera Gordon. Staged by the Pasadena Community Playhouse under direction of Gilmor Brown on its regular subscription program. Cast includes Jean Arthur, featured; Nadje Gordon, Morris Strassberg, Franklyn Fyson, Fannie Stanley Burgett, Frank Starr, Harold Enfield, Marguerite Hayes, Pearl Winters and Ralph Nell.

Strictly racial play that would probably look much better on the Yiddish stage, where it belongs. For general public appeal it will never do.

As far as is known this is Miss Gordon's first time in an American legit piece. Coming from the Yiddish stage, Miss Gordon established herself as a Yiddish mother character in "Humoresque" (film) some years back. Since then she has appeared intermittently in vaudeville and on the screen. There is a vast difference between a film script or 30 minutes in vaude and a stage interval of two hours.

Why Miss Gordon agreed to play in "Spring Song" after perusing it carefully is puzzling. Although written in English, the play is plainly Yiddish; further, only one of the characters finds the correct inlen in which it should be played. Not a single word or expression in the Yiddish vernacular is uttered by any of the strictly Yiddish characters. Miss Gordon, more than the others, handles her performance with a good deal of repression, failing to hit dramatic punches of which she is capable because of evident fear of overplaying. That note is struck by the other members of the cast, too.

Bella Spewack, who with her husband, Sam, has written some good things, evidently brushed off this one in a moment of reminiscence. Idea isn't new, nor has it a novel twist. On the Yiddish stage it has been done to death. A Ghetto locale in New York; two sisters divided on the morality clause; a Jewish mother fostering orthodox traditions, and the inevitable result when one of the girls follows the call of flesh and selects her sister's fiance to accompany her. At no time during the course of the play is there a doubt about the climax. Errant daughter, forced to marry the man at the sacrifice of her sister, dies in childbirth.

On only one occasion, at the final curtain, does Miss Gordon flash across the stage the dramatic outburst she had been repressing until then. By that time, though it didn't make much difference.

Jean Arthur gives an understandable performance as the wayward sister, although at no time looking the part of the daughter of a typical Jewish family. It's her debut on the stage after two years as a Paramount contract player.

Best characterization is that of Morris Strassberg, who makes his "Jewish butcher" stand out in reality almost without a flaw. Contributing to a real mother-daughter angle is Nadje Gordon, daughter of Vera. She has been with her mother in almost every piece of work Vera Gordon has done on the Yiddish stage.

No picture possibilities can be found in "Spring Song." For the stage it probably would do well on Second Avenue, New York, if done in Yiddish. Span.

BROADWAY REVIEW

Petticoat Influence

Comedy in three acts presented at the Empire, Dec. 15, by Gilbert Miller; written by Neil (Grant) Helen Hayes starred; Henry Stephenson featured; staged by the producer.

Richard Chalfont.....John Williams
Peggy Chalfont.....Helen Hayes
Bunnett.....Mary Haberden
Reggie Melcombe.....Reginald Owen
Countess of Darnaway.....Valerie Taylor
Lord Algernon Raytoun.....Eric Cowley
Earl of Darnaway.....Henry Stephenson
Talbot.....Henry Vincent

A smiling little comedy from London is "Petticoat Influence." It is a dialog play handled by smart players. Its lines may not be brilliant, but they are pleasant and diverting. Show should make the grade in a modgrate way for its appeal is distinctly to class patronage.

First act not up to the later going, but has Helen Hayes to lighten it. Second and third acts very good, considering that the play is rather a drawing room comedy. The scene between Henry Stephenson and Miss Hayes in the second act was highly amusing, she leading him on and he believing he was capturing a new love.

"The saddest thing in life is when a clever man makes a mistake," said the Earl of Darnaway (Stephenson) of the British cabinet and he makes that mistake. When his wife returns from the winter sports at Fels, Switzerland, the Earl is sure she has gotten herself a lover. The question is to find out who. He never discovers it is his secretary, Reggie Melcombe, and suspects it is Dick Chalfont whose cute little wife attracted his attention at a houseparty or two.

Chalfont is anxious to be appointed governor of Arda, a small British island in the Pacific, where he had spent seven years. Darnaway selects Algy Raytoun, uncle of his wife. Loving her husband and feeling how keen is his disappointment, Peggy Chalfont visits the Darnaway home to see the earl.

The old boy is delighted and in drawing conclusions that her husband is his wife's lover, he becomes a bit ardent in making love to Peggy. She giggles and permits his attentions and even kisses him adieu—anything to get that appointment for Dick, in a nice way.

Darnaway stages a foursome, a prelude to dinner at the Embassy Club. He has visions of a double divorce and perhaps a double wedding. He announces that Chalfont is to get the Arda post, but when he hints at an intimacy between Dick and his wife at that Swiss place, there is an explosion from Chalfont. The earl is convinced that he has made an error and being a diplomat, he gracefully withdraws and the situation is smoothened over. At the curtain he remarks that when a man suspects his wife and makes a mistake, he should not make another guess but keep silent.

Miss Hayes is a most pleasant little Mrs. Chalfont. She can take her stage assignments seriously or otherwise with equal grace and her Peggy in the new play is creditable.

Stephenson is one of the most adroit of the polished stage leads and is well spotted here. Most of the short cast is English and standing out among the other principals is Reginald Owen, as Muriel's careful lover and secretary to the earl. Once or twice he did not wait for laughs and had to repeat the subsequent line. Valerie Taylor played Lady Darnaway, who didn't get found out after all. Eric Cowley as the a. k. uncle of Muriel scored with nearly every line. John Williams okay as Peggy's husband ambitious for the Pacific island.

Report Universal Behind Lew Cantor's New Show

Universal is reported backing "The Devil Is a Lady," legit show starring Olive Borden, picture actress, which Lew Cantor is producing. Show opens out of town next week.

Piece, written by Garrett Fort and Garnet Weston, will give U first call on the picture rights, of course.

Cantor returned from the coast a few weeks ago, where he worked for Universal. Miss Borden has also worked for the same company.

ANOTHER NO. 2 OFF

Road show of "Up Pops the Devil," announced recently by Shuberts, has been held up and reported tabled indef.

Trouble in getting Raymond Hackett, brother of Albert Hackett, who wrote the show, given as paid reason for the change of plan.

Lole Bridge Co. Goes South

Kansas City, Dec. 16.

The Lole Bridge Players stayed only five weeks at the Globe this time, closing a week earlier than intended when they opened. They go South for the balance of the season.

stroy her late husband's original idea for the play. She refused to allow any changes of this nature.

As though a leading legit actress had not already made enemies enough among newspapermen, she proceeded to gum the works further at a party last week. Guests were practically all newspapermen and columnists in New York.

One of the first things the legit star did was to have a violent verbal altercation with one of the columnists. Later on she actually indulged in some fisticuffs with a young man. This time, however, an actor.

A London estimate of the legits in a recent "Variety" gave "Psmith" at the Shaftesbury, $8,000, terming it a disappointment to the house. The show, written by P. G. Wodehouse, did $13,500 that same week, according to its box office statement.

Probably the toughest billing problem ever given to a legit producer, was handed Ray Goetz on his "New Yorkers." He finally settled the problem by listing Frances Williams, Charles King and Hope Williams on the top line, Ann Pennington, Richard Carle and Marie Cahill on the second; Waring's Pennsylvanians on the fourth and the Durante trio on the bottom line.

The only theatre in the country supported by monetary contributions made between acts by the audience, is in swing again. It is the Butler Davenport theatre, on 27th street and Lexington avenue, with Davenport operating the theatre, playing the leading roles and doing the direction.

Davenport's place seats a little over 50. Admittance to the theatre is free, but between acts Davenport steps out, tells of the effort of himself and his supporters, and asks for contributions. The Davenport aids then make the rounds of the theatre taking collections.

Company which takes part in the Davenport plays work gratis, the collections being used by the Thespian to pay off other expenses. They do it in for the sake of experience and in the hope of a break through that medium.

Davenport changes the performance each week and sometimes every other week.

When Edward Robbins passed up his job as Equity official, in charge of the casting agent permit division, to return to the stage via Sam Harris's "Oh, Promise Me," most of his colleagues figured him a chump. None could get the idea of Robbins tossing away a steady job to speculate on a show in these hectic times.

"Oh, Promise Me" seems to be doing all right, Robbins has a fat part which brought complimentary reviews and if the show lasts a season Robbins will have earned by his stage salary four times the amount of his stipend at Equity.

Sam Colt has succeeded Robbins in the Equity post.

Spicy shows are out entirely with the stocks especially in outlying districts. Producers of the permanent companies are passing up "Mabel's Room," "Not Tonight," "The Rubicon" and boudoir atmosphere pieces in favor of mystery chillers and inoffensive farces.

Femme patrons who formerly supported the sexy bills in the stocks are now getting their sex stuff via the magazines, according to a veteran stock operator. The thumbs down attitude on sexy bills has also removed opposition from local clergyman and other reform bodies which had more or less hurt business.

Everywhere the Ford Motor Car units travel from now on offering their transient shows plugging the Ford cars, the I. A. locals will be there in an effort to have them unionized. Reason of all this is that the Ford units are using a tent for the shows which includes pictures and a demonstration of Ford car products which requires the services of two operators continually.

So far the Ford outfits have gone along with non-union men, but the I. A. home office believes it will be straightened out within the near future.

When a play is produced here by a foreign born producer, which is not an infrequent occurrence, the American cast rather authoritively takes upon itself the direction, correction, and general handling of the play at rehearsals. The actors even hark back to the days of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for precedents.

"Since the days of 'Uncle Tom' things have been done this way," they say. The producer often listens to his actors, and if he does he's licked.

"Well of Romance," the rights to which had been assigned to two unknowns by Preston Sturges, will not reappear as a Paramount stage unit as the new owners had hoped. "Well" did not play on Broadway for three weeks and the music still remains the property of Maurice Jacquet, who wrote it and didn't sign it away.

"Well's" production was backed entirely by Sturges, who put in nearly $45,000 of his "Strictly Dishonorable" earnings.

Although Tom Kilpatrick's new show will bill Anita Hart as the author, the stage version was entirely rewritten from Miss Hart's script by Russell Medcraft, who receives no program credit.

It's reported Miss Hart refused to allow the producer to bill this credit, although script was rewritten by Medcraft, who is sharing in author's royalties.

Owners of a New York legit theatre are said to have laid aside $500,000 to produce plays, the only way in which they can get shows into the house, as it is listed among the "jinxes."

If they finally get a hit, it's debatable whether it will earn what the theatre has cost so far, plus money spent producing.

His widow has started steps towards collecting on same. One is for $5,500.

Price for William Harris, Jr.'s, legit comedy, "Circles Had a Word for It," announced as sold to Samuel Goldwyn for Norma Talmadge, was $100,000.

A small town stock troupe that cleaned up last year in the west has closed out, apparently for good. The producers put considerable of their dough into dressing up the house, but it seems they also bought themselves some high hats. That attitude didn't make a hit with the burghers and when a peeve at the local dailies was voiced from the stage the antagonism grew acute with the townspeople siding with the papers and giving the house the cold shoulder.

Concerts

By Sallie

The "floor show" arranged by the Woman's Civic Organization for the dinner dance for Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Curran, at the Commodore Tuesday evening (9) was a classy show.

Josephine Bernhein and Franklyn Graham of the Club Montmartre danced in graceful fashion. Miss Bernhein's frock of accordion pleated white chiffon, worn with silver slippers and a smart bob head-dress, was good Senor Radaelli of the Scala, Milan, sang two arias to great applause. Mauriene Ann Norda, danced a Spanish number, wearing black velvet V-cut, with long earrings and red pumps. She is a very unusual type.

Many other artists contributed to the entertainment.

The American premiere of Lattuada's "Le Preziose Ridicole," took place at the Metropolitan Opera House, Wednesday night. It is a fascinating, refreshing work. The Met. gives it a beautiful stage set. Mme. Bori and Gladys Swarthout were the women leads, and Pinza and Ludikar, the men were supported by the large chorus. This opera is fashioned after Moliere's idea of many years ago, of erasing snobbishness and affectation. Two girls, Madelon and Cathos (Bori and Swarthout), refuse the attentions of the beaux of the town. The men servants of their father's home masquerade as high-brow, wealthy aspirants for their hand; finally they are discovered and the girls are sent to a convent.

Miss Bori never looked more beautiful. She wore a gorgeous creation, bouffante, of white satin with underdress of ecru lace and fashioned with large trailing bows of pink satin ribbon. Her tiny bodice held a clasp of jewels and for a headdress a high lace effect with pink roses. Miss Swarthout's costume was of the same type in green. The chorus wore dainty frocks of the same period in various shading. The maid of the home (Pearl Besuner), looked dashing in black taffeta with lace frills at the elbows, apron and cap.

The "Fair at Sorotchintzy" also was given. It is in two acts and many scenes and is the bill this week. Tokatyan is replacing Jagel, who in an automobile accident and has not recovered yet. The largest audience of the season filled the house.

An artistic recital was given at the Barbizon Plaza by Povla Frish, Danish soprano. That she has been missed was made obvious by the spirited reception and by a capacity audience. She has much beauty of tone and her group of "Biblische Lieder," by Dvorak was well interpreted. Her vocal range is wide and her voice is even, her phrasing excellent and diction good. She was charmingly gowned in white satin, long and trailing, and her audience was the last word in fashion.

The distinguished German pianist, Walter Giesecking, appeared in Carnegie Hall for his final recital this season, with a program devoted to Bach, Schubert, Schumann, Debussy, and others. The art of this virtuoso is such that repeated hearings were well attended as a proof of his great talent.

Marvine Maazel gave a recital of romantic music in Carnegie Hall, his programs including Beethoven's 32 Variations in C minor, besides selections from Chopin, Brahms, Rachmaninoff, Debussy, Strauss' "Run Down Music Box" and Melmeister's "Humoreske."

Maazel plays with much delicacy and sincerity but, lacking in color and polish, his dynamics are limited and his scale very often uneven. Still, his playing is light and sparkling, and his audience displayed enthusiasm for his stimulating program.

Lyden Divorce Fails

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 16.

Marjorie Anne Lyden, New York, is charged with desertion and isn't contesting the suit of her husband, Pierce W. Lyden, stock actor, who can't divorce her here because he hasn't legal residence, District Judge Rhoades has ruled.

Lyden filed suit when he thought he had residence as a member of the Brandeis Players, but after that did some traveling when the stock company closed and now he can't carry on his suit.

Original Screen Story May Become B'way Play

Jed Harris, New York legit producer, is reported trying to get the stage rights to "Doorway to Hell," Warner film original, titled "Handful of Clouds" and written by Rowland Brown.

Brown has notified Warners that he retains stage rights to the piece.

Auditorium Managers Accept Femme Members

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Auditorium Managers' Association, which met last week at New Orleans, has decided to allow women controlling or managing buildings to become members. Up until this meeting the femmes were taboo.

New officers in the Association are: H. J. Getchell, of St. Joseph, Mo., president, replacing M. J. Pickering of the Arena, St. Louis; L. J. Brumleve, Jr., of Cincinnati, 1st v-p; Chas Hall, of Chicago, 2d v-p, and C. T. Seator, of Birmingham, 3d v-p. Donald Murray of St. Paul remains as secretary.

Association embraces about 30 large coliseums over North America.

"New Yorker" Casualties

Frances Williams was out of "The New Yorkers" at the Broadway for two days last week, returning on Saturday. June Schafer of "Three Girl Friends," also of the show, substituted.

E. Ray Goetz, who produced the "New Yorkers," spent most of the week after the premiere in a hospital, under treatment for an infection of the leg. He was discharged Monday.

Cantor Ghost Producer

Jack White is financing Lew Cantor's forthcoming production of "The Devil Is a Lady," with Cantor reported having 50% of the production for management.

Cantor is posted on the list at Equity for salary claims on previous productions. When "Devil" went into rehearsal under Cantor's auspices Equity hopped in, but found that Cantor was merely ghosting for White, who has never been in show business before.

WOODS HIDEOUT TRY

New Britain, Dec. 16.

"Poor Little Church Mouse," by Paul Frank and Lasislaus Fodor, given try-out Capitol (stock) and well received. Produced by A. H. Woods, via the Anhalts, lessees of the theatre. Reported readying for N. Y.

Howard Hull Gibson has joined the company.

"PEOPLE" CALLED OFF

"We, the People," which had been scheduled as Chester Erskine's next for the Frohman Co., has been sidetracked indefinitely.

Piece had been scheduled for rehearsal last week but was called off by Erskine after conference.

"SEX" GETS BY

Indianapolis, Dec. 16.

The English relighted with Mae West in "Sex" last week. Although the play was well pressagented by Joseph Flynn, business is too poor to make attendance good.

The gang rushed in on first night fearful of a cut, but rest of week was spotty.

COAST "GOOD AS NEW"

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Arthur Greville Collins has secured Coast rights to the Thompson Buchanan play, "As Good as New," now playing in New York.

He plans production early in January at the Biltmore, Los Angeles, and the Columbia, San Francisco.

Scott Leaves $951,000

St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 16.

Inventory of estate of L. N. Scott, late owner Minneapolis and St. Paul Metropolitans, legit houses, revealed he left $951,000, mostly in high-grade stocks and bonds.

Widow is beneficiary and now operating the two houses.

IATSE Self-Employment Among Stock Closings

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Three western dramatic stocks folded the past week.

The IATSE experiment in production at Sacramento gave up Tuesday (9) in its 10th week. A similar attempt by stagehands and musicians' unions to make work for themselves flopped in Denver last spring.

Thursday (11) the Cailis-Baker Players resigned at El Paso. The company had a prosperous year last season, and this summer spent some dough fixing up the Texas Grand theatre with expectation biz would continue. It didn't, with some local antagonism developing. The outfit is probably quitting for good.

Ben Atwell Ahead of German Opera in Chi

Chicago, Dec. 16.

German opera will return to Chicago for four days beginning Feb. 25. Will use the Civic theatre, the small house adjoining and in the same building as the Civic Opera.

Zieggy Must Pay

Supreme Court Justice Shientag has decided that Flo Ziegfeld has no defense to the suit by assignees of Schneider & Anderson Co. for a balance of $17,488 due on costumes aggregating $138,794 furnished for Ziegfeld productions since May 1927, and has entered judgment against Flo for that sum.

In opposing the applications for summary judgment, Ziegfeld said said that he and Charles I. Schneider were good friends, called each other "Charlie" and "Flo," and that the costumes for "Show Boat" and "Whoppee" were sold to Rio Rita, Inc., and not to him personally and that he wanted his day in court to prove this.

Grid Star in Play?

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Arthur ("The Great") Shires, ex Chicago football player, pugilist, wrestler and a couple of other things, may make his stage debut out here shortly in "Punch Drunk," prizefight story.

Guild London "Interlude" To Do U. S. Trial Heat

Unusual preparation is being given the London production of "Strange Interlude" by the Guild. Play will be rehearsed and broken in here, leaving for London only in time for opening date there.

Phillip Moeller will direct, with Basil Sidney, Mary Ellis, Donald MacDonald, Ralph Morgan and Erskine Sandford in the cast. Play is expected to open at the St. James Theatre London, about Feb. 1. Before leaving for London company will play one week each at the Broad Street, Newark, and Riviera, New York.

Fail to Settle Legit Jam in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, Dec. 16.

Despite efforts of the local Civic and Commerce Association to prevent conflicting legitimate road attractions at the Metropolitan and Lyceum theatres here, the situation continues unchanged.

New Year's week, while Nazimova with the Theatre Guild company is playing at the Lyceum in "A Month in the Country," Madge Kennedy in "Michael and Mary" will provide opposition at the Metropolitan.

It will be the third time that the two theatres have housed counter attractions.

Kaufman with Hopkins

S. Jay Kaufman is now general manager for Arthur Hopkins, having succeeded George Nicholai at that post. In addition to having turned producer recently he handled the premiere of "The New Yorkers" in the distribution of tickets to first nighters.

"The Lottery," which Kaufman had in the try-out spots, was brought back for revision. Leon Cunningham, who committed suicide last week, originally adapted the play, the script now being rewritten by S. K. Lauren. It is due for presentation later.

No. 2 "Hotel" Waits

Herman Shumlin has called off his proposed duplicate company of "Grand Hotel" until after the holidays due to casting difficulties.

Despite the acknowleged vast army of unemployed actors Shumlin claims after having interviewed hundreds of the walk-arounds could find no suitable leads for his second company.

"McCOY" BACKER RETIRES

"The Rale McCoy," Irish play announced for production by Sam Lowett, has bumped up against backing trouble. Piece was to have had backing of Dr. Louis Sunshine, but the medico changed his mind.

Cast was headed by Arthur Sinclair and Maire O'Neill.

STOCK NOTES

Providence, Dec. 16.

The Carlton Theatre Stock Company folded here last week. Company had the backing of Edward M. Fay and lasted about ten weeks.

Easton, Pa., Dec. 16.

George R. Meeker, who in September organized the Players' Guild Stock Co. at the Orpheum has left the company. Members of the company are now operating the theatre on their own account. Business has not been good.

Cast Changes

AHEAD AND BACK

Sidney Harris, manager of "The Gang's All Here."

George Weatherspoon, advance; Freddy McKay, back, "Berkeley Square" (Chicago).

Wallace Ham, p. a. for Tom Kilpatrick.

YIDDISH UNIONS GIVE GROUND; PEACE NEAR

With all concerned in a more receptive mood after a week's layoff, the six unions involved were meeting with the managers of the nine Jewish theatres of New York yesterday (16) for arbitration of their troubles. It seemed certain that an agreement would be reached before the night was over and the theatres reopened by tonight (Wed.).

First real advance was made when the stage hands, who previously had refused to budge, agreed to allow staff cuts in five of the nine theatres. Managers had argued that they were forced to hire more stage hands than actually needed in running of their houses.

Stage hands offered Jewish Theatre Managers' Association a cut of two men at the Public, National, Molly Picon, and Jewish Art theatres in Manhattan, and one man at the Rolland, Brooklyn. The other houses involved, the Odeon, Manhattan; Prospect, Bronx; and Lyric and Hopkinson, Brooklyn, they insisted must be manned as at present.

At the same time the Hebrew Trades Unions, comprising the actors, doormen and ushers, and chorus girls, offered a 10, 15 and 25% cut, according to salaries received. Managers held out for 40, but were said to be willing to go half-way.

Peace Forecast

Maurice Schwartz, spokesman of the Managers, explained that a cut as offered really meant an average of about 14%, which was insufficient to meet bad business situation, he added.

"At the same time," he said, "I am certain that we will very quickly come to terms now. We, the managers, are not interested, at the moment, any way, in making money from our theatrical investments. But we want to protect ourselves from further disastrous losses. The actors, we are sure, are aware of this, and now that we are all together discussing the situation, a quick solution is certain."

Par and M-G After David's Short-Run Play

Both Metro and Paramount are negotiating for the talking screen rights to Benjamin David's production "An Affair of State." Show closed on Broadway a week ago last Tuesday (9), after running the three weeks necessary for a picture buy.

Deal with one or the other of the film companies is expected to be closed the end of this week.

Absorbed by Parenna

Berlin, Dec. 6.

"Parenna," the German Statesowned artist's agency, will take over by Dec. 15 the well known agencies Spadoni and Kohnke in Berlin, Herzog in Hamburg, Kaulitz in Duesseldorf and Koerber in Kassel.

The principal men of these agencies shall be given leading positions in the "Parenna."

Jones Back as Stager

A. L. Jones, partner of Morris Green and part owner of the 48th Street theatre, is expected to make a return to legit producing shortly, having taken "These Gay Romans," by Guido Nadza, for production.

"Romans" had previously been announced by Clark Painter and is the first show for Jones in several seasons.

SOUTH ON BUSINESS

Don Lanning and Pierce and Harris withdrew from the Shuberts' "Artists and Models" in Newark last Saturday night (13).

Lanning goes to Miami to stage a new floor show at the Coral Gables Country Club, opening Christmas Eve.

Pierce and Harris are going vaude.

Connelly Staging

Marc Connelly has been signed by Green and Gensler to stage the book of the new Ted Healy musical, "The Gang's All Here."

Went into rehearsal this week.

LITERATI

Foreign Reading in Demand

While book sales have fallen off to an alarming extent, and numerous mags have dropped in circulation, sales of foreign-language publications here are on the increase. No one can explain it.

New York shops handling the foreign-language books and mags report excellent business. So much so that one of the principal importers recently vacated an upstairs loft in the Forties to move into an enlarged street-level shop.

German-language publications now reported as most in demand, displacing French reading matter, the former leader. This particular shop gives the best display space to German books. An upper-Broadway dealer in French publications only will shortly change the name of his shop because he contemplates the addition of German reading matter.

Next to German and French, Spanish-language reading matter most in demand. Little call for Italian stuff, and hardly any at all for Russian and the Scandinavian languages.

Of the German books, very little demand for fiction, call being mostly for political treatises and biography. Reverse true of the French, greatest demand being for fiction.

Silent on Air Programs

Further Canadian newspapers of importance have shut down on the publication of radio programs because of their competition with the theatres which regularly use the dailies as an advertising medium. The three Vancouver, B. C., newspapers first decided to discontinue all radio broadcasting publicity and the same step has now been taken by the publisher of the "British-Columbian" at New Westminster and by the "Star-Phoenix" at Saskatoon, Sask.

The Tribune" and Manitoba "Free Press" at Winnipeg have also eliminated all free radio publicity, including programs. Since this decision the Winnipeg radio station has been paying advertising rates for the publication of its programs and the space amounts to 300 lines per week in each daily.

Hersey-Macfadden Report

Harold Hersey's Good Story Magazine Company has taken over another one of the Bernarr Macfadden mags, "Model Airplane News," and they are again saying that the Hersey organization is controlled by Macfadden. It follows the recent acquisition by Hersey of "Dance Magazine," also a Macfadden mag.

Hersey, until becoming a publisher on his own, was editor-in-chief of the Macfadden mags, with reports at the time that Macfadden was setting him up in business. No denials by Hersey, and the report strengthened with Macfadden throwing him a mag every now and then.

Contributors aren't sorry, though. Hersey is the kind of an editor who gives a decision in 24 hours, reads all the stuff himself, or it is read by his wife, and pays promptly for accepted material. They don't work that fast at the Macfadden offices.

Fawcetts in Hollywood

Capt. Billy Fawcett and his wife, Annette, are off on another foreign jaunt, first spending a couple of weeks in Hollywood, where the publisher hasn't seen his local offices for two years. Then they go to Australia, New Zealand and northward into the Far East on a big game hunt. The publisher is a noted sportsman and showed some films he made in Africa before the Wampas at their dinner in his honor.

In Paris last winter Mrs. Fawcett conceived the idea for the newest Fawcett publication, "Mystic" magazine, featuring astrology, mitt-reading, etc.

Crouse's Hobby

They so like the job Russel Crouse, the "Evening Post" columnist, did on his "Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives" book, he's to be given a testimonial for it. The affair will be at the Hotel Martinique on Friday night, sponsored by the Art Director's Club.

"Buck" Crouse is supposed to know more about Currier and Ives prints than he knows even about poker, and as guest-of-honor they expect him to reveal some things about the makers of the famous old-time prints. Would be a sweet job for Crouse except that a few of the people who worked with Currier and Ives will be on hand. However, Crouse will eat first and talk after.

Checking Texas

Writers of western stories and producers of horse opera films will have to check their data on the west Texas cow country soon. West Texas C. of C. is preparing corrections for new geographies. Macmillan Co., publishers, sent on an agent to gather the new dope.

Country, which has furnished locale for hundreds of he-man short stories, has changed considerable, and ranchers object to writers and screen depicting the ranges as barren waste lands. For example, there are no more of the famed Texas rangers, rustlers, and cowgirls. And ranchers wear Kuppenheimers and drive straight eights.

Scribes and scenarists have to dig in libraries or interview the few remaining "old timers" to get the dope on the two-gun days.

Limited Edition Gags

Limited editions thing growing, with numerous small publishers springing up all over to get in on it. Many regulation publishers trying it, too.

Idea is to issue a book with an obviously limited appeal in fancy binding and printing. Ordinarily, sales would be limited, anyhow, so there's nothing to lose. But in the fancy makeup, and often in the case of living authors, containing the writer's autograph, they catch fancy prices.

All of the limited edition books selling well, because they dress up libraries. Then, too, many are sexy. That's that.

Johnny Black Dies

Johnny Black, 42, veteran Pittsburgh newspaper man and former theatrical press agent, died there last week in the Allegheny General Hospital of pneumonia.

Black first entered newspaper work with the now defunct "Gazette Times," later transferring his talents to the theatre field. He advanced "Honey Boy" Evans, the minstrel, for several seasons. During the last couple of years, he devoted his time to promoting auto races in and around the Pittsburgh district.

1,130 Front Pages

Charlie Einfeld's news item on the signing of Bobby Jones, golf champ, to a film contract to make 12 shorts on golf, hit the front page of 1,130 papers as far as could be traced, and drew editorial comment from over 600, besides Will Rogers in his syndicated daily article and from the Prince of Wales, in his Thanksgiving Day address in London.

The Prince mentioned the British people's admiration for Jones and particularly the graceful way Jones retired from the golf area. The Jones film series is to be known as "How I Play Golf."

Benchley's Fund Gift

Bob Benchley's new book, "The Treasurer's Report," is being marketed with an announcement by Harper & Brothers, the publishers, that 10% of the author's royalties and 10% of the retail price of the book will be given to Actor's Equity for the Actor's Unemployment Relief Fund. Benchley says the matter by saying he is doing this because, as a dramatic critic, he probably threw many actors out of work.

About Aimee

Series of articles about "Aimee and the Boys," written by Jose Rodriguez, former local newspaperman and now publicity director for station KFI in Los Angeles, is to be published as a book by Vanguard press.

Phil Davis Adapter

Phil R. Davis, Chicago attorney, has been commissioned by Howard Vincent O'Brien, literary editor of the Chicago "Daily News," to dramatize "An Abandoned Woman," O'Brien's novel (Doubleday-Doran). Davis, known through his legal activities in the theatrical world, was one of the several who worked with Bart Cormack on "The Racket."

Buck-a-Book Floppo

Dollar book seems to be going floppo in earnest, with Farrar & Rinehart, one of the pioneers in the buck-a-copy having finally come to the decision that it doesn't work. After the first of the year the firm's books will go to $2.

Doubleday, Doran still standing pat on the dollar book, but conditions different with this house as it has its own printing and binding plant.

Clarke's 5th Novel

Vanguard is readying "An Impatient Virgin" for early publication. It is Don Clarke's fifth novel. One of the most prolific of modern day writers, Clarke, who is a member of the Metro home office publicity staff has at least three successful novels to his credit. He is former newspaperman. Two of his novels, "Louis Baretti," and "Millie," have been made into films.

Femme Mags Prosper

"Dellneator," the class women's mag, will show a profit of over $1,500,000 for 1930, making it the leader in point of gain of any mag published in this country, not excepting the "Satevepost." Publishers' statements will show, also, that practically all the class women's mags held up the past year, despite the business slump.

10c Rivalry

George F. Delacorte, Jr., who issues "Modern Love Magazine" through the Kress & Kresge chain stores, has discovered that it is being confused with the "Illustrated Love Magazine," the Woolworth mag. Delacorte has accordingly changed the title of his mag to "Modern Romances."

Medbury's Confessions

John Medbury, now broadcasting and writing his Hearst column from Hollywood, will do a special set of Sunday features for "King Features" based on a burlesque of "True Confessions." This will not interfere with his regular Sunday column, "Mutter and Mumble."

Book Conviction Stands

Philip Pesky, New York book store clerk, has been denied permission by the Court of Appeals at Albany, N. Y., to re-argue the case, which resulted in his conviction for selling what police described an indecent book, "Hands Around," by Arthur Schnitzler.

Ad Bunch's Papers

Number of advertising people have acquired "Tide," the weak sister of the "Time" and "Fortune" string and have taken along Dexter Masters, of "Time," to edit.

Raymond Rubicam, of Young and Rubicam, the advertising agency, heads the new group in possession of "Tide."

Remarque's Sequel

The new book by Erich Maria Remarque, "The Road Back," is a continuation of his first book "All Quiet on the Western Front." It describes the return from war to peace and a new future.

The same comrades are again the characters.

Life's Like That

Stuart Morrison, who published "The American Poet," monthly poetry mag, though he never wrote a line of poetry in his life, has ceased to be a publisher to try his hand at poetry. If he can't find a publisher for his poems, he will revive "The American Poet."

Action and Romance

New mag publishing house is the Crescent Publishing Company, with offices in New York. Will get out two fiction mags as a starter, one of western stories and the other sexy love tales.

Rose M. Shipman will edit both.

Swint Quits "News"

Curran Swint, drama editor of Scripps-Howard "The News," San Francisco, injured in an auto accident six months ago, has resigned

European Runaround

By Frank Scully

Oslo, Dec. 8.

"Six" among the skijumpers is "sex."

Even the French were never able to get sex into mathematics, giving them one up on the world.

That gives 'em all the more reason to burn when you send them bad pictures. They sent cave men ("The Vikings") and got back "Cohen on the Telephone."

And a Cohen whose voice was so far behind his actions it looked like a burlesque of a trans-Atlantic telephone call. Hebe humor, ten frames back— Phooey!

"Eskimo" a Lapskaus

No wonder the skijumpers went into making their own talkers. That their first, "Eskimo," got the worst panning of any picture in years means nothing. It only shows what hard-boiled critics they have up here.

Lesson in this for everybody. Trying to please Swedes, Danes, Norwegians and Finns, the producers split the cast many ways. Result was a bad lapskaus which nobody could eat.

Goofey Garbo Greta's Bro.

Sven Garbo, Greta's brother, playing in "When the Roses Bloom," latest Par released product to make the fjords, doesn't seem likely to cop title of "The Greater Garbo."

Critics rate him goofey in fact.

How Monocles Get That Way

"Oslo Illustrerte" bills Jeff Dickson, ex-vauder and now current Rex Rickard of Paris, as "the leading heavyweight contender from Australia."

Oslo explanation of monocle is that somebody threw a water bottle after one of Jeff's fight fiascos in London and a bit of it stuck in his eye.

Anything for a gag.

Chance for Jack's P. A.

All Norway is nuts about Whispering Jack Smith. Swedes and Danes too. Have been for years. They don't need to know what he's saying, but they love the way he confides it.

Give a Norse gal a disc of "Me and My Shadow" and you have an option, with renewals, on her heart, till Shaw shuts up.

Levine's Jam

Charlie Levine, jailed in Vienna for counterfeiting, on the level about making those French coins as "calling cards," with his pan on one side of other people's money.

But what was he doing with those gambling chips of "C. D."? Those were from Casino Deauville.

Paul Koretz, attorney for Fox Films, told the Vienna cops Levine wanted the coins for a publicity gag in connection with his "large metallurgical interests in America."

Come to think of it, Charlie was in the junk biz, wasn't he?

French Money for Poker Chips

Counterfeiting small coins seems like a mugg racket, hardly in keeping with Levine's character.

Rex Taylor, Warner writer, took home sacks of French coins last year—5 centimes, 10's, 25's, etc.—for poker chips. About three of those big copper coins are worth a penny.

Maybe Levine had a similar gag in mind. In that case, he should have bought the coins, not made 'em.

Femmes Muscle in Gig Racket

Femme Gigs latest Parisian contribution to commercialized entertainment. They exist so far in only a few class spots, notably the Lido.

These dames are not to be confused at all with Demies or Mayas. They dress in evening clothes and park behind dead champagne bottles. There they wait to be asked to dance.

After dancing they go back to their tables—alone. Any two-timing is out.

The house pays them to entertain stags, or husbands of wives who are bunyon-conscious. With wife looking on, if it's oke with her.

This place also pays its male gigolos, hoping thus to take the label off the refined racket.

Idea is that lot of people like to dance without heavy overhead or extra-curricula necking.

Just nice clean fun, in fewer words.

Germans Like French Farces

French farces may flop in London, but they click in Vienna.

Abgemacht-Kuss ("Kiss Me, Kid"), which is translation of Tristan Bernard's "Embrassez Moi," is a smash chiefly due to Eugene Klopfer's ad-libbing.

It's five years since Klopfer tried this nouveau riche kind of necking role in Vienna. He's been touring South America and Germany in Shakespeare and Pagnol.

He made as big a hit with "Topaze" as with "Embrassez Moi." London seems the only town in the world almost that didn't go for "Topaze."

Klopfer will do Rostand's "L'Aiglon" in Paris when the Bernard bit folds, which won't be for a long time yet.

Craig and Cochran Pals Now

A year ago he was sloughing Cockie too. But now he and Cockie are going to get in a huddle and put some of Craig's production and designing ideas over in a big way. Craig has a chuckle coming to him for using the Hollywood formula so successfully. It's rare in London that you can steam a guy into recognizing your genius.

Nice Place for Ethel Barrymore

One of the reasons why censors are sure of their jobs in England is because the critics seem scared stiff of theirs.

Curados, writing in the "Sunday Referee" of Edgar Wallace and "The Mouthpiece," is typical of this pusillanimity.

"Certainly," writes the critic, "he was not in his usual keen-eyed vein in his casting. Margaret Bannerman, warmly welcomed back to the London stage, was, of course, in every way fitted to enact the beautiful heroine. And equally, of course, Mabel Terry-Lewis was A1 as the scheming mother. Likewise, Emyln Williams made a little hit as a German police officer. Also Grosvenor North, Agnes Somerset and Dora Lennox scored in minor character parts, and James Raglan was good (but not quite the thing) as the pretended lover."

Study that. He says Wallace's casting was all wrong, and then goes on to prove the opposite by showing each player was just too wonderful for words.

Even Wilson, who is "not at all suited for his role," is "too good not to play 'any' part well."

A sobbie, disillusioned by her favorite film actor's vulgarity, couldn't write more muddled than that. It reads as if he were not angry really, just a little hurt.

Foreign Language Disc Sales

Polish, Bohemian, Lithuanian, Turkish Big—Irish-Jewish Divisions Off

Chicago, Dec. 16.

With the regular American market for phonograph records taking the slump, the foreign language discs are becoming more and more important. Estimated that the sale of foreign records will hit a new high percentage this year, rating as much as 38 percent of the total record sales.

Leader in the foreign field is the Polish disc, which is running almost three times more than its nearest rivals, the Bohemian and Lithuanian discs. Following them are the German, Mexican and Turkish records, the latter getting its play mainly from the immigrant Greeks. Towards the bottom in foreign sales come the Irish and Jewish records.

These last two have shown a tremendous slump in the past years, having fallen off steady each year since the start. The reason for the slump is due to the remarkable speed with which these two nationalities become assimilated and Americanized. One generation is enough to do the trick. The Polish group, on the other hand, remains the higher scorer because of the slowness by which the transplanted Poles become nationalized.

Foreign Radio

Sales of combination phonograph and radio outfits are confined almost wholly to the foreign groups, the dialectians out-buying the English-speaking group about nine out of 10. American buyers are satisfied almost completely with the radio music, but the foreign element must depend largely on the records for any of their native music. Though this ratio is decreasing as the number of foreign talk hours on the radio keeps increasing.

Two Bit Home Music Gag New Robbins Promotion

Making a direct bid to sell songs to the folks in the hinterlands, Jack Robbins (Robbins Music), has formed the Home Music, Inc., which will provide "Home songs for home folks." New firm started business this week with three songs published under M-G-M copyrights.

All the songs will be plugged outside of New York and the key cities by a separate staff and will retail at 25c. a copy.

Here and There

Don Felice replaced his brother, Don Albert, as conductor of Loew's Paradise orchestra. Albert reported going to Europe to do some intensive studying.

Cal Hiller, Fred Fisher's general manager, has gone to Chicago to open a branch office.

Roy Ingraham and orchestra open at the Peabody Hotel, Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 26.

Gene Fosdick and band open at the Embassy Club in Miami, Fla., Jan. 20.

802 Relief Work

With many musicians of Local 802 (A. F. of M.) feeling the pinch, the $10,000 set aside by the local for the Relief Fund is now being distributed each Monday at the local's headquarters, 210 East 86th Street, New York.

The local in its effort to help its unemployed has granted permission for concerts, dances and midnight performances to be given for the benefit of the idle when properly sponsored.

Contented Depositor

Larry Spier had some money in the Bank of United States in his kid's name and doesn't know how to tell the kid the money's tied up. So youngster doesn't know about it yet.

He is one year old.

SONG RIVALRY AGITATES NBC

Trouble between NBC and publishers is brewing again because of NBC's alleged favoritism to the songs published by Radio Music, NBC's subsidiary.

About six months ago things reached a climax when Warners withdrew their songs from all NBC programs. NBC then is said to have agreed to an adjustment.

Publishers Squawking

Now publishers report NBC is again plugging its publisher subsidiary's songs but less aggressively than before the Warner clash. It was understood a notice was posted on the 13th floor studio of the NBC building, to the following effect: "That on all sustaining programs, R.M.C. tunes must be played."

Publishers also claim artists on commercials are being urged to use a certain number of R.M.C. tunes on each program.

Most R.M.C. plugs are put through in the morning and afternoon when sustaining programs primarily make up the broadcasts. During these programs, the percentage of NBC songs is said to sometimes reach as high as 75% of the total.

Indies Show Teeth

Majority of complaints against NBC at present are from the indie publishers who are not powerful enough to battle NBC as Warner did.

"Pansy Club" Now With Racket Getting Bolder

With Karyl Norman, the "Creole fashion plate," as its feature, the Pansy Club, formerly the Picardy, opens Dec. 19. Room is on 48th street, New York opposite the Everglades, where Francis Renault, another female impersonator, heads the floor show. With the new entry in the nite club field, five lizzie spots will be operating in the Times Square sector.

Invitations to the Pansy Club's opening sent out to the regular list of first nighters around New York are printed in lavender ink.

Musicians' Election

Lively contest impends over electing the new Governing Board of Local 802 of the Amalgamated Federation of Musicians when the New York body meets to cast its annual ballot from 10 a. m. to 8 p. m. Dec. 18. On the list of nominations there are 34 names. Four will be elected for the board.

Also will be contest in the naming of nine members of the Trial Board, with 60 men nominated.

Two delegates to the A. F. of M. convention will be chosen, as well as one delegate to the Central Trades and Labor Council.

Pianist Buys In on WJBK

Detroit, Dec. 16.

Carl Rupp, who joined the Fisher theatre orchestra as piano soloist after leaving station WJR, has bought an interest in station WJBK. He assumes active charge immediately.

Fla. Floor Cast

Miami, Dec. 16.

Frolics cafe opens Dec. 22 with a floor show consisting of Tommie Harris, Byrnes and Swanson, Reene Pring, Dot Adams, Helen Davis, Jack Irving and 18 girls.

Frolics is under the management of Hugh McRay.

R.M.C. in Deal to Handle Boosey-Hawks Contracts

Contracts are in negotiation whereby Boosey-Hawks, foreign publishers, will come under the wing of Radio Music Corporation. The agreement will provide for reciprocal representation with the London firm probably handling all of Radio's product abroad.

Before any signatures are attached to the final document the status of contracts between Boosey and a number of music publishers, some of them members of R.M.C., whom it represents in Europe, must be determined.

AFM Meeting to Relieve Musicians' Unemployment

American Federation of Musicians has called a special closed meeting in New York for tonight (16) to consider the best and quickest means of alleviating destitution and present unemployment among musicians of Greater New York.

Three special committees, one appointed at a recent meeting of Local 802, which will represent the union at large, the second a delegation from the governing board of 802, and the third composed of men now working in theatres, hotels, restaurants, symphony orchestras and at the Metropolitan Opera House, will plan definite steps to afford work for local men.

Conquest of Jazz

Amsterdam, Dec. 16.

Jack Hylton, in for a nine day engagement with his band at the Carlton hotel here, has made known that his organization has been engaged to play a date at the Paris Opera starting Feb. 15 next. The Paris Opera has never admitted a jazz band before.

The band is in the Carlton for the week on the extremely high figure of $5,000. In order to make it pay, the spot is raising its tariff to $1.50 for a cup of tea and $4 for supper.

N. Y. Par Grill Show Intact to New Haven

New Haven, Dec. 16.

In an effort to bring some metropolitan night life to this city, the New York Paramount hotel people have taken over the management of the Beacon Nite Club. The grill is operating a chain of nite clubs and will present the same revues here that are played in New York.

Opening tonight (16) brings Dave Gould's "College Capers" with Allan Walker as m.c. and Ted Eddy, Bud Burston, Georges and Diane, Kay Shelbey, Versatile Collegiates orchestra and a Dave Gould girl line. Revue comes here from the Everglades, New York.

Policy will be two shows nightly, with no cover charge at any time.

CUMMINS' CINCY H. O.

Cincinnati, Dec. 16.

Bernie Cummins band's engagement has been extended to January 8 at the Gibson. It is a repeat date for the orchestra, originally set for four, ending Dec. 13.

Cummins returns to the New Yorker hotel, New York, Jan. 10.

VALLEE GIVES BOYS A REST

To give his band a rest from the pace of multi doubling, Rudy Vallee is appearing at the Brooklyn Paramount this week (12) without his own boys. He is working with the pit band.

Abe Olman Quits Forster

Abe Olman is severing his connections with the Forster Music Co. after 15 years. He will open his own music house Jan. 2.

Al Garry, manager of the Crooners, has replaced Eddie Joyce, Charles Hathaway and Paul Roy with Val Rich, Paul Smith and Seth Solly and will open his new combination at the Jungle Club, Dec. 15.

Paul Sabin and orchestra signed for the dinner music at Manhattan Towers Hotel, N. Y. The band formerly toured as the dance unit of the A. and P. Gypsies.

Music Catalogs Song Slash Launched by Three Big Firms At Retail Price of 25c Each

Best Sheet Sellers

Six best sellers for the week ending Dec. 13, listed by Plaza Music, were:

"Three Little Words" (Harms).

"When the Organ Played at Twilight" (Santly).

"You're Driving Me Crazy" (Donaldson).

"Sweet Jennie Lee" (Donaldson).

"Moonlight on the Colorado" (Shapiro-Bernstein).

"Little Things in Life" (Berlin).

25-CENT DISCS BY BRUNSWICK

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Brunswick is the first of the big-three disc companies to go into the market shortly with a double-faced disc to sell at 25c.

Plate is called the Melotone. First list includes 17 discs, all popular hit tunes and all by name bands.

Policy of Melotone will be the biggest song, to be delivered as cheaply as possible. No literature or advertising campaigns; cheap nut, quantity sale is the goal.

Dubbing Name Band's Music in Col's "Dance"

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

With the title "10 Cents a Dance" okayed by the music publishers, Columbia out here is building up the formerly labeled "Roseland" picture with musical trimmings.

For one thing, a name band, probably Abe Lyman, will synchronize the syncopation. The titular song will be dubbed into the picture generally.

Check and Double Check

After Arthur Krauss, band booker, announced he would sue Bernie Foyer (another band booker) alleging misrepresentation, came a statement from Foyer he intends via his attorneys, Miller & Miller, to enter a counter suit.

Foyer stated Dec. 13 his suit will be for defamation of character and $25,000 damages. The whole thing, according to Foyer, developed from his booking Jackie Taylor band at the Level Club Nov. 29, when he did Krauss a favor and delivered the original band intact at the Masonic Club at a salary that gave him no profit. After doing Krauss the favor, Foyer claims he (Krauss) turned on him with the suit claiming the original band was not there but used substitutes. Foyer says this is not true.

LUTZ BROS. IN POP. TRADE

Charles and E. Darcy Lutz, operating the Photoplay Music Co. for 19 years, are now in the popular publishing biz as the Lutz Brothers. Photoplay Music handled only standard pieces and music cued to pictures in silent days. Sound cut the biz down and the brothers decided to get into the popular music trade. Photoplay will be continued with the old catalog.

HELP CANADA BANDS

St. Thomas, Can., Dec. 16.

Breaking an old custom of hiring crack American orchestras for the annual New Year's ball, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen of St. Thomas have engaged three St. Thomas orchestras for this year's event.

Reason given is due to lack of work for local orchestras.

First drastic move of bringing about the adoption of 25c as the retail price of sheet music for the industry was put into effect Dec. 15, when Radio Music, which controls Leo Feist; Davis, Coots & Engel and Carl Fischer, slashed their prices on their popular catalogues.

All three publishers adopted the wholesale price of 14c for the first 30 days (introductory price) and 16c per copy after 30 days. This price is on their popular catalogue only. It permits all their pop songs to be sold retail at 25c, with a substantial profit to the jobber. Also inaugurating a new policy in popular sheet music, the price "25c" will be stamped on each number.

For Feist this is a cut of 3c. per copy from the former price which was 17c. per introductory, and 19c. per thereafter. For Davis, Coots & Engel, it is a cut of 4c per, all Davis songs previously being sold to jobbers for 18c.

Class C Songs Have Increase

However, Radio Music has increased the price on Feist's Class C songs or production numbers, 2c per copy. The price cut on the popular catalogue also went into effect Monday (15), while the increase on Class C tunes will not be adopted until Jan. 1, 1931.

Feist's Class C songs now sold for 24c which after the first of the year will jump to 26c, keeping the retail price the same as now but giving Feist more profit.

Reason for the increase in songs which have a higher royalty attached was explained in the announcement Feist's sent the jobbers, as follows: "As of January 1, 1931, the prices of our publications will be as follows:

Class A and B—popular songs—retail price 25c; Class C—standard, operatic, talking pictures, foreign and other songs carrying a higher royalty than on popular songs—retail price 40c.

Retail price will appear on all copies. This means a reduction in price on popular songs and an increase on those songs which carry a higher royalty.

This production song increase will also be adopted by Davis, Coots & Engel when it publishes them.

Fischer's price on standard music remains the same, the new policy effecting only their popular catalogue of 6-8 songs.

It was stated by R. M. C. execs the price slash in pop songs was purely in the belief it will increase sales. With all sheet music having its price stamped, it is expected that it will be sold for that price everywhere. Syndicate stores, said the R. M. C. exec, would not undersell the small dealers owing to the price marked on each copy. Syndicate stores usually undersell the small dealer anywhere from 5c to 10c.

Some Doubts Arise

Rest of the trade has some doubts about Feist's price innovation, stating the introductory price of 14c meant little since it cannot be told in that short time whether a song will be worth stocking up on the shelf or not. Dealers usually buy big after song shows tendencies of good seller which cannot be shown in 30 days.

This move by R. M. C. to bolster sales may start a few indie publishers doing the same. With the larger publishers, the Warner group, for instance, the prices remain the same.

R. M. C. new price policy is for jobbers only and for retailers who buy in lots above 100. Those dealers buying in odd lots, less than 100 at a time, will pay the old prices.

W B Song Plug Plan

Warners plan to plug their own songs wherever possible and see that their songs are properly used in talking shorts.

Sam Serwer, WB publicity man, may go on the road shortly to confer with divisional managers with this end in view. Orchestras will be requested to use songs that are the plug tunes of the Warner publishers.

Same idea will be attempted in shorts.

Inside Stuff—Music

Squawks Over 10 Best

"Politics" is the squawk made by some music publishers over "Variety's" 10 Best Sellers among pop sheet music. The squawks do not come to "Variety" alone, but to the compilers of the list.

Each bawling publisher tries to make himself and others believe his song or songs should be among the 10 best, although he and all of the others know what is selling among the toppers. Publishers, like managers, are fully aware of what they have got and what it is doing.

The best sellers as printed in this paper are taken from the sales sheets, the only reliable information "Variety" has been able to locate, as most of the publishers themselves can not be relied upon.

But some publishers are not that way. For instance the story in "Variety" last week of the Donaldson firm leading the trade in profit was given to a "Variety" reporter by a competitor, who seemed pleased the Donaldson group had gotten the break. He told about their low overhead and four sellers in a row. Mose Gumble confirmed it, and Mose was truthful, too. When asked how much the Donaldson firm had gone in the hole for before the turn, Mose said he didn't have the figures but thought between $75,000 and $100,000.

Leaders Taking Song Cuts

Orchestra leaders with a regular radio outlet are spending most of their spare time signing contracts which cut them in on songs in exchange for their consistent air plugging. One leader, spotted in a hotel, was declared "in" on five songs last week, openly boasting that he had thereby established a record.

So anxious are the publishers for radio plugs that some are paying for special arrangements made by some member of the orchestra. Others are making a practice of paying the leaders $10 each time their songs are in a radio broadcast.

In direct competition with the song creators the orchestra leaders is also plugging his own songs, thereby excluding other members with commercial possibilities. The result, according to music publishers, is that radio and some of its chiselers are making chaos of the music publishing business. Some blame it on conditions with the band boys out to nail all they can get by simply stating, "you take care of me, and I'll take care of you."

Claim Dealers Won't Help

Publishers who have reduced music prices to permit the dealers a greater margin of profit state they get no co-operation from the dealers.

About six weeks ago one of the main indies cut its price from 20c wholesale to 18c. Letters were sent out asking the dealers to display these songs prominently and to plug wherever possible. Dealers wrote back commending the publisher for the cut, stating it was what the industry needed and adding that they would be glad to co-operate if the publisher worked on it and made it a hit song.

This burned the publisher, who stated that with a hit song he could get any price for sheet music and wouldn't have to cut, and that he had only cut to help the sales of his catalog, figuring the dealers would co-operate. Now the publisher regrets the cut, stating he would have sold as much music at the old price as at the new.

Famous Pays Off

Considering the state of the music industry during the year 1930, the financial status of Famous Music, jointly owned by Warners and Paramount, and operating but one year, is enlightening.

Famous has paid back to both Warners and Paramount the original investments in the company, which was a nominal sum. However, besides this, Famous has paid a dividend of $12,500 to both Warners and Par, for the year 1930 and has kept enough working capital to continue operations independent of the financial help of either Warners or Paramount.

A year ago the present Famous Music was formed by combining the smaller Famous Music company, which Harms operated for Paramount, with Spier & Coslow.

Needles Flop

A city not far from N. Y. which has not had a traveling band locate there in years, recently was the scene of plenty of scullduggery on the part of the local musicians union which tried to drive out the traveling band that had located there. Officials of the union openly stated to the band leader that he was to be driven out. The method tried was to bring up charges against a member of the band, who happened to be a local union member, on the importation of a band without consent of the local union board.

Man was innocent, which was a foregone conclusion, but the local union was desperate. Wires burned to the A. F. M. with the result that the local union came out second best. The band is still in the town, and working.

CBS' purchase of seven of the largest musical and concert bureaus in New York, announced last week, involves over $1,000,000, although CBS refuses to confirm actual price.

CBS consummated the deal on short notice and hasn't completed details regarding future use of bureaus. How Par-Publix, which owns 50% in CBS, makes no comment concerning names managed by the bureau but most likely have first call on them.

Bureaus bought and brought together in one group by CBS under the presidency of Arthur Judson are: Concert Managers, Arthur Judson, Inc.; Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Evans & Salter, Haensel & Jones, Community Concerts and the Judson Radio Program Bureau.

It's the Catalog

A. S. C. A. P. declares that the number of current hits means little when it comes to raising a publisher to Class A. It's the number of years that the publisher's catalog has been available to the Society that counts.

Some of the publishers now Class A members have been in the Society for 16 years. DeSylva, Brown & Henderson hold the record for the quickest Class A membership. Firm was so elected after being members of the A. S. for but three years. Society says this was due to the company's consistently strong catalog.

Knapp's Next Book

Clarence H. Knapp, author, parodist and lawyer, whose "Sob Ballads," first appearing in "The New Yorker," were recently published in a volume by Putnam & Co., is now delving into some of the historical phases of his native heath, Saratoga Springs, in preparation for his next book. The tome will deal with gay social life of the Spa in a more virile past.

He has one of the largest collections of sheet music in the country, having collected this sort of popular stuff since his undergraduate days at Cornell University. In "Sob Ballads," Knapp parodies the lachrymose type of song.

Music Jobbers Have Reasons

It appears the music jobbers have a motive in desiring to popularize 20c and 25c sheet music beside that helping sheet music sales. They will make the same profit with the cheaper sheet music and with less expenditure. Jobbers now average about 3c profit on each piece of sheet music, buying it for 18c and 20c and selling it for 21c and 23c respectively.

They would secure the same margin of profit with the cheaper sheet music, buying it at 15c and selling it at 18c, if the 15c price were adopted, and would be able to save 3c to 5c on sheet music expenditures.

Osborne and Bosch Bands Chosen

Every name band in N. Y. sought the title of official Army and Navy band in conjunction with the big ball given after the game Saturday nite (13) at the St. Regis hotel. Two lucky bands chosen were Will Osborne to play on the hotel roof, and the Bosch Radio band in the Egyptian room of the hotel. The latter was brought from Springfield, Mass., just for the one night's engagement.

The Capitol orchestra under Yascha Bunchuk was also chosen to play a half-hour concert from 10:30 to 11 at the St. Regis.

Donaldson-DeSylva Old One

Jack Mills is commencing to work on the one and only co-written song by Walter Donaldson and Buddy DeSylva. Titled "I Can't Realize You Love Me," this tune has been on the Mills shelf for years without any work being done on it. It was written and accepted by Mills shortly before DeSylva teamed with Brown and Henderson.

With Donaldson's songs riding a crest, four of them being current sellers, Mills thought it ripe for a re-issue of the DeSylva-Donaldson item.

Jerry Vogel's Fund

Music trade's yearly charity donations, through the medium of Jerry Vogel of Plaza Music, totaled $3,760 this year. That's more than $1,000 over last year.

For four years Vogel has been raising Thanksgiving Funds for the poor. This year he spread the money in Central Islip, every State hospital and every county T. B. hospital in New York.

Tribute

Certificates of membership in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are bordered on three sides by a strain of music which, unknown to most of those who prominently display these certificates, is the melody of Victor Herbert's "Kiss Me Again."

It was chosen as a tribute to the country's foremost composer of musical comedy and light opera.

Finally Lands

Theme song of the new Gaynor-Farrell, Fox picture, "The Man Who Came Back," being directed by Raoul Walsh, will be "I Found My Way to You," by De Sylva, Brown & Henderson.

It is advertised as especially composed for the talker team's reunion but was actually written more than two years ago and since kicked around the office.

Radio Editor's Song

Song is titled "I Wonder Whose Loving You Now" and was written in collaboration with the Delivery Boys, Joe Schuster, and Johnny Tucker.

Firms' Spiff

There is some feeling between E. B. Marks and Donaldson, Douglas & Gumble over a claimed resemblance between the Marks' song, "Song of the Islands," and Donaldson's latest, "You're Driving Me Crazy."

Marks admitted claiming a resemblance between the two songs. The Marks' tune, "Song of the Islands," is not owned by Marks. Song was composed, copyrighted and published by Charles King, of Honolulu, with Marks' acting as American representative for the song.

Helping a Pal

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Abe Lyman will most likely follow George Olsen into Olsen's roadhouse at Culver City, the latter having a Florida proposition which may take him east.

Lyman and Olsen are great pals, and the former will double as substitute, from the Carthay Circle theatre into the night club.

Al Friedman With Bloom

Al Friedman goes with the Harry Bloom Music Co., today (Wednesday). Bloom goes on the road for a six weeks' trip and Friedman will be in charge while he's gone.

Friedman was an indie publisher for just one month.

Paramount Grill's Kid Dancer in Jam Again

James ("Duke") McHale, 15-year-old specialty dancer, formerly of the cast of "Princess Charming," is in the custody of the Children's Society while his mother, Margaret McHale, 34, of the Hotel Vendig, is out on bail of $1,000 for permitting "Duke" to do his stuff at the Paramount Grill.

"Duke's" father, James McHale, produce dealer, was arrested some time ago by Joseph McCarthy of the children's Society on the charge. Magistrate H. Stanley Renaud freed him when he promised that he would return "Duke" to Providence, their home city.

The Children's Society learned that "Duke" was at the Paramount Grill earning $100 a week dancing and arrested his mother.

Magistrate Dreyer was angry when he learned that the McHales had broken a court's promise. He raised the bail. "Duke" will have a hearing this week together with his mother.

Chinese Trio's $250,000 Chinkery in Cleveland

Cleveland, Dec. 16.

New chop suey joint, known as Lotus Gardens, will be built in the theatrical section at reputed cost of $250,000 by Chinese owners of Bamboo Gardens, one of the town's most successful cafes.

Lotus will be next door to Warners' new Lake theatre, on 18th and Euclid avenue, with a seating capacity of 1,000 and two banquet rooms, occupying two floors.

Spot has been leased for 15 years at a total rental of approximately $500,000 by Thomas Kan, Charles Tend and S. H. Yau.

Television Via WX9AP Daily Brings Flood of Fan Mail Pans, With Kiddies Worst Squawkers

Chicago, Dec. 16.

World's only two steady working Television broadcasters are having plenty of grief with their "public." The two are Ransom Sherman and Russell Pratt, known as "The Two Doctors." They dish 30 minutes each day over WX9AP, the "Daily News" commercial Television station here. Boys have been before the mikes for eight years.

After Television came in sufficiently strong to be labelled a success the lads switched to the sound-and-see mike. Previously all their fan mail had been most complimentary. Now most all the letters are the burn up kind.

Fans, in Peoria, Ill., want to know why Pratt always has to wear a bow tie.

Bloomington wants to know why the boys don't shave now and then.

Other towns come through expressing great disappointment at the two because, after hearing them for some years, without having to

JESSEL TO COP PAY FOR STUNT 'TWEEN ACTS

George Jessel will receive big pay as guest star on the last of a series of 13 "Radio Follies" which have been sent out Fridays over 40 stations in a CBS coast-to-coast network.

The hour, handled by the Milton Blow Agency, is sponsored in New York by Finlay Straus and in each of the other cities by local jewelers and will return to the air next spring for 26 weeks with the possibility that Jessel will be permanent master of ceremonies.

Jessel will play the air date between the first and second acts of "Sweet and Low," in which he is appearing at the Chanin.

ROXY AND GANG WILL GO ON 6 WKS. TOUR

Roxy and his gang are about to take a trip around the country on a flock of one-night stands. Rothafel plans to take the entire outfit that has been broadcasting with him for the past two years. They will likely play theatres, halls, auditoriums, etc. Trip will start around Jan. 1.

According to present plans, the gang will go out for about six weeks or so, working in conjunction with NBC in each spot. Roxy is officially due to join the radio interests the first of the year.

Panico on Network

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Louis Panico orchestra at the Canton Tea Garden is the next band plug for the N.B.C.

Has been getting only a local outlet through KYW, but next week starts out over the Blue network.

Taking over Wayne King's Wednesday night broadcast from 11:30 to 12 p. m. for two weeks, and then will be switched to his own weekly hour.

NEW NBC LINK

Cleveland, Dec. 16.

WGAR, Cleveland's new radio station, opened Monday (15) as latest link in NBC Blue Network chain, with John F. Patt as manager.

Through the new station Cleveland hereafter will get New York NBC features direct instead of relayed. Angelo Vitale will head the orchestra at WGAR.

JUNE COLLIER'S BRO.

Hollywood, Dec. 16.

Bud Collier, 19-year-old brother of June Collier, screen player, made his radio debut on the coast over KNX.

Young Collier is said to own an okeh crooning voice and plays the banjo.

Newspaper Scrap for Sole Fight Broadcasts Finally Settled by NBC

At the request of NBC, Scripps-Howard voluntarily gave up its option to sponsor all fight broadcasts over NBC.

This resulted from protests by the other newspapers which claimed NBC was showing partiality in permitting Scripps-Howard to have the sole rights to the fight broadcasts. NBC could not invite any other newspaper to take over the broadcasts because of the option held by Scripps-Howard. NBC informed Scripps-Howard of the resentment of the other papers and declared the radio system wanted no battle with the dailies and asked Scripps-Howard to turn in its option which it did.

Scripps-Howard first started its NBC fight broadcasts three years ago last summer with the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago.

Since then Scripps-Howard has sponsored every battle held by the Madison Sq. Garden Corp. and broadcast over NBC excepting the Singer-Canzonneri fight. That night NBC lost $15,000 by broadcasting it under station auspices as that was the amount S-H would have had to pay. Last Friday the Kid Chocolate-Bat Batalino fisticuff, held for charity, cost NBC $10,000.

A.S.C.A.P. SCOFFS AT SINGLE SONG ROYALTY

Royalties from radio will never be able to be collected on a per song per time per station basis. That is the answer of the American Society to the story printed in Variety last week stating that publishers believed the income from radio would be increased if the per song per time per station basis were adopted instead of the present collective system.

A.S.C.A.P. declared the "per" basis is impractical and impossible to adopt. The American Society claims all songs could not call for the same royalty tax, since some hold more worth than others. A song like "The End of a Perfect Day" or the Herbert melodies could not be placed in the same category with some of the current pops which are heard today and forgotten tomorrow. Therefore, it was stated, a different tax for each different type of song would have to be fixed.

The claim also made that every program played on the radio stations in the United States would necessitate continuous checking.

A.S.C.A.P. now collects $900,000 annually in radio royalties. When the radio royalty tax was first adopted by the American Society, in 1925, it collected $100,000 for the first year. American Society asserts the increase of $800,000 over a period of five years shows radio royalties are ever on the increase.

WTAM Bans Song

WTAM (Cleveland) has prohibited broadcasting of "Oh How I Cried the Morning After the Night Before With You," claiming the lyrics are suggestive.

When Rudy Vallee used it on an NBC coast-to-coast hook-up WTAM dropped off the air while it was being used.

Radio Notes

Welcome Lewis, soprano, has signed a year's contract to broadcast for the RCA Radiotrons over WEAF.

Julian Woodsworth has organized a new band to broadcast over WOR every Thursday.

Sherman-Pratt Deal

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Ransom Sherman and Russell Pratt ("The Two Doctors") signed a year's contract with Fleischmann Yeast here for 20-minute daily broadcast over Columbia.

Program will not conflict with the Vallee period.

"Radio Studio" Units for $1,500 Single Broadcast

Raymond V. Knight has assembled a 14-person revue for NBC to single and split-week dates in the east at $1,500 a performance. Contracts which individuals in "Microphobia," hold with regular broadcast periods limit the touring area of unit which is so arranged it may run either two or three hours.

Fraternal societies are expected to book unit for a full evening's entertainment. The set is a "radio studio" and entire broadcast is travesty on what happens behind the mike.

With Knight in the revue are Countess Olga Medolago Albani, Nicholas Vasilieff and the Russian Cathedral Choir, Elsie Mae Gordon, Walter Preston, Carolyn Gray and Joe Rines and orchestra.

RADIO DEALERS CUTTING TO UNLOAD

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Midwest towns are on the edge of the greatest price-slashing war since the start of radio. Radio companies are finding themselves heavily overstocked and are beginning to unload and at a rate and price that's causing plenty of insomnia among the smaller dealers who are already loaded.

Estimated that the factories have turned out an excess of 1,500,000 radio sets this year, figuring production at annual rate of 3,500,000, and with consumption at 2,000,000.

Edison radio company last week delivered a carload of radios to Mandell Bros. dept. store that caused a panic among the dealers. Public is buying this cabinet job at $112.50, far below even the regular wholesale price. Regular retail figure on this job is $268. Other companies are also dumping overboard at such tremendous cuts, including Clarion, Kennedy and Zenith. Zenith is being sold at such cuts at several dept. stores, with a ban on the use of the radio name in all advertising. Merely being named as a "prominent radio set."

Slash Prices

Cabinet sales are at botom, with the public going only when they are such tremendous bargains. Illustrated by the general buy for the Edison sets at Mandel's, where, it is understood, more than 500 cabinets were sold on the opening day of the sale.

Such reductions are in order all down the line, with only the midget sets holding to the regular list price.

November and December turnover, even accounting for depression, according to retailers, reached a record low.

Salaries paid by retail stores to their managers have dropped lately from $75 weekly plus commissions to $30 straight salary without commissions. Radio manufacturers are said to be loaded to the ears with sets and no buyers around.

Chicago NBC's Many Changes

Chicago, Dec. 19.

Local NBC offices did some switching about here last week. Out of the melee A. W. (Sen) Kaney, announcer, was appointed program manager; Don Bernard, for the past two years program manager, has been made program advisor, with Alex Robb becoming assistant program manager.

Hugh Ernst, who has handled the orchestra bookings, has been pushed up and given the title "NBC Artists' Service" manager.

Robert M. Kendall is to have charge of the radio bookings, with R. H. Sanders, a newcomer, taking over Ernst's post.

Other changes have all the dramatic auditions coming under the direction of the program manager.

Neal Golden's Double Broadcast

Neal Golden's new contract with the Herbert Jewelry Hour places him in the unique position of broadcasting twice weekly over both WABC and WGBS for that firm.

His orchestra is also heard nightly over WGBS from Aker, Merrill & Condit restaurant.

$11,000,000 Next Year for Radio Programs on Discs?

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Electrical recordings for radio broadcasts continues to increase in importance, with more and more important programs changing to the disc method. It is believed by the men in the industry that within the next two years, 75% of all radio broadcasting will be by recordings.

Grigsby-Grunow, the Majestic radio and refrigerator company, has appropriated $1,000,000 for coming radio broadcasts, with all of the money understood to go for electrial recorded programs. Other nationally known organizations now broadcasting by this method include the National Refining company, Chrevolet, Chrysler.

Disc advocates have dozens of reasons why the method is a sure winner; naming the removal of the personal equation and eliminating possibilities of errors, the easy transporting of programs to various localities, and running them off at the same o'clock all over the country.

16-Inch Size

Discs being used at present are large 16 inchers, which running at slow speed, encompass an entire 15 minute program.

To the public it is announced, not as a disc reproduction over the air, but gets the classy handle of "electrical transcription."

Big record companies, who have been wailing loudly since the radio came in to bust up the record sales, are now seeing in radio the comeback of their industry. The disc men have about decided to quit trying to force discs down the throats of a reluctant public. Instead they have decided to devote more time to the radio field.

Statistics hounds estimate that there will be about $$11,000,000 of radio electrical contracts signed in the next year. Understood that Columbia is set to open a complete recording in Chicago within the next three months to satisfy the demands of Chicago and midwest companies for local radio talent.

Vera Cruz, Mex., Dec. 16.

Construction begun on XETF, new station here. Broadcaster result of unique situation for coast town. During rainy season, four months, listeners can't get Mexico City, 200 miles away and during dry season, six months, they can't get anybody.

There are 1,000 receiving sets in town, plus 4,000 more in neighboring territory.

STATIONS ALL MIXED UP OVER EINSTEIN

Prof. Albert Einstein's broadcast upon his arrival Dec. 12 on the Belgenland via both NBC and CBS, proved a costly station flop. Both systems had to pay heavily to Einstein and his frau's favorite charities, and even then they had to run all over the ship after the prof before they could get him to broadcast.

First of all each system thought it had an exclusive on Einstein's broadcast, CBS having made the arrangements through Mrs. Einstein and H. H. Van Loon, who accompanied them, and NBC having arranged through Einstein's Zionists' society in Germany. CBS agreed to pay $500 to Mrs. Einstein's charity for the right while NBC agreed to pay Einstein's society $300. CBS announced that Einstein would be heard CBS exclusive the night before his arrival.

When he arrived in port there was plenty of confusion between NBC and CBS as to who should broadcast. Reported "Skeets" Miller (N.B.C.) chased Einstein all over the boat. When it was finally explained to Mrs. Einstein and Van Loon that NBC had made their arrangements with her husband's Zionists society, it was agreed that the prof would broadcast over both networks but N.B.C. was to contribute $500 more to Mrs. Einstein's favorite charity, to which NBC agreed.

Cleveland, Dec. 16.

With the opening of WGAR, Cleveland's newest radio station, NBC has added another link to its chain. Owned jointly by NBC and a Detroit Co. headed by Leo Fitzgerald, it gives the chain two stations in Cleveland, the other being WTAM.

Chief advantage is that the new station will get Amos 'n' Andy direct, instead of being relayed to WTAM. New station will also carry most of NBC's Blue network stuff.

Located in the Statler Hotel, WGAR made its bow Monday night (15) with a banquet and celebration program in which stars from four other stations in town participated.

SPITALNY ON YEASTFOAM?

Chicago, Dec. 19.

Yeastfoam program over N.B.C. is in the market for a new band.

At present dickering with Phil Spitalny and the Wayne King outfits. Has been using Harry Cogan, studio orchestra, for the broadcast.

Rush Hughes at UBC

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Rush Hughes, adopted son of Rupert Hughes, is writing continuity and announcing for United Broadcasting Co.

He came from Columbia in New York.

Boris Is White Not Colored

It was inadvertently reported Joseph J. Boris recently arrested and held in $1,000 bail on charges of forging names of radio announcers to fictitious contracts, was colored. Boris is white. Boris claimed connection with the Harlem Broadcasting Corp. of 307 Lenox avenue.

RADIO AUDITION ROOM IN NEW MORRIS OFFICE

A sound-proof audition room for radio artists is being equipped in the William Morris agency's new quarters in the Mayfair theatre building, New York. The other auditions are given and controlled in this room and can be received, as over the air, through sets in the exec offices on the floor above. This is a unique departure for a booking agency.

Morris office is moving this week. It has taken two floors in the Mayfair.

KDKA Radio Announcer Keeps Up Law Practice

Pittsburgh, Dec. 16.

ADMISH CUTS NEXT YEAR FORECAST

Chicago, Dec. 16.

In line with the general price cutting policy of all amusements the Ringling circuses will likely appear in 1931 with a new scale.

Sells-Floto, Hagenbeck-Wallace and Al G. Barnes circuses will probably get down to 50c. for the blues, with the Ringling, Barnum & Bailey outfit retaining 75c. as the lowest figure. Prices are being worked out on the basis of the various shows' overhead, with it figured the R. B. & B. trick can't operate under 75c.

Matter is still under advisement. Mentioned figures are the lowest, with better seats to be scaled accordingly.

XMAS SEASON CARNEY CLEAN-UP IN MEXICO

Mexico City, Dec. 16.

Yuletide has a queer effect on Mexican show business. Santa Claus days are poor ones for legit, burlesque and film theatres, but fine and dandy for carnivals.

There is always a slump in box office receipts these days, for the Republic's traditional and nine-day Yule jollifications (starting Dec. 16 and winding up Christmas Eve) make the public care more for home parties and a variety of diversions, which are cheap. Prolonged Xmas blow-out brings carnivals and tent shows to the big towns in force, for these are their dividend days.

Country's traditional Christmas celebration has a public phase which converts all large public parks in the cities and big towns into scenes like those associated with country fairs in the U. S. A. Parks are filled with stalls for sale of all kinds of edibles, things that folk buy to give away and even clothing and household articles. Each park has a replica of the old-time "pay streak."

In tents and improvised theatres, strolling companies of players dispense vaude, burlesque, melodrama and even drama. Ten shows a day, 20 minutes each, at the equivalent of a dime per customer, is the schedule for these actor folk. They garner the coin, even more of it, this time of year, than do showmen with fixed stands and high overhead. Now and then is encountered an act in these shows that is well worth a look.

A. F. Woodson Shot

Galveston, Dec. 16.

Bystanders probably saved the life of A. F. Woodson, of Kansas City, advance man for the J. George Loos shows at Mercedes, Texas, Nov. 14, when J. Van Zandt, tractor man, began shooting at Woodson after an argument over wages.

Woodson was shot in the arm and leg. Van Zandt, caught and jailed, had been using a tractor to move the circus wagons.

McELROY'S CAN. PLATFORM

Ottawa, Can., Dec. 16.

H. H. McElroy, manager and secretary, Central Canada Exhibition, Ottawa, Canada's second largest annual fall fair, elected president of the Canadian Association of Exhibitions and Fairs.

He has promised direct co-operation with exhibitors in opposing further moves on the part of the Canadian Performing Rights Society to collect any form of a tax on copyrighted music.

JESSIE TAYLOR'S BAD FALL

Toledo, Dec. 16.

Mrs. Jessie Taylor, trapeze artiste, fell 30 feet during the opening performance of the Dookey Circus here last week and received several broken bones in her ankles and feet.

COREY'S 25TH

Des Moines, Dec. 16.

A. R. Corey, Des Moines, at the recent annual meeting was named secretary of the Iowa state fair board for the 25th consecutive year.

Bank Sues Gruberg

Times Square Trust Co., New York bank, has instituted action through Rubien and Bregoff against Ruben Gruberg, onie owner, for $700. Bank charges Gruberg with failure to pay a note for that amount, due some time ago.

Gruberg owns the Rubin and Cherry shows.

Ducking the Taps

Chicago, Dec. 16.

Things are tough socially with the carnival general agents here.

It's so bad the boys who have rooms at one hotel have instructed the clerks to tell all and sundry who ask for them they've left.

Idea is to steer clear of the many touches.

Naylor's New Post

Chicago, Dec. 19.

Fred Naylor, last season advertising solicitor for the Sells-Floto circus, has been put in charge of all western advertising for the Ringling offices.

New post has Naylor securing program ads for all Ringling circuses.

FREE GATE DISCUSSED AT IA. FAIR MEETING

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 16.

Fair Managers' Association of Iowa just closed its 23rd annual meeting here. More than 200 attended to discuss plans for the more than 80 county and district fairs to be held in Iowa in 1931.

Free fair gate was important subject of discussion. Association also declined to seek additional legislation for state aid for county fairs.

Chute Jumpers Hurt

Dallas, Dec. 16.

W. P. Henderson and wife, carny chute jumpers, were seriously injured at Breckenridge, near here, when a ballroom burst, dropping them into crowd of spectators. Accident occurred during Xmas ballyhoo tie-up.

SAN ANTONIO'S 200TH

Dallas, Dec. 16.

Historic celebration, marking the 200th birthday of Texas, will be held at San Antonio March 5-7.

used in a theatre. The electric has yet to find some process which will cut into present extreme costs of acousticizing.

Seldom has a single story gotten as much attention as "The Maltese Falcon," by Dashiell Hammett. As a result, WB is now much interested in this literary property which was acquired by or for Warners as a matter of course.

Being in no special hurry to do it, four offers from other studios to buy it has finally caused Warners to get hot on the mystery piece. Paramount first put in a bid for it as either Bancroft or William Powell material; Metro wants it for John Gilbert; Universal for Lew Ayres, and one other studio is in the market.

Less than two years ago one of the Paramount officials was taken by a "Variety" lad to see a German actress in Berlin. The exec sat through the picture, announced it had nothing and that the girl had nothing.

The girl is appearing in two pictures on Broadway, Rialto and Rivoli, and is getting the benefit of one of those extra heavy publicity campaigns.

"Whoopee," with Eddie Cantor, the United Artists picture, is landing in the big money. Its gross is figured at least $2,500,000 with a good percentage of that from the foreign sales. Despite Cantor's fame unknown in the hinterland over here, the picture pulled heavily, with Al Lichtman, the U. A. gen. sales mgr. forcing "Whoopee" into popularity through demanding extended playing dates on the splits. This brought them in after the opening and accounts for considerable of the huge gross for these days.

Bob Ring, picture critic of the Newark "Sunday Call," has a new system of scoring pictures, giving his readers his rating of a picture at a glance in case they don't care to read the review. He uses playing cards instead of the star method.

Harry Gribbon, for his short, "Hollywood Theme Song" (Pathe), explains that he actually did the vocalizing, though admitting that it looked artificial.

This is explained by Pathe's desire not to transport an orchestra out to the woods on location, compromising by having Gribbon making a wax record in a studio and then "canning" his own recording to synchronize on actual location. The lapses in perfect synchronization made it appear phoney.

Everybody on the Coast is "Blue Angel" conscious. Studios are calling Par to send over a print for projection room o. o. of the Ufa-Pommer-Jannings-Dietrich-Von Sternberg production. Primary interest is in Miss Dietrich, with a strong secondary concern about Jannings' stuff in English.

From advance reports, if Jannings can get away with a minimum of English dialog, especially if it's in character, as he does in "The Blue Angel," he will be in demand again in Hollywood.

Planning to generously sprinkle future programs with pictures carrying kid appeal, Paramount's policy will be to attempt to pick material that will also hold strong attraction for grown-ups. "Skippy" is next to be done with this in mind.

A half dozen features a year from Par directed at juvenile fans, but attempting to retain something for elders, is said to be probable in future.

Don George waited until the eve of the release of the picture, "Sit Tight," in which he plays a bit, to win the world's wrestling championship. So Charlie Einfeld had all his typewriters, including his secretaries, changing the lead story in the Warner press sheet Monday morning.

Paramount has hooked a mess of publicity for its "Confessions of a Co-ed," booming the picture as a rewrite of an authentic diary of a real gal.

Chester Morris' asking price per picture these days is said to be $65,000, although the young actor doesn't actually do the asking. It's Roland West, the director, for whom Morris clicked in "Alibi," who established the turning-out figure.

Somebody doing a Schoedsack with his camera ambushed, took a picture of Greta Garbo while she was enjoying a sun bath. Picture was soon thereafter seen around the studio in inside quarters and the owner of the plates, now in the east, is said to have been made offers to keep the photos out of circulation.

Identity of the photographer is withheld, but it's said he took his pictures after Garbo had refused to grant an interview.

When Warners acquired Brunswick it also got a laboratory, research department and 10 scientists. The latter, especially, are being pointed to with pride today by Warnerites.

Abel Carey Thomas, Warner lawyer, was referring especially to the activities of these 10 wise men when he told the stockholders a week ago about Warners and television.

Applying a dose of psychology at the right moment, one of the heads of a West Coast studio got out of a high priced contract with a director without suffering any loss.

Aware of the director's high pitched temperament, the exec got into an argument with him. Director in a fit of temper said, "Let's call it off." Exec had the release all ready and it was signed pronto before the director cooled off.

Bayard Swope is reported constantly present at the R-K-O board meetings. Swope, former managing editor of the N. Y. Morning "World," is said to be absorbing the show business from this angle.

Story printed some time ago is repeated through these appearances that Swope is being shaped for an important exec spot in the Radio group.

James Whale, the Englishman who didn't know the difference between a hi-jacker and a jackpot when he came to this country, has been assigned to direct Tiffany's gang yarn, "X Marks the Spot."

To fit himself for the task, Whale is reading every novel and book on the underworld he can get. He has already read 35.

Just how seriously some states are regarding that 10% ticket tax on film theatres may be indicated by present conditions in Idaho. There civic and educational bodies are already competing with each other on how it shall be expended. The school system, especially, expects himdom to give the teachers a raise and the students new desks.

Obituary

WESLEY HILL

Wesley Hill, 55, Negro actor, who had been playing Gabriel in "Green Pastures" since it opened at the Mansfield theatre, New York, last February, was struck Wednesday morning (10) by a taxi at Eighth avenue and 127th street and died on the way to Suydenham Hospital.

Hill's body lay in the hospital two hours before it was identified.

The impact of the cab hurled the actor against a pillar of the Sixth avenue elevated.

Hill was born in Baltimore and started his stage career 40 years ago as a barker with a medicine show. He went on tour as a Kickapoo Indian boy and did a dancing specialty with the show. Next he was with an "Uncle Tom" show. Later he played in "Old Kentucky," "Old Tennessee" and "South Before the War." He was in "Shuffle Along" during its New York engagement and was in the original "Porgy." He went with the last named to Europe.

He belonged to the Negro Masons and Elks.

F. RICHARD JONES

F. Richard Jones, 36, picture director, died in Hollywood, Cal., Dec. 14, at the Queen of Los Angeles Hospital, where he was confined for a month with a lung ailment.

Jones started his screen career with Keystone as an electrician. He advanced to a cutter, then director, and finally became supervising director for Sennett. He left Sennett to be come director-general and vice-president of Hal Roach, Inc. He remained there two years and was then engaged by Douglas Fairbanks to direct "The Gaucho." Jones was also a feature director for United Artists and Paramount. Shortly after his last picture, "Bulldog Drummond," he developed tuberculosis.

Jones and the late Mabel Normand were a Sennett ace team for three years.

He is survived by his wife, Irene Lentz, Hollywood fashion designer, and a 15-year-old daughter by a former marriage.

EMMETT B. DODGE

Emmett Benjamin Dodge, 79, died recently in Woonsocket, R. I. When 11 years old Ben Dodge left his home in Battle Creek, Mich., to join a minstrel show. For more than 30 years he toured the country as a minstrel, circus clown, vaude actor and even as an Indian medicine man.

He formerly was director of entertainment at Rhode Island fairs and also conducted a show at Crescent Park for several years. His daughter survives.

PROF. JAMES P. WEBBER

Prof. James Plaisted Webber, 52, for many years teacher of dramatic literature at Phillips Exeter Academy, Bath, Me., died Dec. 7. He formerly had played parts with the Stuart Walker Players in Indianapolis and prior to that had acted in Shakespearean roles in the Old Vic Theatre, London.

He had also appeared with Walter Hampden in "Cyrano." He dramatized "Falstaff," which was produced by the Coburns in New York in 1929.

MRS. ELIZABETH WILSON

Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson ("Jollie Dixie"), 54, circus fat lady, died in Joliet, Ill., Dec. 11. For a quarter of a century she had been a featured sideshow attraction with carnivals and circuses in middle west. She weighed 510 pounds. She is survived by her husband, two sons and two brothers.

IKE BLOOM

Ike Bloom, 65, born Isaac Gitelson, died Dec. 15 in Chicago.

Bloom was a pioneer night club man of the town, starting as operator of Frieburg dance hall. He was the first to gain political control of the notorious 22d Street district, long before the age of Capone. Bloom moved from Frieberg's to the Arrowhead Inn at Burnham and later sold out to Jim Colosimo, moving to the Midnight Frolics and later to the Loop Deauville.

JULIUS G. HANSEN

He was president of an automobile body manufacturing company with a plant at South Temple at the time of death, and was prominent in Masonic circles.

Mrs. Gertrude Hurst Schworm (Oliver), former hostess at the Keith-Albee theatre, White Plains, N. Y., and divorced wife of Daredevil Oliver, high diver, died Dec. 6 of appendicitis in the White Plains hospital.

Edna Butler Towner, 42, broadcaster and sponsor of many radio dramas over Stations WHAZ of Troy and WGY of Schenectady, died at Leonard Hospital, Troy, N. Y., Dec. 7. Interment in Waterford (N. Y.) Rural Cemetery.

Grandfather, 78, of Estelle Taylor, died Dec. 9 in Wilmington, Del.

Carl Shackleton, 43, musician, founder and director of the Louisville Male Chorus, organized in 1914, died recently in Louisville. His widow and five children survive.

The mother of David Curley Ross, indie vaude agent, died Dec. 14 in Chicago.

CHICAGO

Variety's Chicago Office

WOODS THEATRE BUILDING—CENTRAL 0644-4401

Englewood

R-K-O recently added Sport Zeno as stage doorman. Sport trouped for 52 years, so he should know everybody.

Tuesday night previews continue to lead the neighborhood in business, with the Empress (burlesque) and two straight picture houses in same section feeling the pull of the Englewood on that night. The latter have tried counter attractions to offset the capacity houses drawn by the 10-act vaude show.

This week's offering got away with Chamberlain's Dogs, a routine poodle act of hurdling, high jumping and barrel rolling by 12 canines; good opener. George D'Alma, single banjoist playing grand opera airs and "The Anvil Chorus," effective, but it remained for the pop tunes to carry turn over.

Perry and Covan (colored) in third spot displayed some neat footwork and tossed in some songs for good measure. Master Gilbert pleased with hoofing. He requires the ripening of years.

Joseph B. Stanley and Co. with an elongated girl, an extreme short one and Mr. Stanley in a smart cracking act present day fans like. Turn needs smoothing. Stanley and femme partner dig the laughs with Stanley's dance and song combination a neat piece of vaude. Tommy Wonder and Sister on sixth brought with them that something called "stage" which pulled this dancing and singing turn out of the ordinary and made it lead the evening. The sister's singing went big while Tommy's dancing wowed 'em.

Dave Manley, doing a single lecture turn spiced with wise cracks about Chicago, prohibition, love, men and women, elicited many laughs. Bedalli-Jean Revue, a four girl ballet well costumed and with special scenery, use all the stock angles of revues. There seemed to be nothing in the 15 minutes to pull this turn out of the drear routine so familiar to vaude.

Irving and Billy, two lads doing a hoke turn with a school examination setting as a background, grabbed a few chuckles that grew later into laughs as the act progressed.

The Kitchens, a casting turn from the circus world, managed to hold the bulk of the house until the end.

"Brothers" (Col) on screen.

Regal

Acts on showing nights both here and at the Englewood have been ruining their own chances by trying to do too much. Agents and bookers have to sit through 10 acts on these nights with the show running as high as three hours. Yet these acts continue, week after week, doing from 20 to 30 minutes. In an effort to impress, they do everything they know, and at such length that the boys in the back of the house sour on 'em and scrim in the middle of the turn and go out for a cigaret. The acts would be much better off if they sliced their act on these nights, getting over the big punch in as few minutes as possible, and then exiting.

This was the trouble with Jackie Malielez, colored femme, who clicked solidly with this house in her first 15 minutes. But she insisted on sticking and coming back, until she sank herself. Three Inkspots, colored comedy boys, also remained long after they had gotten across nicely with their early song and gag bits. Frank Shaw came down from College Inn and is singing a couple of comedy songs. Shaw depends almost solely on smut, and even if the song is outwardly clean, he manages to dirty it up with a "kotch on" and a leer.

Wade and Ware present iron-jaw work with tables and chairs, the man half of this team mouthing the furniture and tossing it around for a click here. Old-time vaude for the most part, but it can be used around the midwest in certain spots. Carvel Sisters are for presentation houses only. Sing and dance, look nice and perform gracefully. Have picture house possibilities.

Les Nichols started out as a ventriloquist and finished a whistler. Bird imitations are excellent, but whether this can still be classed as entertainment is doubtful. Runyon and Bell, two-man comedy, were weak. Tried hard, but couldn't do anything with their poor material. Top Speed, five-person dance flash, will do for the smaller vaude houses, but is not intended for picture house stages. Songs, tap dance, Russian acrobatic make up the bulk of the turn, and all good enough.

"Lillom" (Fox) feature. Business good.

Fire last week destroyed the Gaiety, Ottawa, Ill. House operated by Gregory Bros., was one of the best mile vaude stands in the midwest.

Continental Cinema Equipment Co. (Warner subsidiary) opening offices here to handle the midwest Warner service besides regular theatre service outside of their own circuit.

Engagements for the Harry Minturn stock at the Temple, Fort Wayne, include Margie Williams, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Davis, Earl Jamison, Ed H. Fitzgibbons, Gwendolyn Delonoy, booked by the A. Milo Bennett agency. Willis Hall goes in as assistant director.

"House of Fear," which recently completed its first showing at the Loop Playhouse, has been leased for a week stand for the Kedzie stock, opening Jan. 1.

Architect A. S. Craven's design for a new theatre in Davenport, Ia., has been okayed by R-K-O. There will be a hotel in the building, together with a 2,700-seat house, to be ready next September. It will be straight pictures. Present R-K-O house, the Capitol, plays vaudfilm.

Fritz Blocki, ill with arthritis in an Evanston hospital several weeks has gone to Hot Springs to recuperate. His duties as assistant dramatic editor of the "American" assumed by Hazel Flynn, film scribe.

"Smokescreen," once a prize sketch on the Orpheum circuit, has been expanded to a three-act play by its author, Robert Kaspar and presented at Hull House Little Theatre.

Business merchants' association (northwest district) working for a new theatre on corner of Lincoln, Weston and Lawrence. Several companies are interested with two sites under consideration.

Fox-Eckel, only local de luxe house without a modern cooling plant, will replace its antiquated equipment with a refrigerating system before spring. Other improvements to the house are planned. At the present time the outer and inner lobbies as well as the marquee are being renovated and redecorated. The white tile floor in the lobby is to give way to heavy carpeting.

Charles Freeman, briefly student manager at R-K-O Keith's, has earned his first promotion. He becomes assistant manager, succeeding James McPeek, transferred to the Palace, Rochester. Young Freeman is a nephew and namesake of the R-K-O booking chief.

Babette Belloff, Syracuse musical comedy and vaudeville actress, spending the Christmas period at home, sings tonight (Tuesday) at a Chanukah festival cabaret dinner-dance given by the Temple Brotherhood of the Society of Concord.

Keith's intact unit shows are to all intents and purposes five acts, with Ken Sparnon's original overtures qualifying as the fifth. Sparnon's pit band goes in for vocal numbers, for occasional guest soloists on the stage and for trick effects and costumes. Carefully produced, the overtures have a running time of the average opening act, and click consistently with the audiences.

New York State Fair next year will eliminate the afternoon vaudeville show as grandstand entertainment between the Grand Circuit races in favor of a rodeo. Frank Wirth will be in charge.

A novel auction, with "shekels" for currency and Victor radios as awards, will be conducted at Keith's here Monday and Tuesday evenings, Dec. 22-23.

The first issue of "shekels" are being distributed to persons attending the theatre. A person receiving one may obtain 100 more by calling on any of the 12 local Victor dealers co-operating, and registering. One hundred additional "shekels" will be given to every person who furnishes any of the dealers with the names and addresses of other residents and information as to the type of radio they own. Two thousand "shekels" will be given to every person who furnishes any of the dealers with the name of a prospect who purchases a Victor radio before Dec. 23.

At the nightly auctions at Keith's radios will be knocked down to the highest "shekel" bidder in the audience.

ER ODER ICH

Piel, however, who years ago commanded sensational and dangerous stunts, now believes in taking it easier. In this picture he masters only somewhat difficult situations, but at the end a mad ride on a bicycle is to be seen which, however, he did in some of his silent pictures.

Piel's elegant appearance reminds of the cheap fashion journals, representing, indeed, the idol of the lower class German public. He is to be taken more seriously as a director. He leads his actors in an inconspicuous manner, and even though he does not incite them to great artistic performances, which the type of his pictures does not require, he nevertheless knows how to create many an interesting effect. In this connection special reference is made to the scenes in the port of Genoa which, also in the way of sound effects are well done.

A number of goo dactors, including Hans Junkermann, Eduard von Winterstein, Hermann Vallentin, Hugo Doblin, Paul Rehkopf and Charly Berger are co-operating with him in a clever ensemble. Only the actresses Valery Boothby, a mediocre type of a vamp, and Oliva Fried, are ineffective and lisping.

THE CODE OF HONOR

(WITH SONGS)

Syndicate production. Directed by J. P. McGowan. Story by G. A. Durlam. Cast includes Mahlon Hamilton, Doris Hill, Robert Graves, Jr., William Dyer. Cinephone recorded. At Ideal, N. Y., half of double bill, one day, Dec. 4. Running time, 60 minutes.

Harden, the villain, hitched his soprano voice a notch to make even pitch with Jack Cardington as the latter with the frozen nerve of a cucumber in the watermelon patch colddecked Harden out of the Bradfield ranch deed.

Cardington saved all after a hard ride and several days' illness. So he wins the gal and the picture ends. Fight's a poser. Recording spotty. Dialog cracked.

Photography natural and okay on the double bill it taken with a sly wink.

But this review is too long. Shan.

Rogue of the Rio Grande

(WITH SONGS)

Sono-Art production. Released by World Wide. Directed by Spencer Gordon Bennett from story by Oliver Drake. Myrna Loy featured. In cast: Jose Bohr, Raymond Hatton, Carmelita Geraghty, Walter Miller. At Loew's New York one day, Dec. 2, half double bill. Running time, 55 minutes.

Romantic story of the Mexican border woven around the adventures of one of those glamorous bandits who steals from the rich and lavishes his plunder on the poor. This western has lots of action, marked by good performances by Jose Bohr, Spanish actor, and Raymond Hatton in a comedy role, rating as the better half of a twin bill for the daily changers. Story runs in the expected formula.

Bohr is a Pancho Villa border terror, who robs the mayor of Sierra Blanca and then returns to the town determined to show up the sheriff as an incompetent, since the reward offered for his capture is only 1,000 pesos. Hatton as the bandit's aide, who warns his chief about getting mixed up with cabaret girls, gets laughs by proving to be a chump for one of the smoothest dips in the joint. Mayf.

Le Roi des Resquilleurs

("Champion Gate Crasher")

(FRENCH MADE)

Paris, Nov. 28.

Pathe Natan production and release. Directed by Pierre Colombier. Scenario by Pierre Colombier and Rene Pujol. Music by Ralph Irwin and Oberfeld. Starring Milton. Made in Pathe Natan Joinville studios, near Paris. Recorded by RCA. Running time, 105 minutes. At Moulin Rouge, Nov. 21.

The Gate Crasher ..... Milton
Doorkeeper ..... Kerns
Girl ..... Helene Pendrier
Girl Friend ..... Helene Robert
Her Mother ..... Mady Berry

Such a distinct progress in French production it cannot be compared to any other local made. Apart from the fact it is strictly local, savors considerably of the Harold Lloyd comedies, for tempo and timeliness of gags. The one man who gets no credit is the gagman, and he deserves a lot.

The word "Resquilleur" is a slang word of the Riviera dialect, meaning one who tries to get something for nothing, and especially crashes a gate. Overnight it has become part of the Parisien vocabulary, due to the unprecedented success of the film.

Story is that of a smart, suave, acted by Milton, who impersonates a crook, back to the French police by his happy-go-lucky cheerfulness. He is first seen at a prize fight, where he crashes the gates; next in a restaurant, where he beats the bill. He makes the acquaintance of a couple of nice girls, falling in love with one who is the daughter of a formidable woman, the girl friend being the daughter of a bicycle manufacturer. Both girls are sports crazy, which explains their being found not only at prize fights, but also at the six-day bicycle marathon, where the gate crasher would be thrown out if the girls didn't recognize him, and finally at the international football match, which he crashes to the extent of impersonating one of the players. In true William Haines style he scores and wins the hand of his girl.

The scenario is treated in such a local way that it is doubtful whether the film would score outside of France, but for local consumption that local treatment is undoubtedly one of the big assets, as entirely precluding any idea in the audience's mind of a foreign-made adapted for French consumption. Now that the curiosity stage for talkers is over and that there are plenty of French talkers on the market, audiences are reacting very strongly against actors speaking French with a foreign accent, and are also showing a growing tendency to prefer films which show no trace of foreign production, even if remade with a strictly French cast.

The direction is very good, but what makes it stand out from any other French production is the tempo, evenly fast throughout. Also, were the film silent, it would still be amusing, as in no place is the dialog taking the place of screenable action. At all times the production is a picture, and treated as such, whereas one of the frequent mistakes of French talkers is to photograph what amounts to a spoken stage play.

Photography good and so is the sound. No special attempt has been made to do any technical tricks in the way of photographic angles or lightings, nor does the audience get the impression that high-faluting advanced stuff is offered it in place of straight entertainment. The audience begins to laugh practically as soon as the film commences, and it doesn't stop laughing until the final chorus.

Natan's love for shooting paid publicity in his newsreel is also transparent in the production. A breakfast food and a brand of beer are conspicuous; but this is further topped by one of the gags where a wine dealer (Nicolas) is publicized to the extent of the delivery man made up to look like the dealer's poster which is Paris' most popular. Nevertheless, the director must be credited with enough ability to do the trick in such a way that the advertising is not obnoxious.

Milton, the gate crasher, is a popular music hall star, and anything but a juvenile. He does not attempt to act as one. He impersonates a man well in the 30's, and creates a character, which, despite the fact that one form of graft is his weakness, has nothing to do with the gigolo, of which the French are sick and tired, on the stage and screen.

His gags are ably supported by Kerny, who everywhere faces him as the gate keeper. The two girls are fair but merely incidental. The formidable mother is quite a type, strangely reminful of the Mrs. Pasquerette who was a German spy in "Mare Nostrum." Many sequences have been obviously lifted from newsreel; but all nicely blended together, leaving the layman unconscious of the fact.

Film opened at the Moulin Rouge, 2,200-seater—large for Paris. From the first day it has been playing SRO to a success such as has not yet been obtained by any French film and by very few Americans here. It demonstrates the possibility for the French to make productions grossing the maximum in their own market.

The Fourth Alarm

W. Ray Johnson production. Released by Continental Picture Corp. Nick Grinde and Spencer Ralph Bowes. Supervised by Harry Bowen. Jack Richardson in charge. Story by Scott Littleton. Directed by Phil Whitman. R-A Photophone recording. At Loew's New York one day, Dec. 2, half double bill. Running time, 60 minutes.

Glorifying the American fireman once again, this one should get by in the daily change spots, despite the lightweight yarn about a fireman's love for a wealthy girl whose father is a manufacturer of nitroglycerine. Ni's Stuart's father is chief of the fire department. He falls in love with the girl, who races his hook and ladder to a conflagration. Following an accident Dick is promoted to inspector of fire hazards, along the waterfront, the girl's father manipulating the political wires.

When the young inspector discovers the girl's father is making nitroglycerin bombs within the city limits, the usual form between love and duty with the former triumphing over the department.

For a film for the family trade, or the type of audience where explosives were stored, is the blowoff, the inspector coming to her rescue and the grateful manufacturer okaying the romance. Plenty of action, especially during the final reel during a waterfront fire scene, with the firefighters doing their stuff from all angles, should please the kids in the neighbs.

Since reported "The 3d Alarm" is to be remade, with sound, this indie titled so close to it looks to be chiseling two ways.

Television Squawks

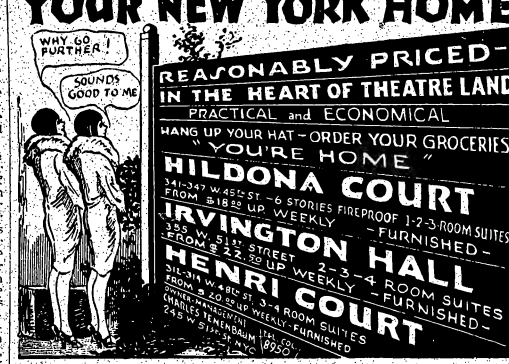
From Neck Up



At present the two have only to worry about their face and necklines as the Television doesn't carry any lower. It is possible for WASP to show as far down as the hips but, because of the excessive drain of current required for the operation this is seldom done.

Consequently, Ransom and Pratt spend plenty of time in the barber shops shaving and keeping their muggs shining. To offset the hard working period, when they can be both seen and heard, the boys have rented a room at their own expense in the building. Here, after the Television period the boys flee for rest and recuperation. They have to get with the missives before hitting back again for the straight radio broadcast room, where all they have to do is sing and chatter.

Both lads wear clothes all the time, and keep them on when up before the little black box of the Television set. Here, always in a sitting position, the two hold their chest music out of range of the box and take great care to turn the pages so as to make no rustle. They have to do a check finishing run to be sure and get both their mugs over the wire. Visitors are not allowed at these sessions and hear broadcasts so in this respect the boys don't get to see.

Both bowed out when the broadcast is just to be starting cues with always a final flourish of the hands before they range for the [illegible]

A Family Connection

Although the "Saturday Post" is open to all writers, there's one syndicate who can't land that mag. He is the son of George Horace Lorimer.

Featuring Jack Moranz

Jack Moranz, cartoonist, said to be well known in eastern newspaper art circles, has joined the staff of the San Francisco "Daily News." He is being exploited heavily.

Percy Waxman, for some years assistant to Arthur T. Vance, editor of the "Pictorial Review," now occupying the editorial chair for that mag.

Hugo Gernsback, who went bankrupt on the pseudo-scientific story thing and who recently attempted a comeback with "Science Wonder Story" and "Air Wonder Story," finds that stuff just as hard to sell as before. The two mags have been combined as "Wonder Stories."

R-K-O PALACE, NEW YORK

LAST WEEK

Palace, New York, Dec. 8, 1930, "Variety"

"A show-stopper and with second billing (Murray at bottom) was Nick Lucas, who did 16 minutes, and fine. Murray was in his act for laughs, mooching Nick to do his guitar instrumental for three songs. Previously Lucas had done three requests, (new pops) and followed with two reprises, properly placed, then the guitar, and off." Sime.

New York "Sun," Dec. 8, Palace, New York

Evening Graphic, Palace, New York, Dec. 8, 1930

"Nick Lucas, too, crooned himself to hitdom with a half dozen numbers, accompanying himself on the guitar. Lucas sings without effort, and the result is so pleasant that one wishes that there could be more crooners like him. His style is certainly distinctive."

New York "Evening Post," Dec. 8, 1930, Palace

"Nick Lucas also draws sustained applause for his baritone crooning. He obliges with the old favorites, including 'Tiptoe Through the Tulips.'"

New York "Herald Tribune," Dec. 8, Palace, New York

New York "Telegram," Dec. 8, Palace, New York

New York "News," Palace, New York, Dec. 8, 1930

"The daddy of all crooners."

New York "World," Dec. 8, 1930, Palace, New York

"Hereby report, however, that Mr. Lucas was received with tremendous enthusiasm, that he is a wow, that he is forced to give four encores."

Palace, New York, New York "American," December 8, 1930

"The Billboard," Palace, New York, Dec. 13, 1930

"Nick Lucas had the advantage of a great gab sendoff by Murray, but clicked easily on his own with his crooning and guitaristics. Lucas drew big applause in three numbers before taking the bows and almost wearing out his welcome with encores. Murray came on before the final takeoff to clown adeptly and serve as atmosphere for the finish number. Lucas was in good voice, and the regulars sonsed it."

New York "Times," Dec. 8, 1930, Palace, New York

"Among the other Palace contributors are Nick Lucas, who takes care of the crooning and accompanies his soft-voice harmonies by strumming on an ebony guitar."

King Otto Lays Egg in Sound Test to Come Back—Muggs Jobbed Yuh, Sire!

Vienna, Dec. 23.

An attempt to employ sound film as a modern method of bringing a ruler back to his empire did a grand flop when Archduke Otto Hapsburg laid an egg in his great moment at a screen test. They say a gang of political muggs jobbed him.

Otto celebrated his 80th birthday at his rented castle in Belgium. During the ceremonies he was cameraed and miked in a blazing address to the patriots of the fatherland. It was probably the hottest manifesto layoff monarch ever delivered to a group of posed hangers-on, and the big idea was to broadcast it all over the home country.

When they ran the record off, like a string of rushes, not a word of the burning speech was audible, and if there had been a supervisor present held have phoned the home office that he wasn't getting any studio support.

Story here is that a Republican ringer slipped in, disguised as a sound recorder. Otto's campaign manager got a hired man with first-rate chest tones to double the king's monolog on the original film. The retake likewise flopped because it wouldn't synchronize, and to stage a kingly comeback you can't fringe dubbed dialog. It makes the peasantry giggle.

So the king has taken up his option on the Belgian castle for another term and Socialists will continue to smear home politics.

Store's 'Men Only'

Pawtucket, R. I., Dec. 23.

Shartenberg's department store adopted a "Men Only" night to boost Christmas business.

Friday evening all women were banished from the store, even the clerks. Every department was serviced by men. The innovation drew and sales were brisk.

DAME FLOATERS FLOODING NITE CLUBS NOW

Female drifters of all descriptions, feeling the pinch of hard times, are now crashing into show business via the cabaret route because that branch of the amusement field seems to be the best entering wedge for non-talented lookers. The glamor of nite life, opportunity to travel and meet people—nice people!—and freedom from definite obligations that cafe work seems to offer is the lure for the type of girls now swarming the offices of

FAKE BENEFIT DUCATS TOUGH ON REAL ONES

Dallas, Dec. 23.

Cops arrested a chiseler here with 4,000 bogus ducats to a benefit show for the Salvation Army, peddling them at $1 per. Downtown theatre benefits and R-K-O's unemployed sellers have flooded the town with grifters, all taking advantage of theatres' idea of advance ticket sales for benefits.

In most cases they work a few days and skip, but usually pick up anywhere from $200 to $500 with suckers plentiful for the charity gag.

Worst comeback is that it makes it tough for the genuine salesmen of benefit tickets.

Dallas, Dec. 23.

For first time Dallas "News," leading local daily, is placing the radio section before amusement chatter besides furnishing John Rosenfield, critic, with an assistant for the radio stuff. Sunday's radio rates two pages to one for theatres.

Barely three years back radio was limited to column station log.

Precedent breaks set formula for order of sections, based on news value, followed by Texas press.

CAPITAL AFFAIR TO RUN 16 HRS.

$500 PER GUEST

Washington, Dec. 23.

Washington, used to all sorts of social stunts, will get a thrill the night after Christmas when the H. L. Doherty millions start to work on a coming out party for the millionaire's adopted daughter, Helen Lee Eames Doherty. It will be the biggest event in the history of social Washington, with 2,000 guests expected.

It means the spending of more than $1,000,000 in one night for entertainment, and the whole first floor of the largest hotel in Washington has been reserved for the affair.

It has been figured out by hotel auditors that $500 will be expended on each guest present. Because Mr. Doherty is head of the Cities Service Corporation, one of the features of the entertainment will be the entire radio unit used over the air weekly for the Cities Service Hour.

An orchestra of 30 pieces, conducted by Rosario Bourdon, will come along with the air hour troupe. This outfit will have to make the trip by plane since it appears every Friday night on the NBC network.

N. Y. Musical Comedy, Too

The head of the Cities Service Corporation, with $660,000,000 in its coffers, plans to bring down an entire musical comedy from New York.

DARROW'S REPEAT DATE

Due to the success of Clarence Darrow's last three-corned debate for a $3 top in a one-night stand at Mecca temple, the noted Chicago lawyer is booked for a repeat in New York. Date will be some time in February.

The debate at Mecca Temple last month, part of the 73-year-old attorney's current tour, drew a one-night gross of nearly $10,000.

COAST COLONY FEELS FIRST GUN THREATS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Authenticated reports persist that Chicago racketeers are muscling into the studios for "tribute" similar to that levied on the dry cleaning and building trades in Chicago.

Information from a reliable source has it that an important studio exec, recently on a train, was politely ordered to put two men to work at the studio, and he did just that. It is now thought that others will be given studio jobs and that the victims will be execs and players known to be in the money.

"James" Off at Sing Sing; Pro Xmas Show Instead

For the first time in 12 years the annual show given at Sing Sing by the inmates was called off when one of the prisoners, not in the cast, attempted a break for liberty. The man was caught before he had effected an escape but as punishment for the entire prison body, "Little Jesse James," which was in rehearsal, was cancelled.

Burlesque Show Goes Intact Into Road House

A Mutual wheel (burlesque) show practically intact has gone in as floor show at Radio Frank's Rendezvous, Hudson Heights, N. J. The show closed two weeks ago and is spotted in the cabaret as "The Night Hawks."

The lineup comprises all burlesquers of the former show, and includes Lew De Vino, Gertrude Hayes, Jr.; Bobby Bernhardt, Mathison and Cook, Radio Frank's Messengers and Tony Moretto.

Barnstoming golf on a regular route will be the new order of things for the big shot, putt and niblick boys. It starts next spring under the plans of the Professional Golfers' Association.

Elimination of sporadic golf tourneys of the country and replacement with a co-ordinated circuit system is the showmanlike plan. Idea is to keep the pros working in tournaments and so route the contests that there's never more than a sleeper jump between the tecoffs.

Plus the circuiting is the borrowing of other ideas from showdom, such as advance work and ballyhooing.

P. G. A. feels in lieu of the diminishing of tourneys backed by private clubs, the royal and ancient game is now sufficiently everyman's sport to warrant putting it on an entertainment basis and assure the lesser professionals a means of livelihood outside of pro-ing at the various clubs.

Haphazard Arrangements

In the past most tournaments attracting professionals have been a haphazard proposition, no schedules with regard to transportation problems, etc. An east coast event would be followed by a tourney in the midwest or on the west coast, with next in line apt to be anywhere. Long jumps, with the prize money seldom very imposing.

Entrants Limited

With only the top notchers able to afford railroad fares, each tourney has generally been able only to boast of one or two stars plus the territorial entrants.

With the show type of routing sought, plugging through local chambers of commerce for tourneys in cities which have not before

Spanish Beauts Swamp Tia Juana An Entree for Films, Burns Oldtimers

Tia Juana, Dec. 23.

This town is overboard on entertainers who have drifted in from all parts of Mexico and hope to use the play spot as a port of entry to Hollywood for Spanish picture versions.

Trek here started after it became known that four girls, Nancy Torres and the three Ballstero Sisters, had attracted the attention of picture producers while working at Agua Caliente and who later got Hollywood contracts.

After that almost every cabaret and show girl in the big cities of the Republic felt that her only chance to get into films was by putting on a practical test before the picture mob which comes down here weekends for the wheels and wet goods.

Tobogganing Rates

Scores of girls have come into town within the last month, but with exception of the first four there have been no hops into pictures. Entertainers, mostly singers and dancers, are offering to work for coffee and cakes and less to get the chance.

Result is many have been forced to take spots at the honky tonks where they hope to catch the eye of a straggling director or producer who might go for a livelier and rougher type of entertainment.

Killing Vets' Chances

Most of the newcomers are super class compared with the gals whose jobs they are pre-empting, and it's not causing any good feeling on the part of the veterans. Serious thinking is one thing this town isn't noted for, but withal the mob here is wondering what's going to happen.

As most of the film spot seekers used their last peso to get here, the oldtimers are predicting tough futures for the newcomers.

SCHENCK AND JOLSON IN CALIENTE DEAL?

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Well known picture and legit personalities, among them Joseph Schenck and Al Jolson, are reported interested in acquiring a controlling interest in the Agua Caliente Corp., of Tia Juana, Mex.

Differences are reported existing between James Crofton, Wirt-Bowman and Baron Long, now in control of the casino and race track.

Stock outside of that controlled by this trio is in the hands of the picture mob. If the Schenck group gets control, Caliente will be practically owned by Hollywood.

Santley Settles

Suit brought by the Gresham Realty Co., New York, against Joseph Santley, now on the Coast, has been settled with Santley agreeing to pay the full amount of $900. Realty firm charged Santley with failure to pay rent when he was living in the east.

Santley's first check in part payment was drawn on the Bank of Hollywood the day before it closed. Ralph Bloom represented the Gresham company.

As soon as the bank opened the following day the smart boy transferred his account of almost four grand to the Bank of Hollywood, which went bust that afternoon.

Hollywood Mob Moves to Other Side of Tracks

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

You can pick your spot in Beverly Hills these days. "For Rent" signs on the class residences outnumber the layoffs on Hollywood Boulevard. The amount of water saved on empty swimming pools will guarantee a bumper orange crop next year.

Most of the swell houses now untenanted are former homes of screen players who have moved to Hollywood apartment houses, for as the upkeep for the homes and the chiselers was tremendous. Any Saturday night would kill a couple of cases of Scotch and take the varnish off the piano.

Everybody in pictures isn't broke, but plenty of them are getting smart to the big house racket. Owning a swell place lays others open to any and all grifts both inside and out of the profession.

Hollywood is as provincial as any rural town. It all depends on which side of the tracks you live. Plenty of picture people are finding out that they can live on the other side and fool the grifters.

Picture people were never as conservative with their money as they are these days.

CHAPLIN AS OWN EXHIB FOR HIS NEW PICTURE

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Charley Chaplin becomes an exhibitor of his own picture with "City Lights," having taken the Cohan theatre, New York, for a minimum of 12 weeks, starting the first week in February. Wherever possible, Chaplin personally will make similar arrangements as an exhibitor in the key cities.

At the Cohan, "City Lights" will grind at $1 following a $10 premiere with Chaplin on hand for the opening.

Chaplin has set the record quota of $6,000,000 on his "City Lights." This is just the States and not the entire world. U. A. exchanges have been advised to close contracts on this basis. This means that the film as ordered will be offered nowhere under 50% of the gross, and that's strictly percentage.

In starting after business U. A. thus reverses its plan of last summer. This was to hold off selling "City Lights" until after the film had opened on the coast or in the east. All former contracts for the picture have been cancelled, automatically, since they were made under the old standard agreement around two years ago.

U. A.'s previous plans for holding off on selling plans was on the contention that Chaplin's quota was too high.

With the film scheduled to open soon, U. A. is said to be recalling all the old Chaplins from the market, aside from one-reelers and others controlled by outsiders. It is expected, however, that these may immediately break out after "Lights" opens.

Metro's "Sisters"

Metro has bought "Sisters of the Chorus," stage comedy by Martin Mooney and Thomas Burtis, produced by Ray Payton. Reported price is $12,500.

Transition to a screen musical is mentioned. "Sisters" is now touring after having but a short Broadway run.

NANCY CARROLL'S TRIP

Nancy Carroll leaves next week for Florida, but will return to start on "Up Pops the Devil" Feb. 1.

Two additional features, untitled, will follow later for the film girl, and all are to be made in the east.

Barry Picks Trilby

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Marian Marsh, 17-year-old actress, was personally picked by John Barrymore out of 60 screen tests for the role of Trilby in "Svengali."

Barrymore has the title role. The tests were screened at the Barrymore home, where the star is still confined by illness.

FILM PLAYERS IN WET FIGHT IRK HAYS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Picture people joining the liquid side in the wet-dry issue are disturbing the producers and the Hays office, who fear the reaction in small towns and ultra-dry territories. They are ready with an out, however, that Hollywood is the same as elsewhere, and screen people have a right to personal opinion.

Particularly perturbing the Hays lads is the manner in which picture personalities are aligning themselves with the Crusaders, anti-prohibition organization. Some of the film crowd will go on the air to tell their views, starting after New Year. Jimmie and Lucille Gleason will be first to broadcast against the 18th amendment.

EVELYN LAYE REFUSES $35,000 WARNER OFFER

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Warners endeavored to get Evelyn Laye to play "Trilby" in "Svengali" with promise of co-starring with John Barrymore. Studio offered $35,000 for the picture plus expenses here and back.

Miss Laye turned down the bid by wire, claiming she favored a vacation in England. It's understood the actress received $50,000 from Sam Goldwyn for "One Heavenly Night" and her contract is believed at the same price for others, but she is permitted to work for outside companies.

Weather

Washington, Dec. 23.

Weather Bureau furnishes "Variety" with the following outlook for week beginning tomorrow (24):

Mostly fair Wednesday. Partly cloudy with light snow over western sections Thursday.

Friday partly cloudy with possible rain or snow over east. Saturday partly cloudy.

Temperature changes will be unimportant.

London, Dec. 23.

The worst fog in years last night and today (Tues) enveloped inner and outer London, entirely disorganizing traffic and doing great damage to the theatre attendance. Special sufferers were the libraries which were left stranded with blocks of seats.

Paris, Dec. 23.

Seasonably cold and should be great for the theatre, but depression counteracts.

Splitting Bebe

Bebe Daniels' five-year Warner contract provides that during the first year Radio Pictures will have an equal claim on her services.

At the end of that period Miss Daniels goes to WB exclusively.

JORDAN-MONTGOMERY RENEW

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Metro has taken up its options on Robert Montgomery and Dorothy Jordan.

Each have had their contracts renewed for one year.

Dilloway's Fox Contract

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Don Dilloway has been given a Fox contract.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

The sophisticated angle won't get much play in the pictures on next year's programs, according to present indications.

Checkup by the producers on the current year's product that got raves from the critics and hit in certain key spots because of the modernistic trend, showed that in the lesser stands the treatment was over the heads of the cash customers.

Producers are trying to effect a happy melding of sophistication with hoke, agreeing that the bulk of next year's output will be drama of the old hoke type somewhat dressed up, and farce comedy. The big money makers of 1931, the picture makers say, will come under either of these classifications.

PUBLIC INTEREST COOLS HOROWITZ CAMPAIGN

Dallas, Dec. 23.

Public interest in Will Horowitz's censorship campaign seems slackening.

It is doubtful now whether the State Legislature, which meets in January, will be hept up either with such pressure as farm relief and unemployment as the main worry.

J. R. Donnell, representative-elect to the next Texas legislature, is preparing a triple tax bill bearing on income, tobacco, and theatre admissions. Donnell comes from Hillsboro, a small town near here.

Idea is that the Legislature will be sorely pressed for revenue and solons are figuring hard just how they'll raise it. With gasoline, autos, tobacco, etc., already dutied, some can't see why film houses should not be obligated too.

Radio Can Serve Author By Mail—$7,500 Suit

Radio Pictures, still trying to collect an alleged $7,500 advance paid to Charles MacArthur for a story which it claims the latter has not written, was granted authority by the N. Y. Supreme Court to serve the writer by mail in a suit which the company has filed against him.

According to affidavits by Radio, MacArthur contracted to write an original for film production and was first given an advance of $3,750 and later a similar amount. Of the second amount, $350 is alleged to have been paid to George Holland, former p.a. for Arthur Hammerstein.

The contract was dated Jan. 2, 1929, and the story was to have been delivered to Radio, according to the later, by Feb. 1 of the same year. In addition to the advance MacArthur was to get royalties of 5% up to a $100,000 gross; 7½% to $200,000; 10% to $300,000, and 15% over $400,000.

Carewe's Garbage Jam

Dallas, Dec. 23.

Construction on Edwin Carewe's garbage plant here was quashed by court order until today (Tues.) when hearing was set. Injunction against the $200,000 project was brought by local Scottish Rite kid hospital. Judge McCallum dubbed the plant as a "nuisance."

Carewe is handling the deal through Biltmore Conservation Co., of which he is head. He got the city's contract during the summer, but got on the courts' bad side when construction was continued on the plant after appeal, filed by hospital for injunction, was officially okayed.

Neighbors object to odors.

CLAYTON SHEEHAN BACK

Clayton Sheehan, head of the foreign department for Fox, returned to New York Monday night (22) from Europe on the Bremen.

Sheehan spent about a month and half touring the Continent looking over production possibilities. As previously reported, he decided that the present was no time to become involved in production away from home.

'NURSERY' CIRCUIT IS COLD

2 B'way Legits Go Film—Republic's Grind 2d Runs; President's Foreigns

Two Broadway legit houses are going pictures. The Republic will show second run films and the President will be devoted to foreign versions.

Walter Reade has taken over the Republic on 42nd street, long a legit stand, and the house (wired) opens tomorrow (25) with second run pictures on a grind policy.

Reade leased from the Hammerstein estate after Oliver Bailey, who has operated the theatre for the past eight years, lost his lease through failure to pay rent for the past six months.

Reade also owns the Astor under lease to Metro, the Gaiety leased to Caddo, and the Mayfair leased to R-K-O, all in the Times Square sector. He also operates the Savoy, a grind house on 33rd street.

It marks the first time the Republic has gone pictures.

President theatre, midget legit on 48th street and now wired, has been taken over by Nick Weiss and Sig Weltner. It opens shortly showing foreign version talkers exclusively at a pop priced grind. House seats 299.

Weiss and Weltner have obtained a franchise from Paramount giving them exclusive greater New York first runs rights on all Par's foreign versions. Weltner was formerly with Par.

GILMORE 'NOT HIMSELF,' DISMISSED BY RADIO

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Knocked out three times by his father-in-law, Tom Mix, in a family tussle, Douglas Gilmore's alibi was that he wasn't himself. Now, let out of the cast of "Kept Husbands" (Radio), the reason is the same—he still wasn't himself.

Bryant Washburn took over the part.

Better for Extras

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Gradually increasing calls for extras brought th. 4,636 placements of the week to only 8% below the 1929 average for the Central Casting Bureau.

The big mob sets were all at Fox, where nine of the coast's current 32 features are in production.

Frank Lloyd used 194 in a Vienna cafe for "East Lynne," calling back most of them for a second day's work.

A mob of 400 worked in the tournament for "Connecticut Yankee" Thursday, and 262 were in the same picture Friday. Seymour Felix wound up the week with a college crowd of 175 for "Girls Demand Excitement."

This week (22) opened strong with 600 in "Yankee" and 300 dress people at Universal in Monta Bell's "Fires of Youth."

Sullivan and Geraghty In Fire-Yelling Rescue

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Edward Dean Sullivan and Tom Geraghty, film writers who chased stories for the New York Herald together, were the unsung lifesavers of plenty people during a midnight fire in the Toberman Bldg. here last week.

The men were walking up the Boul. to Sullivan's hotel when a newsy called their attention to the blaze. Geraghty and the boy hopped the automatic elevator and rode to the top floor, where they started knocking the tenants into action. Sullivan went to the rear of the place and made excellent use of his voice to the same effect.

Came the firemen, and the writers sneaked off.

Progress

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Picture actor, a member of the Academy, was giving that organization credit for the standardization of English in talkers.

"The old dispute as to whether 'eether' or 'eyether' is correct will be settled by our efforts," he said.

"Which is correct?" he was asked.

"That," he answered, "will be settled at a meeting soon."

Lonely Existence of De Luxe Barber With Only 5 Exec Beards

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Like a king without a throne, a man without a country, or even Humpty-Dumpty without a wall, is Bob Matz, a barber with many customers but with a swell job.

As tonsorial artist deluxe, exclusively to five head men of Warner-First National, Mr. Matz comes down from his tonsorial Olympus in Burbank into Hollywood on Highland and Hollywood boulevard and trims the other barbers' hair just to keep in trim.

Mr. Matz, payrolled to WB-FN, feels that the Vitaphone influence and his handsome wage cannot assuage his yearning for the clarion call of "Next!" With only the same five beards and five heads of hair (and not so much hair), they do say he would prefer to get away from it all and return to his less pretentious routine when he was in Hellman's barber shop at the above mentioned H. & H. address (second free adv.).

Those other members of the Barbers' Union who might envy him the dignity, honor, privilege or what have you for trimming the straight whiskers and overlooking sideburns of Messrs. Jack L. Warner, Darryl Zanuck, C. Graham Baker, Hal Wallis and Bill Koenig, are being impressed by Mr. Matz that it's all a case of Vitaphoney.

Thumbs Down on Capone For Any Major Charity Film

Filmdom will not use as a medium for charity or commercialism any notorious character. Long before the Hays Honor Code was adopted by the producers this was an unwritten bit of Haysism understood by every Hays member, it is pointed out.

So Al Capone won't have a chance to do charity work either in a feature or a newsreel clip.

Loff-O'Keefe Troth

Before the winter is over Jeanette Loff will become Mrs. Walter O'Keefe. Miss Loff is on here from the Coast and pictures while O'Keefe is again officiating as head man for Barney Gallants' entertainment in the Village.

Miss Loff is currently seeing New York for the first time. It also O'Keefe's first time inside the library.

Couple met on the Coast last summer while O'Keefe was turning out scripts for Hollywood.

YOUNG KERR'S FILM

Frederick Kerr, young legit actor and playwright, goes with Pathe for "Lost Love," Constance Bennett's next.

Kerr, who just closed in "A Kiss of Importance," is the son of Geoffrey Kerr, who went Radio recently.

KIDS DID NOT GO FOR JUVE POLICY

Failure of Fox's $20,000 Newark Try Is the Convincer — Parents Blamed — Hereafter Film Men Want Petition Guaranteeing Attendance — Publix Opposed and Fox Drops Plans for Kid House Chain Across Country

PUT OFF FOR YEAR

Only a written guarantee and the signatures of parents on a house to house petition that they will send their children at least twice a week, will materialize the industry's intention to launch a chain of "nursery theatres" for children operating under juvenile policies.

The get-the-children-back-to-the-theatre problem, believed solved with the kid-house idea, is out because parents failed to back up the promises of civic organizations in Newark, N. J. While Fox is credited with the child-theatre idea, the entire industry regarded the Newark experiment as a test.

The Newark venture cost Fox $20,000. That went for installing sound equipment and redecorations. When it flopped after three weeks, and after every promise by the industry had been fulfilled, even booking only endorsed pictures, the Fox organization soured on the plan and called off what would have amounted to the opening of a chain of juvenile theatres.

Launched Too Soon

Fox, however, is blamed by fosterers of the plan for having been too eager to launch its program. Had six months been devoted to selling the idea to parents, film

NO B'WAY SHOWS FOR EITHER AL OR RUBY

It is now unlikely that either Al Jolson or Mrs. Jolson (Ruby Keeler) will appear on the Broadway stage this season. Jolson's appendicitis trouble on the Coast, setting his picture for United Artists further back, with the film now reported as on again, precluded his show chances.

Max Gordon had Jolson set for an intimate revue spot in New York, with production intended for this winter. That's now off indef and won't take place until next fall, if ever.

Miss Keeler is reported to have notified Green & Gensler, producers of "The Gang's All Here," forthcoming musical, that she has changed her mind about going into the show, despite existence of a contract. Producers may try and hold her to the agreement.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler (Mrs. Jolson) are eastbound on a flying trip to spend the holidays with Mrs. Jolson's family.

For Royalty's Sake

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

"The Royal Bed," which Radio changed to "The Queen's Husband" while in production, may go back to its original title.

Studio thought the new tag might offend English royalty.

BARRYMORE STILL ILL

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Warners has set back production on John Barrymore's Svengali" for the third time.

Barrymore shows little sign of recovery from his jungle fever attack.

Feted and Dined, Steamed and Wined, Moss Hart Finds Hollywood 'Different'

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Moss Hart, co-author of "Once in a Lifetime," the Broadway comedy which satirizes Hollywood, confesses a pleasure at not having had too authentic an insight on this here burg. His play (with George S. Kaufman collaborating), might not have been the box office click that it is, he believes, if he'd gotten a local load before taking pen in hand.

Hart, who is alternately harrassed by curiosity interviewers and disbelievers of his actual age (24), confides that he is glad the play is the overdrawn burlesque that it is. Had he injected that note of authenticity which even now, at first glance at Hollywood, he recognizes as being so divergent with the essence of his play, Hart knows the show would have lost the broadness which is what chiefly makes it the mad thing that it is.

Sorta Vague

Just whom he meant in his satirical stabs at the Hollywood studio execs is a frankly vague thing. They were just people he knew by name. Surprisingly enough, those names that he mentions as having been vaguely in his mind, turn out to be not the film studio execs but those

1c Xmas Cards

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Several film colony big shots are dodging the expensive Christmas cards this season and sinking the money saved into baskets for the poor.

So their friends won't think they've been passed up, the charitable ones are having plain cards knocked out at one cent each telling where the dough went.

Par Director Asks Extra Week to Rid Clara of Complex

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Rouben Mamoulian, directing his first on this Coast for Par, has been granted two weeks' rehearsal time by the front office. Usual time is only a week.

Mamoulian is to direct Clara Bow and Gary Cooper as co-stars. He asked the extra time because he thinks Miss Bow is suffering a hot case of inferiority which she caught with the advent of talkers. He hopes to snap her out of it.

CLASS FILM CLUB'S CUT-RATE GAMBLING

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

One of the Colony's exclusive dinner clubs has gone for the gambling gag in hope of getting some of the shekels that have been migrating down to Caliente.

Despite the swankiness of the place the games a cut rate in comparison with the clubs which heretofore existed here for lady luck exclusively.

Club is running three games, roulette, black jack and crap. Whereas the low chip in the former Hollywood clubs was $5, the eating and dance spot has them at a buck each. Lowest bet for the wheels is 50 cents.

Cort at Par.

In New York, Cort is partner with Charles Abramson, who will carry on the business until Cort returns. C. & A. expect to produce a play shortly.

Paderewski's Choice

Dayton, O., Dec. 23.

When Ignace Jan Paderewski sought entertainment during the two days he was in Dayton last week he inquired for a vaudeville house.

Finding none, he chose a presentation house and, there being none, he ordered the driver to Loew's, where he sat through "Hell's Angels."

KITTY MOYLAN DROPPED

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Former Ziegfeld girl, Katherine Moylan, who came out here six months ago for Metro and has done only a couple bits, is out at this studio.

Metro had an option but failed to take it up.

MACGOWAN-GOLDWYN

Macgowan is a New York playwright.

GEORGE AND BILL ONLY AT $100,000 OR LESS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Paramount is negotiating with William Powell on his new contract, present agreements expiring Jan. 1.

Like George Bancroft, Powell is asking for more money with Par refusing. New contracts for both will be signed only by Par. for less than $100,000 per picture.

Julian Saenger Weds

New Orleans, Dec. 23.

Julian Saenger, former head of the Saenger Theatres, was married last week to Mrs. Marjorie Weston of this city.

Long considered the south's hardest boiled bachelor, Saenger finally succumbed. He is completing a new home in the Vieux Carre section of New Orleans for his bride.

VON STERNBERG ON TRAGEDY'

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

"American Tragedy" goes into production shortly at Paramount with Josef von Sternberg directing and Phillips Holmes in the lead.

Of 181 Sound Equipment Cos. Only 3 Have Really Survived, Check Shows U. S. Only 2/3 Wired

From a total of 181 different talker equipment companies which sprung into being at one time or another after the advent of Vitaphone, only three can be reasonably placed as having survived. These are ERPI, RCA, and GTP (DeForest). The figure is from an electric source. This is a period of not quite four years as 1931 rolls around.

If the official wiring figures of the three leading talker equipment firms are a criterion for an estimate, there are still plenty of unwired theatres in the U. S.

Figures taken from the official pronouncements of ERPI, RCA and GTP (DeForest) indicate that this triumvirate altogether have around 12,500 installations. These are divided as ERPI, 7,500; RCA, 3,000; and GTP (DeForest) 2,000. The total number of theatres estimated in the U. S. is given as 20,351. This makes around 7,851 houses left to go talker or about 33½%.

From officially charted figures it's gleaned that the major producer-owned theatres circuits control or operate around 2,505 theatres which are now open. These being assumed to be wired, it makes the only unwired theatres practically all independents.

EXCHANGE MGR. IS A LAWYER IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Film men down on the row are becoming trained in legal proceedings as the result of the constant turndowns by the stringent local censor board. Latest appeal to the courts concerns "The Costello Case," Sono Art-World Wide production, being released here through Educational. Max Stahl, local manager, signed the papers.

Stahl is asking for a writ of mandamus, forcing the police commissioner to issue a permit for the picture. Injunction, which was formerly used in these instances, was ruled out some months ago by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Universal won its point against the censors on "Czar of Broadway," unconditionally banned by the board. Court, however, viewed the flicker and advised the censor to issue a permit, stating that if the board refused it would give the exchange the requested mandamus writ. Censor board was then willing to listen to reason; took a couple of minor cuts and let the picture through with a "pink ticket."

COHEN-KEMPNER WILL TAKE EAST-WEST TURNS

Appointment of Louis Cohen to the realty department of Fox Theatres also lists Alexander Kempner as going to the Coast for the firm. This around Jan. 1 when Cohen assumes his new job.

Plans call for Cohen to stay in the east until Feb. 1. After that Kempner will return when Cohen shoots west. Cohen may stay on the Coast until May after which he will return to his permanent headquarters in New York.

FN German Players In U's "Resurrection"

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

German version of Universal's "Resurrection" is on the fire again. First attempt was abandoned when the studio discovered that the players imported for the picture no spik German so good.

This time First National's German players will be used. Picture will not start until after the first of the year.

OFFICE RENTALS HIT BY PASSING OF INDIE PRODS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Hollywood office buildings are feeling the disappearance of the independent producer. With their passing, most of the buildings found there was no one around to fill up space.

At one time the Taft building was headquarters of the indie producers. With the exception of Howard Hughes, who has had an office in that building for the past three years, the only present tenants connected with pictures are a few agents. Incidentally, the Hughes office has been closed for the past year, but Hughes retains the space.

Bank of Hollywood recently completed an addition to its building but no producers are registered. Same goes for the Guaranty and Security buildings.

Most of the indie producers left the larger buildings several years ago and installed themselves in the smaller and trickier studio buildings which are spotted all over town. When they signed a lease and occupied a fairly large amount of space they could usually bull the building owner to name the building after their production company. This was always a big asset when the producer was promoting.

Came the revolutionary and more expensive production of talkers, and the indies folded. Behind them they left a flock of deserted office buildings, peculiarly accessible only to doctors and dentists.

Ala. Mgrs. Peeved as Press Backs Special Film

Birmingham, Dec. 23.

Theater men are looking with worried and peeved eyes at the newspapers of Alabama and especially Birmingham. Business at the theaters is off and the newspapers, it seems, are entering the show business.

First two local papers backed the showing of a memorial film on Woodrow Wilson. Business was so good at the first half dozen performances that the film was held over. Theaters called it unfair because the papers were in a position to give it all manner of publicity. Venture was backed by an afternoon and morning paper under the same ownership, "News" and "Age-Herald".

Now comes the announcement that these two papers are taking the film on a tour of the northern part of the state and are joining hands with small town newspapers in publicity. Film is booked for Florence, Decatur, and Huntsville and has already been shown at Montgomery. Some local organization gets a cut of the net after all expenses are paid. Doing better biz wherever it goes than the regular theaters.

Fox Drops Tinsel for "Lightnin'" at Carthay

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

As an experiment, Fox is eliminating the typical premier ballyhoo and $5 tap for "Lightnin'," opening New Year's Day at the Carthay Circle. Picture will start with a matinee scaled at regular twice daily prices.

If satisfactory, the idea may become a regular policy.

WITWER - LLOYD FINDINGS DRASTIC

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

United States Commissioner David B. Head is calling for the immediate surrender of all negative and positive prints of "The Freshman" for destruction, and the submission of the books of Harold Lloyd Corp. and Pathe Exchange for an accounting to Sadie S. Witwer of all profits derived from the production and distribution of the picture.

Lloyd's counsel has until Jan. 17 to appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals from the drastic findings of fact signed by Federal Judge George Cosgrove last Thursday (18). To avoid immediate surrender of the films and books a stop bond covering approximately $1,250,000 involved must be deposited. The appeal, if made, will be pushed by both sides with a decision likely in June.

Findings

Findings signed by Judge Cosgrove, based on his decision that a story by the late H. C. Witwer had been pirated by the Lloyd corporation, are briefly as follows:

From Oct. 10, 1924, to Mar. 30, 1925, the Harold Lloyd Corp. produced "The Freshman" under an agreement of June 21, 1923, with Pathe Exchange, Inc.

H. C. Witwer, who died Aug. 9, 1929, had written a story called "The Emancipation of Rodney" prior to Aug. 27, 1915. This story was published in the "Popular Magazine" for Nov. 20, 1915, copyrighted by Street & Smith. The copyright was assigned to Street & Smith, Inc., on June 20, 1917, was held in trust for Witwer until Feb. 13, 1929, when it was assigned to him.

Picture and other rights had, however, been assigned to Witwer by Street & Smith in November, 1919.

In November, 1923, Witwer was requested by the Lloyd corporation to submit a story. He described "The Emancipation of Rodney" to Harold Lloyd and to William H. Fraser, secretary and general manager of the company. On Nov. 16 he took a copy of the magazine containing the story to the studio by request and left it.

On June 23, 1924, Witwer demanded the return of the magazine but the defendants refused to return it and never have returned it.

On two occasions, Nov. 16, 1923, and Oct. 10, 1924, the Lloyd corporation considered buying the story.

On Sept. 27, 1924, Witwer went to the studio and related his story to Sam Taylor and to John L. Murphy, production manager.

On Oct. 4, 1924, Murphy called Witwer to the studio for the purpose of averting any action for infringement. He related some of "The Freshman" to Witwer, but not fully. The picture was not then completed and wasn't completed until Mar. 30, 1925.

The Harold Lloyd Corporation "deliberately and wilfully appropriated the story in its picture." It made use of substantial parts of the Witwer story, including theme, plot, story, character, motivation, treatment, climax and sequence of incidents. The matter interpolated in the film does not materially alter the original plot.

The film was first publicly exhibited about Sept. 20, 1925. On Oct. 2, 1925, Witwer notified the corporation of his plagiarism claim and demanded that exhibition cease.

On Dec. 26, 1925, he filed suit for injunction and relief in Superior Court, dismissing it in order to bring the present suit in federal court.

Hollywood Bulletins

Briefly rewritten extracts from "Variety's" Hollywood Bulletin, printed each Saturday in Hollywood, and placed as a wrapper upon the regular weekly "Variety."

News from the Dailies in Los Angeles will be found in that customary department.

Exhaustive quest is on by Warners-FN for new talent with the aim of establishing a stock company. Rufus LeMaire, new casting director, has set aside two days a week for interviewing prospects.

Plan for building up talent also includes radio appearances and instruction in languages, arts and sports.

Film Row, now midway between Hollywood and downtown Los Angeles, is expected to be moved nearer the colony when Fox-WC takes over the site of the present Fox studio in Hollywood. Exchanges are expected to move with F-WC.

Nancy Kelly has settled with Fox and is going east for the Schwab and Mandel show. Former vaude player has been at the studio six months without doing a scene.

To stimulate biz, Teatro Mexico on Main street has its pit orchestra on the sidewalk with two spielers while the picture is on.

So Marlene Dietrich will feel more at home, Paramount is bringing her husband and daughter here from Germany in February.

Fox renewed Vic Shapiro's contract as head of the studio publicity department on the eve of his departure to New York.

Following the lead of other major studios, Metro will make its visiting rules more stringent.

Return here from Chicago of Mrs. Milton Sills (Doris Kenyon) revealed that she had been there for the reburial of her late husband.

Fox is off long contracts for writers. As the tickets lapse the boys and girls are either let go or held on a week-to-week basis. This is also in order for new writers.

Present indie owners will operate Majestic and Wilshire theatres, Santa Monica, under deals by which Joe Schenck acquires 51% interest in each. Schenck has also closed for a house in Pasadena.

Through rezoning of property, Radio will build a film lab here adjoining studio. Film printing will then be transferred from New York.

Fox will give Warren Hymer new contract on winding up his two-year term next spring.

Fox has borrowed Dorothy Jordon from Metro for the femme lead in "Young Sinners."

Nothing doing at Roach's until after the holidays.

Wilson Mizner has been added to First National's writing staff.

Production of "Single Sin" and "Drums of Jeopardy" will be completed at Tiffany by Christmas. Phil Goldstone will then blow to New York.

Illness of his wife will keep Ray Rockett away from Pathe until after the New Year. His brother Al lost his house in the Malibou beach fire.

June, the English dancer, otherwise Lady Inverclyde, is due here for a brief vacation next week, returning to New York in January.

Pete Smith, Metro publicity chief, has had a bad relapse at the Santa Barbara sanitarium where he has been confined for the past two months.

Harry Arthur landed here from the east on Monday, to later switch berths with Oscar Oldknow temporarily.

Martin Broones, former head of Metro's music department and now in production, left for New York last week to direct Lawrence Tibbett in added scenes for "The Southerner."

Tom Mix answered his wife's divorce complaint by denying everything.

Gloria Swanson is slated to start Jan. 2 on the songless De Silva, Brown and Henderson story at UA. Ben Lyon is also cast.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., and Robert Harriss will leave for New York on a story-buying trip after the holidays.

New ruling of the musicians' union prohibits musicians who get $50 a week or more outside studios from working temporarily in the studios more than one day each week.

New lineup of Fox operation of Publix coast houses has the Publix stage units from the east playing the Fox in Frisco. Granada and Paramount there will be revamped and rescated. Paramount in Seattle will go into a run policy. In Portland F-WC will switch the F. & M. shows from the Broadway to the Paramount.

Fox will make a Spanish "Scotland Yard," and if the story lends itself to further foreignization, will be made in French and German.

Thinking it has a find in Roberta Rey, imported from Paris, Paramount execs are revamping the script of "Up With the Curtain," Spanish musical, allowing Rey a bigger part and more songs.

New Los Angeles theatre now scheduled to open Jan. 15 with Chaplin's "City Lights," two weeks later than originally figured.

Tower theatre, indie operated, will go third run downtown to play Pathe's "Holiday," following its $23,000 week at Loew's State. Fox West Coast will also play second run Pathe's in deluxe spots.

George Naylor, U branch mgr., succeeds J. J. Milstein, Metro exchange man, as president of the local Film Board of Trade. E. F. Benson, UA branch chief, v.-p., and Lola Gentry remains sec.

Pathe handed Marion Schilling a five-year ticket and intends to groom her for stardom.

"Five o'Clock Girl," for Marion Davies, is again reported off. "It's a Wise Child" is slated to start with Miss Davies after Jan. 1, with Robert Leonard directing.

Harry Cort is here from New York as a writer-director for Paramount.

Radio has teamed Hugh Herbert and Edna May Oliver for an original story now being prepared under Doug MacLean's supervision.

Harold Franklin is getting set with a personnel staff while his theatre deals are materializing. Jeff Lazarus, Earl Crabb, besides J. J. Franklin, all former Fox West Coast men, are now with Franklin. Crabb, who was northwest division manager for Fox, holds a three years' contract with Fox. He intends to sue for enforcement.

ARTHUR LOEW AS NATIVE

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Arthur Loew, in charge of Metro's foreign production, will be located here permanently when he arrives in a few days.

Louise Brooks with WB

Louise Brooks has been signed by Warners for "The Devil Was Sick."

TRICK PHOTOGRAPHY STRIFE

Lower Film Player Salaries; Producers Favor Legit Imports

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Economy wave which has affected writers and other studio employes in the past few months is being extended to take in the players. As option renewals come up a number of important players have been told that the big boost is off and if they want to re-sign at a lesser figure than that stipulated in the option it's okay. Otherwise, the contract will not be renewed. Same goes for a number of directors.

Talent scouts of the major studios, canvassing the legit stage, have been advised by the studios to approach favorable talent with a one-year contract as the bait instead of the usual inflated picture salary.

So many players from the stage have clicked in single picture performances that the studios feel there is a good chance to get away from national debt figures when talking salary to performers.

Dietrich Case

The reception of Marlene Dietrich has not helped the cause of the seasoned picture star. Studios figure that what has been accomplished with publicity on her debut can be utilized on other players who are unknown to picture-goers.

Several times salary cutting was tried during the silent days, but was never successful. However, with talkers and the experienced stage performance it's different.

Number of featured players today who are getting less than $500 a week is greater than it ever was in the last 10 years. Today a picture player who is in the $1,000 class can be replaced by any number of competent stage players who get less than half that amount.

General impression in studios is that the average feature player will have a salary that will be practically standardized at $500. With the present crop of former stars who are willing to be in support cast, and with the number of featured players continually growing, it is doubtful if competitive bidding will enter into picture casting.

Biggest evil in the salary jumping has always been one studio bidding against the other. Now the studios are laying off bidding due to the availability of performers. And this, too, has an effect on salary revision downward.

But there is still a shortage of women who can "camera" and act.

Stockholders of Pathe File Suit Over R-K-O Deal

Efforts to have the Radio-Pathe combine set aside are being made by three minority stockholders of Pathe who have filed a joint suit against Radio, Pathe and the officers and directors of the latter company in the N. Y. Supreme Court. Plaintiffs are Sol Karp, Rogers Silverware Redemption Bureau, and Charles Nagle, all of whom are given as being of 1600 Broadway, New York.

Service in the case has already been made.

Deal is subject to the approval of Pathe stockholders, who are scheduled to meet Jan. 5 in New York for that purpose. The defendents also have 20 days in which to make answer, which coincidentally falls around the date of the Pathe stockholders' meeting.

Plaintiff Sol Karp affidavits to own 100 shares of Pathe common; Nagle, 1,400 of Pathe "A," and the Rogers Silverware Redemption Bureau, 300 shares of Pathe common.

Among the individual defendents concerned in the suit are George Ornsby, Charles A. Stone, Huntington Sheldon, Jeremiah Milbank, Frank Callahan, Joseph P. Kennedy, Paul Fuller, J. J. Murdock, Elisha Walker, Stuart Webb, E. R. Derr, L. D. Burton, C. J. Scollard and R. C. Hunt.

Another for E. V.?

New Orleans, Dec. 23.

Their 10th child is rumored for the E. V. Richards. The ninth Richards youngster is about 10 months old.

E. V. says he's thinking of starting a brand new school of correspondence as another side line.

Fox May Reduce Number of Films; Grainger on Lot

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

James Grainger, Fox distribution head, arrived here Monday (22) to confer with Winnie Sheehan on Fox's new program. New line-up probably will have less pictures. All studios are more worried about quality than quantity.

Grainger leaves for the east, Jan. 6. Under present plans, Fox will hold its sales convention in Chicago next May.

WB MAKES TRIPLE DECISION ON SHORTS

Warners has reached a triple decision on its talking shorts. Company will continue to make them at the Flatbush studio, they're hereafter to be called "Shorts", not "Warner Varieties," and the one and two reelers are to be booked and released in series.

There was some talk of WB giving up its eastern studio to concentrate everything at Burbank on the Coast. The big western lot will still turn out a certain number of shorts, such as the Bobby Jones string, but most of this abbreviated production is to remain in the east.

On releasing in series the idea is to get away from haphazard reels and to try and reduce the major portion of the work to series, such as the Jones, Ripley, and some of the comedy spools. Hence, in the future when an exhib wants WB shorts he'll book a sequence of spools which will have a connecting link, something on the order of a serial.

Rumor More Trade Papers As Merger Outcome

In the wake of Martin Quigley eliminating the "Motion Picture News", weekly, and taking over "The Daily Review," there is talk of new papers.

The Quigley take-overs apparently have sold several ex-publishers on returning to the weekly field. They are preparing to start such a publication before the end of January. One of the men who figured in the Quigley take-over is credited with having sunk nearly $100,000, and as his "bit" in the buy-out pocketed just $15,000.

M-G Dropping Reicher

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Frank Reicher, who left Pathe a year ago to join Metro as a dialog writer and director on German versions, will be off the Culver City payroll, Jan. 1.

Studio will not exercise its option.

Marion Marsh in "Svengali"

Marion Marsh, 17, has been picked to play opposite John Barrymore in his next Warner film, "Svengali." It's her first big role. She did a minor part in "Young Sinners" (WB).

HOT FIGHT OVER BASIC PATENTS

Producers Separately Seek Control of Important Composite Film Patents—Now One of Industry's Most Important Phases

MANY SUITS LOOM

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

With composite photography becoming general, and used in almost every picture produced today, bitter legal strife is expected during the year over ownership of basic patents.

As the trick photography situation is today, three or four independent operators control most of the patents so far issued and have other patents pending. Meanwhile some of the major studios are perfecting their own trick work and, according to the independent process men, are infringing on these patents.

Preliminary Skirmish

A series of court cases are anticipated when the Independents get full control of the patents now pending.

First skirmish is now taking place. Papers for a suit have been drawn involving more than $100,000, but present indications are that this suit will be settled out of court. This first legal scrap is between an independent operator and a large picture company. Curious angle is that another major studio is financing the indie in this threatened litigation as part owner of the patents claimed infringed upon.

Patents covering the various trick photography processes were of little value until the advent of sound. Since the industry went talker, the studios have had to depend on the trick stuff more and more, as a necessary money saver and as a means of co-ordinating sound and difficult photographic shots.

Labs Conflict

While most of the studios have called in the independent process men for this work, others have gone ahead with the work in their own laboratories. It is against these studios that court actions will be aimed when the new patents come through.

Composite photography is one of the most important adjuncts to picture production. Within the last year it has curtailed the need for location jaunts almost 50%. Within two years, it is believed out here, location work will be almost entirely eliminated by trick camera work.

Process camera work does not figure in the ban on innovations decided upon recently at a meeting in the Hays office, New York. Execs of all companies reached this verdict.

Process stuff has been found a necessity by the studios as a time an money saver.

U.A.'S 55 SALESMEN WILL DROP SALARY CUT

Chicago, Dec. 23.

United Artists wound up a one-day convention here last Sunday by adding 55 salesmen to the payroll. Al Lichtman, general sales manager, announced that the 10% cut in all salaries, which went into effect Oct. 13, would be rescinded Jan. 3.

Ben Fish, Sam Goldwyn's brother, and H. D. Gold were present and spoke to the boys.

Schlank on Coast

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Fully recovered from his recent illness in the east, Morris Schlank, one time leading indie producer, is back in Hollywood after a year's absence.

Planning to re-enter production.

B'way Film House Overheads Figure Among Cheapest in Country When Put to Analysis

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Preview of an epic film, costing over $2,000,000, saw the picture projected with the third reel completely omitted.

DELUGE OF BIDS FOR FILM STARS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Personal appearance thing for picture stars has cropped up again and on a large scale, with major and indie theatre circuits in the Midwest and South turning to the studios for aid in bolstering business.

In the past few weeks film players, from the featured to starring class, have been besieged with offers to make personal jaunts for from one to 10 weeks. Publix has adopted this policy and is most anxious to spot them through the South.

In an effort to obtain as many names as possible for stage appearances, Publix is soliciting other studios than Paramount via division managers in an attempt to check on what players are available at this time or in the future. So far the response has been small.

Indie theatre operators are going in for the same thing, some of them sending representatives to Hollywood to make direct contacts with stars. Agents seem to be getting no recognition with theatres.

Actors Like Idea

One indie theatre man came here all the way from Kansas City to book picture names, and after obtaining a kid actor spent his own money making a trailer for him at the studio.

Reaction of the actors is favorable, most being keen on the idea of picking up extra dough. But the catch is at the studio, where a player under contract finds it tough to get away. Again, there is the squawk from those studios with their own theatre affiliation when a player wants to go to an opposition circuit.

Publix wants Jack Oakie for about four weeks of stage appearances through the South, and Paramount may let the film star go as soon as he finishes the picture version of "June Moon."

Oakie played five weeks for Publix last summer through the East at a salary reported to have been above $5,000 per.

Loew-Roach Trip to Confab with S. A. Exhibs

Dallas, Dec. 23.

Hal Roach stopped here last week en route to Mexico City, where he and Arthur Loew will meet Central and South American exhibs relative to Spanish versions of Metro films.

Figure the exhibs can give them the lowdown on foreign reaction to present films and also what the South Americans want.

Director and exec flew over in Roach's private airplane.

Lapse in Personals

Paramount theatre, New York, will be without a stellar personal appearance for the next five weeks. George Bancroft, in there last week, has no further Publix booking.

Reports that presentations would be put into the Rivoli and Rialto are officially denied.

Broadway is tougher and more of an enigma to showmen right now than at any time since the Indians became realtors and Dutch barns charged admissions. Within just a year smash pictures have been reduced to merely the receipts of a previously normal good film; returns on just good reels are but fair while what used to be rated a moderate program material a year ago is now just red.

The Roxy, Paramount, Capitol, Strand, Rivoli and Rialto are quite capable of doing $325,355 velvet, if all click with solid weeks. The total nut on these houses is around $205,000. Thus, this sextette can get surprisingly low grosses and, still, one or two of 'em must show a profit. But, it is also emphasized, this margin cannot be reduced the same in 1931 as it was in 1930 as against 1929. That's the big worry.

On the surface, Broadway picture men excuse the decline by the jobless. They say that show business reflects conditions the same as all other industries. Underneath, the same spokesmen admit that what is happening to Broadway would have occurred whether the market slumped or the world war reacted on pocketbooks several years ago or ahead.

The fans have become picture-wise. They don't take anything now just because it's illuminated in a Broadway marquee. And several of the pictures which they have slighted in 1930 have been good pictures, which merely adds to the enigmatic side of the street. The fans are waiting for the films to hit the neighborhoods.

Low Overheads

Average cost weekly maintaining one seat in this group of houses is approximately $8.90. Keeping that seat regularly occupied means around $21 turned in by that chair at the end of each week.

The Rivoli, Rialto and Strand have surprisingly low overheads. Several of the legit houses being used occasionally for pictures, with seating capacities of 1,000 and under, equal the overhead of these picture emporiums which total 2,000 to 2,900 in seats. The overhead on the "big three" sites might also surprise in that they're below what the average guess would be. In fact, comparatively speaking Broadway is probably amongst the country's cheapest mainstems as regards picture house overhead in relation to location and drawing population.

Thus, it isn't exactly the wail of red that is worrying showmen. It is comparing 1930 with 1929 and looking ahead to 1931, and that the ace sites aren't making enough to pay off for some of the losers. Meanwhile, there are those who contend a cut in admission scales is the best solution.

GTP GIVES UP ITS FILM PRODUCTION PLANS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Production plans of General Talking Pictures have been abandoned, with the company sticking to the manufacture of production equipment. This is according to Al Mannon, president of Tec Art studios, who returned Monday (22) from an eastern conference with M. A. Shlaasinger.

G.T.P. was previously reported preparing to invade the production field next year with Tec Art here as headquarters.

Goldstone Postpones Again

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Phil Goldstone, of Tiffany, has postponed his trip to New York again until completion of "X Marks the Spot."

Film is scheduled to start Jan. 10.

M-G Seeks Foolproof Dubbing Method For Versions to Cut $40,000 Wkly. Nut

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Finding itself with a weekly nut of $25,000 for foreign player and director talent exclusive of executive, office and other overhead, Metro is looking for a way to chop down the current cost of the multilinguals made on that lot.

Currently the studio has on its contract list 62 players, writers and directors in the foreign sector, drawing checks every week and averaging around $400 each. With the market for foreigns limited as now, the execs admit they cannot get dollar for dollar back for many moons, if then.

While overhead is the chief obstacle to profits, the execs also are worrying over the problem of keeping their star names, which have proved money-makers overseas before talkers.

With this in mind, the studio is going back to experimenting again with dubbing in Spanish, French and German, which have heretofore featured this studio's direct shooting. First in the return to dubbing will be the German "Daybreak." Instead of waiting until the English version is shot before synchronizing, a foreign director and technician will be on the set while the original is being photographed and have shots made after each scene is finished, with the same players, to better fit into synchronization.

Just One Thought

Should this studio, or any other of the majors, arrive at a foolproof system of dubbing, it is a certainty that direct foreign shooting will get a setback and that a lot of imports now here will be en route home. There's only one thought currently in the foreign production field, and that is: "How can we make them cheaper?"

The total salary overhead for the Metro foreign crew, including artist talent, execs and office help, but not including overhead for sets, technical crews or a share of the general studio nut, is around $40,000 a week, at the present time standing better than $2,000,000 a year. With a proposed slate of 50 multi-linguals for next year it means that every version will start with a nut of better than $40,000, exclusive of story cost, production or secondary or minor casting.

'CRACKERS' AND 'JAZZ' GET ACROSS IN PARIS

Paris, Dec. 23.

The Pantheon is showing the original version of "Animal Crackers" (Par) and the Olympic has "King of Jazz" (U) with passages in French interpolated in Hollywood.

Both pictures are doing first rate business, although the general trade is shot by depression all around on top of the pre-Christmas shopping.

Giddy Gals' Hangout Nearly Loses License

London, Dec. 23.

The Super-cinema in Charing Cross road was refused renewal of license on the ground that it was the rendezvous of giddy gals on the make. But the objection has been overcome and the County Council will grant a license under the house regime of Gaumont British.

Theatre was formerly part of a chain of 17 houses owned by United Theatres Co., of which Isadore Schlesinger is chairman. The houses are now under the supervision of British Gaumont.

HAGUE'S U. S. RIVALS

The Hague, Dec. 23.

Two American pictures are opposing each other here this week. First National's "No, No, Nanette," is at the Apollo and Universal's "Marseilles" holds forth at the City theatre.

Latter is in its Holland premiere.

WB BUY "LOVELY LADY"

Warners have bought "Lovely Lady," musical, from Wegener & Kaemper, for picture production. No figure named.

Foreign Actor's Wail

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Squawks are being made by Spanish imports on the Metro lot, who claim their talent is being blanketed by instructions to mimic the original domestic players.

Three of the imports, big shots in their own tongue and picked because they look like Metro stars, are particularly burned. Kick is chiefly aimed at the directors, who use a movieola on the set for projection of the domestic picture and then instruct the Spanish players to copy the style. Complaint from the imports is that they should be permitted to interpret the scenes as they feel them.

QUEST FAILS OF WORLD LEAGUE

Geneva, Dec. 23.

The League of Nations' council, holding a meeting to name the winner of the scenario contest, aimed to obtain a film story calculated to further world amity, made no award.

Council had examined 18 manuscripts submitted, and decided that none merited the award.

Now, they have doubled the ante, naming the purse as 300,000 francs, and will receive new stories for judgment by May 1, 1931.

VILCHES, M-G THORN, SECURES PAR. RELEASE

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Paramount will release three Spanish pictures, made independently, with Ernesto Vilches starred and directing.

Vilches, imported by Metro and spotted in several recent Spanish editions, proved a thorn for the Culver City outfit by kicking against taking direction from American meggers.

He will leave that organization at the end of the year and appear in the trio to be made at Tec Art. Some of the Spanish player's money is in the deal. Producer will be John Auer, who has just returned here from New York after selling Paramount on the releasing plan.

Asks 3 "All Quiets"

The Hague, Dec. 23.

Following the uproar over "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U) in Berlin, one of the Dutch papers here suggests that it might be a good idea to screen all versions (three) of the Remarque story and let the public judge.

Editor assumes that each language version has special story treatment.

Viertel Settles

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Differences of opinion between Fox ex-es and Berthold Viertel over the story and cast of the German version of "Man Who Came Back" resulted in Viertel blowing to Warner's to do the German "Sacred Flame."

Before he left Viertel obtained a settlement from Fox on his three-year contract which had four months to go.

FINALLY GETS A BREAK

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Maria Alva, Spanish representative in the group of international beauties visiting America two years ago, has finally clicked after doing bits for Fox and Paramount for two years.

She has been given a contract by Fox for Spanish leads, first starting shortly in "Man Who Came Back."

FOX, PAR BUYING RIVALS

Both Extending Holdings in Australia, Is New Report

Sydney, Dec. 23.

Increasing difficulties of circuit operations is giving opportunity for the acquisition of more holdings in this territory by American interests.

Fox already is heavily interested in the Hoyt theatre circuit properties and with the closing of two more Melbourne houses by that circuit, owing to poor takings, it is said that Fox is taking up additional theatre interests in New Zealand.

At the same time reports increase in circulation that Paramount is buying up independent houses all over the island continent wherever they are offered on the market.

What Mussolini's Talk Ban Can Do to Films From U. S. Is Plenty

Milan, Dec. 23.

The San Carlo cinema advertised "Ladies of Leisure" (Col) as "sound," and then cut the dialog to the one thereby wrecking the story as far as possible. Picture here is called "Femmine di Lusso."

Sound effects left were such incidentals as the ticking of a clock, beating of waves on the shorts, and the cry of "Man overboard" in a boat scene. Not enough dialog to make the story intelligible.

Local reaction is that if this is what the government means by relaxed language rules, it would be better to suppress all sound entirely, saving both producers and exhibitors a lot of bother and costing the fans nothing in the general results.

All that saved this picture from disaster was the supurb direction of Capra and the fine acting of Barbara Stanwyck, which the Italian rule couldn't entirely dim. Picture has been packing them in right along despite Christmas, and all shops open on Sundays.

Billing Makes Cinema Seem a Flop-and-Eat

London, Dec. 14.

Phil Hyams and his gang open New Trocadero, at Elephant and Castle (South London district) Dec. 22 without throwing the usual party. Just a plain opening for payees as if the house, which seats near to 6,000, had been running months.

Starts with a home-made, "Bed and Breakfast," about which none of the bookers could make up their minds. So much so, Arthur Jarrett, booking for Gaumont-P. C. T., turned it down except for a few three-day situations, and only took these because it was a Gaumont picture.

Hyams didn't think it so hot either, but it was tried out cold, pushed into a Kentish Town neighborhood house and went over fast, so now they think maybe it's good.

Locals (Trocadero is in a Limey region) think the new theatre is a flop-and-eat dump seeing it billed "Bed and Breakfast," 25 to 30 cents.

COPS MUFFLE FILM

Paris Gens d'arms Can Slough Any Show on Disturbance

Paris, Dec. 14.

Exceptional use has been made by the Prefect de Police of his discretionary power to stop the run of a show. This is "l'Age d'Or," ("The Golden Age"). Film was screened at the Studio 28. The Prefect is empowered to stop a show, irrespective of its moral value, on the simple grounds that it is a cause of public disturbance.

"L'Age d'Or," which decries respected institutions, had already been raided by a party of reactionaries after the censor had arranged for some cuts to be made. The showings had been resumed, but had become a daily fighting ground, and without having to wait for the censor to take any further measures, the Prefect used his power.

NEW BIP CASTER

London, Dec. 14.

Weston Drury succeeds George Allen as casting director British International, Dec. 22.

Allen was formerly a South Wales exhib before going into the studios. Drury was a member of the Zeitlin Agency.

Prominent Foreigns

Last named two films are in so-called "sure-seat" (art) spots, but the German film has been at the 55th for over three months, and the French made feature started off auspiciously by drawing about all the Frenchmen in the city.

In the case of the Roxy it's British International's first debut in a New York deluxe house while "Blue Angel" (Ufa) is a strong Rialto entry.

It marks the first time a group of foreign made films have become so prominent.

BRITISH FIGURE 150 1931 FILMS

London, Dec. 23.

British talker units are now busy lining their next year's product.

British International leaders of the field plan around 35 features and 50 shorts for 1931, with a standing list of about 10 producers to be developed, and others engaged from picture to picture.

British and Dominions line up around 10 subjects, although their productions are included in the schedule of the Gaumont British corporation, who, between their various subsidiaries, reckon on around 50 features.

Dominions, although not in the combine, release through them. In the Dominions line-up is "The First Mrs. Fraser," talker rights of which have just been picked up.

Subject receiving advance publicity is "The Chance of a Night Time," original screen musical authored by Ben Travers, writer of the Aldwych farces, talker versions of which have proved the best bets leaving the Dominion studios this year.

Present indications stamp British studios as aiming at a picture crop of around 150 subjects next year. Figure is more than that needed to cover the renter's quota. Exhibs look like being able to pick and choose.

Mexico Officialdom at Byrd Film's Preview

Mexico C. y, Dec. 23.

Paramount scored a publicity coup here in an introductory splurge for the Byrd South Pole picture, when the preview was attended by the U. S. Ambassador, Jay Reuben Clark, and President Pascual Ortiz Rubio and his cabinet.

Newspapers went for the incident for page one attention. Picture opens New Year's Eve at Manager Fernando de Fuentes Olympia theatre, the Paramount house here, and scores of notables have been invited to the first performance.

"Florodora" Suit Up

London, Dec. 23.

Suit by owners of the British "Florodora" copyright against Metro for use of the sextette in "The Gay '90s" has been postponed pending a hoped for settlement out of court.

Proposal is payment of $10,000 to the English plaintiffs, which is agreeable on this end, but subject to ratification by other American parties to the action.

Ugast Sailing Again

Eddie Ugast, of the Paramount staff, has been assigned to Paris again. He will leave within a few days.

Ugast has been sent abroad and recalled by the organization five times.

Norma's French Replacement

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Hugette DuFloss has been chosen for the Norma Shearer part in the French "Strangers May Kiss."

Production will start as soon as Miss DuFloss arrives here.

METRO SEEKING MEXICAN GIRLS

Mexico City, Dec. 23.

While professional actors and lads with thespian aspirations have found but gloom in what Arthur M. Loew, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer told newspapermen regarding chances in Hollywood for Latin picture players, his message has elated all gals on the Mexican stage.

Loew, who is here with Hal Roach, explains that he came to Mexico to get the low down on the Mexican's public's taste in films, particularly talkers. Both have been conferring with President Pascual Ortiz Rubio and other high government officials in regard to Spanish language talkers and silents in this republic.

Loew told newspapermen and they wrote and had published yards about it, that Hollywood, as far as the Metro lot is concerned, has plenty male Latin film players, but that his company is eagerly in quest of experienced Latin femmes for Metro's Spanish version program. One of Roach's chief reasons for coming down here, Loew said, is to give an eye to the gals on the local stage for film possibilities.

Loew denied reports circulating here that Metro plans to establish a studio in Mexico City, pointing out that the swift transport of films by plane here from Hollywood obviate the necessity of a local studio. Said that very probably Ramon Novarro will visit Mexico.

U's Silent Rights to Legit Hit Block Osso In Filming of Talker

Paris, Dec. 23.

Unused silent rights are nullifying talker rights in one instance noted here, which may affect other properties.

Osso holds the talker rights to the legit hit "Business Is Business" by Octave Mirbeau, but cannot make a move to use them because Universal holds the silent rights to the same piece.

U refuses to dispose of its silent privilege to Osso, although Osso asked the company to quote a price and accepted it when it was tendered.

Universal once found itself in a similar position when that company was about to make a talker of "Broadway."

Radio's English Studio Increasing New Program

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Basil Dean, associate producer for Radio in England, and head of Radio Pictures, Ltd., there, is here for production conferences with William LeBaron.

English company's production will be increased next season. Only two pictures, "The Escape" and "Perfect Alibi," were made by it last year.

On his return to England, Dean will scout talent for Radio.

China Kicks on Soviet Picture Flag Episode

Berlin, Dec. 23.

The Chinese Ambassador here carried a protest to the German Foreign Office concerning the Soviet picture, "Blaue Express," current in Berlin, in which it is charged the Chinese flag figures in a degrading episode.

The Ambassador asked that the sequence referred to be eliminated from the film. The Foreign Office declined to act on the ground that the picture had passed the supercensor and that closed the matter.

NEW S. A. CHIEFS

Buenos Aires, Dec. 23.

Jean Letsch, new Metro chief in the Argentine, has just arrived from Spain, his former assignment.

Guy Morgan is here from New York in the interests of United Artists.

YANKS IN BIG NEW FILM CO.

AUSTRIA URGES 'ALL QUIET' BAN

Vienna, Dec. 23.

The Austrian government yesterday (Monday) decided that if Germany had ruled "In Western Nichts Noues" was an insult to the Germanic people, Austria couldn't take any other attitude.

It accordingly announced that although prohibition of the subject was properly a matter for the provinces to decide, the cabinet regarded the German action as appropriate. Government thus makes an appeal to the provinces to act in the interests of national unity and it is probable they will support the appeal with the probable exception of Vienna, which is a province as well as a city.

Vienna, of course, is the center of film presentation and therefore the real battleground, both for Universal and the Nationalistic partisans, who stand shoulder to shoulder with the German Nationalists.

Promise No Quiet

It is altogether likely that the Socialistic city fathers will permit the screening of the picture, partly because of its anti-war message and partly because they would do anything the Nationalists don't want done. If the film is shown there is pretty sure to be trouble. The Nationalists declare they have just as many stench bombs as their Berlin brethren and that there will be no quiet whatever if the picture is shown.

Nationalist newspapers here ground their opposition to "All Quiet" mostly upon a report of the German ambassador in Washington that he had seen the American version and advised that it be banned in Germany. At a private showing last week those who saw it screened, decided it was a harmless piece of anti-war propaganda, but the Nationalists meet this view with the declaration that the film has been re-edited for Australia and that as shown in the States it was blood thirsty and barefaced anti-German propaganda.

As happened in Berlin, the picture's most violent antagonists are those who have not seen it.

GOLDWYN USES FRENCH VERSIONS FOR COAST

Paris, Dec. 23.

Samuel Goldwyn will produce French pictures in Hollywood beginning in May. A star remains to be picked, but unless present plans are changed he will probably make an effort to build up Lily Damita as a talker star, depending upon the girl's personal beauty to carry her along in spite of the imperfections of her French accent as she comes from the south of France. The director will probably be Robert Florey.

Mr. and Mrs. Goldwyn go from here to the Riviera for a vacation and rest and are due to sail for home January 22, after a visit to Switzerland.

London, Dec. 23.

Samuel Goldwyn has engaged Michael Arlen and Walter Hackett to collaborate on a new story for Ronald Colman to be called "What Fun Frenchmen Have".

Idea may be to give the piece a stage production first, since the story is that the two authors will supervise rehearsals. They sail for the States in January.

This is the same play announced for production by Charles Dillingham in 1926. But it was never put on. At that time Michael Arlen and Winchell Smith were named as the authors.

"Parade" Good in Rome

Rome, Dec. 23.

"Paramount on Parade" had its first performance here at the Barbarini theatre.

It was well received and looks like a strong attraction.

SAILING FOR HOME

Dean-Baker On Way From Coast—Will Leave Gainsborough

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Basil Dean and R. H. Baker, British financier, have left for England after spending a week conferring with Joe Schnitzer regarding Radio's English production schedule.

For this year's program Dean will make three more pictures in England and will move from the Gainsborough Studios, where the first two were made. Dean will pick young talent in England for his pictures.

FRENCH YARNS BY PARAMOUNT

Paris, Dec. 23.

Following a changed policy Paramount proposes from now on to confine its production energies here to the making of straight French pictures instead of doing French versions of original English subjects.

In line with the new idea, the company has cancelled an arrangement calling for Rex Ingram to make a French version of "Sea Gods." Instead he will start immediately on supervising the making of "Un Homme en Habit," the Yves Mirandes story.

Berlin, Dec. 23.

Premiere late last week at the Ufa Palast Zoo of the Ufa talker "Floeten Konzert von Sans Souci," precipitated a film and political uproar.

Picture deals with episodes from the life of King Frederick the Great and is interpreted as nationalistic propaganda put out by Hugenberg, owner of Ufa and against the Scherl publications, both of which agitated against the Remarque picture, "All Quiet on the Western Front."

Socialists and Communists tried to break up the performance of the new picture by creating disturbances during its projection and throwing odor bombs. The police moved in and occupied the theatre which was kept partly illuminated so that the disturbers could be identified and dealt with.

Walk-out Bar in Force By Top British Circuits

London, Dec. 15.

Agreement between Gaumont British and other leading circuits here not to employ managers who have walked from one circuit to another has been impressed on showmen by the latest G. B. move in this field.

E. Bunce, staff manager at the Tivoli, West End, was engaged by the Bentley circuit for the new Leicester Square theatre.

Gaumont, who had been losing men to the new theatre, reminded the owners of their agreement, and Bunce was recalled to the Tivoli.

Gaumont has lost so many employees to Associated British and the Bentley circuit recently they decided to exercise their mutual agreement.

Weather or No

Buenos Aires, Dec. 23.

Business is moderate during the increasingly warm weather as the sub-tropic season reaches its height here.

However, it is noted that new releases are going on during the entire summer, putting an end to the familiar summer lapse in this territory.

PRIVATE BRITISH MONEY PUT UP

List of Prominent English Names Behind Venture—Want Full Am. Studio Crews and Some Actors—6 Stages Being Built at Wembley—Arthur Hopkins, M. S. Bentham on Board—Seek H. B. Franklin—R. H. Gillespie Mentioned

$2,500,000 START

The Wembley Exposition grounds, near London, have been bought by a group of English financiers who have formed the Wembley Trust, Ltd., as a holding company which plans to start picture production within the next few months.

Capitalizing Wembley Trust at $2,500,000 are George Roberts, wealthy philanthropist; C. A. Bolton, Samuel Courtauld, silk manufacturer; Claude F. Goddard, Philip Ernest Hill, owner of a number of medicinal drug companies, and Hugh Reeves. The capitalization total is, of course, only a start.

A joint stock company, called Anglo-American Films, Ltd., has been organized to produce the films at Wembley which will call for the services of American supervisors, directors, writers, cameramen, and a certain number of Yankee players. It marks the first time any British film company has moved to obtain American technical help, on this scale, with it understood that this English faction would like to obtain some prominent American executive familiar with Hollywood methods and demands to take active charge at Wembley. It is also rumored that this company will probably branch into the exhibition (theatre) end of the industry on the other side.

The ground secured is being converted into a picture lot with six sound stages now under construction, the original exhibition buildings being remodeled for this purpose.

At the same time Anglo-American Films will arrange to employ British technicians and artisans to understudy the staff from the States until they become proficient and are fitted for executive positions in the company.

Bid for Franklin

Ralph J. Pugh, representative of the interests back of Wembley Trust and Anglo-American Films, who has been on this side for the past few weeks, returns to England today (24) after having attempted to interest Harold B. Franklin, former Fox West Coast head, in an important executive position with the new firm. Negotiations with the former theatre head are still said to be pending through M. S. Bentham, vaude and legit agent, who has been reported co-operating with Pugh in bringing the proposed plans of Anglo American to the attention of American film men.

Three of the seven members of the board of directors of Anglo-American Films will be Americans according to the present plan of organization. Arthur Hopkins, legit producer, is set for a place on the board, the British financiers believing that he will be of valuable service to the company in the selection of plays and players. Bentham, the dean of vaude agents now booking with R-K-O, is also supposed to be set for a place on the board. M. H. Hoffman, well known indie producer, and formerly head of Tiffany, will also join Anglo-American in an executive capacity.

R. H. Gillespie, well known British amusement man, is another mentioned as to hold post.

No U. S. Release Tie-Up

At present Anglo-American has no intention of a hook-up with any American film producer for releasing purposes on this side, having decided to make its productions for release in British countries. The new company also intends to concentrate on foreign versions believing that these can be held down to a minimum in cost because of the proximity of Wembley to continental Europe and the availibility of leading writers and actors in Italy, France and Germany.

For its first production Anglo-American is said to be negotiating for the services of George Arliss, under contract to Warner's.

It has always been the thought that Wembley would eventually become a big picture producing center, ever since the Exposition held there some years ago. The present plan seems to be the first which will carry out the development of this British dream.

Many Obstacles Abroad Discourage Americans From French Investment

Paris, Dec. 23.

The local outlook on American film trade is increasingly inauspicious. French talkers made in Hollywood are not welcome to the French circuits while the gross possibilities of the territory do not justify investment in French studio property and producing equipment. Quickies are now worthless, owing to the improved quality of native production.

Another angle is that there is no assurance that Germany will not legislate against imported product which makes the project of making German versions in Paris especially hazardous, again discouraging investment here.

The result of all these circumstances is that Americans are becoming shy of sinking money far from home on a gambling chance.

A Fox survey just completed reaches conclusions similar to those brought out at the meeting of a group of American commercial attaches from legations in the European capitals brought together for an exchange of views by Dr. Julius Klein. They all advised Americans not to produce on the Continent at this time.

Fox Skeptical

Fox also is not satisfied with the German prospect in the absence of suitable guarantees against legislation adverse to foreign capital. As an outcome of the whole situation, Fox has abandoned the almost completed scheme of European production on the Continent. Instead the company will do French, German and Spanish versions in Hollywood. Concern will probably start importing players who are already under negotiation by Jan. 1.

Universal prefers to handle its foreign versions in French and German using French facilities on a rental basis without investing in its own studios. Its experience with "All Quiet" in Germany probably contributes to this decision. If it finds that it cannot prosper by this system it may even discontinue its own local distribution machine and follow the example of Tiffany by selling its subjects outright on a territorial plan, disposing to French state righters its foreign versions produced in Hollywood.

The lack of American owned theatres is another handicap to the Yankee makers, with the exception of Paramount which owns its own string in France.

ITALIAN QUOTA UP

10 to One Is New Proposal Inspired by Pittaluga

Rome, Dec. 23.

The film contingent question is again under discussion here, backed by the Italian producers captained by Pittaluga, who are urging the necessity of protection.

Understood they are demanding a ratio of 10 to one. Whole question will come up for final decision during January.

LONDON'S FOG DIMS SCREEN

London, Dec. 23.

Dense fog ruined the opening of Phil Hyams' new South London house, the Trocadero, and with capacity of 6,000, the biggest in all Europe.

Opening program made up of Universal's "The Storm" and "Ben and Breakfast," new Gaumont British talker, augmented by a stage show headed by the O'Gorman Bros.

Preview of the Gaumont film was surrounded with difficulties through the fog seeping into the theatre, and making the screen almost invisible. Screening of "The Storm" was abandoned and the program pieced out with orchestral turns.

In spite of the kindly attitude of the audience, the question arose as to the practicability of so vast a house in the fog belt.

HENSON-SHEPHARD SERIES FOR FILMING

London, Dec. 23.

Leslie Henson and Firth Shephard have entered into a film arrangement with Moss Woolf and Michael Balcon, as representatives for Gainsborough, to picturize "Oh Daddy" and "It's A Boy", current Henson-Shephard stage productions. Gainsborough is British Gaumont's subsidiary.

In addition to the two plays mentioned the deal covers for the parties named, the next four pieces produced by the firm. Arrangement also calls for the studio use of the same casts in pictures as appeared in the stage presentations.

Henson thus takes an important position in the talker situation. Producing firm is understood to have received $150,000 advance on the arrangement.

African Circuit Rivals Open New Big-Seaters

Capetown, Dec. 23.

African Theatres successfully opened its new $500,000 wired house in Maritzburg Dec. 15, aided in attracting heavy patronage by its initial feature "King of Jazz" (U). Opening bill had a talker trailer by Ipadore Schlesinger in London. House seats 1,632.

The same day Kinemas, Ltd., opened a 2,000 seater in Pretoria, called the Plaza.

Holland Bans French Film Made by Dulac

The Hague, Dec. 23.

The Dutch censor has ruled against the exhibition of the French picture, "La Coquille et le Clergyman."

Film is the product of the Dulac people in Paris. Frivolous attitude toward the clergy is the reason for the prohibition, censors apparently being influenced by the agitation from the southern provinces against light treatment of church angles.

B'way Fights Annual Xmas Drop; Nothing Big, but Some Spots O.K.; "Danger Lights" $52,800, Nine Days

Broadway picture theatres as a whole just about got by on the slump week. Two houses did nicely. The Mayfair, with the final demonstration of wide film in "Danger Lights," got $52,800 in 10 days, and the second week of "Blue Angel," at the Rialto, hit $45,000.

A flock of new product is being unloaded, even in the $2 houses. At the same time veterans like "The Birth of a Nation," at the Cohan, and "All Quiet" at the Central, are starting another week. Both indicate better returns than either house has enjoyed in weeks. "All Quiet" is looked to do $18,000 at the Central. This is that picture's fifth booking on Broadway, having opened and remained in the Central for 16 weeks at $2, then going to the Roxy, Loew's New York, and Hippodrome.

"The Devil to Pay" (Colman), did a neat $5,700 for its first three days in the Gaiety. "New Moon" (M-G) goes in next door at the Astor tonight (Tues.) to relieve "War Nurse."

"Mother's Cry" and "Viennese Nights" are ready to leave the Winter Garden and Warners, respectively.

Neither the Roxy, Capitol or Paramount were strong. Capitol had John Gilbert's second talker, "Way of a Sailor," and Paramount used George Bancroft for personal appearances. Over the week-end "Tom Sawyer" and the Par only got $36,000. Strand did all right with $21,000 for "Truth About Youth."

Estimates for Last Week

Astor—"War Nurse" (M-G) (1,120; $1-$1.50) (9th week). "New Moon (M-G) here tonight (Tuesday).

Capitol — "Way for a Sailor" (M-G) (4,620; 25-85-$1.50). John Gilbert film couldn't do much for this house; under $50,000.

Criterion—"Hell's Angels" (UA) (800; $1-$2.50) (21st week). Merely waiting for "Reaching for the Moon" (UA) due next week.

Cohan—"Birth of a Nation" (Ind) (1,137; 25-50-75). Did all right over opening week-end; figured close to $3,000.

Gaiety — "Devil to Pay" (UA) (860; $1-$2). Opened Thursday night (18) and in three days took around smart $5,700; well liked.

Globe—"See America Thirst" (U) (1,065; 25-50-75). Not substantial enough, especially for eight days; $17,600; "Charley's Aunt" (Col) here Xmas Day.

Central — "All Quiet" (U) (916; 50-75). Expect this to do $18,000 in first full week on grind here; got $3,000 Saturday and Sunday; this is picture's fifth Times Square booking; probably a repeat record outside of the "Nation."

Mayfair—"Danger Lights" (Radio) (2,200; 40-$1). On Spoor giant screen, last of wide film methods demonstrated here; well regarded for photography; got $52,800 in 10 days; "Hook, Line and Sinker"(Radio) arrives mid-week.

Paramount — "Only Saps Work" (Par) (3,665; 65-85-$1). With personal appearances of George Bancroft up $9,000 from previous week; nothing special about $66,400 but not bad for annual slump week.

Rialto—"Blue Angel" (Par) (2,000; 40-65-85-$1) (2d week). Second week of $45,000, excellent; decline of $16,000 normal considering pre-holiday period.

Rivoli—"Morocco" (Par) (2,200; 40-65-85-$1) (6th week). Faded to $22,300 after holding up on strong money run; "Royal Family" (Par) succeeded last (Monday) night at $5 premiere.

Roxy—"Free Love" (U) (6,205; 50-75-$1.50). Little better than preceding week, but not good at $71,700.

Strand—"Truth About Youth" (FN) (2,900; 25-50-75). Fair on $21,000.

Warners — "Viennese Nights" (WB) (1,100; $1-$2) (4th week). Off with $8,900, and "Kiss Me Again" standing by to relieve.

Winter Garden—"Mother's Cry" (WB) (1,418; 35-85-$1) (2d week). Only $15,000, and not enough; "The Lash" (FN) next.

Casey's Quick Trip

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Pat Casey who left late last week for New York is due back here around Jan. 10. Casey will attend the R-K-O-Pathe merger ratification meeting in New York Jan. 5.

J. J. Murdock, who is staying through the winter, went to the Santa Barbara sanatorium from whence Louis B. Mayer just returned to go through the same overhauling for a few days.

OTHER LOUISVILLE DRAWS

1st Run House Innocently Plays Film 2d Run—$9,500 Tops Town

Louisville, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 500,000)
Weather: cold

Business was not too bad considering product around and the season.

National hit close to $9,500 with a film that had played two neighborhoods a short time previously, unknown to this management. Too many outside attractions last week, anyway, for high takes, with Roland Hayes concert, Darrow-O'Brien-Welch-Bazell debate, one performance of "Street Scene," two by Ben Greet's Shakespeareans and three by U. of L.

Estimates for Last Week

Alamo (4th Ave.) (1,100; 15-25-40) "The Dancers" (Fox). Did fairly, $3,350.

Mary Anderson (R-K-O) (1,387; 30-50) "Only Saps Work" (Par). Dick Arlen and Leon Errol in one that didn't crowd the house; under average, $3,100.

National (Bass) (2,300; 30-50) "Ladies Must Play" (Col). Embarrassing moment when the manager of a first-run found his film has played two neighborhoods; unit on stage and got across quietly for $9,500.

Rialto (R-K-O) (2,940; 30-50) "Derelict" (Par). Bancroft saved this house from an even worse slump; around $4,000, average.

State (Loew) (3,252; 35-50) "Lottery Bride" (UA). Laurel and Hardy comedy helped save house; $9,200.

Strand (4th Ave.) (1,865; 35-50) "Cat Creeps" (U). About $4,190, fair.

PITT FEELS PRESSURE, BUT 'CAT' FAIR-$24,300

Pittsburgh, Dec. 23.

Pre-Christmas period hurt here last week. "Outward Bound" could do nothing at the Warner, despite rave notices, while "War Nurse" fared comparatively the same at the Penn, which did but $20,500.

"Cat Creeps" stood up fairly well at the Stanley on $24,250, but "Grumpy" stood still at the Aldine. Fitton followed the trend with "Madame Satan." This is the first Metro picture to play this site.

Seasonal slide was also felt in East Liberty, where "The Dancers" gave the Enright a bad $8,900, and "Madonna of the Streets" plunged Sheridan Square to $3,500 or under. Harris, with "Fourth Alarm," indie picture, and five acts of vaudeville, managed to hang around average.

Estimates for Last Week

Aldine (Loew's) (1,900; 35-50)—"Grumpy" (Par). Finally got its date here after being held up for some time; picked right spot, for it's doubtful if this one could have bettered $5,000, poor, even in any other week; Cyril Maude meant little to average film fan.

Enright (WB) (2,700; 15-25-40-60)—"The Dancers" (Fox) and stage show. Reflected general trend, with low $8,900.

Fulton (Shea-Benham) (1,750; 10-25-35-50)—"Madame Satan" (M-G). Didn't do well at $4,900.

Harris (WB) (1,800; 10-20-30-40) "Fourth Alarm" (Standard). Plenty weak and with five acts of good vaude just under the gun at $4,900.

Penn (Loew's-UA) (3,300; 25-35-60-75)—"War Nurse" (M-G). Bad at $20,000 despite heavy advance campaign; cricks panned and public indicated apathy to war stuff.

Sheridan Square (R-K-O) (1,500; 15-25-35-50)—"Madonna of Streets" (Col). Just a filler and off to $3,500 or under. House has been playing Par product day and date with downtown Fulton, and when latter house penciled in "Satan," Sheridan was forced to go out and get something.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 25-35-60)—"Cat Creeps" (U). About only decent gross in town last week; around $24,250, fair, though considered satisfactory for season; stage show and Ed Lowry helped.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 25-35-60)—"Outward Bound" (WB). Rave notices but far down at $5,800; Leslie Howard also at Alvin in "Berkeley Square" (Lexit), but tie-up didn't help; mats fair, women coming for sessions on stage.

OCCIDENTAL ARISTOCRACY

It is a pleasing note in the visit of notables to these shores that the PARK LANE HOTEL, New York, in many respects even surpasses the cuisine and service of famed Continental resorts.

For music that must entertain a most discriminating clientele a MEYER DAVIS ORCHESTRA is employed.

Balto O.K., Tho Sun. Benefits Go $40,000 Under Predictions

Baltimore, Dec. 23.

Baltimore's first experiment with Sunday films, a charity benefit with 90% of the houses participating, failed to reach receipts expected. Instead of $75,000, about $34,900 was grossed. Exhibs are wondering whether this is any criterion of the town's interest in a seven-day picture week.

As an aftermath the City Council adopted, by an 11 to 2 vote, a resolution calling on the General Assembly of Maryland to grant Baltimore home-rule powers to decide the Sunday amusement question.

The pre-Xmas let-up last week was hardly as drastic as expected. Compared with 1928, a boom year, the Century, with "The Gorilla," was only about four grand behind "Dream of Love," the '28 attraction. On the other hand the Stanley, with "Follow the Leader," topped "Manhattan Cocktail," the screen attraction in the house two years ago, by six grand. The New, Valencia, and Parkway receipts for the corresponding weeks of '28 and '30 were about neck and neck.

Result shows a general upward trend in downtown picture house trade.

Estimates for Last Week

Century (Loew), "The Gorilla" (FN) (3,200; 25-60). Nothing to brag about; stage attraction more potent; was final week for Wes Eddy as m. c., Hal Yates succeeded Monday; Trixie Friganza featured in stage show and pleased; about $17,000.

Stanley (Loew-Stanley-Crandall), "Follow the Leader" (Par) (3,600; 25-60). Big surprise of the week; upset all managerial predictions, and with good notices caught on from start; up two grand from previous week for $18,000; fine.

Rivoli (Wilson Amus. Co.), "College Lovers" (FN) (2,000; 25-60). With crowds in shopping center this house too far removed to catch day time drop-ins; about $5,500.

Keith's (Schanbergers), "Along Came Youth" (Par) (2,500; 25-50). Buddy Rogers' name sufficient to offset pre-holiday slump; pretty fair near $9,000.

Valencia (Loew-UA), "War Nurse" (M-G) (1,500; 25-35). Nice week; not big but not in cellar either; about $2,800.

Parkway (Loew-UA), "War Nurse" (M-G) (1,000; 25-35). Sexy war film day and dated here; just fair; about $3,000.

New (M. Mechanic), "Princess and the Plumber" (Fox) (1,400; 25-50). Farrell's name a b. o. bolster in tough week; not bad around $8,000.

Hipp (Pearce & Scheck), "Just Like Heaven" and tab. stage show (2,250; 25-40). Not so forte; season largely to blame; prices cut from 50 to 40 top; maybe $4,500; just fair.

Metropolitan (Warner-Equity), "Lady Surrenders" (U) (1,300; 15-50). Just fair at this uptown house; say $4,000.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Jesse Lasky will arrive here shortly after the holidays to look over preparations for next year's Paramount program.

He will stay several weeks.

DENVER MODERATE

"Leader" $14,600 and "Billy" $5,400, Both O. K.—Others Drop Off

Denver, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 400,000)
Weather: Snow

Cold and snow held things down last week. "Sunny," at the Paramount, did nothing, and the weather also hurt the Aladdin where "To'able David" was playing.

However, the Tabor is holding up unusually well under Harry Huffman and "Billy the Kid" did nicely at the Rialto.

Estimates for Last Week

Huffman's Aladdin (1,500; 35-50-75)—"To'able David" (Col). Bad at $5,500.

Paramount (Publix) (2,000; 25-35-50)—"Sunny" (FN). Poor with $7,500.

Rialto (Publix) (1,040; 25-35-50)—"Billy the Kid" (M-G). Good on $5,400.

Huffman's Tabor (1,900; 25-35-50)—"Scotland Yard" (Fox). Good for $10,000.

'LIGHTNIN'S' $16,000 AS K. C. GROSSES HOLD

Kansas City, Dec. 23.

Managers could not say that the shoppers were not downtown last week. They were there in thousands, but few had any time for shows.

Class picture was "Lincoln," at the Midland. Reviewers gave it extra space, but the customers failed to buy it in profitable numbers. At the Mainstreet picture was adapted from the play, "The Command to Love." Ian Keith was seen here in the same part, with the Orpheum stock company, last season, and there was some interest in this fact.

Estimates for Last Week

Loew's Midland—"Lincoln" (UA) (4,000; 25-50). Opening was cold; Sunday papers gave great reviews and business increased a little, but total not good at $10,000.

Mainstreet—"Boudoir Diplomat" (U) (3,200; 25-35-50-60). Same play under original title seen last season at Orpheum in stock; with entertaining vaude proved good entertainment; $13,200.

Newman—"Lightnin'" (Fox) (1,890; 25-35-50-60). Followers of Will Rogers fully satisfied with his performance; opened strong and business held nicely; $16,000.

Royal—"Sea Legs" (Par) (840; 25-35-50). Gave fans real run for their change; $4,200.

Pantages—"The Woman Who Was Forgotten" (2,200; 25-50). With Belle Bennett star of picture, making personal appearance, business was expected to be great, but failed to meet expectations, $7,100.

TACOMA'S BEST SINCE SPRING WITH 'ANGELS'

Tacoma, Dec. 23.
(Drawing population, 125,000)
Weather: Fair and Cool

Having its first showing in Tacoma, "Hell's Angels" got the biz here last week at the Blue Mouse. Booked in here on the heels of Music Box showing in Seattle, so ballyhoo helped.

Another winner the past week was "Big Trail," which held biz to high level the Broadway. Rumor here Orpheum to return to vaude soon.

Estimates for Last Week

Broadway (Fox) (1,500; 25-60)—"Big Trail" (Fox). $8,200, great.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (1,500; 25-35-50)—"The Gorilla" (FN). Lila Lee and Joe Frisco ballyhooed in billing; biz fair at $3,600.

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (650; 25-35-50)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). $5,000, best gross since last spring; holding over.

Rialto (Fox) (1,250; 25-35-50)—"Princess and Plumber" (Fox) and "Oh, for a Man" (Fox). Split week did around $3,000, not good.

'MOROCCO' LEADS N. O. WITH STRONG $15,500

New Orleans, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 500,000)
Weather: Cold

Only one house, Loew's State, escaped the expected bad week. Cold weather furnished an alibi. State, with "Morocco," rolled up a handsome profit on $15,500.

Estimates for Last Week

Loew's State (3,218; 60)—"Morocco" (Par). Film clicked nicely at $15,500.

Saenger (3,568; 65)—"The Lash" (FN). Barthelmess feature looks like a winner but only got $13,000.

Strand (1,800; 50)—"Outward Bound" (WB). Big disappointment on $2,600.

Orpheum (2,400; 60)—"To'able David" (Col). Fell to $10,000.

Tudor (800; 50)—"Fast and Loose" (Par). Not bad; $3,000.

PHILLIE SLOWS NORMALLY, 'LOVE' $20,000

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 23.

Picture house business was generally off last week. Normal pre-holiday slump and not the quality of the films was the reason.

Mastbaum fell just under $40,000, with "Truth About Youth" as the feature. Finals of a beauty contest, worked in conjunction with a local tab, may have helped some. Figure about the same as previous week.

The Fox got about $25,500 on "Devil With Women" and ordinary stage show. That's only about $2,000 under recent average. Keith's got $16,000 with the second week of "Morocco," which was, all things considered, good. "Lincoln," recently shown at the Aldine, won a scant $10,000 at the Stanley, which was very poor. One week was plenty. The Earle, at around $19,000, just fair, with Joe Cook's "Rain or Shine" for five days and "Today" for single day. Latter was feature originally booked but was taken off after Friday opening. Reason given was that censors had so mutilated story that it could not be shown.

"Min and Bill" got $10,000 in its second week at the Stanton following a sensational single week at the Mastbaum. This picture is the biggest thing in the way of a money-getter seen here since early fall. The Aldine got under $7,000 with the fourth week of "Hell's Angels." Big air spectacle proved a bloomer here after splendid start. The Boyd reported $20,000, quite good, with "Free Love," but management didn't figure that was enough to warrant holding picture second week. "The Payoff" got about $4,000 at the Karlton and "The Dancers" didn't quite reach $3,500 at the Arcadia. Both were well under normal.

Several big ones booked in for Christmas. "The Boyd has "Kismet" this week, and the Aldine has "Outward Bound" opening Christmas day with "Hell's Angels" holding on for first three days of the week. The Earle has "Billy the Kid." Keith's has "Playboy of Paris" with "Tom Sawyer" coming in Christmas day. The Mastbaum will play "Passion Flower" and the Stanley has "The Lash." The Fox has "Oh, for a Man." The Stanton has "Soldier's Plaything," the Karlton has "Big Money" and the Arcadia "Her Wedding Night." All but the last are first showings.

Estimates for Last Week

Mastbaum (4,800; 35-50-75). "Truth About Youth" (FN). Around $40,000 or a little less; beauty contest may have helped some; fair, considering season.

Boyd (2,400; 35-50-75). "Free Love" (U). Sensationally advertised and quite good at $20,000; management didn't figure it strong enough for holdover, however.

Aldine (1,500; $1.50. "Hell's Angels" (UA). Bad after great start; a scant $1,000 in fourth here. "Outward Bound" in Christmas day.

Fox (3,000; 35-50-75). "Devil With Women" (Fox). About $25,500.

Keith's (1,800; 35-50-75). "Morocco" (Par). In second week $16,000, but satisfactory.

Stanley (3,700; 35-50-75). "Lincoln" (UA). Very weak at $10,000; taken out after single week; did not do well at Aldine earlier in fall.

Stanton (1,700; 25-65). "Min and Bill" (M-G) (2d week). Did $10,000 and very good under circumstances.

Earle (2,000; 25-65). "Rain or Shine" (Col). Critics raved but fans didn't know Cook; picture really ran only five days, being shoved in when "Today" was taken out after single day's showing; around $18,500.

Karlton (1,000; 50). "The Payoff" (Radio). Around $4,000, which wasn't so hot.

Arcadia (600; 50). "The Dancers" (Fox). Little over $3,000.

STOCKS SLIP ON BANK JAM

Shoppers Give 'Paid' $54,000 And That's Swell at Chicago, Many Pink Slip Films on Tap

Chicago, Dec. 23.

With many pictures finishing stays at their respective houses, and considering general circumstances, trade was normal. Three houses held their flickers longer than usual in order to switch product on Christmas Day.

Roosevelt and United Artists will shove in their new features at five p. m., Dec. 24, but McVicker's will not open "Morocco" until the following morning.

Last week the ace house of town, Chicago, rode far ahead of the pack with an exceptional $54,000 for "Paid." Picture got itself an "adults only" ruling, and all the women crowding into the loop for their shopping unanimously took a couple of hours off to get a load of the "pink." Started off to $26,000 on its first weekend, which got the Publix crowd so excited they immediately rearranged their bookings and sent the picture into the Oriental for a holdover.

English Film N. G.

"Atlantic," foreign flicker, came into the Woods with plenty of encouragement from the critics, but couldn't draw the femme trade. It scrammed after one week. Oriental slipped in, hitting a poor $25,300 with "Passion Flower." Any sign of weakness in product is sure death at this spot.

Three run pictures were "Hell's Angels," which closed its fourth week and sticks six more days; "Min and Bill," doing nicely at McVicker's, and "A Lady's Morals," at the Roosevelt. In spite of excellent notices and terrific Hearst plugging this film couldn't get going and is holding on desperately.

Estimates for Last Week

Castle (Beck) (299; 35-40-60)—"Juno and the Paycock" (BI). Being sold by this house as "Shame of Mary Boyle," with an "adults only" ruling as the big draw; Censor Board squawked at new title; opening week good at $6,100; will probably stay until the first of the year, unless something unexpected occurs.

Chicago (Publix-B. & K.) (4,000; 50-75-85)—"Paid" (M-G). Stage show. A knockout considering the pre-holiday season; "pink" ticket helped plenty, and one of the most sensational weeks of the year at $54,000; into Oriental for second loop week.

McVicker's (Publix-B. & K.) (1,-865; 50-75-85)—"Min and Bill" (M-G). Slid in second week, but still good at $24,500; sticks until the 25th, when "Morocco" (Par) comes in for a run.

Monroe (Fox) (1,000; 25-40)—"Her Wedding Night" (Par). Disappointing at $3,300; second loop appearance.

Oriental (Publix-B. & K.) (3,200; 50-75-85)—"Passion Flower" (M-G), Stage show. Very poor $25,300.

Orpheum (Warner) (650; 40-60)—"Going Wild" (FN). Reviews were kind, and drop-in trade okay; first week $4,700; house is forced to use B. & K. turn-downs, but is managing to make good by consistent exploitation and large ad outlay.

Palace (R-K-O) (2,300; 50-75-85)—"Madonna of Streets" (Col). Vaude. House climbed somewhat to $23,100.

Roosevelt (Publix-B. & K.) (1,500; 50-75-85)—"Lady's Morals" (M-G). Neither press raves or page splurges in Hearst rags could make 'em come in; week at $20,250, but sticks until evening of Dec. 25, when "Lightnin'" (Fox) replaces.

State-Lake (R-K-O) (2,700; 50-75-85)—"Her Man" (Pathe). Disappointment and only one poor week at $18,000; "Free Love" (U) doing slightly better due primarily to "pink" rating; opening three days good at $10,000; house starting to feel pinch for product.

United Artists (Publix-UA) (1,-700; 50-75-85)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). Dropped fast in fourth week, but still making good money considering comparatively long stay; $20,100; changes pictures evening of 24th to "Lincoln" (UA).

Woods (Jones) (1,200; 50-75-85)—"Atlantic" (BIP). Fair gross at $10,700; "Czar of Broadway" (U) replaced Sat. (20), with an "adults only" ruling from the ecensors.

PROVIDENCE HOLDS UP

"Angels" 2d Week, $13,000—"Diplomat" Over Their Heads

Providence, Dec. 23.

(Drawing Population, 315,000)
Weather: Favorable.

Business last week held up fairly well and grosses were evenly distributed. "Hell's Angels," in its second week at the State, managed to garner close to $13,000.

Estimates for Last Week

Loew's State (3,500; 15-50)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). Second and final week for around $13,000; okay. "Bat Whispers" (U) opened Dec. 19.

Paramount (2,200; 15-50)—"Follow the Leader" (Par). House has been in slump for over a month; low at $9,000.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 15-50)—"Fast and Loose" (Par) and "Fourth Alarm." Town is nuts on double features; this house always manages to come through when it has two; close to $11,000; not bad.

R-K-O Albee (2,500; 15-50)—"Boudoir Diplomat" (U). Feature over the average fan's head; opened Friday and pulled out Tuesday (16) with two shows cut on closing day. "Free Love" (U) in; close to $8,000 reported fair.

R-K-O Victory (1,600; 15-50)—"Madonna of the Streets" (Col), also "Wild Men of Kulihard" (Epic). Town fed up on animal pictures; $9,500, good.

Fay's (1,600; 15-50)—"Life of the Party" (WB) and Davey Lee on stage. Winnie Lightner picture played another Fay house couple of weeks ago; Davey Lee okay here and responsible for gross of close to $9,000, good.

EARLE CAPITAL'S BEST, $23,000—PAL, $19,000

Washington, Dec. 23.

(Est. White Population, 450,000)

One bright gross and a close second, with all of the others in the holiday slump.

Winnie Lightner, in person, and "Divorce Among Friends" got the Earle $23,000, the week's top. Palace, with its stage show and "Passion Flower," was next in line, with $19,000.

Estimates for Last Week

Columbia (Loew)—"Grumpy" (Par) (1,232; 35-50). Way low at $5,800; previous week's $9,000 rated disappointing.

Earle (Warner)—"Divorce Among Friends" (WB) and vaude (2,424; 35-50-60). Excellent business at $23,000; much of draw credited to Winnie Lightner in person.

Fox (Fox)—"Oh, for a Man" (Fox) stage show (3,434; 15-25-35-60). This $18,000 is not good.

Metropolitan (Warners)—"Captain Thunder." Reserved seats at $1; since they changed price policy here things have fallen; low $4,500.

Palace (Loew)—"Passion Flower" (M-G) stage show (2,363; 35-40-50-60). Up a little at $19,000.

Rialto (U)—"Extravagance" (Tiff) (1,987; 35-50-60). Down at $6,800.

R-K-O—"Fast and Loose" (Par) (1,875; 35-50). Light with $6,200.

Topeka Likes Its Laughs, $4,000 for Jayhawk, Okay

Topeka, Dec. 23.

(Drawing Population, 85,000)
Weather: Cool and fair

Comedy is what Topekans want. The two houses offering that sort of fare got normal business despite the annual pre-Christmas hoodoo.

Estimates for Last Week

Jayhawk (1,500; 50) (Fox) "Playboy of Paris" (Par). Only got $1,200 first three days; Wheeler and Woolsey last three days in "Half Shot" (Radio), $2,600, making week normal at $4,000, okay.

Isis (600; 35) (Ind) "Too Many Crooks." With McOwen stock players held last week's trade on strength of excellent vaude offerings; $1,000, nice.

DOING WELL TILL CHELSEA CLOSES

Monday's Reactionary Trend Halted After Early Selling—Net Changes on Day Despite New Troubles Are Only Fractional

BONDS HOLD STEADY

By AL GREASON

The picture stocks came through yesterday's session with only fractional changes, most of them on the down side, but a few net up. The reactionary tendencies of Monday were apparently being met and overcome as trading went into the third hour.

Just then news came that the State Banking Department had taken charge of the Chelsea bank, which was trying to stand off a depositors' run, and prices all along the line dipped until the close.

Situation had many points of resemblance to the course of trading of several days ago when the Street was first disturbed by rumors concerning the Bank of the U. S. As happened then, there was a hint yesterday that Wall Street banking powers were giving the market support to hearten traders and hold a troubled situation in hand for the time being.

Yesterday's market opened lower and during the first hour there was fairly heavy liquidation. Most of the amusement got into new low ground on the movement down from last week's tops, but they remained there only momentarily. Buying orders were thrown in and on the first show of strength the trading turned quiet, another point of resemblance to the early stages of last week's sharp break. For both days of this week it has been noted that decline comes with volume and the ticker lags during the mild rallies.

Yesterday's bond market continued to give encouragement to the bull party. It has right along been maintained that betterment in this section ought to be the forerunner of a turn in the financial tide. Yesterday the bond list met the bad news with a good front, the amusements showing but minute losses for the most part.

Advance Reversed

More than half the gains in picture stocks in last week's four days of sharp advance was cancelled over most of the recoup in Monday's setback. Volume was greatly reduced from the heavy trading during the break of early last week, but there were evidences of new liquidation in the way quotations came out on blocks up to 1,000 shares as prices receded. The news was against the market, including new bank runs in New York and the closing of a rather important institution in Philadelphia. Other incidents such as further weakness in commodities had their bearing on the film issues, but probably the detail that affected them most was a renewal of weakness in Paramount.

Paramount has been the amusement leader for years and bears the reputation of the nearest thing in the group to an investment rat-

London Slump Called "Normal" By Some West End Managers; 2 Films Are Averaging $17,500

INDIANAPOLIS DROPS OFF

Vaude for Indiana — House Did $17,000 Last Week

Indianapolis, Dec. 23.

(Drawing population, 450,000)
Weather: Cold

Folks with money were occupied with Christmas charity, making grosses light in downtown houses last week.

Skouras-Publix will inaugurate a new vaudeville policy Jan. 10, with Winnie Lightner, in an effort to stir up the Indiana. Local boys have conferred with New York offices and decided upon the vaude policy, replacing Charlie Davis, the m.c., and Publix presentation. B. V. Sturdevant, advertising manager, said the new policy will be advertised as vaudeville. Ruth Etting is booked the second week.

Indiana is a big house for vaude, with a 10-foot orchestra pit to overcome.

Estimates for Last Week

Indiana—Publix) (3,300; 25-50-65) "Along Came Youth" (Par). With Brooks and Ross, radio stars, only fair, $17,000.

Circle—(Publix) (2,600; 25-40-50) "Derelict" (Par). Had no special draw, $8,000.

Loew's Palace—(Loew's) (2,800; 25-35-50) "Hell's Angels" (UA). Not good on second week; only $7,000; drop of $8,300 from first week.

Apollo—(4th Ave.) (1,100; 25-35-50) "Oh, for A Man" (Fox). Off at $4,100.

Lyric—(4th Ave.) (2,000; 25-35-50) "Man to Man" (WB). Off at $8,000; big opening for Little Jack Little, WLW star, this week as Christmas attraction.

Ohio — (Publix). (1,400; 15-25) "Life of the Party" (WB). Poor at $1,900.

'ENGLISH' SHINES IN DULL MINN. WK.—$9,600

Minneapolis, Dec. 23.

(Drawing Population, 500,000)
Weather: Favorable

Usual pre-Christmas drop started last week.

"War Nurse," given a terrific lacing by one critic, opened big Saturday and Sunday, but dropped sharply the balance of the week.

Only really outstanding screen offering of the week was "Old English" at the Century, and even this film failed to do more than to keep the house out of the red. But helped by the presence of two former University of Minnesota football stars, Haycraft and Gibson, "Maybe It's Love," at the Lyric, did fairly.

Estimates for Last Week

Minnesota (Publix) (4,200; 75)—"War Nurse" (M-G) and Publix unit, "Neptune's Festival." Around $19,200, bad.

Century (Publix) (1,600; 75)—"Old English" (WB). Very well liked; Arliss a big favorite here; $9,600 profitable and fair.

State (Publix) (2,200; 60)—"River's End" (WB). Bickford and Knapp no cards here; Sennett comedy a strong asset; around $7,000, poor.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,200; 50)—"Maddona of Streets" (Col) and vaude. Just so-so and vaude not up to recent standard; off from recent weeks; about $10,500.

Seventh Street (R-K-O) (1,400; 50)—"Boudoir Diplomat" (U). Pleasing enough comedy, but no names in cast to pull; not the sort of stuff local fans fall for; around $3,500, poor.

Aster (Publix) (900; 35)—"Only Saps Work" (Par). Not heavy enough to mean much to box office; near $1,800, poor.

Grand (Publix) (1,100; 35)—"Way for a Sailor" (M-G), first half; "White Hell of Pitz Palu" (U) last half. Second loop runs; $2,200, fair.

London, Dec. 23.

West End cinema managers are divided in their estimate of the current pre-holiday slump at the boxoffice. One group maintains that the falling off is running true to form, amounting to between 10 and 15%, which is normal for the time of year.

A group of another view says attendance is off 30% and that this is the worst drop in years. Following are the figures for last week and the week before estimated on an average:

Capitol—"Devil with the Women" (Fox). In its fourth week is holding up surprisingly well for so long a run; around $13,500. "Oh, for A Man" (Fox) opens Boxing Day.

Carlton — "Animal Crackers" (Par). In fifth week is averaging around $14,000; "Crackers" was originally designed for a month's run but was continued on its good showing; now, Par figures that the school children on vacation can carry it along further.

Pavillion — "Hell's Angels" (UA). Is consistent and least affected by adverse conditions although it is one of the longest run features in town; it has never been below $17,-500; picture is staying until the middle of February, when house reverts to Cochran, who will use it for a new revue, whereupon "Angels" will take up its stay in another house.

Marble Arch—"Big House" (M-G). In third week; averaging $9,000; Canaries Sometimes Sing" replaces.

New Gallery—"A Warm Corner" (British made). In fifth week is grossing around $12,500; "Big Trail" (Fox) is scheduled to follow.

Tivoli—"Whoopee" (UA). In its eighth week is running to an average of $17,500; "One Heavenly Night" (UA) follows with Evelyn Laye.

Alhambra—"Just Imagine" opened to good business; as forecast, theatre has reverted to Stoll, who is continuing film policy and getting product wherever it is available; house policy will also include two flesh acts on weekly change; Pavillion is on twice daily policy, while the Carlton gives three shows a day.

Leicester Square — "Viennese Nights" (WB). First designed as Jack Buchanan theatre, opened Dec. 19 with this picture, which was well regarded by invited audience; show trade observers call it draggy and think it needs cutting; house did $4,000 Saturday (20) and with two shows last Sunday added $3,000.

'Min's' Big $19,600 In Pre-Xmas Seattle

Seattle, Dec. 23.

(Drawing population, 450,000)
Weather: Cold

Two attractions in town stemmed the Xmas tide, and these were "Min and Bill," at the Fox, and "Hell's Angels," at the Music Box. Second week of air film so good that Hamrick is holding it for a third week. First time anything has held that long here in a blue moon. This, too, after two weeks of "Angels" at the Fox, road showed at $1 general admish.

Estimates for Last Week

Paramount (Pub) (3,106; 25-35-50)—"Derelict" (Par). Lots of fillers used at this all-sound show; rumor stage shows to return after Fox West Coast takes this house over end of month; Bancroft film low at $5,950.

Fifth Ave. (Fox) (2,500; 25-60)—"Princess and Plumber" (Fox). Dandy stage show for $11,600, fair.

Fox (2,300; 25-60)—"Min and Bill" (M-G). Great week; Sunday proved record opener with $19,600.

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (900; 25-35-50)—"Man to Man" (WB); $900 in three days and pulled; with "Extravagance" in until Xmas.

Music Box (Hamrick) (1,000; 25-35-50-75)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). Second week and nice clip; extend ed one more week; $4,000.

Liberty (Jensen-von Herberg) (2,-000; 25-35-50)—"Numbered Men" (FN). Feeling pre-Christmas crimp, although started fair; $5,700.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,700; 25-60)—"East is West" (U). Didn't click; $8,600.

L. A. Theatres Not as Bad Off as Stores—State Gets $23,000 and Cri. Near $16,000

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 1,500,000)
Weather: Fair

Everything off per usual on the pre-holiday ease-off although so far as this city is concerned they are not staying away from the theatres to go shopping. Mercantile establishments are getting even worse absent treatment than the theatres. Contrarily, some of the established houses were have little cause for complaint everything considered.

Criterion's $16,000 with "Paid" is nothing to weep about, and when the State and Pantages, with stage shows, hit under $25,000 and over $10,000, that's an indicator that the fans want their amusement.

There have been a couple of negative examples. "Ex Flame," at the Orpheum, is being jerked after tonight (Tuesday). "Hook, Line and Sinker" substitutes, which makes the second jerker at the Orpheum in two weeks. "Boudoir Diplomat" was prematurely abrogated to make room for "Ex Flame."

"Tom Sawyer," on its second run at the Wilshire, Beverly Hills, will gross $6,500, which is okay and evidences a kid draw. The juvenile holidayers are all expected to bolster local biz and stage interludes are being ballyhooed accordingly with the kid appeal to the fore.

Estimates for Last Week

Carthay Circle (Fox)—"Min and Bill" (M-G) (1,500; 75-$1.50) (5th week). Under $10,000.

Chinese (Fox)—"Morocco" (Par) (2,028; 50-$1.50) (4th week). Dropped off $5,000, receipts for fourth week being below $15,000.

Criterion (Fox)—"Paid" (M-G) (1,600; 25-75). (2d week). Strong $16,000 outstanding gross of week.

Egyptian (UA-Fox)—"Billy the Kid" (M-G) (1,800; 20-65). Bad at $8,600; picture was screened without Realite (wide screen).

State (Low-Fox)—"Princess and the Plumber" (Fox) (2,024; 25-$1). Helped by Laurel-Hardy comedy and Meglin kids on stage; $23,000 all right.

Orpheum—"Ex-Flame" (Liberty) (2,270; 50-75). This indie got $2,500 for five days, being jerked for "Hook, Line, and Sinker" (Radio).

Pantages (Fox)—"Remote Control" (M-G) (2,700; 20-40-65-90). When a third run feature gets $11,000 in this house it isn't bad at all.

Paramount (Publix)—"Follow the Leader" (Par) (3,595; 25-75). Helped by Mitzi Green in person, but poor at $15,000.

R-K-O—"Captain Thunder" (WB) (2,950; 30-65). Under $10,000; bad.

United Artists (Pub-UA)—"Lincoln" (UA) (2,100; 25-$1) (2d, final week). Educational appeal for youngsters just didn't happen; very poor and out.

Downtown (WB)—"River's End" (WB) (1,800; 50-75). If anticipated Xmas Day business materializes may hit $14,000, but generally it's off.

Hollywood (WB)—"River's End" (WB) (2,756; 25-75). Day and dater at Uptown house likewise off as Downtown with $12,000 indicated; "The Lash" (FN) is next day and date booking, with this house only playing it on wide film.

GOLDEN GATE FRISCO'S HAPPY HOUSE; $16,600

San Francisco, Dec. 23.

Some poor grosses last week. R-K-O's Golden Gate seemed the single exception, its takings not only reaching normal but topping average.

Estimates for Last Week

Fox (5,000; 50-65-75-$1)—"Princess and the Plumber" (Fox). Opened light with last half of week below first; dismal $30,000.

Warfield (Fox) (2,672; 50-65-90)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). In third stanza slipped heavily to $12,000.

Paramount (Publix) (2,698; 35-50-65-$1)—"Along Came Youth" (Par). Opened below average and failed to come back; $10,000; bad.

California (Publix) (2,200; 35-50-65-90)—"Lottery Bride" (UA). Showed slight spurt over preceding week; about $12,000, not good.

St. Francis (Publix) (1,375; 35-50-90)—"A Soldier's Plaything" (Wil). Swan song for St. Francis as a first run house; goes in for foreign languages from now on; bow out was scarcely $5,000.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,270; 35-50-65)—"Ex-Flame" (Lib). Poorest gross since going for picture policy; barely $6,000.

Golden Gate (R-K-O) (2,485; 30-40-50-65)—"Madonna of the Streets" (Col.) and vaude. Only really happy house in town last week; got business that met the nut and plenty to take to the bank; did $16,600.

"HALF SHOT" BEST IN MONT'L WITH $16,000

Montreal, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 600,000)
Weather: Zero and mild

Pre-Christmas week, as expected, was tough. No special shows at any of the theatres, while mercury went out of sight early in the week.

Loew's had the best of it and made a surprising hit with "Half Shot at Sunrise" on $16,000. Capitol with good unit and "Cat Creeps" was only $14,000, and Palace, despite popularity locally of Winnie Lightner, hit about $13,000, both low.

Estimates for Last Week

Palace (FP) (2,700; 40-75) "Life of Party" (WB). Winnie Lightner couldn't round up fans last week, and $13,000, poor.

Capitol (FP) (2,700; 40-75) "Cat Creeps" (U). Spook pictures probably overdone here; $14,000, low.

Loew's (FP) (3,200; 40-65) "Half Shot" (Radio). One of big hits of year; gross jumped to $16,000; could easily have run another week.

Princess (CT) (2,300; 35-60) "Lottery Bride" (UA). Fair; $8,500.

Imperial (FP) (1,900; 25-40) Double bill. Held around usual figure; $3,800.

FAIR WEEK FOR CINCY, 'MIN'S' 2D WK., $16,000

Cincinnati, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 700,000)
Weather: favorable

Traditional pre-Christmas business was apparent last week but grosses weren't and too bad at that. Capitol and Family had the only gains of about $500 each.

Estimates for Last Week

Albee (R-K-O) (3,300; 35-75) "Silver Horde" (Radio) and vaude. Ordinary screen fare and lively stage show; low at $20,000.

Lyric (R-K-O) (1,400; 30-50) "Min and Bill" (M-G). Dandy at $16,000 in second week.

Capitol (R-K-O) (2,000; 30-50) "Follow the Leader" (Par). Fair at $14,500.

Keith's (Lisbon) (1,600; 30-50) "On Your Back" (Fox). Normal, $5,500.

Strand (R-K-O) (1,350; 25-50) "Big Money" (Pathe). Over $5,000. Fair.

Family (R-K-O) (1,140; 25-40) "Under Texas Skies" (Ind) and "Naughty Flirt" (FN). Good at $4,700.

New Haven Quiet, but 'Nurse' Good at $15,600

New Haven, Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 300,000)
Weather: Favorable

Most of the houses were quiet prior to Xmas. City has enjoyed an open winter to date and this has helped to keep the local theatres from slumping too heavily.

Fox-Poli had the edge for the the week with a good $15,600 on "War Nurse." Film had been advertised as "not understood or appreciated by the younger generation and not recommended for their entertainment." Consequently house drew heavy on the adults, especially the femmes.

Estimates for Last Week

Fox-Poli (Fox) (3,040; 65), "War Nurse" (M-G), and unit. At $15,600 exceptional for this time of season.

Paramount (Publix) (2,353; 65), "Only Saps Work" (Par), and unit. Moderate at $14,800.

Roger Sherman (Publix) (2,200; 60), "Truth About Youth" (Par), and "Dixiana" (Radio). Off at $5,000.

TIFF'S $2 "X"

Tiffany doesn't expect to $2 on Broadway again until James Whale, director of Tiff's last show window special "Journey's End," completes "X Marks the Spot."

At the earliest, this picture will not reach Broadway until March 1.

'War Nurse' and Stage To $15,200 Ptland.; 'Madonna,' Orph., $11,500

Portland, Ore., Dec. 23.
(Drawing Population, 400,000)

"Hell's Angels" went into a second week and picture is likely to hang up a record even in these times. Weak opposish from other houses aided.

Dufwin legit stock had no guest star and slipped back, but held an even keel with "Polly Preferred."

Estimates for Last Week

Broadway (Fox) (2,000; 25-60)—"War Nurse" (M-G) and stage show. Good at $15,200.

Paramount (Publix) (3,500; 25-50)—"Follow the Leader" (Par). Comedy got fair results; $8,200.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,000; 25-60)—"Madonna of Streets" (Col) and vaude. Well exploited and clicked; local high school film also proved draw; good enough at $11,500.

United Artists (Parker-Fox) (1,200; 25-60)—"Hell's Angels" (UA) (2d week). Going strong; may hold for third; okay, $11,000.

Music Box (Hamrick) (2,000; 15-35)—"Man to Man" (WB). Got little attention; $400.

Dufwin (Dufwin Co.) (1,500; 25-$1.25). Dufwin stock players did "Polly Preferred" and clicked for good enough week; $6,000.

DETROIT STAYS QUIET; FOX FAIR, $31,000

Detroit, Dec. 23.

Prex-Xmas business showed only one bright spot. It was evident the public was shopping or hiding. From reports of merchants they must have been hiding.

"A Lady's Morals" and "Kismet" were held over only to give the succeeding pictures a break to open Xmas Day.

Estimates for Last Week

Michigan—"Pay-Off" (WB) (4,045; 35-50-75). Four Marx Bros. Probably kept house from going under; $36,800.

Fox—"The Dancers" (Fox) (5,100; 15-25-50). Better than expected; about $31,000.

Fisher—"Only Saps Work" (Par) (2,300; 35-50-75). Well liked comedy; $18,700 fair.

Downtown (R-K-O)—"Boudoir Diplomat" (U) (2,700; 15-25-50). Pulled after five days. "Big Money" (Pathe) opened Wednesday and got good two days; five days of "Diplomat" meant only about $6,000.

United Artists—"Lady's Morals" (M-G) (3,300; 35-50-75-90). Class picture drew class trade, but not enough of it; $8,600 poor.

Paramount—"Kismet" (WB) (3,200; 35-50-75). Well liked, but failed to attract important money; held only to keep "Morocco" (Par) for Xmas opening; poor with $11,700.

PATHE WANTS MONTGOMERY

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Starting date on Constance Bennett's next for Pathe is held up while waiting for conclusion of negotiations with Metro for Bob Montgomery as leading man.

Bennett picture is based on "Purple And Fine Linen", made several years ago as a silent by Corinne Griffith. Paul Cavanaugh will be the third angle to the triangle.

Marcia Manners' First

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Marcia Manners, American girl discovered by a Paramount scout in the Milan opera company, goes into "Have You Got It?" as her first.

Hughes-Franklin Deal About Set, Circuit Will Take in Over 250 Houses

DISPUTE OVER SHORT

RLA and WB Both Have 2-Reelers One Based On Same Story

Referee Samuel A. Berger was named by the N. Y. Supreme Court to hear the issues surrounding the production rights to "Five Minutes from the Station," a talking short which has been produced separately with different casts by both Recording Laboratories of America and Warners. The RLA subject is being distributed by Central Film Co., of which Philip M. Brown is the head.

Brown sued for an injunction against WB under an alleged exclusive contract to distribute the short in N. Y. and elsewhere from RLA. The injunction was denied without prejudice. WB claims it bought the rights to the story legitimately from Elaine S. Carrington, the author. Latter, also named as party defendant, claims WB only has rights to the story. It's a two-reeler.

WB also maintains that if Brown has a suit it's against RLA and not Warners. RLA alleges it bought the story from Miss Carrington, through negotiations with "Murray" Phillips but whom Sidney Phillips, agent, affidavits as maybe being himself. Latter, however, denies closing a deal with RLA although admitting negotiations. Phillips, whether "Murray" or Sidney, act d for Miss Carrington.

Meantime, both WB and Brown are distributing two different shorts based on the same story.

EAST-WEST IDEA GROWS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Metro will follow the lead of Paramount and Fox in a plan of east-west switching of departmental heads for the broader vision angle.

Under present plans Samuel Marks, scenario head, and Ben Piazza, talent scout, will spend several months a year in New York while Bertram Block, New York scenario editor, and Al Altman, on talent there, will come here.

Universal is also considering east-west exchanges.

Oakie in "Dude"

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Jack Oakie's next at Paramount will be "Dude Ranch," from the novel, "Lone Rider of the Mojave," by Milton Krims.

In the cast will be Stuart Erwin, Mitzi Green, Eugene Pallette and Skeets Gallagher.

"Moon" Switch

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Thelma Todd has been taken out of "June Moon" at Paramount, with June McCloy moving over in her place from another spot in the picture.

Sammy Coslow is technical advisor, inasmuch as Coslow was a music publisher before joining Par as a song writer.

Chi.'s Big State St. Houses Must Endure 3-Yr. Subway Digging Siege

Chicago, Dec. 23.

State street picture houses are getting ready to weather a three-year stretch of subway digging, figured to throw the street out of the big business lanes until the opening of the World's Fair.

City has just okayed a $40,000,000 project which calls for digging 35 foot subways. Houses affected are the Publix-B & K ace house, Chicago, Roosevelt, State-Lake, Warner's Orpheum, Jones burlesque house, the Rialto and the Castle, privately owned.

Street has always been the shopping thoroughfare of the city, but with the forthcoming changes many are wondering how they will get by. Larger shops, such as the Fair, Marshall Field, etc., with entrances a block away on Wabash plan on using the latter street exclusively during the three years.

There is no question in the minds of theatre men that the digging will give their business a bad bump for a long period. Many have tried to figure an angle to beat the game, and the boys are still deep in thought.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Harold Franklin's theatre circuit deal, embracing seven of the largest indie theatre chains, is now on the threshold of closing with Howard Hughes financing.

Franklin admits the Hughes angle and also the probability of ultimately tying in with Joe Schenck's new United Artists circuit, which was previously denied.

Circuit total will be over 250 houses of which half are already in operation. Circuit will eventually be from coast to coast but is starting first from California to Texas and Oklahoma.

STUDIOS MOULD JUV WRITERS FOR SCREEN

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Producers' search for youthful player talent to be groomed for stardom is also being extended to the writing end.

Plan now is to take young writers who show prospects, either in story or playwriting, and mould them to the technique of the screen. Admitted need is for new blood in the writing field and for freshness of ideas.

Producers believe that young writing blood can be secured for experimental purposes at rock bottom prices, and as only a three or six months' contract is at stake the studios stand to lose little but profit heavily.

By being able to talk cash as soon as the prodigies get into print or on the boards, picture men hope to corner talent which otherwise might be headed for the story or stage play fields.

Three recent cases are in line with this plan. Carman Barnes, 19, author of "School Girl," was yanked to Hollywood by Paramount as soon as her story was produced on the stage. Betty White, a year older, also went Paramount after the novelization of her school warn. "I Lived This Story." Helen Mienardi, school girl writer from Wisconsin, is now under contract to Metro.

Hughes Wants d'Arrast On "Queer People" Meg.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Howard Hughes wants Harry D'Arrast to direct "Queer People" after the French director gets back around New Year's from doing his next picture at Paramount, Long Island.

D'Arrast, who did "Laughter," is slated to start on "Week End," a Colbert-March-Miriam Hopkins piece, for Par.

Title's Foreign Trouble

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

While waiting to clear foreign rights to the title of "It Pays to Advertise," Paramount has switched the working name of the picture to "Have You Got It?" Original handle will go back as soon as the foreign entanglements are adjusted.

Meanwhile, Paramount decided it wouldn't wait for Buddy Rogers, scheduled for this picture, who is confined in Toledo following an appendix operation. It started production this week with Norman Foster and Carol Bombard in the leads.

GRAHAMS' TREATMENT

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Garett and Carroll Graham, writers of "Queer People," have been engaged by Howard Hughes to prepare the screen treatment of their book based upon life in Hollywood.

IN ORIGINAL PARTS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Sidney Toler and Lila Bennett, from legit, are starting picture work with their original stage parts in "It's a Wise Child."

Metro is bringing them here.

WB Has $14,500,000 Building Plans, 9 Houses Under Way—List 14 More

Warners is the most active, currently, as regards building of any big theatre circuits in the business. Where others have called a halt on boxoffice expansion, WB is now spending $4,500,000 on nine new houses and has plans for 14 others to be erected at an additional outlay of $8,000,000.

Theatres representing an investment of $1,000,000 each will be opened in Erie, Youngstown, and Milwaukee, early in March.

Plans for new houses in Perth Amboy and Hackensack have just been okayed. These theatres will probably not be ready until late in the spring. Morgantown, West Va., and Torrington, Conn., are also in the new line-up. Most of the theatres are buildings for which plans include offices and stores.

Warners new theatre acquiring policy, however, is one differentiating from the old. Established theatres, except in few instances, are being passed up. New properties are deemed all important. Where old houses are being taken over, the motive is simply to lease and cut down competition.

The expense of keeping in condition and renovating old houses during the past year alone represents an item of approximately $2,000,000, it is learned officially. This includes "jobs" on all 600 theatres now being operated by Warners.

The final okay on the $8,000,000 outlay is being held up by the Warners until after the first of the year.

20-Page History

A history of film business, from Tom Edison to Harley Clarke, is told in 20 typewritten pages, which include 33 chapters, by Sidney Rechetnik, Warner publicist.

It took Sid many nights during the past two months to collect the data. And it started out as an assignment—the toughest given in any center of learning—from a prof in City College, where Sid is studying economics.

SAY SCHNITZER WILL BE COAST LOT'S BIZ HEAD

Joe Schnitzer will be the business head of the Coast studio, for Radio. This final, it is reported although where Schnitzer will make his headquarters has not been decided. Schnitzer at present with Radio pictures.

Move may make Schnitzer one of the outstanding transcontinental commuters. It is already being figured in New York that during some periods he will commute from Coast to Coast as often as twice monthly.

Schnitzer's present stay in Hollywood, is officially recorded as affecting William Le Baron who is still in charge of production.

Eastern executives claim that Radio is spending $2,000,000 more on its new schedule, than the previous one with the extra money having Schnitzer's okay.

ERPI and Graybar Talking Over Deal

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Negotiations going on between Graybar and ERPI, both subsids of Western Electric, indicate that ERPI may be aiming to enter the non-theatrical field through acquisition of the public address system of Graybar. This system is used extensively in halls, sports arenas and auditoriums. Nothing definite so far, although an admitted confab on the deal has been revealed.

Under certain license arrangements both ERPI and Graybar are subsids of W.E., hence they have permission to interchange on patents and so forth, but the taking over of the public address system means a through deal.

Par's Kid Stock

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Paramount is evidently collecting a stock troupe of kid players for juvenile appeal features on the new program.

Latest youngster given a term contract is Jackie Searle who played in "Tom Sawyer."

Philly Papers Go to Bat on Sexy Film Ads

Philadelphia, Dec. 23.

Salacious picture advertising or any advertisement which calls attention to any undue sex exploitation of films, will be refused by the bulk of Philadelphia newspapers. This was the decision reached last week following a particularly hectic session when several advertisements were ejected bodily from various newspapers.

Movement toward cleaner film advertisements materialized several weeks ago when the "Public Ledger" took exception to Fox exploitation of "The Virtuous Sin" and demanded more conservative copy. Following the dispute, W. M. Goldman, of the Stanley-Warner Company, and David Idzal, of Fox, were interviewed and expressed willingness to co-operate with the papers.

Things reached a crisis Thursday, however, when both the "Bulletin" and the "Evening Ledger" took exception to copy forwarded for "The Passion Flower" at the Mastbaum, "Free Love" at the Boyd, and "Oh for a Man" at the Fox. Result was that the former paper removed the advertisements from its earlier editions and only substituted them later when they themselves censored the copy to fit the paper's requirements. The ads ran through the "Ledger" with the understanding that in the future judgment of the fitness or the salacity of the copy was to be left in the hands of William Shugard, theatrical advertising manager of the "Ledgers."

Backfire from the sex advertisements reached the newspapers through several complaints from readers. One of the prime movers in the affair was the Catholic Alumni Association's motion picture branch, a subsidiary organization of the Catholic Welfare Association, while several preachers of various denominations have chosen to denounce current film advertising campaigns from their pulpits. Trouble has been brewing along these lines for several months here.

Kentucky League Calls Sun. Mercy Coin 'Tainted'

Louisville, Dec. 23.

Health and Welfare League of Richmond, Ky., refused to accept $68 obtained from a charity picture show held Sunday, Dec. 14. According to the League the money is "tainted" because the show was given on the Sabbath. Foodstuffs and a large quantity of clothing donated at a Saturday morning benefit was accepted.

Grand jury here refused to indict the operators of the Sunday benefit and jurors in police court twice declared the theatre not guilty of violating the Sunday closing law.

Money is being held in a Richmond bank and will be doled out by the mayor at his discretion.

CHECKERS FIND OUT TOO MUCH

Small Towns Exhibs Wary of Gossip — Exchanges Dubious of Possible Intimacy of Bad Boy Exhibs and Permanently Located Checkers—Too Much Information

C. O. D. ODIUM

Chicago, Dec. 23.

New contral checking system is starting to receive squawks both from the small town exhibs and exchanges in this territory. Objections come not from the chronic trouble makers but from exhibitors who are perfectly willing to be checked. The objections principally concern the gigantic centralization of information.

Exhibs in the minor hamlets squawk that they are being checked daily by the same person who is a resident of the community. He is able to gather vital information concerning the business of the theatre, and if he is a gossip may seriously injure the owner locally.

In this view also lies the objection of the exchange, since the continual association of the checker and the owner may get them so friendly that they are liable to "do business" together. Under the old system the exchange checkers rotated, and seldom visited any one theatre more than once a month. In this case, if the exhibitor was known to be honest, no checker was needed, and if he were on the doubtful list, it was believed particularly harmful to allow him to become friendly with a sole checker.

Personal and Private

What has caused so much trouble in the past between exchanges and exhibs, is the matter of C. O. D. films. Exhibs complained that the small town expressman was prone to gossip the facts he learned from the C. O. D. tags.

In many instances, these gossipy stationmasters in the small towns spread rumors that the credit of the theatre was n.g. because film companies would do business with him only on a collect on delivery basis. Besides this reflection on the theatre, the owner objected to the fact that these express agents spread the news that such-and-such a film cost $1, while the theatre, charging 50 cents a ducat, grossed more than $250 that night. In a small town this gossip spreads over night.

Learning Plenty

The central bureau of this checking service, located in Chicago, is daily learning the innermost secrets of theatres and exchanges in almost every locality throughout the country.

Information thus gathered is of inestimable value and importance. It tells whether certain spots can stand additional theatres, and it can direct the development of theatres in towns. Both exhibs and exchanges are frankly wary of this tremendous centralization of information, since used wrongfully it could wreck a lot of things.

No Warner Bonus

Warner employees have been notified that they will receive no Christmas bonus this year.

Harry Warner Confined

Harry Warner has been confined to his home for the past few days with a badly injured ankle suffered when his horse fell with him.

Warner head was away from his office all of last week. It is expected he will be on top sometime this week.

Proposal of MPTOA and Allied As One Group Stalls as Leaders Depart—Fear Future Explosion

Filling In

Detroit, Dec. 23.

At a benefit run by local Elks for the unemployed at the Fox theatre the manager of the theatre was stuck for a number two act.

Finally, it was set by getting the Governor-elect, the Governor, and the Mayor to take the spot.

JUDGE DECIDES FOR HOUSE IN EQUIP CASE

General Talking Pictures (De Forest) plans an appeal to the Appellate Division from the recent ruling of the N. Y. Supreme Court which denied the company relief in an order to show cause against the Rhinelander Theatre Company, operators of the Monroe theatre, 1456 First avenue. Suit centers around removal of G.T.P. equipment. Latter firm claimed removal was a violation of contract.

According to the opinion rendered by Supreme Court Justice Gavegan, leasing of equipment, even for a stipulated time, carries with it no exclusive condition that compels an exhibitor to maintain and operate said equipment if it should wear out, unless such an exclusive condition is stipulated or inferred. The contract with the Monroe theatre, while a lease for 10 years, according to the court, purported not to include any such exclusive condition.

In the case of the Monroe the house had paid up fully for its equipment lease and argued that no answer to the request to show cause was necessary since it had already removed the machine. With the machine out no injunction could be issued for relief of something already done. Monroe replaced with W.E.

Equipment companies cannot include an exclusive operating clause owing to conditions of the Clayton act that might interpret such a clause as against trade practice.

Differences between the Monroe theatre operators and G.T.P. arose over a new contract wherein Monroe asked for certain conditions which G.T.P. declined to grant.

Huges Will Drop Two Copy 'Suits' on 'Angels'

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

The two federal suits against First National Pictures, charging that "Dawn Patrol" was a lift on Caddo's "Hell's Angels" and Gainsborough's "Journey's End," will be moved dismissed within two weeks.

Settlement of the matter without trial is being negotiated by Neil McCarthy on behalf of Howard Hughes, prime complainant. Conditions of settlement will likely be concessions, not cash.

TWO WAYS FOR TIERNEY

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Harry Tierney, under contract to Radio, has adjusted his arrangement so as to write for Broadway as well.

He is doing a show with Guy Bolton for the stage. Latter meanwhile in collabing with the Gershwins for Fox.

For weeks chiefs of the various indie exhib tribes have been in pow-wow. A third party, not a warrior, is credited with having brought them into conversation to possibly push allied exhibitors and the MPTOA together as one group.

Abram Myers, head of Allied Exhibitors, has been sitting in the New York tent of M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, rightfully the parent organization in age and financially betriended by disciples of Will Hays.

The main idea is for the MPTOA to take over Allied and Myers and the latter's salary of $25,000 a year plus several of his lieutenants, with per annums of $10,000. Also the commitments of the intermediary which the MPTOA could absorb.

The above, according to authenticated reports, is about as far as the MPTOA-Allied merger has gotten. Both Lightman and Myers have gone back to their respective homes in Washington and Memphis. They may meet again after New Year's.

Next Meeting Feared

It's the next meeting which is feared by fildom's diplomats. Should the blow-up be too decided a lot of harm can be done it is pointed out.

Working as individual organizations, with an understanding of mutuality, is okay. That was understood as the text of Sidney Kent's address to all indies a year ago. Since then, and especially recently, the get-together has been interpreted in literal fashion by a few.

In the final analysis it's up to the Hays Organization if the financial status of such a new set-up is considered. At present Hays members are paying an admitted 90 percent of MPTOA's expenses. Whether the Hays group would okay taking on Allied's, which have salaries never considered by the MPTOA, is a matter which is doubted in some producer quarters.

M. P. Lightman, new president of the MPTOA, is known for his sincerity and effort to make good in the job. He is working without salary.

TRI-CITY NEWS BREAK PLANNED BY WB-FN

Warners and First National will try out a new news dispensing idea for Chicago shortly. Publicity department will spot a special man in Chi who will release news items to the press simultaneously with New York and Los Angeles. If the effort gets over, similar routines may be adopted for Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston, etc.

Scheme is to have the daily studio wire to New York disseminated as usual, in Manhattan, but relayed back to Chicago as well as the coast with the stories marked for the dates upon which they're to be released. This will give Chicago the same time break on all special items as New York and L. A.

It will be a simultaneous splurge in three major spots for WB-FN happenings. It's Charlie Einfeld's brain child.

Only 2 Radio Pictures Hold Over Into '30

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Radio will have only two completed pictures unreleased Jan. 1. They are "Cimarron" and the Wheeler-Woolsey "Accused." Everything else will be ready in the market. This includes the recently completed "Half Shot Shorty," "Hook, Line and Sinker" and "The Road Back."

Those in production and ready to carry over into the new year are "Kept Husbands," "Bachelor Apartments" and "Private Secretary."

Pictures May Be Going Into Their Purest Year As Industry Tightens Up

Film industry may be swinging into its purest of all years. Highest circles admit that sex on the screen and in the newspapers is being relegated to the ashcan.

An avalanche of complaints is actually behind the battle being waged against salacious advertising by the producers. Communications flocked into producers in such abundance that film men decided to take the reins in their own hands or face what is conceded would eventually have become a storm of public disavowals.

Sex, it is admitted within high film circles, had, prior to the producers' showdown in the Hays office a week ago, reached proportions where it was getting beyond the control of guardians of the industry. This rising wave of wild publicity and titles, plus the resultant reaction, impelled the combined producers' edict against the play on sex, it is now said.

Producer Has Following

The attention being drawn to advertising is predicted to tighten more than ever Hollywood observation of the Hays production code. One producer is likely to highlight in a 1931 cycle of puritanical screen love making.

This producer, unsolicited, is bringing to himself the comment of many in the trade. One remark is that he actually has a public following, that the public is learning the consistency of the ingredients going into each of his pictures. Self-restraint and subtlety are reflected in all of his offerings, according to spokesmen who would have other producers pattern their goods after his for the good of the present sex issue.

Hughes, Milestone Can't Agree on "Page" Leads

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Lewis Milestone and Howard Hughes are still battling over the leads in "Front Page." Only person not tested for the male part so far is Bull Montana.

With the exception of the two leads the cast is filled. Those engaged are E. E. Horton, Mary Brian, James Gleason, Walter Cattlett, Fred Howard, Matt Moore, Phil Tead, Louis Wolheim, Frank McHugh and Clarence Wilson.

Roach's April Shutdown

Culver City, Dec. 23.

The Hal Roach studios plan to stay dark during April, when the yearly schedule will be completed.

During that siesta the hard worked comedy team of Laurel and Hardy, now cavorting through two foreign versions simultaneously, expect to join a studio party to Panama.

U Okays Hamilton

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

After looking at a trial comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton, Universal has given the comedian a contract for five additional shorts.

Lloyd came on the lot for the one picture, with options. Harry Edwards directed.

HOXIE'S NEW OUTFIT

Texas Co. Will Make Westerns—Takes Lease on Old Fort

Galveston, Dec. 23.

Jack Hoxie, Inc., is the name of a new corporation which plans to make westerns in the Davis mountains of Texas. Company formed by Hoxie and a number of Oklahomans.

Company claims it has a 25-year lease on old Fort Davis, about 60 miles north of the Mexican border, comprising a tract of 640 acres and 40 buildings erected by the army 75 years ago.

SHORTER TERMS FOR STUDIOS' NEW WRITERS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Picture-to-picture basis or three-month contracts for writers is getting to be the rule in the studios instead of six months' and year contracts as formerly. Heretofore it has not been unusual for the major studios to sign up a writer for a year on the strength of a published book or story.

A number of these writers have been so much overhead at the studios. Some have failed to click and have spent most of their time batting out stories for themselves on the studio's time.

New arrangement has them coming in on a flat rates for a single story, irrespective of the time it takes to turn out the original. Alternative is a three-months' contract, which gives the studio a chance to find out if the writer has anything to offer for pictures.

W. B. TAKES AUTHORS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

After buying "Public Enemy" from John Bright and Kubec Glasman, Warners' decided to put the authors on the regular writing staff at a minimum guarantee of 10 weeks.

Their first assignment is the adaptation and dialog for their own story in collaboration with Harvey Thew.

Harrigan Back With Fox?

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

William Harrigan, released by Fox five weeks ago, may return to that studio shortly to play Charlie Chan in "Charlie Chan Carries On."

Harrigan, now in the east, made satisfactory tests for the part.

RCA Also Has Way To Lessen Ground Niose

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Within a few days RCA will announce the perfection of a new device which will cut down ground noises in Photophone recording. It's similar to ERPI's so-called noiseless apparatus.

ERPI device, which automatically adjusts the vibration ribbons in the light valve to the volume of sound current, was demonstrated this month to Coast technicians after a tryout by Paramount on "The Right to Love" and also on the United Artists lot.

NEW GERSHWIN STORY

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

With Fox working on a new Gershwin story, the former title of "Skyline" has been temporarily switched to an original being prepared by Rowland Brown and Courtney Terrett. Brown may direct.

Fox Will Not Weed Houses at Bargain Prices—Makes 2 B'klyn Deals

Fox Theatres disclaim any weeding out process of houses. While aiming to sell whenever and wherever it may be deemed advisable, it is not the intention of the company to strike for bargain letouts. It's straight biz and, according to official dictum, only where an actual profit to Fox can be realized.

Recent report that the circuit was aiming to release some theatres brought an avalanche of bargain hunters who were disappointed.

Only two deals so far. These are for four houses in Brooklyn where Fox not only gets a film deal but where the circuit also realized a cash profit. Coincidentally Fox sold three of the four houses to Henry Siegel and Henry Clay, former owners. Latter originally sold the three houses they bought back—the Berkshire, Ritz and Park—to Fox under the old regime for around $160,000. In repurchasing they supposedly paid something like $245,000 besides taking over the Fox leases.

Other house sold went to David Kaisertsien. This, too, was in Brooklyn, the house being the National, at Washington avenue and Prospect avenue, seating around 1,275.

Except for the Park, which has around 15 years to go on the present lease, the other houses go for 23 years, remainder of present leases. Kaiserstein is reported as paying around $10,000 yearly for his theatre.

It's on definite authority that Publix will not buy any houses for maybe a year, if at all, in the U. S. Also that the circuit may begin the shift to local owner-management any time in certain houses and spots. On the buying angle, however, Fox stands otherwise. Also Warners. Both WB and Fox intend to continue buying for profit or position.

The latest Fox deal with the independents was maneuvered by Harry Arthur, general manager of Fox Theatres, and Louis Cohen, realty head, who officially joins Fox Jan. 1.

'Star' Review System Dominates Chi. Sector—Odd Sequels and Abuses

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Custom of the Chicago "Tribune" and "Liberty," magazine to rate pictures in their reviews by the star system is bringing about some peculiar conditions through the midwest where these two publications carry weight.

One star, at the head of a review, means a fairly good picture; two, good; three, excellent; four, extraordinary. A no-star review just another film.

Chicago independent house recently used bally men to intone the words "Four star picture, step inside." Generally the fronts of these houses are plastered with four star arrangements, with the name of the picture, and stars side tracked for the emphasis on the review stars. Other spots in this territory, the moment they get word a four starrer is on the way, hire a couple of girls who are on the telephone all day saying, "The Inkpot has a four star picture next week."

One town, in Iowa, has a stack of gigantic stars which cover the front of the house. When a good picture rolls around these are plastered over the entrance so no one can mistake the plea.

Fireworks To Brag

Another spot in northern Illinois uses fireworks at night in front the theater. In this spot the natives have come to know that a display of sparklers and rockets means a four star picture next week.

In distant Cincinnati "Whoopee" a (U. A.), "Liberty" four star offering, brought out 1,500 kids who paraded with stars and copies of the review on sticks. The youngsters went in fours and kept it up for a couple of days.

One village of 20,000 sends four star postcards to all telephone subscribers in town whenever such a designated picture is due. Other small houses tie-up with merchants and have four star windows for a preceding week. In this connection a small canning plant, turning out tomatoes wrapped in tin, in which the local theatre man has an interest, calls its brand "The Four Star." On the merry weeks these tomatoes get a terrific play in all the shop windows.

Indicative of how the idea is spreading the "Illinois Farmer," a semi-monthly of 100,000 circulation, has added a picture page with Al Baugh as critic. Baugh comes to Chicago to catch all the big pictures, but instead of rating them by stars he is using various colored ribbons, as is done for horses and prize cattle. Many sheets in the midwest are following along the star line, using emblems of hearts and diamonds to replace the stars.

Ignore Text

Those in the know claim many don't ever read the reviews but rely on the number of stars at the head to influence which theater they will attend.

It's a well known fact in Chicago that many patrons buying tickets at the box-office ask if it is a four star film. If the answer is affirmative they go in, if not they pass on. Many don't even know the name of the picture until they sit down in the theatre.

Mae Tinee, of the Chicago "Tribune," is the most potent of the star-fixers. Showmen and exchange managers alternately praise or condemn her according to the number of stars she slips their pictures. By common agreement within show business in Chicago less than three stars is taken as a bad notice although the "Tribune's" own rating of the significance of two stars is "very good."

Vast number of imitations of the star-rating system is said to displease the "Tribune." It is pretty generally understood that Miss Tinee's reviews carry more influence and are read less than at any time heretofore. This paradox is somewhat proved by the fact that quotes from her notices are almost never seen whereas how many stars is always reckoned in publicity.

Seemingly, the "Tribune" has been the first to evolve a simple method whereby the public without bothering to read reviews, can still have the assurance of reliable recommendations.

Sapolioed "Co-ed" With Sylvia Sidney

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Having once decided that "Confessions of a Co-Ed" was too sensational and scratched it off the story list, Paramount has reversed and put the script in the hands of Max Marcin and Betty White for a dry cleaning.

Sylvia Sidney will come from the east to play the lead.

1st Dunning Process Test On Full Film

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Carol Dunning will leave here Dec. 26, sailing Jan. 4 from New York to Germany to prepare for Radio's experiment of shooting a German version of "Beau Ideal" with the Dunning process. This is the studio method of substituting any background for actors.

Dunning is taking with him a master print of "Beau Ideal" which was shot during production of the original, but just shows the locations in sequence, with no players appearing in the film.

Casts will be engaged in Germany and the action processed onto the film.

STUDIOS SHY FROM YARNS BY STAFF MEN

A definite tendency among producers to frown upon original stories written by studio staff writers. Originals by outside authors, particularly newspapermen, are being looked for, staff men being used mainly for revamping purposes or on writing shorts. At least there's a vein of this talk current in New York.

Failure of the staff stuff to click, because of hackneyed plots, is said to be the main reason for the change.

Par Drops a Few

Paramount is still quietly weeding out. Directors and writers are included in another move. However, the organization, according to advices, will drop people only when contracts have expired, except under unusual circumstances.

Howard Bretherton, director, and Sid Silver and Paul Genglin, writers, have been released from the Astoria, Long Island, studio.

Agents' U Problem

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Agents are priming all Universal bookings with a March 1 deadline in mind, on the belief that the studio will close down at that time until April 15 or thereabouts.

Junior Laemmle cites seven prospective productions as an indication no shut down is proposed.

EXPLOITATION

This department is almost entirely made up of matter from "Variety's" own correspondents. Seldom are any of the exploitation notes sent out by the home publicity offices of the chains used here.

"Variety's" correspondents have been requested to report on all local press or exploitation stunts that fail or prove too expensive for results achieved, as well as those which get over.

Ordinary or expected exploitation not included in this department. Repetition in several cities also excluded, after first mention, unless new angle is later developed.

Boomerang Ambulance

Pittsburgh.

A stunt the Stanley pulled last week for "The Cat Creeps" (U) proved something of a boomerang, and was yanked pronto.

Somebody conceived the idea of stationing an ambulance at the front of the theatres, with some trick signs plastered all over the vehicle. Opening day no end of women approached the theatre, saw the ambulance and walked away, feeling that the thing was there to carry away femmes who passed out during the thriller.

Second day the ambulance was back where it belonged, which wasn't outside the theatre.

Big School Plan

Chicago.

"Lincoln" (UA), which will show in Publix-B. & K. houses during the holidays, has tied up with 289 schools affecting 365,000 children.

Eddy Solomon, of Publix-B. & K. publicity, and Charles Baron, for United Artists, effected the tieup, which has the president of the school requesting all pupils to see the picture.

In addition, 7,000 letters are being mailed to school teachers in their homes, plus a radio tie-up with Silver Marshall.

Some Toledo Ballyhoos

Toledo.

Two Toledo theatres—Vita Temple, Jack O'Connell, manager, and Cameo, Charles Smith, manager—made page one publicity in Toledo Blade for their part in benefits to aid the Toledo penny fund. Both shows big success.

Loew's Valentine tied up with Toledo Blade and Elks for clothing to be used as admittance to theatre on one day of performance of Abraham Lincoln.

Al K. Hall, Rivoli comedian, joined with the old-timers of the Toledo Newsboy's association in selling charity sheets last week. Hall is a former Toledo newsboy and did tricks while selling papers. Rivoli only local house to cash in on project.

Largest letter ever sent by air mail is in hands of W. S. Caldwell manager Loew's Valentine. Letter is three by four feet, and was sent by Nicholas Schenck on opening of new N. A. T. airlines.

Strong Vaude Campaign

St. Paul.

Neutral showmen in this territory see picture houses as soon being forced to add flesh to programs here due to a strenuous ad campaign R-K-O is waging for its Orpheum.

Through trailers, ads and direct mail, R-K-O has driven home the bargain angle of its show, vaudfilm, to a point where folks on the street are talking about it.

Tune of campaign hits home in this language: "See the latest talking pictures PLUS a high-class vaudeville show and a live orchestra for the price you'd ordinarily pay for a movie alone."

Fox-Publix Girls' Tourney

New Haven.

Just to show that there are no hard feelings between the golf courses and the show houses in town, a match was played at a course between teams composed of the Merriel-Abbott girls, appearing in a Publix unit and the Hollywood Studio girls from an F. & M. Idea. Publix girls came out on top.

Public was invited to attend and the gallery got a lot of fun out of kidding one of the Publix girls who finally laid down her putter in the middle of the match and went home.

Match brought a lot of inexpensive publicity to the indoor course and the two stage shows.

Squawk at Substitutions

Syracuse, N. Y.

Along with other Warner houses in the sector, the Strand announced a special midnight performance with gross proceeds to be turned over to the Community Chest's relief fund. House went after the stunt and, among other things, induced Mayor Marvin to sell tickets at the box office.

Which was okay, but where theatre slipped was in failing to explain the program at the midnight show would be special rather than the current attraction. And the special program turned out to be Jolson's pioneer talker, "The Jazz Singer" and Universal's "Cinderella."

Those who had paid their 50 cents for sweet charity's sake didn't take kindly to the substitution, and said so right out loud to the mayor as well as to the house. What mayor told the theatre, if anything, isn't being revealed either.

RKO-Spokane Chronicle Tieup

Spokane.

Walter Fenney, Orpheum manager, has negotiated tieup with Spokane Daily Chronicle to show a newspaper edition of RKO-Pathe news. This is first co-op movement on part of paper in northwest to tie in with the sound news. Chronicle largest evening daily in city.

Crippled D. C. in Publicity Stunt

Cleveland.

Week's best publicity stunt pulled by Harry Shaw, State's manager, and Barney McDevott, p. a., who rented private ambulance for George Davis so crippled critic could leave hospital to review Paul Ash's "Off Shore Revue." Ballyhoo included private box for critic with welcome banners plastered on it, newspaper photographers and everything but a brass band.

Waiting Patrons Entertained

Seattle.

When lines get big at the Fox theatre three or four members of Owen Sweten's band go out front and play their instruments on the sidewalk. "Min and Bill" last week had the boys busy outside.

German Plug for "Morocco"

St. Paul.

Don Alexander, p. a. of the Paramount (Publix), put over a tieup with Volkszeitung, local German daily, for "Morocco." Played up Marlene Dietrich as showing how fatherland has advanced as a screen center. Crashed for two big cuts and plenty stories at no cost to theatre and with campaign credited for getting real business.

Paramount also continuously on page one of another daily with which it tied up on Christmas show for needy kids. Entertained 2,500 in its ace Paramount with screening of "Tom Sawyer" and then bicycled film over to the Tower, where an overflow of 1,500 was taken care of.

Santa Claus Group Town Talk

Ottawa, Can., Dec. 23.

After four weeks of daily broadcasts, the Santa Claus group of a local department store were booked by Manager P. J. Nolan for personal appearances on the stages of his three local theatres, the Avalon, Rexy and Columbia, starting Christmas Day. Tie-up was the talk of the town.

12 Months with Kid Club

Topeka.

A year's agreement has been reached between H. A. McClure, local Fox manager, and the "Daily Capital," by which the Novelty theatre will give a free birthday party to members of the Junior Capital club the last Saturday of each month.

This is with Uncle Dave, the "Capital's" children editor and radio broadcaster for the kids. Club has 52,000 members in Kansas and a fourth of them in Topeka. Birthday cards are sent each member on his or her birthday.

Radio station WIBW will furnish a half hour stage show preceding the picture program, and the theatre will get weekly radio publicity as well as spreads in the "Capital's" children's page.

Multiple Policy

Toledo, Dec. 23.

New policy went in effect Dec. 22 at the R-K-O Palace. Every Monday a former hit film will be run for the entire day. Some of the oldsters are "Rio Rita," "Hit the Deck," "Vagabond King," etc.

On Saturdays and Sundays an all-German dialog film will be inserted in the program. This is to go after the larger German population here.

This is a hot opposition town for Publix and R-K-O.

ALL FEMME CAST

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Evelyn Brent has been engaged as lead for Tiffany's "Women Like Men," heading an all femme cast.

P-P Tex. House Cuts Scale

Dallas, Dec. 23.

The Paramount, at Texarkana, Tex., is the first Publix key in this state reporting cut in scale. Drop is from 50 to 15-35. Strand, another in the P-P acquisition in that town is closed.

TICKER TAPE SHOW MAY HANG ON COURT FIGHT

Struggle for control of patent rights to the stock ticker tape system is being waged in both the Federal and the State courts between the News Projector Corp. and Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corp. Latter is partly owned by Radio Pictures. Courtland Smith, former Fox exec, is v.-p.

The N. Y. Supreme Court suit is an equity matter instituted by Trans-Lux against the News Projector Corp. It was filed following a decision in the Federal Court by Judge Thatcher in favor of the N. P. C. Trans-Lux later filed a petition for a bill of review on this decision and this is now pending.

Trans-Lux claims that the patents under which N. P. C. works and known as the Berton A. Proctor invention really is only an improvement on an original machine perfected by Herman E. Roys, who has assigned his rights to Trans-Lux.

Whether these court battles may prevent the projected theatre scheme of Trans-Lux and Radio isn't known, although it is definitey declared such a theatre plan was in motion. It's a sort of combination newsreel and novelty theatre with a new idea in stage show and screen projection that is said to permit a minimum in operating overhead.

Rochester Putting Back Big Orchestra and Shows

Rochester, Dec. 23.

Going into a presentation policy Jan. 2, Loew's Rochester aims to give the biggest show ever tried in the city. Bill will include films, vaude, m. c., 30-piece concert orchestra, 12-piece stage band and organ programs.

Big orchestra is aimed to take advantage of the public's peeve against Publix for canning the famous Eastman orchestra and transforming the city's pride and joy into an ordinary sound house. After two years, letters to newspaper still blame Publix.

Victor Wagner, conductor of the former Eastman orchestra, will direct the new outfit. Hughie Barrett, stage and Hotel band leader, and former assistant manager of Fay's, will be m. c. Theatre is using known local talent rather than third raters from outside.

The Rochester is a 4,000-seater. Price scale not definitely set, but may be a 50-cent top, a dime below the Palace (R-K-O vaude) scale.

Fox in Hackensack

Fox will begin erection of a new 3,500-seater in Hackensack, N. J., next month. New house is scheduled for a vaudfilm policy and will be without opposition in the town unless Warners goes through with the erection of a house on a site acquired there a year ago.

Warners now has Hackensack tied up through operating the town's only two houses.

BEHIND THE KEYS

WB SUBSID EXPANDING

Accessory Co. To Spread Across the Country-Plan 30 Exchanges

Warners is expanding the activities of its equipment subsid Continental Accessories, dealing in theatre equipment. Plans are to open a new exchange for the latter in Philadelphia around Jan. 1. It will be the subsid's third store. Other two stores are at Los Angeles and New York.

Continental has been organized only a year and is headed by Harold Rodner.

If carrying out present plan Continental will stretch a chain of depots service stations across the country. Around 30 are planned altogether.

So far eight of these depots have been established, spotted in Chicago, New Haven, Indianapolis, Albany, Washington, Pittsburgh, St. Louis and Milwaukee. Others are planned for major key spots.

U A PREVIEWS IN FOX THEATRES START ROW

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Independent exhibs on the Coast, lined up on the side of United Artists in the UA-Fox West Coast battle, are doing a pretty burnup since UA pictures are still being previewed in Fox houses in direct opposition to indie theatres holding UA contracts.

On top of the squawks is the first legal broadside to be fired against the United Artists Distributing Co. by the Chotiner Bros., Harry and Max, operators of the Ravenna and Parisian here. Chotiners suit charges breach of contract and demands $25,000 damages from UA for previewing "Reaching for the Moon," the Douglas Fairbanks picture, at the Fox Belmont, a couple of blocks away and in opposition to their Ravenna.

Chotiners, who contracted to play 100% UA product in their houses, contend that the Belmont preview constitutes a first showing and will not play the picture unless a settlement is made.

Argument raised by the indies with UA product on their hands is that although the UA crowd declared war on Fox West Coast, and stated emphatically that no UA pictures would play Fox houses in the future, they're now doing an about face in using Fox houses to preview their pictures.

Arthur Mayer in Chi

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Arthur Mayer, divisional director of the Middle West for Publix, came here last week and will make the town his headquarters.

Mayer is reported as getting ready to institute a number of new changes in the smaller spots.

Fastest Fadeouts in Picture Biz Are Politically Inclined Assoc. Prods.

Warners Will Keep A. C. House Open Year 'Round

Atlantic City, Dec. 23.

Warners have decided to keep its boardwalk theatre open 12 months in the year and retain it on a straight picture policy.

When the house opened about nine months ago, execs figured on keeping it open only during the busy seasons. But the house, which has a nut of around $10,000, including real estate, film and etc., has made enough dough weekly to cause them to forget the closing policy.

Theatre also has a stage, idea originally having been to make presentations a part of the policy. Success without this has also caused sidetracking of the unit idea.

Sundays Okay

Albia, Ia., Dec. 23.

Climaxing a two years' fight, a city ordinance has been passed permitting the showing of pictures on Sunday.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Labor turnover in the studio marks up its biggest cost in the group of associate producers.

Where the screen life of stars has been estimated from three to 10 years, the average for assoc. prods. is only one year. They are the most rapidly changing class in studios.

There are some assoc. prods. who last as long as stars and directors, but the average is brought down by the one and two picture guys. They either are demoted, promoted, or fired after a short life.

This is because so many in this group have been given jobs for political reasons, as rewards, or to get them out of the way. They are like vice-presidents. They can know a lot or little, and either way it has slight influence on the quality of picture in most cases.

Minor execs have the next shortest screen life. They average about two years, their jobs being something like those of ass. prods. The trades average as the longest surviving class. They run from six years up.

New York.

Switching of organists on Loew circuit last week sent Dick Leibert from Loew's State in Cleveland to Loew's Penn theatre, Pittsburgh. Will Oscar, at the Valencia, Jamaica, a long time and recently at the Penn, in Pittsburgh, goes to the Great Lakes theatre, Buffalo.

Davenport, Ia.

R-K-O is to occupy a new 2,700 seat house for which ground was broken last week.

As R-K-O's lease on the 2,200 seat Capitol expires next year, move can be made to the new house in late summer.

Youngstown, O.

Jack Hines, former assistant manager of the State, has gone to Bradford, Pa., to become manager of the theatre there owned and operated by Feiber and Shea.

Kansas City.

Williamsport, Pa.

The Keystone, owned jointly by local men and M. E. Comerford, closed for alterations. Reopens Jan. 1.

The Grand, under new management, closed last week for installation of Photophone; reopening New Year's.

Lexington, Ky.

Some 200 people left in orderly fashion when fire started during a performance at the Savoy, neighborhood house, in Nicholasville, Ky. House was destroyed with loss put at $12,000. House was owned by T. B. Scott and operated by W. W. Quinn.

Sioux City, Ia.

R. M. Fulton, who five years ago was usher at the Princess, returned this week as manager.

Council Bluffs, Ia.

R. K. Fulton, manager Broadway, to assume management Princess (Publix), Sioux City, Ia. Broadway recently closed through inability of Publix to contract successfully with operators' union and stage band.

Burlington, Ia.

Picketing at the Palace and Rialto, here, discontinued as operators settled their differences with A. H. Blank's Central States Theatre Corp.

Albion, Ia.

This town has passed ordinance permitting Sunday films. Action climaxes two-year fight.

Charleston, W. Va.

Appointment by Warners of E. J. Golden as manager of the Rialto here has been announced. Golden was formerly manager of the Manor theatre, Pittsburgh.

Frisco Sale Set

San Francisco, Dec. 23.

After being hot and cold for a week or more, the sale of the Embassy theatre by Dan Markowitz to Warners was consummated last week. Price paid for the house was not divulged.

Embassy, until several weeks ago, was operated by W. B. Wagnon, who presented Warner pictures. He finally turned the house back to Markowitz, from whom he originally leased it.

Wagnon is now solely operating the Davies, which has dropped from the first run class to a 40-cent grind, with three changes a week.

Futile Vote

Lake Mills, Ia., Dec. 23.

Fire cast a deciding vote in the Sunday film war here.

With voters at the polls defeating a ban on Sunday pictures, the town's only hall available for pictures was gutted by fire. No films now until a new hall is available.

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES

THE DEVIL TO PAY

Samuel Goldwyn production and United Artists release. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Ronald Colman starred. Loretta Young featured. Original screen story and dialog by Frederick Lonsdale. Adapted by Benjamin Glazer. H. B. Humberstone, assistant director. Dialog staged by Ivan Simpson. George Barnes and Gregg Toland, photography. Fred Marr, sound. Opened Dec. 18 at the Gaiety, N. Y., for twice daily $2 run. Running time, 72 minutes.

Willie Leeland	Ronald Colman
Dorothy Hope	Loretta Young
Susan Leeland	Florence Britton
Lord Leeland	Frederick Kerr
Mr. Hope	David Torrence
Mrs. Hope	Mary Forbes
Grand Duke Paul	Paul Cavanagh
Arthur Leeland	Crawford Kent
Mary Gayle	Myrna Loy

Ronald Colman, starred, impresses as having a good time sailing through this naughty boy part. He plays it well, and it should do well by him. It's a set-up for femmes, and most likely will give this talker hero a new batch of lady assenters. Besides, it's certain to convince all former Colman admirers that they should stick.

It also cannot harm Frederick Lonsdale's future for the screen. In this author's first original for pictures his dialog is always light and breezy and fitting. Five of six times it's an incentive for real solid laughs. That's a good average in a comedy devoid of slapstick. Though now and then, for the sticks, his very English and somewhat highbrow phrasing is likely to sail over without landing.

With the $2 booking at the Gaiety, New York, indicating nothing, "The Devil to Pay" remains a first-grade programer for week stands anywhere and okay for grosses through Colman and as an entertaining picture.

Dialog probably a good guarantee against dullness for this picture, which might easily have gone routine early and stayed there. George Fitzmaurice apparently sustained its natural pace in his direction, with a star who suited the works probably as important as the megging.

The screen has often seen this character of the wicked but likeable youth who gets away with everything, and seldom or never does he doublecross his straight man, the audience. Willie Leeland (Colman) follows the formula.

Sort of lad who is so irresponsible and naughty but I just can't help liking him." Willie's sister really says that, and out loud, too, to her girl friend, who is engaged to a mean grande duke, but who falls for Willie in an opening glance, as Willie does for her.

Willie is returning home to an angry papa after auditioning the house and furnishings later purchased for him in South Africa. Home is London. Despite his threats the old man can't resist Willie's charm, either. For a moment, rather late, it looks as though Willie's and the sister's girl friend's true love affair has gone to pot, but a finishing cute trick switches things back to the expected cheerful exit.

Along the way is a terrier bought by Willie and an actress in Liverpool. When Willie can't get himself to tell the actress it's off on the phone or by mail and goes to tell her personally, in violation of his promise to sister's girl friend, that's when things look darkest. A detective engaged by sister's girl friend's father snitches.

No one has a chance to catch up to Colman on performance, with his part written so above the rest, but one who comes close enough is Frederick Kerr as the boy's father. His job, mostly calling for grunting and cackling, is exceptionally well done. The balance of support, including the second lead, Loretta Young, is continually helpful and sufficiently smart in smart surroundings. With Myrna Loy under a blond wig this time, it's mostly her eyes that count.

"The Devil to Pay" received the best of technical treatment. Whatever it lacks now it lacked from the beginning, but not so much then or now. And it should please in England. Which evidently has made the second start on this picture, after scrapping around $75,000 worth of production on what was deemed a false getaway, well worth while.

PASSION FLOWER

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production and release. Features Kay Francis, Kay Johnson, Zazu Pitts, Charles Bickford and Lewis Stone. Based on Kathleen Norris' novel of the same name. Directed by Wm. DeMille with adaptation and dialog by Martin Flavin, J. E. Johnson and Edith Fitzgerald. Hal Rosson, cameraman. At the Capitol, N. Y., week of Dec. 19. Running time, 78 mins.

Dulce Morado	Kay Francis
Katherine Pringle Wallace (Cassy)	Kay Johnson
Dan Wallace	Charles Bickford
Leroy Hopkins	Wyner Hall
Antonio Morado	Juan de Landa
Mrs. Harney	Zazu Pitts
Tommy	Dickey Moore

A flock of talent but that this picture will ever mean much for money is a good sized question. That's because it usurps too much time saying what it has to say and none of the featured names is strong enough to be definite draws.

The principal trio are all from legit—the Misses Francis and Johnson and Charles Bickford. They're competent, but talent doesn't always count on a marquee. Miss Johnson is reported to have severed connections with Metro and Bickford isn't too enthusiastic about his Hollywood assignments to date. Which leaves Miss Francis the sole hope for the threesome who, perhaps, regards pictures seriously. And she is coming along. However, having several pictures to her credit now, it's doubtful if this brunette will ever achieve stardom but that she's an invaluable featured player is something the Coast has already found out.

"Passion Flower" evidently refers to Miss Francis' character in the story. DeMille has done nothing to emphasize this fact or to bring it out clearly. The way the story starts, and due to Miss Johnson's thorough performance, it's quite likely that a majority of viewers will deem her the principal girl in the equation and wonder what the title's all about.

The new Capitol entry has the standard Metro production background and a very cute youngster in Dickie Moore. Besides which Zazu Pitts turns in one of the best things she's done as a pessimistic boarding house keeper. And Lewis Stone is also in the cast with not much to do. Which makes for a strong list of players who, through their work, can be absolved of all blame in regard to the picture not clicking.

Had the production been given a slightly faster tempo it might have turned out an excellent program leader. But its slow pace impedes to the point where it's merely just another picture. A shame to throttle so much ability.

Story tells of a wealthy daughter who marries the family chauffeur, encouraged by her girl cousin who has married for money. Five years later comes the twist when the cousin (Miss Francis) also falls in love with a humble laboring man who leaves his wife and two children for her. Finish has the much sought after lad returning to his family.

Not a particularly sympathetic or heroic part for Bickford. He starts out possessing a tremendous pride, asking and wanting no financial aid, finally gives in and then can't make up his mind to leave his wife. After which, when he does, he again can't quite decide whether to return to his fireside. An audience is apt to lose patience with a lad who doesn't know what he wants. Meanwhile, there's no bond between the pair and Miss Francis as she tries to break up her cousin's home. So that leaves Miss Johnson all the sympathy as the girl who has given up plenty to marry beneath her.

Dialog is plausible and, at times, excellent. Indeed, the film has so many good points that it's something of a problem to figure out how it resulted so indifferently. DeMille's inability to capture these component parts and make them dovetail is one explanation. Characters seem to merely ramble along for yards of film without getting anywhere. If it weren't for young Moore the treatment might easily become boresome as few casts are capable of overcoming a continuously slow directorial hand. The child reigns up many a dull spot and displays a naturalness which is not common among stage or picture children.

Well cast, there need be no guilty consciences among the players for "Passion Flower." The source of the faults is to be found behind the camera, where pictures are made or unmade so often.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

Paramount production and release, starring Ina Claire and Frederic March. Directed by George Cukor and Cyril Gardner. Adapted by Herman Mankiewicz and Gertrude Purcell from the George S. Kaufman-Edna Ferber stage play. Mary Brian and Henrietta Crosman featured. Opened Dec. 22 at the Rivoli, N. Y., at $5 premier for grind run. Running time, 82 mins.

Julie Cavendish	Ina Claire
Tony Cavendish	Frederic March
Gwen Cavendish	Mary Brian
Fanny Cavendish	Henrietta Crosman
Perry Stewart	Charles Starrett
Oscar Wolfe	Arnold Korff
Gilbert Marshall	Lawrence Grossmith
Joe	Royal G. Stout
Della	Elsie Edmond
McDermott	Murray Alper
Hall Boy	Wesley Stark
Doctor	Herschel Mayall

This rich satire of stage extraction retains its high satirical points through one character and with three excellent performances to carry it through all weaknesses, it becomes a good picture. As a picture it can't tie the hit proportions it attained on the boards. The play was a smash of 1928 in New York and best suited to New York, as is the film. For outside New York it could use more Frederic March than was inserted. As this play brought March to attention on the Coast, so does March make the play a picture. He did the Otto Kruger part in the Coast company and repeats it here.

It is a constant delight when March is on. His conception of the spirited, boisterous, ridiculously dramatic son of a royal theatrical family—a Barrymore take-off in every gesture—goes beyond just making "The Royal Family." In a few moments it develops into the frame upon which all further interest is strung. There's quite a lapse between this boy's first and second active appearances in the play and during that time it seems a case of 50% devotion of attention to what transpires, with the other 50% in anticipation of March's re-entry. It's the first time his name has been over the title.

In a yarn so naturally adapted to comedy it is inevitable that the comedy, when intended as such, should stand far out. There is a sort of comedy strain through even the drama-tinged portion, but it's high, maybe too high to land as it should land everywhere. They're not likely to read between the tears where they don't see the space between a cry for brilliant comedy effect and a sob for mere tearjerking.

It's a death ending, same as the stage, they've had.ded this screen adaptation, with the trouping grandmother of the royal clan passing on majestically. She's out in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" against doctors' orders, with Brooklyn the subway stand at dying time. When she can't go on for the last act, her daughter Julie, the histronic jewel of the family, goes on in her place. That climaxes Julie's allegiance to the theatre and balks forever her desire to quit, marry, and lead a quiet life. The suitor returns to his South American platinum mines alone.

That rebellion against stage life is born in the Cavandishes, apparently, along with the love of it. Julie's daughter, Gwen, always near a stage debut, has it, too. She goes so far as to wed a nice boy who talks nothing but the stock market, renouncing the stage and her heritage. But at the finish she, too, is slipping.

Tony Cavendish (March) sidesteps all the declarations of stage loyalty by popping in just twice, once ahead of a Polish screen star who's a few feet in the rear with a $200,000 breach of promise plaster, and again as he returns from abroad. He went over to dodge the suit, also a little trouble over a matter of socking a director. He's the great screen lover, the only member of the tribe to go Hollywood. A wild guy, acting and screaming all over the apartment.

Miss Claire is elegant in acting and looking, with Henrietta Crosman the grand old lady to perfection. Former is a gasp in her first gown. Nothing ever equals that costume and, coming so early, it makes one or two others look bad.

Mary Brian does an interesting Gwen, with a dramatic scene for her, too. Misses Claire and Crosman have theirs, heavily. March's role calls for comic rave stuff all the way.

George Cukor and Cyril Gardner treated it kindly as directors, getting as much out of this story as probably could be secured for talkers. The script held the comedy and March down to what seems a minimum. When the laughs are around the film has its speediest pace, and sometimes, when the comedy is missing, there are some pretty gabby stretches, caused mainly by repeating of "the show must go on" doctrine and recalling the stage instinct of the family.

In New York the film's title is "The Royal Family." Away from New York the billing will be "The Royal Family of Broadway," to preclude the possibility of anyone guessing it's a costume picture. In the exploiting everywhere it might also be mentioned that, while dealing with actors, it isn't a backstage picture.

Miniature Reviews

"The Devil to Pay" (UA). Ronald Colman starred. Snappy British comedy that should please everywhere, with added push for the star as a popularity builder. Good entertainment in the first flight program class.

"Bar L. Ranch" (Big Four). Independent western okay for filler in small admission houses.

"Land of the Midnight Sun" (Foreign). Just a lot of newsreel magazine clips on Norway patched to feature length. Beyond the patience of even American arty audiences.

"Cohens and Kellys in Africa" (U). Fair programer with some laughs, mostly from the dialog and Sidney's dialectic humor. Action usual type of this series and story of no consequence. Okay for kids.

"Birth of a Nation" (Griffith). First time in sound and the print is clear. Still a swell picture but lacking the luster of youth. Should still arouse a certain degree of interest. Exploitation angles are obviously numerous.

"Hello Everybody" (B. I. P.) Not for any kind of program over here. A bad imitation of the American revue.

"Widow From Chicago" (FN). Barely makes program grade. Holds too little among many gangster films. No mention of Alice White, lead, in New York billing. E. G. Robinson and Neil Hamilton billed over her.

"The Middle Watch" (BIP). Best yet from Briton and can be recommended to American exhibitors.

"Tom Sawyer" (Par). Mark Twain epic done to the queen's taste with a fascinating group of kid actors led by Jackie Coogan. Sure-fire.

"Passion Flower." (M.-G.). Mostly legit people and not a punch marquee name. A triangle story of good potentialities which have been seriously impaired by a slow pace approaching dullness. Capable cast cannot offset this fault. Moderate b.o. career at best.

TOM SAWYER

Paramount production and release. Starring Jackie Coogan. Directed by John Cromwell. Story based on Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer." Adaptation by Sam Mintz, Groves Jones and W. S. McNutt. Photography by Charles Lang. At the Paramount, N. Y., week of Dec. 19. Running time, 82 minutes.

Tom Sawyer	Jackie Coogan
Huckleberry Finn	Junior Durkin
Becky Thatcher	Mitzi Green
Teacher	Lucien Littlefield
Muff Potter	Tully Marshall
Aunt Polly	Clara Blandick
Mary	Mary Jane Irving
Mrs. Harper	Ethel Wales
Sid	Jackie Searl
Joe Harper	Dick Winslow
Widow Douglass	Jane Darwell
Injun Joe	Charles Stevens
Minister	Charles Sellon
Judge Thatcher	Lon Poff

This Mark Twain classic has been shrewdly moulded to the screen, and is a picture that should be a staple product for many years of reissues. It somehow crystallizes the essence of a work that is timeless in its human appeal.

This is not to say that it looks like a sensational commercial success, for that is not in the cards by reason of the subject matter; but it is a picture that ought to grow and win enduring esteem to everybody concerned, now and in future repetitions. This edition looks like a substantial program release, steady and better than average in box office, with probably better afternoon takings that night returns. That seems to have been the rule in showings so far.

But the picture is a real achievement for its director, John Cromwell, one of the stage directors who has crashed Hollywood and come through with a selected group of class productions to his credit, probably the most notable being "Street of Chance," one of his several pictures starring William Powell. Cromwell had a wild desire to do "Tom Sawyer," and the finished work has all the ear marks of a labor of love.

There are twists of tricky humor that fascinate in this treatment of the book, and turns of engaging humor that are as innocent of anything like a pumped-up gag and touches of local character that are as fresh and intimate as anything the screen has produced. To top it off, the picture has an exquisitely deft closing sequence of blended sentiment and comedy that is the last word in literary legerdemain.

Picture, by the way, was originally designed as the first of a series to bring the younger generation back to the talking screen. It is doubtful if it could accomplish that goal, for, after all, Twain's classic is a grown-up work, and the adapters and Cromwell were wise in addressing that public as they have done. For in all probability the thea-going youth of this generation tend more to hoity-toity inference than they ever will again to Huckleberry Finn or Tom Sawyer.

What patronage "Tom Sawyer" will get from the kids probably will be the attendance of the youngsters promoted by the elders. Kids never did ask for "Huck Finn" in book form. It was handed to them by adoring oldsters because it was wholesome. The same rule will work to the advantage of the picture, but it will get its principal support from the same grown-ups who love the volume, and their name is legion.

Story is splendidly acted by a great group of youngsters. Children as actors are always infinitely more plausible than adult players, having a genius to charm make-believe into reality.

Here the situation is perfect to promote the illusion. Young Coogan plays Tom to the life, but perhaps because the part is so diligently exploited, the fan reaction is faintly away from it and toward the secondary role of Junior Durkin as Huckleberry Finn, a kid actor and a kid part, to warm the heart of any director. A report is that Cromwell is also keen to do "Huckleberry Finn" as a sequel to "Tom Sawyer," and on the showing of this picture there will be plenty of fans pulling for the realization of his ambition. For "Tom Sawyer" is so good it deserves a twin.

Little Mitzi Green is rather lost in a child part built up somewhat for the film. Obviously a girl tot plays a fabit second fiddle in the epic of mischievous boys, but contributes minor touches of charming comedy. The cast is rich in solid screen names. Lucien Littlefield does a capital series of sequences as the school teacher, and Tully Marshall contributes in the smallest kind of a minor bit. Clara Blandick does a distinguished piece of work as Aunt Polly, the character upon which hinges the story's occasional touches of sentiment, and it is she who gives the flavor of the finale episode that rounds off one of the most enjoyable, and certainly the most legitimate comedy picture, that has appeared on Broadway this season.

THIRD ALARM

San Antonio, Dec. 20.

Tiffany production and release. Directed by Emory Johnson. Story by Emilio Johnson. Continuity by Frances Hyland and Jack Natteford. Photography, Max Dupont. Sound, Buddy Myers. RCA Photophone recording. At the Empire, San Antonio, Dec. 19. Running time, 63 mins.

Milly Morton	Anita Louise
Dan	James Hall
Beauty	Paul Hurst
Dad Morton	Jean Hersholt
Captain	Hobart Bosworth
Neeta	Mary Doran
Woman barber	Dot Farley
Mamie	Nita Martan
Jimmy	Georgie Billings
Uncle	Walter Perry
Matron	Aileen Manning

A picture seemingly made for the neighborhood and change houses of the bigger cities. Better still for the smaller towns like this, where the tieup with the local fire department is a natural. Through that the film should do better than average grosses.

In San Antonio the tie is two-way. A short, preceding the feature, is of the local fire department at drill, climbing life saving apparatus. The other hookup is on Fire Prevention Week, the week the picture plays, and Fire Prevention started yesterday with a page of display ads in the San Antonio "Light." Page included a proclamation by Fire Chief Sarran, who also is in the short, with ads from the Public Service Co. and insurance companies.

Tiffany's sounded and talking "Third Alarm" may be a remake with sound. While the action is in and around a fire house most of, there is little actual fire work until the big scene at the end, when the city's orphanage is ablaze. This is stirring enough through the children brought to safety, but it is not startlingly striking.

Film's dependence is upon human emotion in reaction. Young boy and his older sister, left orphans by the death of their fireman father, and looked after by two bachelor members of the same fire fighting company. But the authorities insist the children go to the municipal orphanage that later catches fire. Each of the two bachelors is willing to marry to give the children the home the law demands. After being saved from the fire one discovers that the sister, with her hair done up differently, is old and pretty enough to marry him. While the other bach (Paul Hurst), meanwhile, has married a girl for the same reason. He found her name, address, and picture in his note book.

Somewhat slight comedy is provided by Hurst. The six-year-old boy character could have been made the lead with a boy player like Davey Lee, and the featured billing for the right kid would have been worth more than the evident difference in salary.

Too bad Hurst is a type of the rough kick sort. He is always funny in expression and delivery. It might be worth the try to dress him up and let him kick deluxe. James Hall is the juve in uniform. Just a walk through for him and the others. Anita Louise is the sister, doing nicely in looks and playing.

No medals for anyone. "Third Alarm" just happens to fit because the fire films haven't been thought of before Tiffany's since sound.

House management can use exploitation ingenuity on this kind of a picture. At the Empire here the house dressed the ushers and doorman in full fireman's uniform and helmet, all in bright red. The doorman about 22, seemed to feel pretty nifty over it. His hair cut is along the Spanish tango lines, and he wears a wrist watch. When he wasn't looking at his reflection in the new suit he was looking at the wrist watch. This, with the customers, kept the native son pretty busy.

Widow From Chicago

First National production and release. Alice White, Edward G. Robinson and Neil Hamilton featured. Directed by Edward Cline. Adapted by Earl Baldwin from his own story. At the Strand, N. Y., week of Dec. 19. Running time, 63 mins.

Dominic	Edward G. Robinson
Polly	Alice White
"Swifty" Dorgan	Neil Hamilton
Slug	Frank McHugh
Johnson	Lee Shumway
Mullins	Brooks Benedict
Davis	E. H. Calvert
Helen	Betty Francisco
Jimmy	Harold Goodwin

One of the lesser gangster pictures. Lacks too much in stirring gun stuff and customary underworld excitement to get up from the floor. Will have to struggle to break even.

At the Strand on Broadway the name of Alice White, playing the title lead, is entirely omitted from all billing and exploitation matter. In the lobby the drawings bear no resemblance to Miss White, nor does she appear in any of the stills in the frames. All but Miss White in the picture's cast have lobby mention, with Edward G. Robinson and Neil Hamilton the only members featured. It seems unfortunate for Miss White that her performance in "Widow from Chicago" is so barren.

This story of a dead detective's sister who mixes with a gang to avenge the shooting of her brother has but few interesting moments. The twist at the finish is unconvincing rather than surprising, with much of the surprise lost through advance expectations.

E. G. Robinson's gang leader is the poorest such characterization he has turned in, while Neil Hamilton is miscast. Some of the things Robinson has to say sound all out of proportion. Miss White's exaggerated eye-rolling is just as bad.

Film is a weakling at best. Bige.

THE MIDDLE WATCH

(BRITISH MADE)

British International Pictures production and release. Directed by Norman Walker. Written by Ian Hay and Stephen King-Hall. Based on a stage production. Walker also credited with dialog. At the Roxy, N. Y., week of Dec. 19. Running time, 100 minutes.

Captain Maitland, R. N. ..... Owen Nares
Mary Carleton ..... Jacqueline Logan
Commander Baddeley ..... Jack Raine
Fay Eaton ..... Dodo Watts
Admiral Hewitt ..... Frederick Volpe
Lady Hewitt ..... Margaret Halstan
Nancy Hewitt ..... Phillis Loring
Marine Orr ..... Henry Wenman
Corporal Duckett ..... Reginald Purdell
Charlotte Hopkinson ..... Muriel Aked
Captain Randall, R. M. ..... Hamilton Keene
Ah Fong ..... George Carr

The first British-made picture, of a series shown here during the past two months, which can be generally recommended to American exhibitors. Materially, the elimination of another reel or so would help, for it would then be a certain bet for the double change houses and less of a hazard for some of the week stands.

"Variety" reviewed "The Middle Watch" in London last fall. The British reviewer did not believe it would do for the States because of its 120 minutes running time and unfolding too many of the same old farcical situations.

As timed at the Roxy, 20 minutes, practically two reels, have been erased, the "same old farcical situations" exist, but their handling by the cast and the execution of the action cannot help but work up the same old audience interest. Therefore some good old dough can't help be forthcoming in the same old way for this one.

Jacqueline Logan, a product of Hollywood, is excellent here. She radiates crispness until it seems to reduce to an appreciable extent the slowness of her fellow performers in this film. The dialog writer has used excellent judgment in working in a deal of American slang for Miss Logan. Another reason for the feature having a good chance over here is that Miss Logan does a Bow with the British navy, outwitting all of the officers and the admiral himself.

Outstanding among the British ranks is Frederick Volpe. As the admiral Volpe is the picture's light heavy for laughs.

Locale is aboard a battleship. Most of the action is studio, but the sets are well made and sufficient exteriors of a ship are worked into the action to give a plausible illusion.

Keeping the girls, Mary and Fay, aboard ship, with the admiral paying an unexpected visit and the confusion that ensues in changing rooms all helps. In fact, the theme is surprisingly fast in action for a British product.

Owen Nales is made less formal and stiff by an American lead, and gives a performance superior to those witnessed of him in previous screen offerings from abroad.

Harry Wenman and Reginald Purdell make a good marine comedy team.

Photography and lighting are some of the best seen in any picture from the other side. Recording, by RCA Photophone, as reproduced over the Roxy's W. E. equipment, also very good. Waly.

COHENS AND KELLYS

(IN AFRICA)

Universal production and release co-starring George Sidney and Charlie Murray. Vera Gordon and Kate Price featured. Directed by Vin Moore. Story by Vin Moore and Edward Luddy. Adaptation and dialog by W. K. Wells. Photographer, Hal Mohr. At the Globe, N. Y., week of Dec. 19. Running time, 70 mins.

Mr. Cohen ..... George Sidney
Mr. Kelly ..... Charlie Murray
Mrs. Cohen ..... Vera Gordon
Mrs. Kelly ..... Kate Price
Windjammer Thorn ..... Frank Wayne
Sheik ..... Lloyd Whitlock
Guide ..... Nick Cogley
Chief ..... Ed Kane

Sidney's dialectic gestures haven't changed even before wild animals in the jungles. This gets most of the humor in the film. Maybe a couple of laughs from the action but without Sidney the film wouldn't mean anything because Murray isn't given any kind of a chance. It's a fair programmer that will need support in met spots. Kids will like it.

Cohen and Kelly, this time, are piano makers. Biz slumps for lack of ivory and they hie for Africa to replenish. Much processed photography of beasts and cannibals. Also a cafe scene and a harem shot. The latter two mainly to bring out Kate Price, and Vera Gordon for a bit that can be done.

Main laugh spot has the tribal chief turning out to be an east side merchant in make-up. One laugh that could have been with proper development is the midget golf sequence where the comics are shown hitting the makeshift hazards with Cohen for some ivory as a side bet.

One sour spot is when jungle chimps are dialoged stripping the two elderly women. For corroboration of the hidden scene Kate Price and Vera Gordon are shown topping the bushes with bare shoulders. Poor film etiquette in a feature of any kind.

Happy ending and ivory goes with it. Shan.

BIRTH OF A NATION

(SYNCHRONIZED)

D. W. Griffith production; release by Triangle. First shown at the Liberty, N. Y., Mar. 3, 1915 at $2 top. Currently in sound at the Cohan, N. Y., opening Dec. 19, followed by Joseph Carl Breil. Running time, 108 mins.

The "Nation" springs again and lumps an industry's patriotism with a healthy glimmer into the past. But it must stand comparison. Still engaging, it lacks the luster of youth. Though it reaches for the present with glands of a new science it stops with that gesture. Still interesting, it is shorn of much excitement with which it has held sway as the film champion for a decade and a half or almost. It holds any number of exploitation angles and there should be a lot of people who would like to see it for the first time, or again.

A great original score, assembled by J. C. Briel, has been sounded for the old print. Though tuneful the music as played in reproduction seems shallow in its tenderness and short of the sweeping spectacle that's the essence of this crossroads in picture production. The print is surprisingly clear.

There is again the blare of the Klan's trumpet as the sheeted horses and men gallop, and this ride remains one of filmdom's biggest thrills.

There are battle effects, but with or without sound the film is an immortal document withal to gauge the advance of pictures.

It has been surpassed in technique but the "Nation" is not dead. The subject is too vital to ever let it die, and it probably is regarded with more sentiment within the industry than any other film ever made. It marked a turning point for pictures.

Believe it or not that idea for ushers covering theatres of today started with the "Nation." It may have been Jeff McCarthy's idea or it may have been Griffith's. Dressing up a film theatre with the help began when this film opened 15 years ago at the Liberty. Girl ushers were in crinoline to salute the incoming customers. It was also the first film to play at $2 top. Just 15 years later it's still good for Broadway at 75 cents. That's not bad.

Nearly all the cast have since carved a niche for themselves. Some are gone, but they're remembered from a picture which startled the amusement world in 1915 by showing in 12 reels. It has been shorn since for running time.

This film cost around $110,000 to make and Billy Bitzer's photography and Breil's score still stand out. In fact, this score and the one assembled for Metro's "Big Parade" are generally conceded to be the best pictures have ever known. Up to 1919 the "Nation" grossed $4,500,000.

There's too much epic history involved to ever let the "Nation" die altogether. It's a landmark and certainly the champion reissue film of them all—which it will so remain. Shan.

Sous les Toits de Paris

("Under the Roofs of Paris")

(FRENCH-MADE)

(All Dialog—With Songs)

Tobis Production. Written and directed by Rene Clair. Songs by M. Markham and musical score supervised by M. Hoeoff. Tobis-Klangfilm recording. At Little Carnegie Playhouse, N. Y., for grind run, starting Dec. 15. Running time, 80 mins.

Pola ..... Albert Prejean
Louis ..... Pola Illery
Fred ..... Edmond Greville
Tall Customer ..... Gaston Modot
Bill ..... Bill Bocket
A Customer ..... Paul Ollivier

For the first time the French have come across with real film fare of quality. It's in their native tongue and credit is due entirely to Rene Clair, the director.

M. Clair wrote the story himself. It is the simplest kind of a yarn. A boy loves a girl. He is sent to jail for a short time. When he comes back he finds she has fallen in love with his best friend. They shake hands all around. Practically nothing else of importance happens, and yet the director has managed to wind together a film that holds and never lags.

To make his problem harder, M. Clair practically did away with talk. Where "The Blue Angel" (Ufa) allows occasional sequences with nothing said, Clair permits only occasional sequences with conversation. But the acting, the score and sound effects allow for perfect understanding of the action.

As an instance, two men are shown through the glass doors of a cafe. They are seen to be looking out at a girl passing by. Their faces show their thoughts to be alike. The girl is shown smiling at them. They start out, only to stop when they realize they both are going for the one girl. Clair shows their lips moving, as though discussing the thing. He doesn't tell you what they are saying. You guess easily enough. Back the two men start toward the bar. They pick up a pair of dice and play. One starts out alone. All of which is a few minutes of plot development without talk.

What Clair probably accomplishes is to make a talker which is intelligible to any country. Impossible, probably, with a more involved story.

Score is carefully written to hold interest. Most of it is given excuses by coming from dancehalls nearby or phonograph records. There are two songs, one being the same title as the picture and having a nice melody.

Albert Prejean does an excellent piece of acting as the boy, and Pola Illery is as good as the girl. Support parts are carefully played.

"Sous Les Toits de Paris" is not a big picture. It hasn't enough public appeal to be a hit on a big scale. But it can easily pack them in carefully chosen spots all over the country for limited runs, and will play return dates in all the art theatres. It's a splendid French picture.

HELLO EVERYBODY

(BRITISH MADE)

(Revue)

British International production and release. Cast includes Cecil Cortledge, Jack Hurlburt, James and Thomas, John Longden, Anne May Wong, The Eddies, Teddy Brown and Band, Tom Hanley, Charlot Girls, Berkotts, Glasgow Orpheus Chorus and Adele Burnell. Directed by Adrian Brunel. At the Cohan, N. Y., as half of double bill, week of Dec. 19. Running time, 49 mins.

Poor imitation of American film revues, although offers some tuneful music. Hardly worth considering on any kind of program. Around 15 or more numbers.

This is a cut-up version of what once was known as "Elstree Calling." The cutting, however, part of the radio props were forgotten to be omitted. Technique is bad all the way, and the humor is rigidly British. Some nice dancing had it only been spotted. They'd have trouble scissoring this into one or more shorts. RCA recording and it came over poorly with photography also off. Recording may be what's the matter with the songs, as there's some standard talent included in the cast.

Revival of "Birth of a Nation," synchronized, on same bill. Shan.

BAR L RANCH

Presented by F. E. Douglas and distributed through Big Four Film Corp. Directed by Harry Webb. Cast: Buffalo Bill, Jr., Yakima Canutt, Wally Wales. At the Columbia, N. Y., one day, Dec. 18, on double feature bill. Running time, 60 mins.

This is one of the regular 10-15 westerns. It would be better without talk, since the lines are stilted and their recitation amateurish. Has triumverate of western favorites in Buffalo Bill, Jr., Wally Wales and Yakima Canutt. All look better than they talk.

Paramount en Parade

(REVUE)

Paris, Dec. 8.

Paramount production and release. French version. Directed by Charles de Rochefort, starring Maurice Chevalier. Features Saint-Granier, Marguerite Moreno, Boucot, Boucot fils, Pierre Moreno, Charles de Rochefort, Elmire Vautier, and 24 Mangan Tillerettes. Running time, 70 mins. Paramount, Paris, Dec. 8.

Film is an attempted adaptation to local requirements of the American film revue due to the desire to use what was considered locally suitable footage, and turn it into one more Chevalier production. Film opened big at the Paramount, due to the curiosity of the public for a production long advertised and a desire to see so many stars.

Production shown locally is a mixture of American sequences and others locally made in the Paramount Joinville studios. All English dialog has been cut out of the production and replaced by French sketches, so that the English language is only left in singing parts. A considerable number of purely French sketches have been made to replace the deleted parts. There is an introductory sequence where the Mangan Tillerettes give a very good account of themselves, as well as in the rest of the production, as compared to the American chorus.

Talking Shorts

WILLIAM J. BURNS
"Story of Suppressed Crime"
Dramatic Novelty
21 Mins.
Globe, New York
Educational

This sounds like a commercial short that's doing a plug for the William J. Burns Detective Agency. It's a good plug and would be better film novelty stuff if a finale kick could be had. Clear that a series of these is intended and the latter omission is the only thing that might keep this from being first class material. Otherwise it may be necessary to watch the commercial angle of too much Burns.

On another tack this short is striking a comparison in technique with the newsreel mode. The former head of the U. S. Secret Service opens in travelog order in the film and then fades so that he is heard but only his voice is heard until the finish. He details the story while characters enact it in silent action.

Chief Burns has a good recording voice and doesn't waste verbiage. He's a name to conjure with for Sids in grownups alike but without a final kick none of it is really theatre fare.

In this first of the series that may come Burns relates of an embezzler who almost got away with a phoney bond deal on a New York bank. The denouement at the end is shown but it's tame and the refade to Burns in person isn't necessary.

New York locale and interesting that way. Shan.

THEIR WIVES' VACATION
Comedy
21 Mins.
New York, New York
Educational No. 2698

To those who linger on the old film slappy, the title is its own mouthpiece. Dialog nor technique new. Recording fair and photography simple, but it will catch laughter in the neighb pops and grinds.

Two action bright spots. One after opening. Fancy footwork by cast makes for falling hiccoughs. The other is before closing, when wives are watching their respective husbands make happy over two dames. Latter are Ann Roth and Pert Kelton.

Both are young and worth developing, but away from this type of comickery. Miss Roth, the younger of the two, is from the stage, and proving here that with proper handling she's worth a dramatic try. Brunette with good screen voice and looks. Shan.

"HELLO RUSSIA"
Slim Summerville and Eddie Gribbon
Comedy
20 Mins.
Mayfair, New York
Universal

Another of the series of two-reelers featuring Slim Summerville and Eddie Gribbon, and okay for laughs on any program. As in their last short, this comedy duo are doing soldier characterizations, Summerville as a buzzer and Gribbon as a tough top sergeant, with both on the make for the same girl, Lucille Hutton.

Nice direction all the way, the situation and dialog laughs being well developed, despite that the same comedy idea has been employed on the screen on numerous occasions. It's still sure-fire material, only a change of locale being necessary.

Boys are stationed with their company of Russian soldiers in a Siberian town, with Summerville out to show up the sergeant and managing to embarrass him continually. Gribbon's attempts to get even only make him more miserable. Best laughs result through Slim's assignment to instruct a company in the use of hand grenades and forgetting how to say four in Russian. Another bit is some comedy biz with a tear bomb that starts the troops crying while they are getting a pep talk from the captain.

This one has plenty of chuckles and quite a few belly laughs and rates as one of the best turned out by this comedy team for Universal.

"SITTING PRETTY"
JOE PHILLIPS and RUTH DONNELLY
Comedy
7 Mins.
Strand, New York
Vitaphone No. 1107

Timely idea mishandled in writing with the slight production help rendered not sufficient. How a bunch of comedy experts as were involved in the authoring, producing and playing of this short could go wrong by such a margin is difficult to figure.

Joe Phillips, a naturally funny comedian from the stage, wades through the seven minutes without a single solid laugh line. Some unoriginal fanny stuff, through the wife's name being Fanny, is overdone.

Phillips does a gag flagpole sitter, a sound idea offering countless comic possibilities with few grasped for good results. Short will miss entertaining without harming a bill, but as a fairly good idea gone carelessly wrong it's a terrible waste of talent. Bige.

"DIVORCED SWEETHEARTS"
Comedy
20 Mins.
Stanley, New York
Educational

Scant value to this two-reeler directed by Mack Sennett and featuring Daphne Pollard and Charles Irwin, with Ann Christy in the supporting cast. Thin story concerns a wife granted an interlocutory decree from her husband, who has been framed by her conniving aunt and his double-crossing friends.

Separated couple are still in love but this husband's attempt to effect a reconciliation are nullified by a chain of circumstantial evidence that makes him look like a chronic skirt chaser.

Lightweight dialogue and stilted low comedy situations make for a doubtful laugh-getter even where they're not so particular.

"HIGH C" CHARLEY CHASE
Comedy
28 Mins.
Capitol, N. Y.
Metro

Won't do for the major houses because of its length. Evidently aimed for the smaller sites which need support length for the feature, yet don't want to make the program a double feature. This is a three-reeler and doesn't belong in such houses as the Capitol. But in the lesser spots it should fit and entertain.

Story has Chase, the Roach comic, on the western front and more concerned with singing in a doughboy quartet than the war. There's enough to it to let it shape as an asset in two reels for the big houses, but it burdens itself and its audience with the overfootage. Big sites which want to use it will chop it to 2,000 feet, or less, if possible.

Gag matter is spliced between renditions by the singing foursome, and Chase can warble. Also the harmony is okay. A pleasing short that has simply been estimated too highly by its cutter. Plot has Chase pursued throughout the running by a second lieutenant with the usual number of falls and hideaways. Also a good looking blonde to take care of the femme angle.

Valuable addition for bills in the houses where it belongs. Big theatres, already crammed to the brim with material to get into two hours, will find it tough to handle. Good sized production behind it and enough laughs to keep it going between songs. Sid.

"ALL QUIET ON CANINE FRONT"
Dog Travesty
15 Mins.
Loew's State, New Orleans
Metro

A talker travesty with the dogs "talking." But it doesn't get wholly over. At the start, quite laughable, but as the short with the animals and voices try to go through with their travesty of "Western Front," the thing seems to get too serious in spite of itself. It may be the war subject or that a travesty a bit talker with animals isn't so funny for fun. This one only good in toto for those who have not previously seen other dog reels.

Possibly too much fidelity of the original was striven for and partially attained in this burlesque. Hearing the dogs talk at the opening brings some laughs, but these quickly fade. There isn't much variation thereafter in the voices and there is nothing funny by themselves in the travestied situations. The latter is likely the real reason this turned out so differently than had been anticipated. Sime.

"THE NAGGERS GO SOUTH"
Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth
Comedy
10 Mins.
Strand, New York
Vitaphone No. 1129

In the last few minutes of this number of their "The Naggers" series, the Norworths secure their best laughs. This comes through use of an old piece of vaude crossfire, the "upper is lower than the lower" routine, one here in front of a ticket window. "The Naggers Go South" is fairly good.

She beans him with an umbrella at the finish after they miss the train. Husband says they didn't miss it by much and she says she won't miss him by much, either. It's something like the old McMahon and Chappelle routine.

Previously they're arguing over the packing, his contention being that the wife should stay home and let him go away for a rest. Some zippy comedy material spotted here and there, with the Norworths' own style of delivery an asset sustaining this as a passable comedy short. Bige.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Now that "Der Blaue Engel" (Ufa's "Blue Angel") is over here, just what Max Reinhardt meant in an exclusive interview with "Variety" last spring becomes even more apparent. Reinhardt stressed the "pause," pronounced in German as "powza" and meaning what the English word does. Von Sternberg capitalized on these pauses by retaining much of the Jannings pantomimic art in lieu of dialog. Reinhardt is (or was) for the happy combination of modifying the overplus of talk and retaining as much of these "pauses" as possible, so as to permit pantomime to convey as much of the story as in the silent days.

Reinhardt recognized in this then curious interview with "Variety" that the electrical vibrations of the sound-track offset these necessary moments of silence which were necessary for the best effects. It will be recalled how dramatic Jannings is when he reaches for his customary perch where his hat usually is each morning (this is following his escapade in a honky-tonk the night before) and how effective that is excepting that there was (at least in the German version when seen at the Gloria Palast am Zoo, in Berlin) a disquieting vibratory overtone. This was what Reinhardt, and also Ferenc Molnar at that time, dwelt on in commenting on the Von Sternberg-Erich Pommer production.

When Fox-West Coast takes over six Publix first runs in San Francisco, Seattle and Portland Jan. 1, it will be laying in its lap a half dozen houses that were in fair condition at the end of last year (1929) but since have steadily slipped.

For the year 1929, when Herman Wobber, Par's distrib chief on the Pacific was personally supervising operation, the Par Coast group showed a profit, with only three in the red, but those carried the others for a nice net on the whole.

It has been a struggle trying to get the L. A. Paramount out of the rut but improvement recently is being shown despite a heavier nut than before. Last year the Par, L. A., was in the black for the year to the extent of around $90,000.

FWC, it is confidently believed, on the Coast, will be able to turn the six Publix houses it has taken into money-makers through its heavy film buying power, political intrenchment and chain domination.

If the FWC deal had not gone through it is said that Wobber again would have taken hold of Publix Coast operations.

Publicity department of one of the big film companies has finally obtained a nibble from a stage-screen star who phoned in to ask if there was anything they wanted her to do. A few months ago this girl kicked over what might have been one of the prize press gags of the year, on a department store hookup, which would probably have meant the consistent crashing of every rotagravure section in the country, to say nothing of the magazines. The star exploded the idea by sending her colored maid over to the head buyer to select the gowns she would wear on the tie-up, which was not to be of the ordinary kind.

Since then her picture has started playing around, and not doing any too well, besides which her show is in the same predicament. Hence, that phone call and sudden willingness to co-operate on publicity tells a lot of things. And as the film firm has no intention of using her for about another year, the exploitation boys can't just think of anything for her to do in a publicity way.

Universal's newspaper yarn, "Fires of Youth," being currently directed by Monta Bell, is the same story the director wrote and megged for Metro as a silent under the title "Man, Woman and Sin."

When Bell was engaged by U to make a picture he sold that studio on this yarn but it will cost the lot a reported $20,000 to buy the silent rights from Metro. U is trying now to make a trade, exchanging one of its properties not yet filmed.

When made as a silent, with John Gilbert starred, the picture raised plenty of yelps from newspaper people all over the country who objected to the manner in which the chief sobber on the sheet was painted as a keptive.

Michael Arlen's contract to do a picture for Samuel Goldwyn, with Walter Hackett collabing on the dialog treatment, is in line with Goldwyn's general endeavor to hook up literati "names" with his stars. Arlen, as in Frederick Lonsdale's instance, is also to write a yarn for Ronald Colman and likewise participate in the profits on a royalty percentage.

This royalty thing came about, states Abraham Lehr, the g. m. of the U. A. lot, through Lonsdale stating he had a swell yarn for Colman in "Bulldog Drummond" but that he also felt he would be wasting it if not doing it first as a stage play. Whence came Goldwyn's suggestion to give Lonsdale a royalty cut.

R-K-O's anticipated trouble over shortage of film product for its four theatres in the Times Square sector arrived this week. Cameo, on 42d street, one of the R-K-O quartet, was stuck for a current picture until the last minute. "Africa Speaks" (Col.), previously at the Globe, was booked for a repeat as a last resort.

Opening of the Mayfair as the ace of R-K-O's downtowners started the worry. Then the former bloomer, the Hippodrome, showed some life on a new "bargain" policy. And R-K-O has the Globe under lease running till Sept. 1, 1931.

If the Globe could be panned off, R-K-O believes the squeeze would be lessened.

Gary Cooper no like the way everything connected with "Morocco" is being thrown to Marlene Dietrich, and although technically he gets first titular mention on the screen, the billing, especially on the Coast, is all to Dietrich. Fox West Coast theatres even go further in their institutional ballyhoo trailers, plugging the Par picture (because it's spotted in FWC's Chinese) as to accord the German girl stellar billing above the title, with Cooper and Menjou submentioned.

At the social rounds which Cooper and Lupe Velez make, the Mexican picture girl, who is known for her impersonations, now goes it heavy on doing an impression of the Teutonic actress.

Pittsburgh radio stations are now broadcasting regular stage and screen reviews as well as a regular period devoted exclusively to theatrical happenings and personages hereabouts. Legit criticisms once weekly, Tuesday, while the films are revised on two or three consecutive mornings.

At KDKA Art Gorman, former radio editor of the "Press," does the reviewing, while Lewis Abel, interested in little theatre activities, has the job at KQV. Stations WCAE and WJAS expected to fall into line shortly.

Marlene Dietrich could thank Gloria Swanson and Phyllis Haver for her opportunity in Ufa's "Blue Angel." At the time Von Sternberg, director, sailed to Germany to make this picture, he cabled back for either American girl to come over and play the part. But Miss Swanson couldn't get away, and Miss Haver had decided to give up her career for marriage.

Reopening the Balboa at San Diego, Cal., as exclusively for foreign versions, Fox West Coast now doubts whether the stand can pay the nut. House, once the class spot of the town, has more than 1,600 seats and the Spanish speaking population of the vicinity is only 1,500.

Doubts arose when they compared the California, Los Angeles, a 1,600 seater which, with a potential 150,000 Spanish speaking draw, is barely making a profit.

Joe Schenck laughed off the report that United Artists was interested in Sid Grauman's Coast production of "Once in a Lifetime." Show is being cast by Fred Schuessler, the studio's casting director.

"Sid probably just borrowed our casting director," said Schenck.

"He asked you to lend him the casting director?" suggested a reporter.

"No," said Schenck. "If Grauman wanted anything on the lot he'd just come over and take it."

Former writer, now associate producer at one of the larger Coast studios, has a contract which states that any story he writes while in the employ of the studio is the property of the latter for the sum of $1.

Recently he submitted such a story but his bosses turned it down, figuring that it wasn't even worth the one buck. Producer then turned the story over to an agent who sold it to a rival concern for a reported $10,000.

House managers are now up against it in two ways. If they go in for the sex angle they'll be fired, and if the gross slips without the film getting its former advertising play, the same thing may happen.

They're taking the "no sex stuff" ruling literally. First evidence of

Legion Post Spurns Police Offer of Sabbath Benefit

Somersworth, N. H., Dec. 23.

Executive committee of Somersworth, N. H., American Legion Post, notified the police it had rejected an offer for permission to stage a benefit show Sunday. Assurance was given there would be no police interference.

A state law prohibits Sunday shows and the post committee contended that if Sunday film shows are illegal the commission's offer also is illegal. Previously the police had decided to test the validity of the law after warning the veterans it considered the Sunday charity shows illegal.

COAST INDIES GO FOR UA CONCESSIONS

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Except for a few minor subsequent run spots that are in negotiation, United Artists has closed with all the important indie exhibs in and around Los Angeles to play UA pictures.

Through it, UA product will get showings in probably more spots in this zone than if Fox-West Coast had taken it under blanket deals.

Around Los Angeles the more important indies closed are Guntbiner Bros.' Los Angeles and Tower downtown; WB's Forum downtown; Chotiner's Ravenna and Parisian in L. A.; the Pacific Coast Theatres string, including a half dozen here and in the suburbs; Pacific National Theatres in Long Beach, Bakersfield, Torrence, San Pedro, San Diego and Monrovia; Vine Street, Hollywood; Mark Hanson's three in L. A. and Hollywood; Roy Hunt's two in Riverside; the Tower, Pasadena; Garfield, Alhambra; Carl Young's houses, Glendale; Majestic, Crystal and Jewel, at Santa Monica, and several 25c. top houses.

UA is going out of its way to make concessions with indies so that they can find it possible to play its pictures on percentage.

Oldknow Employee New F-WC Purchasing Head

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

A utility man, from National Theatre Supply, of which Oscar S. Oldknow was former vice-president, has been appointed general purchasing agent for the Fox-West Coast circuit, succeed Al Hansen. He's Howard White and has been in charge of National Theatre Supply for the coast.

Effective Jan. 1, Hansen assumes purchasing charge of the Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho divisions under White, with headquarters in Seattle.

30c Gets $6,000

San Francisco, Dec. 23.

Investing 30 cents in a ticket, a lone bandit used it just long enough to rob the till of the Warwick theatre of $6,000.

Robbery occurred yesterday (Monday) noon when Emerson Jackman, assistant manager, was gunned into opening the safe while three others, a press agent, office clerk and janitor submitted to orders to assume prone positions during the lifting.

Western U. S. Proving Big Factor In Profit for Spanish Versions

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

The Coast, particularly California, and the entire southwest east to Texas, will bring in hundreds of thousands annually in distribution returns on foreign versions, according to distrib spokesmen here who are leading drives to spot bi-linguals, mostly Spanish, in this wide territory.

Until recently little had been done toward selling foreigns in the States, but within the past two months Metro and Paramount have gathered in many accounts for regular booking of Spanish talkers.

Metro and Par, it is conservatively estimated, will show gross distribution returns of around $100,000 each during the coming year on foreigns in this country, based on accounts already lined up. Print costs, to be charged against this, will average from $7,000 to $10,000 for each company, say exchange sources.

Full Year's Product

With Par's 25, Metro's 18, WB-FN's 18 and others in Spanish, theatres find it possible to play Spanish versions without interruption. In some cases distribs will guarantee service to two houses in the same zone, one taking the product second run.

Metro's home office, impressed with foreign sales business out of Los Angeles, has decided to add the entire state of New Mexico to this territory. Under the exchange setup for English talkers, New Mexico is served out of Denver. It's claimed that N. M. tops Arizona for theatres which can support regular foreign version policies.

Spanish talkers were first tried locally at the California, Fred Miller's house on Main last August. From that beginning, distribs have now finally induced Fox-West Coast and Publix to turn some of their houses over to foreign versions in addition to numerous indies.

Circuits Testing

So far F C has San Diego, Calexico, Brawley, Banning—all in California—and Globe, Nogales and Douglas (Arizona) in Spanish version policies; while Publix is playing the Hispanic talkers regularly in Yuma, Ariz., as its starter. Publix has around 20 houses in that state.

Indies going into foreign version policies so far include eight in L. A.: California, Hidalgo, Electra, Art Moon, Optic, Mexico, Rainbow and Unique. Among others are San Juan Capistrano, San Fernando, Oxnard, San Bernardino, Chino (Cal.), Lorenci and Mexicali, Ariz.

Metro points to its $3,800 bit for one week at the California theatre on "Singer of Seville" as indication of what rentals can be pulled on Spanish talkers. It gets 70% of profits above the nut from this house. From Hidalgo, also on Main street and second run to the California, Metro got over $500. This house, as is the case with most playing Spanish talker policies, pays small guarantees plus 40 to 50% from the first dollar.

Distribs are also spotting their short product in Spanish houses, synchronizing some with Spanish records, such as Metro dog comedies and product that can be treated in this manner.

C. E. Buchanan, let go by First National when WB and FN exchanges combined, has been added to Metro's staff to sell Spanish product only.

While distribs are concentrating mainly on Spanish talkers, a few spots are expected for French and German.

Auditing Groups Going Over Books of Fox-WC

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Two groups of auditors are going over the books of Fox-West Coast and from reports will be around a couple of months for a complete check.

F. W. LaFrentz Co., accountants, already in FWC quarters, will be joined this week by auditors of Price, Waterhouse. While at FWC nothing official is indicated as to the presence at this time of auditors, it is evident around the home office that they are here for some special purpose. One presumption is that the auditor groups are acting for eastern banking interests to learn the exact status of FWC business at this time.

Fox has around $55,000,000 in short-term notes coming due next April.

When the LaFrentz group came in they took over large quarters next to Oscar S. Oldknow's private office, requiring J. G. Delabar, treasurer, and others to find temporary offices.

Labor Troubles

Washington, Dec. 23.

Legit managers here have until midnight of Dec. 27 under an ultimatum served by Washington musicians. The alternative is a walkout with the stage hands backing the musickers.

The musicians demand seven men in the pit at the National and Belasco all through the season which includes summer stock. As matters stand the managers and musicians now operate on a verbal agreement. The musicians want a new contract in writing.

Shutdown would darken local houses New Year's Eve.

Operators Return to Work

Burlington, Ia., Dec. 23.

Central States Theaters, operating in eight Iowa towns, and the motion picture operators' union patched up their difficulties last week. Sunday (21) union operators returned to the houses which they left two weeks ago.

Terms of the peace truce were not announced.

Singer In Seattle

Seattle, Dec. 23.

Mort Singer, representing RKO labor disputes, is here again, ironing out the situation. Say's only Seattle, San Francisco, and L. A. remain unsettled, and the end is in sight.

In Seattle there are no contracts now in force, except one Hamrick has with musicans. Understanding is to continue as is without contract.

When the Paramount dropped its band a short time ago, the union protested. Crisis postponed from week to week, so threatened walkout of stage hands and operators at that house did not occur. Now, in waiting mood no doubt, until Fox takes over the house Jan. 10. Singer handling situation for theatres in general, and hopes to close up in a week.

BATTLE OVER REBATES

Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., has been sued in the Supreme Court, for $100,000 damages by George Browning, Inc. Latter firm alleges that last March 31 the defendant agreed to hire the plaintiff to try to procure rebates on the bills of all its theatres for electric light and power and was to receive 40% of the rebates obtained. The defendant is said to have repudiated the agreement on May 26.

In an answer the Fox company asserts that a letter on the subject written by William Brandt, as its general manager, did not bind the defendant because Brandt had no authority to do so.

Dip on Bank Closing

ing. Why it should break so severely at this time is a mystery to everybody in the picture trade. People intimately associated with the company itself are in the stock heavily at prices in the 60's and they profess as much puzzlement as outsiders in the turn of events.

Market arguments don't mean a thing right now. The market is in a dazed state of introspection and does not look beyond its own circle for light. If a stock stands out on the way down or on the way up traders take their information from ticker performance and disregard everything else.

Last week's rebound obviously was the outcome of technical considerations. Short selling had run ahead of itself and an overcrowded bear position brought on a rally. When covering had spent itself prices slid. A good deal has been said and written about investment buying, but nobody really knows much about the real situation. That there has been liquidation of investment holdings there seems to be no doubt, but there has been no sign of aggressive long operations.

As to the position Monday night, there were plenty of reasons why the market might be headed for a new test of last week's lows, and good ground for anticipating that the former bottoms might hold. Last week's sharp break ran over three full days and was turned by a brilliant coup against the shorts. There followed four days of spirited rally and during those sessions it is probable that a large amount of support stock was unloaded on covering shorts at a profit to the timely buyers.

Some Fat for Bulls

The constructive element then probably is in a strong position to again come to the assistance of the market when the bottoms are again tested. On top of which there is always the bull play to catch the low. Banking situation is much improved by the elimination of the sore spot in Bank of the U. S., and the big institutions are believed to be fortified to handle almost any situation remaining, if such there are.

Monday's bond market gave a much better performance than it did during last week's crisis, particularly among the amusement fixed income securities, which held most of their gains from recent bottoms. Bonds of leading film companies are still selling far out of line, but they demonstrated last week that they could snap back viciously at workers for the decline.

Last week's bond section among the theatre issues looked like a wild movement in the industrial list. Warner Bros.' 6½ convertibles jumped 10 points on dealings of $250,000, and the new Paramount-Publix 5½'s scored a gain of 7 points from their extreme low. These are the first upturns among the bonds since early in November, and the two issues mentioned had been under terrific pressure from many sources. General Theatre bonds had crashed to the ominous level of 52¾ before the turn came, and although this obligation finished the week with a net loss of 4 points, its closing price of 57 was 4 points better than the worst. The Shubert bonds went into a new collapse to 18. No statement came out publicly as to disposition of the question of payment of semi-annual interest, due Dec. 15. The stock was equally weak, going back below 5 for most of the time, close to the low for all time around 4¼.

Flurry in Warners

Trading in Warner stock was tremendous, reaching a total close to 375,000 shares in the week. During the heavy assault of last Wednesday the stock came out in blocks at constantly lower quotations, and at its low touched 9¾ just before the turn came. At that price there was a brisk play among the Times Square talent. One professional man in business in the Square caught the extreme bottom for 300 shares. Warner had been tipped by several graphists as a buy below 14.

The trade has sensed something going on in Warners for a couple of weeks, but the nature of the development is a mystery. After the turn it was a sensational performer, while most of the other amusements gave a pretty mild account of themselves in recovery from prices regarded six months ago as fantastic.

Notably Paramount was lacking in strong recuperative powers. From its low of 34¾ it climbed within a fraction of 40, but was the first to retire from the peak of the recovery.

Radio Keith did not do much better. Going into a new low for the year at 14⅝, the best it could do on the rebound was 17⅝, just about the level of the previous bottom. The former aggressive sponsorship obviously was standing off. Bull sponsors are taking a vacation generally except in a few technically cornered issues like Case and Worthington Pump. It was this shyness of bull cliques that gave the rebound a suspicion of artificiality. Logic was that if the turnabout really marked the end of the bear market, the active groups, who had been making demonstrations for weeks in various stocks, should have been out in front whooping it up. When they laid back it was obvious that they also envisioned a future day when they might need resources to meet a test.

Fox-Loew stocks looked spotty. The Fox A was stubbornly defended under the severest attack, but did little to get going on the rally. It now is reputed to have the strongest kind of bank backing, but its future is clouded with uncertainty. With its background of intricate financing and capital problems ahead, its situation is not clear. On current earnings there is no new cash.

WB THEATRE SCOUT LOOKING OVER TEXAS

Dallas, Dec. 23.

Joe E. Luckett, scouting for Warners in Texas, is reported negotiating several deals with aspects of a WB foothold in Lone Star territory.

Luckett recently returned from a tour through west Texas, new boom region over which Publix and the Griffiths wheel, indie, have waged competish war for the past year. It is likely that WB, in case a Texas invasion materializes, will start in the Panhandle region. The plain country is now dotted with several towns of the 30,000 class.

Former supposition was that WB would build a group of deluxes in Dallas, Ft. Worth, Houston, and San Antonio as opposish to R-K-O-Publix.

W. E. VERDICT

Dallas, Dec. 24.

Western Electric won its fifth patent infringement suit recently, when a San Antonio federal bench said "No" to Aleograph Co., sound equip manufacturers of that town.

Device contested chiefly was the connection between disc and projector on disc sound equipment with Santone firm claiming is bought the patent in pre-sound days from its inventor, a Texan.

information, but it is fair to presume that it is subject to the same difficulties that beset the whole amusement business, not to speak of all American industry and the commerce of the world.

Loew Loses Punch

Behavior of Loew was not encouraging. On the break it gave way to a new low for the year below 42, but jumped to 49 on the rebound, going ahead relatively faster than any of the others except Warner. Monday it gave excellent resistance until the sharp drive in the last half hour, when it retreated rapidly, closing like all the others, at the bottom for the day, around 44½. Rather startling incident of the last week market was the collapse of the Loew debenture rights on the Curb, which broke to 10 on sales of 200 for a net loss of 14 points. The rights, of course, expire in the spring of 1932, and the life of the privilege is constantly getting shorter. However, 10 is below the bottom on the break of November, 1929, and the lowest quotation since the rights were issued.

Violent swings continued in Eastman Kodak, one of the former blue chips that has suffered greatly in the deflation market. It was low on Wednesday at 142 and recovered to 155, only to drop back Monday to around 145, the last figure being below its bottom of 150 in the 1929 panic.

Both the Consolidated Film stocks, which have stood up under attack right along, gave way last week and showed no resiliency in the comeback. The junior stock on Monday went into a brand new bottom for the year or longer at 10¼. Apparently the pessimism that prevails in west coast film circles was communicated to the New York market. Or perhaps Hollywood ticker dabbling bank victims were realizing

Chicago Distribs' Collections for 1930 Are 'Way Off on 'Bad Boys'

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Exchanges in the midwest are still trying to figure a fool-proof means of holding down delinquent exhibitors. The bad boys on film row have had things pretty much their own way the past year, with the distributors unable to make them behave.

This year exchanges will collect only about $150,000 from bad exhibitors, as against the $500,000 annually obtained from contract-breakers in former years. Loss of the arbitration board has cut the amount of collections on defaults about 40%. Under the old arbitration system collections ran as high as 98 cents on the dollar. This year it will average about 60 cents.

This $150,000 represents the amount of court suits pending at present, all for unplayed contracts for 1929.

Court cases, however, are restricted entirely to the larger suits, with anything under $1,000 not counted due to the tremendous court costs and long delay. In many cases these small judgments would not be collectable even if the court ruled for the exchanges. In former years, all of these minor claims could be adjusted through the board.

Only weapon of any value left to the exchanges is their own product, distributors refusing to deliver film if an exhib has failed to pick up an earlier print. By holding off the desired film, the exchanges are forcing the delinquents to come through for those pictures on which they dodged.

ALL-FOREIGN PICTURE HOUSE FOR FRISCO

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

With Fox-WC taking over coast Publix houses, immediate provision is being made to install foreign talkers as the St. Francis, Frisco, former Publix stand, which has been making an unsuccessful struggle.

New policy starts Christmas Day, with the French version of "Sarah And Son" going in for a week, followed by the Italian "Doctor's Secret." House will go in for practically all foreign product turned out by major studios.

St. Francis going foreign gives now Fox-WC four downtown first runs in Frisco, Fox, Paramount, Warfield, and California.

Akron Has 4th Theatre Bombing Within a Month

Akron, O., Dec. 23.

Fourth theatre bombing in as many weeks occurred here when the Cameo theatre, East Akron neighborhood picture house, was damaged by a blast. No one was injured.

Theatre, closed for repairs, is owned by M. M. Federhar. Stench bombs were thrown into the Cameo theatre and his home several months ago.

As with the other three explosions police attributed the bombing to labor difficulties. A few arrests have been made but those held have always been later released for lack of evidence.

Mgrs. Nab Thieves

Grand Rapids, Dec. 23.

Manager Walter Norris of the R-K-O Regent, and manager Frank Kleaver, of Keith's, helped capture two alleged automobile thieves.

They saw two men trying to start Norris' car and made a dive for them. Kleaver found a gun in his ribs and both the theatre managers, backed ground until the robbers started to run down the street. Managers took up the chase, and picking up a copper enroute, managed to nab both of the men.

Janet Gaynor celebrates Christmas—and the day after. For on the day after, in 1923, she became a movie extra. Her phenomenal rise to fame, from "atmosphere" to stardom, was so rapid it almost took her breath.

Happy accident rather than design shaped her career. Little Miss Janet was stage shy instead of stage struck, and hesitated to try pictures even when relatives urged it. Born in Philadelphia, and educated by instalments in Philadelphia, Chicago and San Francisco, she tossed her 100 pounds of personality into the business world — where she had no business. The monotony didn't suit her style.

The business world's loss was Hollywood's Gaynor. She was an extra girl in Westerns, and played a bit in "The Johnstown Flood." Winfield Sheehan caught the sparkle of greatness in that bit. Against precedent and against advice, he chose her for the lead in "7th Heaven." Many wise heads said it was dangerous. A world-wide public unanimously reversed their decision, and seconded Winfield Sheehan's vision.

Success has left her unspoiled. Her great popularity has not made her a show-off. Intelligence and hard work — as well as inborn talent — have contributed to her achievement. She proves that getting into pictures may be an accident, but staying in is not.

adds more laurels to his record as producer of successful motion pictures with this opening.

He has to his credit "Bulldog Drummond," "Condemned," "Raffles" and now "The Devil to Pay" starring Ronald Colman.

"Whoopee" starring Eddie Cantor, and soon the world will acclaim his genius as a producer with the release of "One Heavenly Night" and his latest screen find, Miss Evelyn Laye.

Frederick Lonsdale, famous playwright, author of "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," "Spring Cleaning," "The High Road," "Aren't We All?" wrote "The Devil to Pay" especially for Ronald Colman.

In the French production is, of course, intended as a local draw. The one French sketch which gets the best laugh is by Saint-Granier and Rochefort, depicting a social event both as it takes place and afterwards as those taking part in it feel it should take place. One real hit is Dennis King in the "Vagabond" song. Marguerite Moreno acts very well a comparatively small part, and Boucot has a bit of slapstick comedy which hardly gives him a chance.

Despite heavy injection of French sequences, technicolor scenes and curiosity for names film failed to hold the audience's interest throughout. The French are not for film revues.

Sound is very good as is the direction of the French sequences ditto. Photography very clear.

ALRAUNE

(GERMAN MADE)

Ufa production and release. Direction, Richard Oswald. Manuscript by Charlie Roellinghoff and R. Weisbach after the well known novel of the same name by Hanns Heinz Ewers. Photography, Guenther Krampf. Recorded on Klangfilm. Starring Albert Bassermann, Brigitte Helm, Harald Paulsen, Agnes Straub, Bernhard Goetzke, E. A. Licho, Kowal-Samborski, Kaethe Haack, Paul Westermeier, Liesl Schaak, Henry Bender and Martin Kosleck. Running time, 97 mins. At Gloria Palast, Berlin.

Apart from the fact that the idea is on a very low level and involves a ghastly idea by Hanns Heinz Ewers, the picture is bad and silly. Richard Oswald, who admittedly was a leader years ago, has not advanced artistically. Great German stage actors like Agnes Straub and Albert Bassermann are not well handled in this instance. Oswald was successful with his Dreyfus picture, but this was not so much due to his direction as to the subject which is still absorbingly interesting.

But in this latest picture Oswald is so inferior in his direction that good actors are wasted. Everybody is permitted to do what he likes, exaggerates, plays silly theatre.

Explanation of Oswald's success is that he has secured by purchase effective film subjects and is selling them on condition that he is to direct. The endeavor of many German film companies including the Ufa to shoot only box office pictures and to use for talkers old successful subjects is a failure in this instance. Times have changed, and the interest of the German public is directed toward a fresher type of subjects.

"Alraune" inspires unintended hilarity in serious scenes, when, for instance, Brigitte Helm dances a tango in a vulgar way in the midst of polite company. This actress, who once promised so well artistically, has become a poor copy of Greta Garbo and Marlene Dietrich.

Zapfenstreich Am Rhein

(GERMAN MADE)

Delogfilm production and Triumph Film release. Direction Jaap Speyer. Musical management, Walter Sieber. Dancing arrangements, Heinz Linger. Photography, Franz Planer and Felodej Behn-Grund. Recorded on Tobis. Starring Charlotte Susa, Hans Stuwe, Maria Solveg, Carmilo von Hollay and Ernst Verebes. Running time, 102 mins. At Titania-Palast, Berlin.

One is puzzled and amazed again and again to see at what the German public is amused. But one finds joins in the laughter.

A magician, who is joining the army, and who appears with a gray silk hat and a bird's cage in the barracks and an awkward musician, are figures who excite laughter. Comic effects are obtained by Siegfried Arno and Verebes in the principal roles.

The action is on the style of an operette. Unbelievable things happen until the two romantic couples, the smart lieutenant (Hans Stuwe) and the beautiful and talented Charlotte Susa on the one hand, and Maria Solveg and Ernst Verebes on the other, come together.

Hans Junkermann, Julie Serda, Westermeyer and Else Reval are entitled to a big share of credit here.

There are nice but unmovitated songs. The sound reproduction is not clear. The musically well done "Zapfenstreich" (army music) "I pray to the power of love" does not fit into the farcical events.

Magnus.

HEADIN' NORTH

Tiffany production and release starring Bob Steele. Direction, story and adaptation by J. P. McCarthy. Cast: Barbara Luddy, Ferry Murdock, Walter Shumway, Eddie Dunn, Fred Burns, Gordon DeMain, Harry Allen, Gunner Davis, S. S. Simon, Jim Welsh, Jack Henderson. At Loew's New York, one day, Dec. 17, as half double bill. Running time, 57 mins.

Lively western which gives Bob Steele plenty of opportunity for hard riding and rough and tumble fisticuffing. Action episodes follow in quick succession and the flicker is surefire for the daily change spots. Neat direction job practically all the way, the high spot being a sequence in a frontier gambling joint.

Plot concerns Jim Curtis (Steele), an escaped convict, out to vindicate himself and his father of the crime of which they were accused. In order to clear his name and find the guilty lad, a faro bank dealer, Curtis poses as an actor booked into the honky tonk. With the aid of his sweetheart (Barbara Luddy) he finally gets the gambler in a spot and forces a confession, just as the sheriff and the posse arrive.

In addition to Steele, Eddie Dunn, as the announcer in the gambling joint, and Jack Henderson, doing a "stew," turn in first rate performances. Balance of the cast also merits favorable attention.

CONTRE-ENQUETE

("Cross Investigation")

(American made)

(French dialog)

Warner production and release. Made in Hollywood with French cast. Directed by Jean Daumery, after the film "Those Who Dance." Recorded by Vitaphone. Running time, 70 mins. Capucines, Paris, Dec. 5.

Joe	Daniel Mendaille
Nora	Suzy Vernon
Betty	Jeanne Helbling
Dan	Georges Mauloy
Benson	Jenia Norman
Tonio	Louis Mercier
Frank	Francis Orval
O'Brien	Emile Chautard

Film very well received, due to interesting story. Well directed and acted. The fact that the locale is distinctly American doesn't hurt as Chicago gangsters have been publicised to such an extent that the French public is as much at home with them as with the local apache.

Story is that of a policeman who, at the request of a girl, impersonates a gangster in order to break a gang. This is the first French production from Hollywood by Warners, and it has been very well done by the imported cast. Daniel Mendaille, as a gangster, is convincing and Jeanne Helbling created realistically the girl. French dialog is very good, just supplementary to the action but never stopping it, and the sound is entirely satisfactory. Photo also standard.

More than anything else the success of the film is due to its fast tempo. There is action from beginning to end without a dilatory scene. Gangsters appear to be one of the best advertised American products at the present moment, and, as such, escape the disfavor foreign stuff is currently meeting with on the screen.

Land of the Midnight Sun

(NORWEGIAN MADE)

Produced independently in Norway and released independently in the U. S. No credits. Travelog. At the Fifth Ave. Playhouse, N. Y., starting Dec. 20. Running time, about 65 mins.

Nothing is missed in this camera study of Norway. The fjords, mountains, snow, grasses, country roads and tourists' autos—all are included.

Picture has no classification because it is not a feature. It is simply a series of magazine clips found in newsreels over a period of months and combined to the running length of a feature. Written titles attempt to hold the various bits of geographic action together.

No theatres in American, except those catering to Scandinavians, can get by with the big magazine subject now which this presents. A minute of it in a newsreel is okay, but over an hour of aimless wandering about Norway is far more than even the average Norwegian audience will pay for in America.

Picture was shot silent, but has been synchronized with a score.

Waly.

A l'Ouest Rien de Noveau

("All's Quiet on Western Front")

Paris, Dec. 7.

Silent version of Universal's American production. Opening at the Ermitage, Paris, Dec. 1.

Film is an enormous draw, playing s. r. o. in a ritzy 1,200-seater. Enormous word of mouth publicity results from patrons who have seen the film telling prospects of the unrelenting interest of the production.

Film is shown as a synchronization with a musical adaptation made in Hollywood. No German dialog has been left, the only German words being a few military commands and march songs. Score is very suitable.

The scene in the book where the German soldiers, in rest billets, cross the river to meet some French girls has, of course, been left out of this version. Also the scene of the killing of the French soldier in the shell-hole has been shortened.

The French are exceedingly critical about war films, in this way, that they know a lot of details of trench life and equipment. That this film should contain anything but the strongest possible brief against war by depicting its horrors with grim reality, goes well with the public. The French look upon this film as peace propaganda, and as such, apart from any other quality, give it unstinted praise.

U. A.'s Offer

Topeka, Dec. 23.

A new angle on the local theatre situation was brought to light when J. R. Mack, manager of the Isis, playing Topeka's only stage bills, announced that he had been approached by representatives of United Artists offering to wire the house, make him manager and furnished him film if he would "give them Topeka representation."

The Isis has only 600 seats, but it is the sole theatre in town not controlled by Fox. When refused, U. A. immediately began dickering for use of the city auditorium. So far no action.

CAN. SAFETY MEETING

Regina, Dec. 23.

Representatives of the film censor boards in five Canadian Provinces attended a conference here, when a uniform code was drawn up to govern the use of projection machines and safety devices in projection booths. Resolutions embodying the standard rules are being presented to the governments of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario.

Quebec did not attend the conference.

Picking Own Stars and Retitling Now Part of Routine for Exhibs

O. K. on Main St.

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Main street exhibitor here is playing "For the Term of His Natural Life," made by Australasian Films in Australia five years ago. Story is about a convict colony of 1850.

All stills on display are from Metro's "Big House." Lobby display of machine guns and automatic gats is helping the draw.

25 WB COAST HOUSES LINED UP BEFORE JAN.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

M. A. Silvers, Warner's Coast theatre operator, expects to have 25 houses lined up by January. Present circuit of 14 is being constantly added to, the latest acquisition being the Embassy, S. F., which is already in WB possession and is undergoing remodeling. It's an 1,800-seater.

San Pedro house starts Jan. 1, and the Wilshire and Cannon neighborhooder will be ready Feb. 1. Warner theatre on Wilshire and Western (Los Angeles) starts thereafter.

BOOTH MAN PENSIONED

Albany, Dec. 23.

Ben Edgar, picture operator here for 23 years, has been pensioned by RKO. Although Edgar had been at the present RKO-Proctor house since 1910, he was in the employ of RKO for only one year.

He organized the Motion Picture Operators' Union of Albany.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

While one group of exhibs has complained about talker remakes of silents under new titles, another group, the producers are now learning through their distribution contacts, is protesting against dropping of old titles for the remakes. Exhibs contend these would mean something at the box office.

Exhibs in various parts of the country are threatening to play the remakes under the old silent titles.

Apparently fearing sales reaction through too many talker remakes with same old titles, producers lately have been digging up new story names and eliminating all mention in advertising, etc., of what the remakes are based on.

Exhib contention seems to be that in many instances recently studios have reproduced old well known plays and novels, formerly done silent, but thrown away the most valuable part of the property—the title.

All in all, theatres throughout the country have evidenced determination to get most out of pictures through billing them as desired, with many cases on record where featured players have been raised to starring position and preference on names shown in violation of producer-distrib billing.

FOX'S OWN KIDS

Detroit, Dec. 23.

Fox theatre is putting 700 youngsters from it's dancing school on the stage for a gala Xmas week show. The kids will be in a revue with eleven scenes. Ethel Riddle, manager of the school, staged the numbers and special costumes are being made for the engagement.

This is in addition to the regular Fanchon and Marco unit.

You Musn't Say That

Eliminated gags, bits and stage biz in acts in the R-K-O theatres, as ordered by the booking office during weeks of Dec. 6 and 13:

"Your father is in Kansas City." "He isn't, He's dead." "Your mother's husband is dead, but your father lives in Kansas City."

Please use more care when throwing stooge against advertising olio. It is very old and he will kick it to pieces. Positively stop horse play with seltzer bottle as you sprayed it all over the new plush; damage will be charged to act.

Man, with arm around girl's waist, says he likes Spain. Girl: "You certainly feel your way around." Man: "I'm reaching for Astoria."

Kindly do not mention the name of the manager.

"He's in the automobile business. He gave me an automobile last night and tonight he's going to give me the business."

Slapping woman on the stomach and kicking her.

"What the hell."

"She calls her dog 'Broker' because he does business on the curb."

"He said he'd teach me to play golf. If what he taught me was golf the game ought to be stopped."

"Did you pay a green fee?" "No, we were in the rough all day."

"He uses sign language—expresses his feelings with his hands."

All references to hard times and President Hoover.

"I have 14 children and I'm afraid my husband doesn't love me."

"Hell, think what might have happened to you if he loved you."

Farnum Safe With Indian Tribe While Friends' Plane Searched All Death Valley

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

The following wire from Sheriff Harry Goper, of Death Valley Junction, Cal., speaks for itself:

"Ralph Farnum found late today (Dec. 16) living with tribe of Piute Indians in northern end of Death Valley. He was surprised at the interest created and sorry to have been so much trouble. Said he had no idea anyone would miss him. He is staying in the Valley for a time for his health. Says he likes living with the Indians. He wanted me to thank everyone for their help and to please notify everyone he was all right."

Last week's alarm report on the disappearance of Farnum had Leo Morrison, agent, all ready with two army planes set to start the morning following the discovery of the missing agent. Morrison only held off at the sheriff's suggestion that he investigate the report of a mining prospector, just coming through Death Valley, that he had seen a white man answering to Farnum's description living with a tribe of Indians.

Harry Bannister, husband of Ann Harding, went out with a plane the day of Farnum's discovery by one of the three rescue squads which Sheriff Goper had finally sent out.

The sheriff had been waiting for verification from New York that it wasn't a publicity stunt, or that Farnum was not back home.

WB Picks Up Option, Splits New Team

Joe Donahue, brother of the late Jack Donahue, is returning to Hollywood for talkers. Warners having picked up his option. Under the previous WB contract Joe played in "Sunny."

Young Donahue recently broke in a new vaude turn with Nellie Breen as his partner, between options. New deal breaks up the act.

A Stillman in Vaud

Jack Stillman, after rehearsing with "Babes in Toyland," stepped out of rehearsals last week and was signed for the Eddie Cantor act, now set for two weeks at the Palace, N. Y.

This is the same Stillman who appeared in "Jonica" and later with Ann Pennington in vaude; he is a nephew of James A. Stillman, N. Y. banker.

His brother, Bob, now on the west coast, is working for Tiff pictures.

BURKE IN HOSPITAL

St. Paul, Dec. 23.

Reported as not serious.

Ann Suter Walks in Wash. Over Material Controversy

Washington, Dec. 23.

Ann Suter left the current bill at Warner's Earle after opening day (Saturday) following a controversy with the management over the material in her turn. The single completed the three shows Saturday but was out Sunday.

After the opening performance the theatre notified Miss Suter that her material was considered objectionable. She disagreed with that opinion and left the bill rather than change.

Buck Messed Up in Wash. Police Encounter

Washington, Dec. 23.

Buck and Bubbles, at Loew's Palace last week, should long remember the city of Washington, due to an encounter with the law.

According to police, the colored comics were waiting for a taxicab when a cop passed by and was greeted with a slurring remark. The boys were given a ride to the station house and were released in Baltimore.

The same cops stated the slurring remark was eliminated from Buck and Bubbles' sidewalk routine.

Carpentier for Vaude

Georges Carpentier, the French boxer who once fought Jack Dempsey, is opening for R-K-O in a vaude act with four girls.

He opens at Paterson, N. J., Jan. 17. Nick Agnetta, of the Bierbauer office, is handling the former French fighter.

Jos. Wallace Left $18,000

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 23.

Joseph F. Wallace, former manager of RKO, here, left $18,000 in real and personal property, according to his will filed for probate. He died Nov. 5. The property was left to the widow, Edythe Cecelia Barnum Wallace.

Fritzi's Vaude Act

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Fritzi Brunette is rehearsing an act for vaude with Ray Cooke.

Former picture name intends to take it east.

Fiske O'Hara's "Showing"

Fiske O'Hara, legit, will "show" for Loew's at the Lincoln, N. Y., New York, Jan. 1.

Vivienne Segal Opens Jan. 10

Opening date set for Vivienne Segal's four weeks for Warners is Jan. 10 at Washington.

All of her stage dates will be played in conjunction with "Nine-nese Nights" (WB).

PLANS OF PUBLIX AND FOX MATURE

P-P Circuit Alone May Open Up 30 Weeks—First F-M Bill Already Started—Indies Becoming Stronger for Idea—Current Grows for Film-Stage Idea

"BREAK" FOR ACTS

Further encouragement for vaudeville in its anticipated comeback as an aid to pictures is seen in the progress of Publix toward settlement of its "flesh" problem, indicated trend of eastern independent theatres toward stage bills one or more days a week, and the successful opening Dec. 12 of the first vaude layout on the Fanchon & Marco-Fox picture house route.

The reported Publix plans for 30 weeks of playing time in the middle west for three types of vaude bills, ranging from about $1,600 to $6,000 in cost, remained tabled after a week's discussion, but developments point to an early settlement. Vaude for some of the Florida houses is already decided upon.

Survey and sounding of Publix from coast to coast for vaude adaptability, which led to the qualification of the 30 western weeks, has, from accounts, started the vaude talk well on the way to a definite decision at Publix.

In addition to laying a vaude booking foundation by lining up a staff of prospective booking men for the William Morris office, which will handle the buying of acts for Publix when the vaude materializes, if at all, Publix is said to be considering the appointment of territorial directors for supervision of stage shows in the various theatre divisions.

Harry Hollander's unannounced move from the Publix unit presentation department at Astoria to the Publix home office in New York, ostensibly in connection with vaude, as also Harry Gourfain, was considered the most important surface reflection of Publix's present vaude-mindedness. Additionally, Billy Diamond, now booking independently in Chicago, is reported coming east to join Lawrence Golde as the booking team for the starting Publix vaude bills.

From the outlook at the moment Publix should be settled either way on the vaude question by Jan. 1, with possibility of considerable vaude time in present Publix straight picture theatres by the middle of January.

F. & M.'s First

The initial F. & M. vaude bill for the coast-to-coast Fox presentation route, lead-off in the new F. & M. policy of one vaude bill to every three presentations, was reported at the F. & M.-Fox office in New York to have been considered successful at its opening. The bill comprised the Aerial Rooneys, Bobby Henshaw and the Nine Allisons, standard vaude turns, with an F. & M. line of 16 girls.

F. & M. is lending its production department aid to routining of the vaude pace changers on the presentation route for scenery, dressing and mounting as well as the ballet trimmings.

In acts' salaries the once monthly F. & M. vaude bills will exceed the regular presentation payroll by around $500, but with this offset through reduction of production expense.

Response of the eastern indies to supposed "flesh" demand has been a large increase in weekend and one-day, mostly Sunday, stands for vaude acts. Numerous smallies in the neighborhoods of New York are taking on indie booked bills on the Sabbath, calling them "Sunday concerts." The subway legit spots are also reviving the use of vaude.

Stagehands Union's Voluntary Cut To Encourage Stage Shows in Chi

Chicago, Dec. 23.

George Browne, head of the I. A. T. S. E. here, has made a round of the legit and vaude theatres, and chopped men in several spots to give the managers a better break.

Cut was made on the part of Browne, without request from the local stages, with his intention to encourage other managers to try stage shows. Houses affected are the Symphony, where one man was taken off the payroll; Haymarket, where three were lopped off; Harris, two; Great Northern, three, and Apollo, one.

According to the agreement between producers and the IATSE it was possible for Browne to force them to retain the number of men they opened with.

About two-thirds of the stage hands are working at present in and about Chicago.

Testing Santa Claus

Harry Lorraine, indie vaude booker, after attending auditions for two days, finally accepted one fellow to play Santa Claus for three days at the Broadway theatre, Haverstraw, N. Y.

LAW KILLS CHI. KIDDIE SHOWS THIS XMAS

Chicago, Dec. 23.

With the juvenile protective associations especially hot this year, the annual kid shows for the Christmas season have been called off by Publix-B. & K. Courts hung up a fine for the playing of Mitzi Green at the Chicago last month.

Figuring at an average fine of $250 per youngster, it would cost the B. & K. houses about three times the normal gross to pay off for the 165 kids it usually spots in the Christmas festival presentations.

In the past the kid presentations were the gala occasions of the year. It was one big holiday for the mothers, kids and the producers and b. o. Producers would start 10 weeks ahead of time, holding daily weeding out the hopefuls.

Each stage show used about 35 kids apiece.

10 Weeks on R-K-O for World Champ Creep Team

Rules under which the second annual world's international dance championships will be held at Roseland ballroom, New York, Feb. 17, prohibit the entrance of a New York team in the finals. That decision was reached by Charles Burgess, conducting the contest sponsored by Roseland to get around accusations of favoritism such as occurred last year when a couple from Queens, New York, won the waltz and fox trot championships.

Elimination contests are now being held in 25 cities and four foreign countries, each of which will have a team represented in the finals in New York. Olympic point system is being used in picking the finalists, the teams being scored for tempo, position, execution and originality. Team selected as the world's champs will be awarded $3,000 in cash and merchandise and an R-K-O vaude contract for ten weeks.

Ollie Debrow's Return

Galveston, Dec. 23.

Ollie Debrow, blackface comic star of former years, began his comeback at the Columbia Theatre, Port Arthur, Tex., last week. Acquiring habit as result of grief over death of his wife, Debrow was handed a two-year sentence in Federal Court on a narcotic count.

Sentence was reduced to 90 days by a judge who recalled the prisoner's capers on the stage.

CLEARED OF MANSLAUGHTER

Newark, Dec. 23.

Eddie Moran was cleared of guilt here Monday (22) at a hearing of a manslaughter charge standing against him for two years.

The vaude comic, while driving through Newark two years ago accidentally struck and killed a pedestrian.

Girl of Magician's Act Slugged in $12 Orpheum Stage Alley Robbery

Della Cowell, with the act of Blackstone, the magician, was brutally beaten and robbed Dec. 17, as she emerged from the backstage entrance of Loew's Orpheum, 86th street, near Lexington avenue, New York.

After the act's last performance that night, Miss Cowell stepped into the alley which leads backstage from the lobby of the theatre. As she walked toward the lobby a man suddenly jumped out from behind a crate, grabbed her by the throat and beat her until she was insensible. When she regained consciousness a few moments later her purse was missing. It contained $12 in cash.

Miss Cowell's screams brought the other actors from backstage on the run, but by that time her assailant had disappeared.

Police were notified of the robbery.

Girl Bathrobe Charger Used Pitts. M. C.'s Name

Pittsburgh, Dec. 23.

A slick con girl, working the downtown department stores, has been flooding Dick Powell with dressing gowns at the Enright, where he is m. c. Girl has been posing as Powell's wife and got away with the racket until Powell got wise and notified police as well as store credit bureaus.

Girl's stunt was to walk into a department store, tell the clerk she was Mrs. Powell and ask to see a bathrobe for her "husband." After picking out an article, she would have it charged to Powell and forwarded to the theatre. Then she would ask to see some silk underwear for herself. These things, however, she would take herself, having diverted suspicion in sending the first purchase to Powell directly.

M. c. finally got hep and appealed to police, but not before he had enough robes on hand to start a store.

Vaude Move More Active

or the one layoff day as regards lexits.

Bloom Amusement Co., among the indie strings stepping into "flesh," will start five act bills on last halves Dec. 25. Myron Bloom, of this group, declares six additional upstate New York stands may be in by Jan. 3.

The Smalley circuit, with 19 theatres scattered through minor eastern towns, is feeling out the vaude situation with occasional stage stuff and counts on a regular vaude policy commencing in January.

Warners' experiment with Davey Lee on one night stands in territories that haven't played an actor in person for years, if at all, has prompted its decision to continue the idea with adult picture names on the WB contract list, with added likelihood that this may lead to a spot for vaude again in the sticks.

In all quarters the vaude idea carries most of its weight as a fair guarantee against flop weeks for theatres when the pictures are bad. That has been R-K-O's motive for vaude extension all season.

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Vaude in the immediate vicinity of Chicago is being considered by every circuit but R-K-O.

Warner Brothers are set to extend their time in Wisconsin, especially with their small neighborhood stands in Milwaukee where four houses, including the ace spots, Venetian and Granada, are going vaude on Jan. 1. To play nine days in nine days, running from Sat. to the following Sun.

Fanchon & Marco is expected to open two Milwaukee Fox houses, the Mojeska and Paradise. "Doc" Howe came in from New York over the week-end to discuss the plans.

Downstate, two more Sunday spots dribble back to flesh. Lorraine in Hoopeston, and the Paxtonia, Paxton, open next week. Three acts each, booked by Tommy Sacco.

Iowa turns on the flesh Jan. 1 with the A. H. Blank Houses in Waterloo, Rock Island and Cedar Rapids, each town taking on five acts on a split week policy. To be booked by Sam Bramson out of the Wm. Morris office.

Billy Diamond's book takes on 14 additional days down in Nebraska, where Publix rides to vaude in Fremont, Norfolk, Columbus, Beatrice, Hastings and Grand Island.

Diamond has also been lining up a number of freak and novelty material for the Great States houses; such turns as Rose's Midgets, Blackstone, Broadus Earle, Godino Siamese Twins, Bell's Hawaiians, Kneeland's Syncopators.

Tacoma on Route Jan. 2

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

R-K-O Orpheum, Tacoma, resumes intact shows Jan. 2, eliminating the layoff between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City.

Acts are being booked from here and the east for a special unit which will play four and one-half weeks to fill in. After the opening week, house goes on the regular R-K-O unit route.

Tacoma dropped vaude last February.

Fate's Cruel Gag

Paris, Dec. 14.

While taking a bow, Gwen Stone, of the Stone and Vernon adagio quartette, sprained her ankle.

Act is out of the Casino de Paris for a fortnight, which the girl is spending at the American hospital.

High Hat Coast Vaude Peddled On Subscription

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Vaudeville has been taken up here by the arty, and you can't see the show unless you join the club.

It isn't the common type of vaude but vaude on a high plane, say the producer and actors, and the only semblance to the other is that it comes in acts. Ultimate aim is to be a sort of west coast Theatre Guild, or another Chauvre Souri.

Gabriel Ravenelle, local musical director who has also staged minor legit productions, is founder and director of the Theatre Intime Club. Members pay $5 for six months, with one bill a month. Performers, many of whom were once big names in pictures and on stage, get half the membership gross, which is just about doughnut money.

Ravenelle has ambitions for the club, mentioning that the Theatre Guild started on same small scale. Club has about 40 members now. Acts are staged in Ravenelle's home, fixed up as a theater. S.R.O. sign goes out, if at all, after 50 members show up.

Third bill by club took place Dec. 16 and 17. It included a scene from "The Father," with Sheldon Lewis, old time picture name, performing. A comedy, "Mus' Be Spring," and Willard Mack's "Vindication," with Mrs. Leah Keenan, James Gordon, and Lewis were also on bill.

Ravenelle expects this kind of stuff to catch on. Hollywood has many players with ability who are retired, can't get work, or aren't interested. They can make programs worth while, he says, and attract an audience.

ASH BACK FOR B-K IN CHI. IN FEBRUARY

Cleveland, Dec. 23.

After seven weeks as m.c. at Loews' State, Paul Ash will close there Jan. 1, going to Hollywood for a month's vacation. He then goes with Balaban and Katz, Chicago, opening Feb. 1 to alternate between the Tivoli, Uptown, and Paradise. Ash had been dickering with Paramount for the job as musical supervisor at their Long Island studios but this deal is now definitely off.

Ash will be followed here by stage units after which Eddie Stanley steps in as m.c. Myron C. Roman, a Clevelander, will be given a two weeks' tryout as orchestra leader with David Pesetski, from Loew's Penn, Pittsburgh, due to supplant Jan. 16. Lester Huff, singing organist from Indianapolis, on the same date, will succeed Dick Leibert, who moves to the Penn, Pittsburgh.

2 More Western And N. Y. Weeks For R-K-O Units

R-K-O will add Milwaukee and Memphis to its western four-act unit route on or about Jan. 10. Both are spot booked out of Chicago at present.

This was set during Charlie Freeman's Chicago trip last week. Withdrawal of Milwaukee and Memphis will remove the two most important towns on the Chicago R-K-O vaude books.

The unit route will be extended further at about the same time with addition of the 81st Street and 58th Street theatres, New York. This will increase the units' New York time to two and a half weeks, with the Madison, Kenmore, and Chester now in.

Eddie Dowling has contributed a burial plot at Saranac Lake to the Catholic Actors' Guild.

BRITTONS BIG HIT AT PALACE!

New Act Highly Amusing; Frisco Comedy Pleases

With Joe Frisco, Ramon and Rosita, Nan Halperin and Tom Patricola on the same bill, something may be expected of the show at the Palace Theatre. But it is the unexpected which carries the bill far above ordinary expectations. For in this new show is a new act, and, without hesitation, without exaggeration, it can be said that this new piece is the most sensational debut act the year has seen at the Palace—and 1930 is almost out.

Practically unheard of, Frank and Milt Britton bring their entertainers into what is bound to become fame in an act that is wilder than anything Clayton, Jackson and Durante, or other such groups have ever done that is quite as musical as some of the best musical acts, that shows as much versatility as any group performing today. It is all one long mad spell of fun which ends in a riotous frenzy, with the audience wondering amid its applause how these boys left the walls of the theatre standing. Of all the mad and merry acts, this is the best.

Sid Gans.

"EVENING GRAPHIC"

Today's Star

For today we call your attention to the Britton Entertainers, headed by Frank & Milt. They are playing a week at the Palace. Putting it very mildly, the act can be compared with one of those recent riots up around Union Square. The basis of the act is a band, and each member of it has a different way of interrupting and hindering the work of his fellow bandsmen.

Before the middle of the act, the air is full of flying violin cases, violin bows and anything else that happens to be within reach.

For an opening the boys have a screen short showing the entire company trying to get in one taxicab bound for the Palace. The whole thing is an extraordinary entertainment, and followers of vaudeville should see the act at least once.

The Britton Entertainers are a band of musical clowns who break instruments over each other's heads and appear to get immense enjoyment in the process. The enjoyment is reflected in the audience, too. The Sunday crowd out front gave them a headline ovation, and the boys certainly earned it. BOB GRANNIS.

BRITTON MUSICIANS STOP PALACE SHOW

Wild Goings-On Resemble Madness in Beholders' Eyes

And perhaps, as far as Saturday night's patrons were concerned, even this average would not have been reached were it not for the mad antics of Frank and Milt Britton's Entertainers. You may remember these musicians as the Brown Derby Band. But even if you do, you'll not recognize them in their present state of mind.

What they intend to do is go one step farther in insane goings-on than Clayton, Jackson and Durante—and apply the result to an "orchestra act." Before they're through, they're gone several steps farther than the famed trio. They lay "orchestra acts" lower than low, by breaking scores of instruments, falling into all sections of the pit and convincing you they have escaped from Matteawan. Ben Washer.

Clubs in West Cash in on Demand For "Flesh"; Open Doors to Public

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Vaude has taken a new lease on life here during the past two weeks through the activity of clubs in smaller towns throwing open their entertainments to the general public.

Both the Levey and Meiklejohn offices have booked close to a dozen shows in the past week. Bills have run from six to 10 acts and cost from $500 up.

Reason for the demand for flesh is that in the smaller communities there has been no live entertainment for some time. Association of Club Secretaries is wise to the demand for flesh, and instead of making the club shows private affairs they're renting closed theatres and town halls for the shows and cashing in on the flesh-hungry populace.

Bills are all standardized, opening with dumb acts and using teams, sketches, singles and flash acts.

An acrobat playing one of the shows carried a m. c. with him for his act, M. c. explained in technical detail all the hard work the tumbler was doing. Result was that the acrobat stopped the show and played a return date. Second time he played the club every kid for miles around was in the theatre to get wised up on the gymnastics.

General interest in flesh created by the clubs may help to bring back that form of entertainment in the towns where it is now shut out. Theatre managers are beefing over the business the clubs are doing. Towns where the club entertainment is most popular are spots formerly good vaude stands.

'R-K-O Units' in Mid-west Sticks Without Permission

Chicago, Dec. 23.

R-K-O is having a load of trouble with fake tab units which have been selling themselves as R-K-O shows. Many indie managers in the midwest sticks have accepted these barnstorming troupes, although it is a question whether the operators always realize the companies are misrepresenting. In most instances the manager is wise, but is so anxious to get flesh on his stage, and generally at a low figure, that he lets the fake claim ride.

Latest falsey is the troupe known as the M. & M. Producing Co. at present galloping through Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri. It's selling itself as an "Orpheum Road-show Unit," with under the billing of "Bringin' Up Amos and Andy." Additional billing reads: "5 R-K-O Acts." Entire cast involves eight people, listed as Mack and White, Carmina Del Rey, Lili Lane, Dot Scott, Bobby Walker, Joe Margan and Jack Meredith. No one in the local R-K-O office recognized any of the names.

Notice received here states that the show was booked for the Strand, Mt. Vernon, Mo., for Dec. 13. Tom Carmody, booking head for the Chicago R-K-O office, has sent out letters to those state districts warning them of the fake.

Meanwhile Lehman is still at City Hall, where he has been employed since leaving show biz a couple of years ago.

If the vaude idea goes over in the Wilshire it's probable a similar policy will go into the Tivoli, Sawtelle, which with the New Art in the same neighborhood, is run by Johnson and McManus.

R-K-O Claims 1,000,000 Names Added To Vaude Mail Lists Through Radio

Warners Will Spot Vaude in Six Houses Starting Next Month

Change by Warner Bros.' Indiana theatre, Indianapolis, from presentations to regular vaude Jan. 10 will be followed by a similar move in five additional Warner full week towns, when present contracts with Publix for stage units expire. Date of expiration for the remaining five is March 15.

Publix units going out of the six Warner theatres will cut that route to about 18 weeks, Jersey City, Newark, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and St. Louis are the five Warner full weeks due to follow Indianapolis with vaude.

Warner's reason for the change, as reported, is that vaude, besides now proving itself more desirable and diversified as entertainment, can be more easily regulated as to cost and style to fit with the picture portion of combination programs. On the whole, also, vaude is considered less costly, with the presentations necessitating production charges besides salaries for the talent. With vaude, it is figured, the production money can go towards stronger talent.

Another angle in the favor of orthodox vaude is Warner's success with semi-name and money acts at the Earle, Washington, where vaude recently resumed. The higher salaried drawing acts cannot be played with boxoffice safety under the presentation policy, as the presentation cost cannot be reduced and regulated to suit and carry the salary burden imposed by name acts.

Dixon's Girl Act

Harland Dixon rehearsing a dancing act with 12 girls and will show it for R-K-O the week of Dec. 27th.

R-K-O is adding more than 1,000,000 names a year to the mailing lists of its vaude houses through medium of radio programs. The names are considered by R-K-O as added interest in the R-K-O vaude houses throughout the country.

Circuit is securing the names through offering to the ether fans pamphlets, pictures of acts and other give-aways to all requests.

That is the main reason R-K-O is announcing the birthdays of film stars via the radio and requesting listeners to write congratulatory messages for autographed photos.

Three weeks ago Ken Murray made a gag after-dinner speech on the air. Listeners were told if they wanted a copy of the speech to write in. R-K-O received 5,800 letters of request. Printed pamphlets of the speech, along with a card announcing Ken Murray's R-K-O tour and telling them to watch for him at their neighborhood theatre, were mailed to the replies.

When "Africa Speaks" played the R-K-O Globe on Broadway, R-K-O announced on its radio program that it would mail free albums containing shots from the picture to all who wanted them. About 7,000 requests were received by R-K-O.

Can't Book Opposish String And Sell Acts to Another

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Schallman Bros. have retired from booking privileges with the Chicago William Morris office as a result of their booking two Fox houses in Milwaukee as Fanchon & Marco representatives.

With Sam Bramson and Charley Hogan of the Morris office also booking houses in Milwaukee, the squeeze dictated the retirement of the Schallmans in their other capacity of agents.

Revival of Cancellation Clause Causes V.M.A. Warning on Dows

Revival of the old one show cancellation clause, extinct in vaude booking for 10 years, has placed A. & B. Dow, indie vaude bookers of New York, on the warning list of the Variety Managers' Association.

V. M. A.'s advice to acts is that if playing for the Dows under a contract containing that clause, they do so at their own risk. Theatres holding membership in the V. M. A., if contemplating booking through Dow, have been informed to book elsewhere while the contract is in use.

The clause to which the V. M. A. objects, on contention that it is unfair, gives theatres the right to cancel acts if not satisfactory after the opening show.

Dows' revival of the old clause was brought out in the claim filed by the Salon Four, vaude act, with the V. M. A. against the indie booking office and the Opera House, New Brunswick, N. J.

Act was booked, it is charged, by the Dows for three days in New Brunswick, and after doing the three shows opening day was canceled without notice or pay-off. Act admits signing the contract with the one show clause, but claims that as no cancellation arrived after the first performance, but was withheld until after three shows had been played, salary for the entire three-day booking is due.

Buddy Fisher opens as m. c. at the Majestic, Milwaukee, Dec. 24.

Loew Placements

William O'Neil replaces Ann Greenway in the "Off Shore" unit now playing the Loew picture houses. Miss Greenway was released from her contract in order to start rehearsals for a musical.

Joe Penner goes back into the "Rustic Fancies" unit at Columbus this week, replacing Slim Moore and Pal.

Hughie Barrett goes to Loew's Rochester as m. c. and conductor, opening Dec. 27.

Bert Frohman is retiring as m. c. at Loew's Paradise, New York, Dec. 26, and will be replaced by Leon Navarra.

Agency Split

Harry Graham and Meyer Klein have dissolved their agency partnership.

Graham will continue the agency, while Klein will enter the legit producing field to do "The Call," by Helen Horowitz.

One-Act Stand

Williamsport, Pa., Dec. 23.

Capitol, former Comerford house, now owned by Paramount-Publix, with A. Brown Parkes, of New Orleans, replacing Byron R. Linn as manager, started this week with one act of vaudeville in addition to talkers.

It has been running straight pictures.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

A little boy in a Hollywood store rushed up to his mother.

"Mamma, I've just talked to Santa Claus!" he shouted.

"What did Santa say, son?"

"He said put down that train, you little ——"

Hershfield—R-K-O

R-K-O is laying out middle western time for Harry Hershfield, to follow his opening date for that circuit Dec. 27 at the 81st Street, New York. His R-K-O salary is reported at $1,100.

The Abie Kabbible creator's vaude playing to date embraces two weeks in New York recently for Loew's. He's doing a monolog.

Palace-WGN Weekly?

Chicago, Dec. 23.

WGN, Chicago "Tribune" radio station has asked the local R-K-O office to place at least one of its Palace acts on the air weekly.

Idea has been tried out the past two weeks, with favorable reaction, over this station, and WMAQ and WIBO. Last week Jack Pearl, Zelda Santley and Dainty Marie went on the air over the stations.

PATERSON INDIE'S VAUDE

Another indie house goes vaude when the U. S. theatre, Paterson, N. J., starts playing seven acts Jan. 3 on a six-day week.

The house was taken over by the Adams Bros., operators of the Newark theatre, Newark, also vaude. Both booked by A. & B. Dow.

SHORT BY WESTS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Buster and John West, laying off here one week on their R-K-O route, made a short for Christie titled "Shot Gun Wedding."

Morton and Wheeler have dissolved as a vaude team. Miss Morton will head a new flash which Irving Yates is producing.

35 Chicago Exhibitors Booking Vaude Dec. 31

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Stage entertainment will have its greatest local display in some years next week, when dozens of neighborhood picture houses will go for special New Year's Eve shows.

Spots which have been straight sound since the talker came in have booked in from three to six acts for the midnight frolic. Houses are hustling early, with the rush making managers afraid they'll be out in the cold with no flesh if not signed up quick.

Approximately 35 theatres throughout the town will be flesh that night.

F & M. Changes

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

When the "American Beauty" unit closes in St. Louis tomorrow (24), Dorothy Goff (Miss Universe) hops to the Fox Palace, Worcester, Mass., to open there Dec. 26 with the F-M "Modes of Hollywood."

Eddie Hanley joins the "Fountain of Youth" Jan. 2 in Detroit, replacing Barton and Young, who closed with the same unit in Seattle Dec. 10. Hanley also closes in the "American Beauty" unit in St. Louis.

FILM CUTS VAUDE

Loew's State, New Orleans, drops vaude the week of Dec. 26, due to the length of the picture, "Hell's Angels." State is a full-week house.

Road show booked for the date, including Lieut. Gitz-Rice, MacDonald Trio, Wilson and Warden and Novelle Brothers will lay off that week.

FIVE IN PITTSFIELD

Union Square theatre, Pittsfield, Mass. goes vaude with five acts on a split week starting Jan. 1., with the Dow agency, New York, booking.

Yiddish Out—Vaude In

Vaudfilm supplanted Yiddish shows at the Amphion, Brooklyn, last week.

House is now playing five acts on three weekly changes booked by Sydney Rheingold, indie booker.

30 Indies May Use Acts Over Xmas Holidays

Over 30 indie houses which have been worrying along without vaude this season will install acts on the holidays in order to hold up with competitors. Theatres involved will supposedly use five acts on a split, which may provide otherwise unseen employment for 300 acts.

This vaude restoration is perhaps only temporary, but at least it will take care of a goodly portion of layoffs and provide some unexpected Xmas money for both acts and bookers. Most of the houses involved are upstate, with others spotted in New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Reports of the temporary opening up sent the indie lads scurrying around last week, and when the tip got around their offices were filled with layoffs.

MORE COAST INDIES

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

George Frank and Scott Dunlap are disassociating themselves from the Eddie Small agency.

Both going into indie agenting after the first of the year.

Casper-O'Neal Reunite

Emil Casper and Denny O'Neill have reunited after being separated for two years.

O'Neil left vaude for a commercial business, and Casper worked with his wife as Casper and Morrissey.

NEW YORK "TIMES"—DEC. 22
"Among the other rough-and-tumble lads are the Runaway Four, a quartet of energetic acrobats, who have masqueraded as sailors on the Palace stage before. Both they and Mr. Patricola were popular yesterday."

NEW YORK "WORLD"—DEC. 22
—"rowdy, rough and nonsensical And we loved it. And there is another act of the same sort on the bill, called the 'Runaway Four,' which brings to bear upon the proceedings the same light touch. They, too, are good."

"HERALD TRIBUNE"—DEC. 22
"Opening after the intermission were the Runaway Four, a quartet of comedians, whose antics were both inane and incongruous, but highly amusing. With little or no regard for continuity, they carried on in a care-free manner that afforded many occasions for hilarity."

NEW YORK "EVENING GRAPHIC"—DEC. 22
"The Runaway Four, which missed the bill last week, because of the illness of one of the company, offered an entertaining brand of slap-stick comedy."

N. Y. "TELEGRAM"—DEC. 22
"And the Runaway Four have jumped from their recent stop at Loew's State to the Palace to prove that their act is one of the finer bits of fun in the world of the two- and three-a-day."

NEW YORK "EVENING POST"—DEC. 22
"The Runaway Four, favorites at the Palace, use much of their old routine, but they have added enough new material to insure pep and personality for their act."

P. S.—REGARDS TO OUR IMITATORS

Equity's One-Town Burlesque Sway Ends in Chi, House Too Poor to Pay

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Actors' Equity has voluntarily relinquished its jurisdiction over stock burlesque in Chicago, the only city so organized by Equity.

Equity formerly collected a considerable revenue in dues from bur people playing the Star and Garter, National, Diversey, Midway, State-Congress, Academy, Haymarket, Star and Rialto. Only recently the Haymarket and Academy and State-Congress were included. The Haymarket, in reopening last week, informed Equity that $30 minimum for chorus girls was five too much.

Extremely dull conditions locally prompted Equity to retire from its position as arbiter.

This retirement by Equity may be only temporary, Frank Dare, local representative, said in confirming the change of policy locally. Jurisdiction over stock burlesque was never exercised by Equity except in Chicago and it was the contention of the bur people that their Equity membership was of no value to them in other cities. That is understood to have been a factor.

New Albany Operator For Empire Stock Co.

Leo Brockley has taken over the Empire, Albany, and will continue operation of the house with stock burlesque. Brockley acquired the house from John Jermon, who had operated the house with similar policy for two years.

The stock under Jermon's operation flopped during the past couple of months.

Brockley, Albany hotel man, and new to show business, liquidated standing claims and took over Jermon's lease, continuing the same policy.

Cops Slough Stock

Buffalo, Dec. 23.

The Palace theatre running stock burlesque and pictures was raided by the police on Thursday and four chorines, together with the manager, Dewey Michaels, taken into custody. Police Commissioner Austin J. Roche announced that grand jury indictments will be sought against the manager and the members of the cast on the charge of permitting and participating in an indecent performance.

All were released under $500 bail. It was revealed that the police had stationed members secretly in the theatre for the past month and that stenographic notes on the dialogue and actions and descriptions or scanty costuming of the chorus had been compiled.

Pop Stock Spreads

Stock burlesque goes into the Willis, Bronx, Jan. 5, operated by the same interests that have installed stock at the People's, Bowery.

The Willis will operate with pictures and tab stock burlesque on a grind with 10 to 50 cent scale.

Comic's Hard Luck

Charles (Tramp) McNally, principal comic and manager of "Nite Life In Paris" (Mutual), was held up and robbed early Wednesday morning as he was on his way home from the American, N. Y., where the show was playing at the time. In addition to losing $170 McNally got a beating at the stick-up's hands.

Comic Becomes Judge

Lew Golden, former burlesque comic has quit show business cold and has been installed as City Court Magistrate in Baltimore.

Golden's familiarity with Irish Justice during his years in burlesque may have helped.

ANN CORIO ON WHEEL

Ann Corio remains on the Mutual wheel for the remainder of the season. There was talk of Miss Corio stepping out of wheel travels.

Emmett Callahan, who had the girl under contract, assisted Minsky Brothers.

Werba's Bklyn Added to N. Y. Shows Stock Chain

Solly Shaw has taken over Werba's, Brooklyn, and will install stock burlesque Dec. 29. Shaw is also operating the Gotham, New York, with stock burlesque policy and intends rotating the stocks when the Brooklyn house gets under way.

Werba's has been dark since last season, when an attempt to establish a newsreel policy at the house flopped. Prior to that it had been a subway circuit stand for legits.

10, 20, 30 Burlesque

Two bills a week, three shows a day, with silent pictures between the shows on a 10-20-30-cent scale, will be the new burlesque-film stock policy at the People's theatre on the Bowery, N. Y., starting tonight (Dec. 24).

George Mack is producer with three comics including Billy Mullin, Abe Gore and Lew Ducat; Charles Evans is straight, Frank Delmar, juve and three soubrets, Ada De Lisle, Dawn Desure and Loretta Bayes.

There will be a runway and a femme chorus of 16. The house, which seats 1,600 last played Jewish repertory.

Roch. Rent Claim

Rochester, Dec. 23.

I. H. Herk, Mutual president, was here last week testifying in a suit for rent of the Corinthian theatre, since razed, which ran Mutual shows several years ago.

Claim was for $5,800 against Russell Garrison, receiver for the Buffer Amusement Company.

Rochester is without burlesque at present.

Steppe's Own Troupe

Harry Steppe, whose Mutual show folded last week, will produce and head a new musical, "Hits and Misses of 1931," to be projected as a road show.

Steppe will cast his company with burlesque performers and will take it on a tour of wildcat dates in eastern and middle west stands.

Sundae in L. A. Troupe

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Mary Sundae and Eddie Collins have been added to Dalton's "Follies" company here.

Miss Sundae had her own show on the Mutual wheel last year.

FIRE CLOSES AMERICAN; 1 WHEEL SHOW FOLDS

A fire, starting in the balcony of the American at 42d street and Eighth avenue after the house had closed for the night performance of the Mutual show Dec. 19, put the house completely out as a place of entertainment.

The Mutual execs see little hope of it being remodeled as a theatre either for the balance of this season or next.

The Tramp McNally show, "Nite Life In Paris," playing there at the time, which had its scenery and costumes damaged by water, was closed and the company disbanded last Friday.

It was due to play the Gayety, Brooklyn, this week but with its closing for the season, "Radium Queens" (Mutual) booked for the American this week will pick up the "Nite Life" show's time.

The American was one of the oldest legit houses in New York, having opened May 22, 1888, by the Julia Arthur and Jefferson de Angelis Co. in "A Prodigal Daughter." In 1908 Felix Isman leased it and added a Roof Garden. Later it became the American Music Hall and played vaude under William Morris management.

In later years Loew got the house and played vaudfilm. When Loew got out the Mutual Circuit obtained a lease for wheel burlesque. It was also a stock burlesque proposition for a time.

Booker or Booked, All Same to Nat Mortan

Nat Mortan, burlesque caster, is hiring out between casting duties as added attraction with the group of stocks for which he has been booking performers.

Mortan was a former burlesque trouper on the Columbia Circuit before going into the agenting business.

Burlesque Changes

Fred Walker has supplanted Frank Norton with "Sliding Billy Watson's show."

Pearl Peterson has gone in as featured house soub at the Gayety, Brooklyn.

Babs Day and Elvia Herndon have been added to the roster of principals with the stock at the Bijou, Philadelphia.

Sammy Weston closed with "Powder Puff Revue" last week and has hopped into the stock at the Avenue, Detroit.

Hope for Accident in Teaser, All That Brings 'Em in, Says Vet.

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

"No sir, burlesque ain't burleycue any more," it's sompin' else, but I donno what it is."

One of the coast's two remaining burlesque houses, speaking.

"I kin rem'mber the time when I used to start out on a season of 40 weeks with nothing but a grip full of scripts, a grass mat and a pig bladder and I'd produced a swell show every week. Now you gotta give them a carload of scenery and no clothes on the gals.

"What they wanna see now is the strip dancers. Funny about them teasers. The audience know that they've seen everything they're gonna see in a theatre, burlesque or not, but I guess they're all hoping for an accident.

"Comics ain't no use any more. I bet you could run a tab show without no comics at all and the audience would never miss them.

"Take this week I'r instance. I got two Austin gags, a got I'm and got a bedroom blackout and they don't get a snicker. Say, in the old days they'd have stopped the show. Even a putty nose or a red mitt dear mean anything no more.

"The only time you hear the audience laughing now is after the dame comes on the stage, headress off. From then on it's great. But the minute she's unbuttoned the brazz and walked off, the house is as quite as a morgue. Followin' her is like followin' Sophie Tucker, we ain't got a chance. Most of the mugs think we comics are the intermission.

Worn Out Bladders.

"I wore out a slapstick and three pig bladders last week, and for what? All the work I did didn't get one good belly laugh.

"We got a dancer this week that taps on a sheet of iron. He's got a electric wire running into his shoes and it makes sparks when he taps. Do ya' think it means anything? Naw, they just sit there and act dumb. When the guy's about wore out and quits, they start yelling for More. DuPree to come out and take a strap off. Naw what kin ya do, eh?

"If I could get a good job in one of them studios for $40 a week I'd take it out of this business so Lou'd never be able to catch up with me. You know, I got some swell ideas for pitchers a guy like me could help some of them features plenty. Guess I'll take a flier out to Hollywood one of these days. Anything would be better than this."

New Acts

Gus Edwards' TREE SITTERS (9)
Songs and Dances
23 Mins.; Three and Full
Jefferson

This Edwards' kid act consists of seven boys and two girls. Warbling, solo and harmony, predominates with both of the girls helping with dance specialties. Youthfulness of the group, the fresh style of delivery and the mode of presentation insure a good reception for this act, although it is by no means a smash.

Billing of 'Tree Sitters' is carried out by the opening number, one of the boys sitting in a prop tree with the others grouped below. The youngest of the boys opens the act with a song solo in a boyish alto. Rest join in for harmony work, joshing one of the youngsters into a Cal Coolidge imitash and comedy song until a cute little brunette walks on for a tap number.

As imitations go, only one stood out, the Amos 'n' Andy well done and at this house drew the largest hand of the group. Brunette also joined in for take-off, doing a formal Helen Kane in the familiar manner. Other girl, a shapely blonde, was supposed to do an imitation of Bill Robinson. It was no imitation of Robinson, but for hoofing, she was all there, rounding out a sweet set of taps and getting in some fast eccentrics.

EARLE S. DEWEY AND CO. (5)
Farce with Songs, Dances
15 Mins.; Full Stage (Special)
Hamilton

Same old Earle S. Dewey who used to play leads in the mid-west with Mabel Rogers in old musicals like "The Naughty Princess" and who bobbed up, out and in vaude for years in skits. Dewey has modernized considerably and his present new turn also steps along.

A farcical idea of a vaude team, husband and wife, with hubby tossing her out and deciding to replace with a younger woman. Three of the supporting dames reach the stage as applicants. There is also the maid who has her eye on the vacancy. All stick around until the wife returns and causes the usual comedy situation by Dewey trying to keep them hidden while he placates her.

There's the old, old farcical formula of having unexpected interruptions and subsequent discovery of all the girls and a lame duck finale. Dewey muggs, kids and keeps up a running breeze in a manner denoting years of such experience.

The women have specialties which enhance the value, one a splendid dancing team in some neat rhythmic acrobatic stepping, another femme is not a bad tappe, while the other women sing, one doing a special just so-so.

Act as a whole has laugh producing moments with the specialties sufficient to carry it along to better results when the turn works itself into an act. Mark.

L. H. GAUTIER and Co. (1)
Trained Dogs
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Leon Gautier has abandoned his oversized spinning platter finale for one that is not effective. Now dogs standing on each other's backs in pyramid formation and simply tumble down and scram. Definitely for opening or closing as used here, and safe in such a spot.

Gautier pushes on a frankfurter stand and while hawking his wares is approached by woman with poodle on chain. She buys a hot dog and he swipes the pooch as she exits, puts it in meat-grinder and turns handle: a string of frankfurters comes out.

Pups do routine stunts. Announcement is made that dog doing back somersault from sitting position is only one in world to accomplish. Trick gets a hand. Comedy from several angles with dogs refusing to stay put and others sidestepping hard stunts.

DOLORES CASSENELLI
Songs
12 Mins.; Two (Special)
Hamilton

Billed as a screen and radio favorite, Miss Cassenelli's name was recognized by only a few at this theatre, according to the entrance hand.

Comes through center fold of drop for a Spanish tune accompanied at the piano by Samuel Reichmann. Second effort, "Three Little Words," seemed unsuited. Off for a change while pianist played a classical selection with a segue into "Rhapsody in Blue" with orchestra at the end.

Back in an unbecoming dress for "Otchi chernii," favorite Russian folk song, and a couple of bows. With the right songs, properly costumed for exotic effect, Miss Cassenelli would have something better than average. Her voice is pleasing but act is only so-so.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, JR. (2)
Comedy
12 Mins.; One and Three
Jefferson

Bushman, Jr., returns to vaude in a stronger act than the one he was around to two years ago. Still plenty laughless where subtle mirth comedy could be inserted. It's a good idea Bushman is using and one that easily lends itself to stronger comedy than the present material. Bushman's screen rep and personality should attract. Once in, he won't disappoint them.

Bushman takes the 'double' idea, as used in films, for hoke. Supporting chap closely resembles him in build, and facially, just a bit. Bushman explains how the flicker stars have their doubles do the dangerous stunts for them, which is the cue for a series of short comedy skits with the double always getting the worst of it.

When Bushman loses his money his double jumps through the window for him; when he insults a girl the double takes the bullet. Finish is the bedroom gag.

Latter is the only skit with a solid sock. Bushman's double makes a clever assist. A diminutive girl also supports.

"SUGAR" MARCELLE (2)
Songs
12 Mins.; One
State

"Sugar" Marcelle is a good looking blonde. She's first a looker and then a singer. As a singer just now she doesn't seem to be at her best because her songs aren't good. At present she's a deucing single, with a pianist, for the moderate time with chances she'll improve.

Story of Miss Marcelle is that she was found singing over in Jersey a short time ago. Her vaude experience, by the same yarn, dates back four weeks prior to the State date. Despite the brief training she appears accustomed to vaude ways from the manner in which she uses the light material at hand.

Under a black short coat trimmed with white fur Miss Marcelle wears a smart black satin gown. Discarding the coat after the first number constitutes her one "change." She is a girl who can wear duds, and as her looks are depended on so much in the act, it might be advisable to make another and more complete change later on to increase the appearance value.

Dramatic recitation breaking up a ballad should go out with the rest of the song. Other numbers used are suited to her style without carrying her far. Some talk, apparently descriptive according to snatches heard, was almost entirely indistinguishable in the rear of this big house. Bige.

AUDREY WYKOFF AND CO. (2)
Dancing
15 Mins.; One
81st St.

Plenty of novelty to carry the trio along in any house. Placed early here, Audrey Wykoff, with two men announced as her father and grandfather, proved a strong dancing turn relying solely on taps for the punch.

Girl is young and attractive and her acrobatic tap opener was better than average. She introduces her father for a Primrose imitation that is well received and then brings on her grandfather who is described as 63, over six feet tall, and one of the most competent elders on the boards.

His demonstration of the dance that won him title of "World's Greatest Tap Dancer" at the Paramount Hall contest 27 years ago made an encore necessary. This had the trio tapping with the girl doing a forward leap over the two men at the end. Smooth running and safe for a big hand.

POWERS and DAWSON
Chatter, Songs, Dances
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Two youngsters that try a song when tired of kidding each other. Material is fair vaudrare and girl's speaking voice should be lowered in pitch a couple of tones for better delivery. Spotted second they were where they belong pending development.

They debate each other's merits with the girl going into a song. Boy counts that back with a loaf of bread which he passes to men in the orchestra. Several take a bite and the drummer keeps more than half for a laugh. Pair do a tap number and off. Encore is a short bit with a toy dog for a blackout.

ROSS AND SHAY
Comedy Acrobats
10 Mins.; One
Hippodrome

Two men of the dead pan type in hoke acrobatic. Go in for considerable horseplay ugliness. Take some hard falls. Some of the routine pretty familiar. Most of the awkward takes work here effective and much productive of laughter.

Act of this kind made to order for the Hip where it scored nicely in an eight-act show. Mark.

BEN BLUE (3)
Comedy, Songs, Dances
16 Mins.; One, Two, Full
58th St.

Here is a dancing comic that is really funny. His walk-on in a baggy suit starts ripples of laughter and the ensuing material is strong for laughs.

Blue is a great pantomimist and would be a panic even without the talk, which is very good. He does a Pavlova imitation, the "Dying Duck," and a phony Russian dance that set him as a top-notch artist. Full stage is utilized for these numbers after an opening that has him gagging easily with Lynn Dore, a pulchritudinous blonde.

Miss Dore puts across two songs in the torch style, notably "Ten Cents a Dance," which is staged in two and leads to a dance by the team, ending when the gal's twisting becomes too hot for Ben. A stooge acts as ticket taker in the dance hall sketch.

Altogether first-rate entertainment, equally suitable for vaudeville or presentations and could have continued under here.

NAOMI PRICE AND CO. (2)
Songs and Dances
20 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Colored girl who starts wrong in her opening songs. Gets away to a slow start, her change of singing pace helping somewhat but not sufficient to make any prelim work a standout. Later when she does the flashy minstrel suit and goes in for dancing as well as low syncopating, her returns are more like it.

There's a piano boy who is some hot on ivories and clicks 'em, too, and a boy introduced as Miss Price's younger brother for a little neat dance specialty.

Miss Price's voice did not appear overly strong and at times seemed to just about peter out completely, which mitigated against her early impression. Then again it may be that her apparent serious style at first also handicapped. Perhaps different songs might help and it might be better if Miss Price chopped the opening entirely or dropped her opening number. Rather indicative the girl wished to show the wide difference in her dress from formal conventional wear to the slick, swanky minstrel layout. Mark.

POPE and THOMPSON
Songs, Talk, Instrumental
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Seventh of ten acts, and one of three added for single show, they held up position easily. Boys utters plunking guitar and is quickly joined by girl pulling small wagon. After a harmony number girl sings while boy plays musical saw.

During change by the girl her partner plays melody of "Blowing Bubbles" by forcing air through tightly drawn neck of balloon. First two balloons burst when caught, but third held out. Then a castinet effect with two spoons.

Femme, dressed to fit part, scored with a Frances White imitation of "Mississippi." Both played banjos and swung into number with two washboards and kazoos for a walk-off to big hand.

SIX CRACKER JACKS
Songs, Dances
12 Mins.; Full
58th St.

The five boys of this colored sextet were in Connie's "Hot Chocolates" last year. It's a fast act with a whirlwind finish that more than makes up for a slow getaway. Opened here and looked good enough to fill a slightly later spot.

Boys start with formal hoofing and then go into a rustic dance number, all with canes and whiskers. After a boy solo with rhythmic acrobatics and leaps, all into a potpourri of acrobatic and contortion numbers. Done with plenty of speed.

Girl doesn't count much as a warbler of hot tunes with a voice that doesn't carry far. Just the femme touch and okay for that contribution.

ROBINSON and DEWITT CO. (5)
Song and Dance
13 Mins.; Four
Hippodrome

Another mixed song and dance combination, with this one a little better than the average.

One team goes in for some fast dancing, the tapping number particularly effective. One man did some pretty good acrobatic tricks while the team in adagio work held attention.

Nothing exceptional but pleasing. Mark.

ROCK AND ROCK
Acrobats
7 Mins.; Two (Special)
Hamilton

A couple of acrobats of the old school with present routine apparently condensed and whipped into a fairly pleasing line of rough and tumble tricks.

Men appear to have been together some time judging from the ease, precision and style of work.

Some head spins were the standout. Mark.

REINE RIANO (8)
"Bluebeard's Eighth Wife"
Comedy, Song and Dance
21 Mins.; Full (Special)
81st St.

A short atmospheric film (silent) precedes with the story of Bluebeard emphasizing that anyone who entered the room with the blue door was subject to an immediate beheading.

Curtain up on an elaborate set that drew a hand. Five girls in scanty Oriental garb try to vamp the muscular guard at the blue door but without success. After several specialties, well executed, Miss Riano enters for a song and comical dance routine. Big laugh built up as hefty guard pursues her with a scimitar, graduating from a slow walk into a fast run. An old stunt but effectively used here.

Miss Riano dashes through blue door while the man goes into a classical number. Bluebeard finds the key with which Riano entered the forbidden room and orders her beheaded. Execution block is dragged on and executioner swings a large cleaver to and fro for more comedy, finally bringing it down on block. Reine, who has ducked, rolls a phoney head onto the floor.

Gazing remorsefully at the severed head Bluebeard and the executioner decide they shouldn't have killed her. Reine pops up from behind the block to remark "This is a swell time to be finding it out."

Over big.

ALAN SHAW
Legerdemain
10 Mins.; Two
Hamilton

Over nicely, third on a 10-act outlay, and impressed as an early spotter for anywhere. Shaw still retains smooth-running characteristics he brought over from Australia 25 years ago.

Coins are palmed with a finesse that draws applause during the turn. Monologue along the "now I wouldn't deceive you" line has the audience biting, expecting revelations, but there are none.

Starts with quarters, works up to half-dollars and dollars. Picks dozens from the air and into a hat. He manipulates the cards with equal dexterity.

ASHLEY PAGE
Xylophonist
9 Mins.; One
Hippodrome

A xylophone is still a xylophone though Ashley Page manages to make it serve him well along the old lines. He also rings in the number with the six hammers and switched from waltz time to the fast syncopation of present day musical demands effectively.

Played a sax and clarinet just a trick, but Page went back to his xylly and doubled in dancing for the finish. Applause at the Hip okay. Mark.

PAUL NOLAN (1)
Juggling
12 Mins.; Two (Special)
Lincoln Sq.

Clever hat twirling done with precision is followed by routine juggling of cane, hat and tennis ball. Unbilled girl hands Nolan the objects. Neat work and a safe opener.

Because Nolan doesn't stall and miss, his first trys his tricks look simpler than they are, but the audience gave him a solid hand. He could change from the one number in which the orchestra blared for his entrance and exit, or at least tone it down a little.

PAT LANE
Nut Monolog
11 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Flippant, breezy and nonchalant type of nut comic. Gags continually and much of his monologistic patter sounded new at the uptown house. Has rather an easy way of slipping his stuff over and proved one of the rough standouts on a 10-acter at this theatre.

Lane does a little bit of everything by way of hoking his stuff; dances and sings, but shows more ability in hoofing.

Sylvia and Harriet DARLING (1)
Songs and Dances
10 Mins.; One
58th St.

Two girls start with a song which was drowned by the orchestra and couldn't be heard in the loges. Modern Quaker costumes first with a change into white evening gowns for a second vocal with only their accompanist, which was better.

A weak-sister team.

NEW ACTS

Glyn Landick and Octavia Bingham.

May Hunt and Co.

Billy Swede Hall and Co.

Jones and Grannon, two-act.

Jack Goldie, blackface.

Gordon and Howard (2).

Leo's Society Singers (3).

Jay Velie and Co.

Roy LeMay and Girl Friends (6), flash.

PALACE

Not an altogether happy blending of good vaudeville material in the new show. Performance runs in a series of wavelets instead of one advancing billow that starts as a ripple and builds to a crashing comber. All a matter of relative values, good in themselves but lacking in the blending.

For one thing the spotting of Frank and Milt Britton Entertainers is too early in No. 3, setting a pace of roughhouse comedy that nothing in the world could top for boisterous fun. It's a matter of pattern. With the Brittons and their co-conspirators in mahem working about No. 3 they organized a climax of rowdy fun that no skill in moderate laughs could exceed.

Bill as offered Saturday called for rearrangement, and the logical solution seemed to be to switch the Brittons to closing, moving Joe Frisco up to next to shut. Closing the show with a flock of turns involving from four up to 15, it was too tough an assignment to ask Frisco to organize a finale with mild joshing of his singing and dancing partner, especially with Frisco kidding his way through the whole show as master of ceremonies. What the spot called for was the Schnozzles or the Marx Bros. with a musical comedy chorus for flash, knockabout and as many other elements as they could assemble.

Show is all vaudeville with a start like a house afire in the Six Cardos, the Jumping Jacks, the fastest kind of acrobatic specialty, a mine of novelty and spectacle. This group work fast and ceaselessly, building up so simple a specialty as barrel jumping with breath taking bits like somersaults from a spring board into the barrels to a final stunt of a drop from a pedestal three tables and two barrels high to the board, throwing another worker from a high full twister into a barrel. Use of girl in whiteface as comic introduced a neat surprise.

Ray Huling and his super-trained seal was more straight vaude novelty and a capital hit in the spot usually given over to two-man stepping acts. This gifted fish does astonishing things like creating sounds that make a colorable imitation of a bass singing "Asleep in the Deep." Huling's dippy pet does most of the things the intelligent fish dogs do and the usual seal balancing feats besides, and is probably the most articulate creature in all vaudeville, except Bert Fitzgibbon.

Frisco started on his m. c. marathon just after this episode and kept coming between turns with his familiar line of patter, most of it manufactured for the occasion. He isn't quite the salesman type of interlocutor, being by nature, training and preference an ad-libbing gagster and not a ballyhoo specialist. Frisco can sell himself under any circumstance and he peddled the customary hay here, but helped little to make the show cohere. Doubtful if anybody could. Anyhow he thought of the alibi line that summed up the situation: "There'll be a lot of classy acts here—and then I come on."

The Britons session of disorderly conduct was scheduled No. 4 and stopped the proceedings for the time being, and pretty nearly for the performance. This group of bandsmen probably tops the civilized world for violence of technique and versatility of antics. Two of the boys play violin and piano accordion, while maintaining a two high; couple of them dance like a hoofing brother turn and one of them does a Vallee that stands on merit. They broke everything in sight and left a gorgeous mess for Frisco and two stage hands to sweep up.

Versatility is a dull word in this connection, but this gang of hoodlums have everything, not the least being a magnificent set of teeth by one of the Britons capable of rending a wooden violin to pieces with sound effects like the collapse of the attic.

Following was not the sweetest spot in the world for Nan Halperin, Her mild start with introductory lyrics made it no easier, but she built splendidly, first with a kid bit called "Shady Lady" and then into a new version of the Queen Elizabeth satire, topical at the moment with an "Elizabeth" legit play current on Broadway. Climaxing the series was the vigorous dramatic bit built into a smooth number called "Scarlet Sister Sadie," a high yaller Harlem characterization worked into a dramatic

NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans, Dec. 18.

At present New Orleans offers a symposium of stage attractions in three of its leading variety houses. While with one of the stage show is billed as vaudeville and the others call theirs presentations, each is playing vaudeville, nothing else.

Another singularity of this current condition in New Orleans is that each of the three houses is using a four-act vaude bill, with the R-K-O Orpheum and Publix Saenger playing four shows daily, while Loew's State is playing but three performances a day.

Admission scales run about the same excepting in the matter of hours. As for instance the R-K-O Orpheum has a 35c matinee scale up to five p.m., whereas the Saenger and State change their scale earlier.

In capacities the Saenger has around 3,600; Loew's about 3,200 and the Orpheum 2,400. The Orpheum has the smallest orchestra floor, less than 1,000 seats.

Saenger-Publix

Anyone from New York catching a Publix unit stage show out of that city is somewhat handicapped in judgment if not having seen it at the Paramount on Broadway. For there's no telling what may have happened to it on the road as these units rotate in weekly Publix stands.

It doesn't require, however, that much pre-information to believe that Publix is overpaying for its stage talent according to the show, "Varietrix," at the Saenger this week. There are but four acts and that's the entire Publix, New York end of it, minus any stage production, with the performance run off on an open stage, without stage band and only the permanent m. c. as the simple announcer. The acts are the Foster Aerialists, 12 girls; The Kempys and Eva Ivey, Bill and Harriet Hutchins and Monroe and Grant.

Foster Girls do one turn to open the show, an aerial illusion of the 11 girls on trapeze. The other girl remains on the ground to take the final bow as the other girls up above evidently cannot untangle themselves from their final trick without stage aid. Whether this number of the Fosters is a combination of what may have been two of their former numbers when the unit started, isn't known, but if not then the girls are not being played their full value in but a single display and that to open instead of closing this show. What they do is sightly but not enough for an ensemble group at an ensemble salary.

Monroe and Grant, in an ordinary trampoline act, are comedy acrobats who talk. If they can be taught to keep quiet while doing their stuff, they will be enjoyed better by the children, for whom their act is best suited. For the kids it's a good turn. The Hutchins are boy and girl, with the girl the only worker. The boy sings, but the m. c. had sung better before him. The girl does a stew that may be a laugh if this soused stuff is new in a picture house. For an encore both waste their time in a dancing meller that is pretty bad. The Kempys, with a girl added, now go in for ground acrobatics and a bit of adagio. Another dumb and sight turn of interest to all in its way, but no doubt also with most appeal to the children.

The Saenger is too big for a lightweight turn like the Hutchins, who depend mostly on the personality of the girl. She, like the m. c. here, Benny Ross, loses personality through the bigness of the theatre.

Ross looks like a personality boy, but neither he nor his work can be conveyed away back amongst these 40 rows or so, both fade away. Ross makes up while on the stage without mirror or looking glass. That's now enough and quite good, but he tries for a touch of Jolson, mentioning it, and that's not so good. Ross has been at the Saenger for some weeks.

House has another permanency in Herbie, the organist. Mrs. Herbie is also on the stage at a console this week, but heavily shadowed by the lights. Exactly what she does isn't so important, for both follow the Jesse Crawfords in everything but the Crawfords' playing. While they have a chance in New Orleans, how can they or other organists who only know what the Crawfords first found out and developed, do anything new anywhere else, since all Publix organists it seems are Crawford carbon copies. Like Herbie at present playing "A Trip Through the Organ," a Jesse Crawford organization. With Herbie's personal fault overselling himself so thoroughly he vitiates the objective. Turning about while at the pit organ and often, with a "how's that?" look at the house, he immediately undoes each time whatever he may have accomplished in between. It's bad salesmanship and showmanship.

Joseph Cherniavisky leads the orchestra, works with a local soprano and takes care of himself as well as the overture. Paramount sound news and sound cartoon included in the bill.

Feature is "The Lash (FN), with Barthelmess. Business good over the week-end, but outdrawn by "Morocco" at Loew's State.

LOEW'S STATE

Another of the big ones where the personality can't get over. Proven here mostly this week by Mae Usher, single singer with pops.

Best turn on this bill and the best act in New Orleans this week is the 14 Bricktops, an all-girl orchestra. That's because of its novelty in the all-girl formation rather than its music, most ordinary, and the foolish camouflage to try to make soloists out of the girl musicians who seem to be fortunate enough to know what they are doing. Nearest to a soloist in the girl cornetist who is playing the identical cornet number for that effort Maurice Levy did 25 years ago. Probably this girl never heard of Levy. But you can bet she has of Ted Lewis.

The Bricktops, with perhaps four of them redheads on the level, have been playing the same routine for over a year. They should change, stop their solo stuff, get down to the more current popular songs if they can play them, which is doubtful, and try to get in line for dance music while on this tour, if finding the time for rehearsals in some way. These girls also lose their personality in the depths of the rear of this big house.

Stagg and White in blackface, with one an impersonator, do an old fashioned cross talk turn that gets over at the finale through the surprise wig pulling. Monday here they were still using a bad taste gag about President Hoover and it should be ordered out.

Serg. Franklin has his sharpshooting turn opening the stage show. It may be all right in that spot with sharpshooting not often stage seen of late, but there is no novelty excepting the shooting medley at the finish for the newer generation.

A not unusual vaude bill held up by the girl band only and injured by the theatre's size. Besides was shown a dog talker travesty, not good, and the feature, Par's "Morocco," which started to draw from the outset, Krazy Kat Cartoon to finish.

Loew's State seems to have first choice on Metro and Paramount product for this town. This has given it an edge on the pictures, made evident in the grosses. The house is also second in overhead to the Saenger's first, while the Orpheum's overhead is the lowest of the trio.

Both the Saenger and Loew's are well managed, with the crowds nicely handled.

R-K-O Orpheum

In this New Orleans R-K-O Orpheum lies the strength of vaudeville, as entertainment, and explains why the draw of the Orpheum is so steadfast and plenty. It's in the intimacy of the theatre.

In the Orpheum everyone can easily see the people on the stage; they get over so much better because of that.

This theatre, built in the days of Martin Beck in the Orpheum Circuit, is on a side street, perhaps a good location in the time here when they built a legit house (Crescent) up an alley. But the orchestra rows of seats are so close together they are uncomfortable. Must sit sideways to save the knees. Which may tell just how strong vaude is when it's good and in the right house.

Vaudeville may be adapted to capacities. That goes for the booking department. Vaude is no gamble. It has been through every test.

The 35c price all afternoon seems to catch the mat crowd. Picture is "Tol'able David" (Col), with billed name not known, but it's likely the Orpheum has established its trade so firmly they come anyway while the vaude show is okay.

Pepito, the Spanish clown, headlining. Good comedy act and a draw for children or should be if there's co-operation. More children in evidence at the Orpheum at four in the afternoon than in both the Saenger and Loew's.

Elizabeth Marzan opened with a dancing turn. Miss Morgan is mixed the better part of her five act including a piano player. Carries a couple of small time hoofers and a ballroom dance partner, but the girl is graceful and over on her own. Fed and Al Wahlman, in blackface, the second two-man turn on the bill and following each other may be funny with their mouth organs, to those who think their kind and stuff funny, including their talk. One boy is the comedian and the other an awful straight. But over.

The other two-man act with a couple of girls for atmosphere are Burt Yorks and Ben Marks. It's a rough one in the burlesque style, noisy slapsticky and so on. If the R-K-O booking office has sent out orders about cleaning up, it had better repeat them more concretely. This act doesn't appear to have an ounce of brains on what to use. Their "underwear" gag is nothing but filth in the manner employed. Another of their gags is unhealthy for kids. The turn got its laughs during the running and nothing at the close, but cleaned up will do in an R-K-O four-act unit that is not any too hot. This show is worth while because of Pepito and Miss Morgan as interest for the youngsters. Rest of show had usual short films and trailers.

This town has a popular master of ceremonies, Harry Berman of the Club Forrest, who goes over the radio nightly for an hour from that roadhouse. Either the Orpheum or Loew's State could use him easily and profitably as m. c. in doubling from the club, depending upon his radio draw. He has been at the Club Forrest for three years. Asked if he had received an offer from any downtown house to double, Mr. Berman said "No."

There's also an American girl turn called the Jenkins Sisters, touring a risley act at the Club Forrest. The two lookers are from Chicago and the only American young women who have ever done an act of this sort. But they still remain at a roadhouse in New Orleans.

Perhaps what some of these stage show circuits need mostly is a traveling vaudeville agent. Sime.

ORIENTAL, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 19.

To Paul Oscard, responsible for the flesh end of the programs of this spot, goes the credit for bringing more megaphones on the stage at one time than probably have ever been accumulated on any single rostrum before.

At the opening all the orchestra boys strut out with giant jewel encrusted shouting pieces, only to have the curtain go up on the chorus line similarly equipped. If the present policy of having the orchestra members work with the chorus is continued at the Oriental it is unquestionable that Benny Meroff will have the most versatile bunch of musicians this side of any place. In this week's offering he presents the members double in the line with the girls and do it creditably. They began by singing solos, and now they're dancing.

Hodge-podge is fine entertainment, with this bill leaping ahead of other offerings in the matter of color, scenery and showmanship. Watching Ainsley Lambert's ballet becomes an increasing pleasure here weekly. The girls are robots in the matter of precision dancing.

Three Rolling Stones, a trio of presentable boys in neat morning attire, come on in the number one spot. Highlight of the three is a slow motion prize fight with the referee acting, and showing the present day ethics of the squared circle. Looked into the pictured punches are heavy laughs. Brought the combo strong returns.

Joe Griffin, Chicago theatre tenor, throws his pleasing voice to bring success and tears from the femme part of the house. He uses pop ballads, which combined with his good looks and showmanship carry him. He is a master at dramatizing the modern pop ballad. Bob La Salle, a singing comic, has a line of patter interspersed with songs, winding up with a stooge who does a soft shoe. Place landed solidly.

Presentation tips into storybook land for material and brings forth plenty of pleasing costumes for the line girls. The whole is backed with scenic effects which make a neat Christmas show.

"Paid" (M-G) the feature with a line Friday afternoon.

5TH AVE, SEATTLE

Seattle, Dec. 18.

In his third week as m. c. at the Fifth Avenue, Ruhe Wolf has shown why he holds the post. On the screen, "Princess and Plumber" (Fox), helped delight fair-sized crowds.

Band starts in the pit. Wolf gets laughs during this number, and then trumpets.

Lots of attention being paid to lighting here. Bebe Sherman is the blues singer with the unit, "Doll Follies," and a highlight is some repartee with Wolf. LaSalle and Mack do a snappy portion of their standard act, and over okay. The line gals do a novelty dance on sprines which registers, although a little too long. Electrical lighting of a marionettes number is a good eye catcher. All done against a black background. Raymond and Virginia do a dandy adagio number for long deil dance goes on and then another novelty in the form of the two-faced line doing dance steps.

Good unit with tricks and Wolf.

CAPITOL, N. Y.

New York, Dec. 20.

Maybe there ought to be a law against three hour presentation film house shows. There's no such thing, but the circuits should institute one for their own protection. Any time a grind program gets much beyond the two hour limit somebody suffers. Most times it's both the audience and the house—the latter because it can't turn over fast enough plus the reaction of patrons starting to back away from the long wait to the feature picture.

This three hour thing goes for the Hippodrome (R-K-O), too. But it looks as if the Capitol and Hipp are running an endurance contest. The result is apt to be seen in attendance at opposition film theatres. And the Capitol is in no position to spot those other theatres any such head start. This Loew ace has got its worries, and it's not going to get anywhere with three hour bills.

For accuracy's sake the current show is not three hours. It runs 2:57. That's due to a 48 minute stage unit, a 28 minute "short," and a feature, "Passion Flower" (M-G), which takes 78 minutes to unwind. Way out of proportion in each and every instance. Added to that is an overture with the usual trailers and newsreel.

It's the week before Xmas so maybe nobody cares, and not anticipating any need for a turnover, possibly the running time is immaterial. On the other hand, long winded lineups such as this are almost sure to make them think twice about revisiting the house unless the screen leader is unusually strong. Simply a matter of taking the long way around to first base.

Business Saturday afternoon was half a balcony and a three-quarter downstairs.

Collins and Peterson, a two-man comedy vaude act, are given a terrific burden to carry in the unit, titled "Monkey Shines." Cross-fire team open it in "one" and repeat before the drop with laugh chatter that's supposed to click for 4,200 seats. On a three or four minute assignment they might have a chance, but it seems as if they're doing more than 10 on their series of appearances in trying to hold the presentation together. It's neither good routining for the boys nor the unit. Besides which Gruber's animal act is allotted its full running time as also the adagio act, Randall sextette, the way the show ran here Saturday, its second day at the house, it looked as if the acts had merely been poured in and told to do their full turn. No visible semblance of direction anywhere.

Also there are the 24 Chester Hales doing at least one number which could and should be dropped. It's a funny idea underdeveloped. Dave Schooler, m. c. announces that the Hales are the jungle boys, become a bit effeminate lately, so out trot the girls beneath animal headgears offering "pansy" mannerisms in unison. But the promise of the entrance is never kept. Routine proper so ordinary that the number dies away to nothing. With the obvious excessive use of time the only logical thing was to drop it. But it's in.

Gruber's 12 or 13 minute chop might make a distinct difference in this unit. Juvenile patrons should like it, principally because of the animal act, though there's no reason to allow Gruber's elephant, zebra and dog to stay on so long. In addition to which a couple of devices used by the baby pachyderm broke down. This didn't help and Gruber stepped before the plush to apologize.

Background is an atmospheric jungle set with the band under a straw roof. A six-show-girl feather costume parade anticlimaxed just ahead of the adagio sextette. The acrobatic tossing, like a "cat" act, is continuously interesting because there's always the chance of an accident. The Randalls are a workmanlike outfit, but also are being permitted too much time, as are Collins and Peterson in their final specialty before the band. This includes a slow trumpet ballad solo by the comic and a song by the straight man. The bugler could give it to them hot and fast while the song might be dropped altogether. Incidentally, this boy does a corking straight.

Bunchuk's overture is a medley in the holiday spirit nicely rendered. Newsreel went for five clips, the majority of which utilized a wide angle lens, so that in none of the clips spectacular enough to call for the enlargement.

The Capitol has apparently felt the current slap more than any other Broadway house, wherefore the present is no time to become careless with its program routine. Smacks grasses have been missing from this spot for some time and granting that the money is just not there along the Street, that's all the more reason for pressure and extra attention to prevent things from becoming outdistanced. For it seems the Capitol is on its way to become the minor of the Broadway majors unless some action is taken, and quick. Sid.

FLORENCE MILLS

(COLORED)

Los Angeles, Dec. 17.

Sam (Blood) Kramer, former actor, agent and producer, has done a smart trick in turning a former cheese box into a model little theatre for colored patronage. It's the only house in L. A. playing colored stage shows to that race, and there are 40,000 of 'em here.

Calling this the Florence Mills is both for sentimental and b.o. reasons.

House was formerly the Amusu, a dime grind that looked like it had been built by Chic Sales. With less than three grand, Kramer turned it into a modernistic theatre that is as good as any locally. It shows what can be done with a bucket of silver and black paint, a few tacks and a hunk of red carpet.

Sandy (Ashes) Burns and Sam (Bilo) Russell were brought on from the east as the featured and producing comics. Kramer also imported James Marshall, Alma Travers, Eva Metcalfe and Charlie Ray. Eight local girls are in the line, and when they do their routines the house steams.

Ashes and Bilo are pushover comics here. It's no show for whites, holding too much colored comedy which goes over their heads. But it's still a great spot for "unusuals" evenings.

Policy of the house is pictures and the presentation; one show nightly at 35 cents top, with four bits for the two night shows and mats Saturday and Sunday.

Nut is around $1,400 weekly, and the house can get a grand out of Saturday and Sunday. Attendance has been near capacity since the opening two weeks ago.

As is, it looks like a smart piece of showmanship. Small house (900 seats) and low price and small nut harmonize quite nicely and should keep Kramer from worrying about the stock market, which has been his panic for the past year. Harry Gollub is in on the deal with him. Call.

ROXY

New York, Dec. 19.

The Roxy is all-British currently, British International Pictures gets its first break in the big Fox house with "The Middle Watch," and the stage delivers an impression of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore."

Those who remember Charles Dillingham's handling of "Pinafore" in the Hippodrome, a long time ago, will find distinct likeness in the Roxy version. The carpenters had a Mississippi river boat set here a few weeks ago and it looked as though they had cut down that deck and rigged up a single pole with the hope of getting a brigantine effect.

This "Pinafore" included eight of the songs from the operetta. Rendition of these numbers lacked verve and sparkle. Another distracting factor is the way in which the Roxy songsters muffed the diction of the Gilbert and Sullivan lyrics. Despite a straining of ears it was impossible to get more than a few lines in from the rear of the lower floor.

Ballet appear in multi-color costumes of the period while the Roxyettes stick to sailor whites in their marine floor routine.

The oft-repeated but very effective stage number, "The Ballet Master and the Ballerina," (Patricia Bowman and Leonide Massine), is again on display. This item has become a house standard. Studio atmosphere, with M. Vodnoy and Oscar Lifshey a part of it, contributes to the grace of the dancers.

Orchestra is using selections from "La Boheme," and Movietone News completes the program. Wally.

PARAMOUNT, N. Y.

New York, Dec. 19.

Stage presentation takes a curious slant for a Christmas week, curious in more ways than one. It's partly a welcome variation and partly not. Christmas entertainment formulas probably have a little more tiresome hoke in them than most observances, and, with all the de luxes going in for infantile appeal, a grown-up stage show has individuality this week. But in respect that the presentation is grouped around a talking comedian, the arrangement is not so good.

Sid Marion's clowning and gagging is the nucleus and centermost of the proceedings and a little of talking comedy goes a long way in this type of performance, partly because it isn't strong enough to carry the audience for the whole route and because it throws the other elements into the background for too much of the time.

Marion works first with a group of girls and later opposite the polite straight of Marie Saxal, who otherwise figures in the proceedings as a fine, vivacious soprano. Comedy incidents involving her are not so funny, but her singing bits are capital.

Two regular specialties are blended into the performance—the On-Wah troupe of Chinese acrobats and jugglers and the George Andree adagio quartet, both striking turns of their kind giving interesting performances. The Oriental sextette, which has two young workers who was strictly their appropriate spot, calling for the task of getting the running started again after the lobby cigaret interval. Turn is still a high point of knockabout comedy and acrobatic fun, the tightest-knitted interlude of the sort in vaude. They use about 12 minutes of falls and contusions that hasn't a split second of stall in it, and were an uproar all the way.

Rosita and Ramon fitted into the following position excellently. There wasn't anything in the world that could have carried through on comedy and it was shrewd showmanship to go to the other extreme of polite class for a short change of pace. And the international stepping pair are the acme of class presentation, strictly Fifth avenue in suave and debonair showmanship. They do only three movements, but they build them with parade and casual ease and supply a satisfying group of graceful dance ideas while still leaving the audience with an appetite for more. Capital band in support and used for only one musical interval, a second gap being filled by Tamara, the Russian guitarist and singer familiar to several night clubs. The Tamara girl is a standout in the turn, singing two Russian songs in that tongue with a picturesque flavor of their own to the jazz fed multitude. Girl has a style of beauty, too, that makes her distinctive. Whole act is a gem, a legitmate dancing turn that dramatizes two supremely graceful young people in an appropriate setting of taste and elegance. Team is doubling from El Patio, class nite club.

Frisco closed and kept the customers interested for another 12 minutes and then had to tell 'em that was all and they could go home. Putting the dancing jokesmith on at the finish fooled the Palace regulars and they were actually caught seated at the final curtain, which is a terrible thing to have happen to a Palace regular. Rush.

HIPPODROME, N. Y.

The big old Hip was like an empty barn around two o'clock Saturday. They kept piling in and before four the huge downstairs auditorium was close to capacity. They don't stampede here, but keep percolating.

Not much to the show other than circusy atmosphere, and its apparent layout along the lines of the old days when the expansive stage reeled off act after act of the pantomimic circus type. And with about every act having some sort of acrobatics, it seemed mostly stage bait for kids for the holidays. Picture "The Princess and the Plumber" (Fox).

By way of injecting some holiday spirit the orchestra played "Babes in Toyland" music for the overture, and the musicians stood up and donned little comedy hats as they travestied one of the band impressions.

Gautier's Toy Shop was off to a slow start due to one of the ponies stepping off his rocking pedestal; yet the dogs and the ponies went through their routine as usual. Act in season right now at the Hip. Ashley Page (New Acts) and his xylophone were second. Pleased.

Ross and Shawky (New Acts) started the first real laughs with hoke acrobatics. While having nothing unusual or novel, Robinson and DeWitt (New Acts) as a whole entertained, the dancing especially holding up the turn.

As a rule a sister act that depends on an exchange of gab to help them get by die a thousand deaths in the big house, but LeMarr and Boice proved an exception to this as their talk not only was well put over, but scored solidly. Act is working much better since its initial presentation and for this duo is a good piece of stage property. Fly remarks with the bigger of the women taking the usual kidding about extra poundage, like Fanny Watson. To accentuate it the other gal changes wardrobe and steps on for the finish in abbreviated attire that was decidedly short and revealing.

Tom Lomax and Co., which, according to local vaude history, bobbed up around here with much of his present layout including the parade of the huge masks on stilts by his Co., still looks novel and unquestionably effective for the Hip during the Yule season. The prop horse monkey biz didn't miss. The phoney animal shows some corking teamwork on the part of the two men underneath.

Gus Van walked on and received spontaneous applause from all the house. Van was in good voice and his characteristic numbers went over with a bang. He is sure a corking single and one of the few male singles who can walk into the Hip and get over.

In the closing was Lloyd Nevada and his pantomimic novelty. Act has lost none of its mysterious stage charm for kids since first shown around in 1924. The disappearing white objects on the black curtained stage are mystifying in execution. A sure kiddie novelty and one that can stand the wear and tear of time. Mark.

STATE

Brace of mixed teams, dissimilar in style, but both based on comedy, are the kick in this week's State bill and, for themselves, the most prominent applause grabbers. Otherwise the very conventionally booked and spotted six-acter has its slow moments and poor ones, notably a case of misjudgment in the No. 4 act.

This is Billy Halligan's sketch about booze in a small town hotel room, played by the comic on and off for several years now. Its 100% talk contents were not meant for theatres as large as the State and never could the idea find or plant itself. Laughs down front not enough to cover the silence from half-way to the rear. State held a similar incident last week with Lulu McConnell's bridge game skit, although that one, due to Miss McConnell's style, went better in its more boisterous way. It was an impossible task for Halligan to warm up a big theatre chill with the bare lines of his playlet.

Two new turns for vaude hereabouts, both under New Acts, were "Sugar" Marcelle and Phil Emerton's Diamonds, deucing and closing, respectively. Miss Marcelle is a blonde singing single with a man pianist satisfactory now for the spot most anywhere and suggesting she might advance. Emerton turn looked fine for intermediate and lesser playing, but too much like a second company of Horace Heidt's California Collegians to be important.

Artie Lewis and Peggy Ames were the first mixed couple after laughs, filling the third position to the brim with their bright chatter and wind-up parodies. Latter slammed the act over here. With the same parodies probably the only part that would keep them out of the Palace. But there's only one Palace nowadays and plenty of States, though just a block away. Miss Ames sets an excellent example for others with about the clearest and best diction by a straight woman in any comedy act around.

Second mixed team was a standard State favorite, Conrad and Eddy, in for lots of applause this trip as always at this house. Six Crackerjacks, combination of five men and a girl (colored), opened the bill. Featuring group dancing by the men and finishing like a whirlwind with ground tumbling, the act is possessed of natural speed and could be even speedier through elimination of at least one of the girl's songs. "Remote Control" (M-G) feature. Bige.

58TH STREET

Ben Blue (New Acts) had the house groggy with a series of old and new dances and gags Saturday. Lynn Dore, a svelte blonde scorcher, assisted by warbling a couple of tunes. On last, this pair spelt a happy ending.

Sylvia and Harriet Darling (New Acts), deucing it, were just so much pulchritude while they went through a brace of songs with a piano accompanist. For the third effort they stripped off the lower halves of their evening dresses and went into taps and good high kicks for a fair hand.

Before he became an m.c. in presentation houses seven years ago Leon Navara was known as Leon Varvara. Maybe the change in name helped him into the next-to-shut spot, as here. Navara is plenty adept at the ivories and plays jazz and classical selections with equal ease. His is a neat pianologue with appropriate material getting the laughs.

Francis C. Bushman, Jr., on third, makes his double sing for him and take all the bad breaks that are built for amusement in three blackouts and several other bits which ring in a small woman for contrast. Not bad as a screen star's "personal appearance" and will probably improve with usage.

Opening act, Carnival of Venice, had seven people and a wealth of material in a potpourri of musical selections interspersed with fair dancing and singing. A trailer ahead announced Ame. Donatella, her three sons and the Shepherd's horn playing of Signor Pietro. It even gave away the Madame's much better than it sounds. Bige.

"East Is West" (U) and Pathe news on the screen.

HAMILTON

The "bargain shows" inaugurated here recently has been a business getter. Monday and Friday nights are when the other houses in the neighborhood feel the pressure, for then the bill is extended to 10 acts, a feature picture and shorts. It would be hard to find more for the money, in spite of the fact that half the acts this first half are new while several of the standards were breaking in material.

Jane and Katherine Lee are getting steadily better and their turn was marked by the poise with which they did their impromptu clowning. Jane is a natural comic and Katherine a perfect foil. Eighth on the bill, they went across strong.

In the preceding spot Pope and Thompson (New Acts) sang, danced and played half a dozen unique musical instruments with the ease of veterans. They were one of the "showing" acts added.

Harrington and Green, colored funsters, were ninth in place of Krugel and Robels, scheduled fourth but didn't show. Their turn has the big-time touch and "Hamtree" has an able partner in Miss Green, who has a good voice and knows how to place laughs.

Gus Edward's "Tree Sitters," sixth.

Dolores Cassinelli (New Acts) features screen rep billing. She has an average voice but her selection of songs is ruinous excepting the last, "Otchi Cherni." She was on fourth. Leo Gautier's Phonograph Dogs (New Acts) closed with a series of tricks that were amusing.

Swartz and Clifford, fifth, had a brand of gags and singing that called for a hand and they got it. Stuff well delivered with "Our Cottage Isn't for Sale Any More" as a strong harmony finish the way they did it. Deucing were Powers and Dawson (New Acts), who relied on inconsequential chatter and the man's mugging for their comedy. A song by the femme in a too-highly pitched soprano and good taps together. One of the added acts, they looked like an average for their spot.

La Varre Brothers, formerly Paul and Walter La Vars, were first with hand-balancing in formal morning attire which suffered little from their exertions. Their comedy called for hard falls by the top man. Then into serious work with a one-arm lift from a lying-down to an upright position and another from a back-bend over a specially built chair and they were off to good applause.

The third added act, in that position on the bill, was Alan Shaw (New Acts), coin palmer and card manipulator. Good monologue throughout to accompaniment of soft music. Can fill in early on any layout.

Film, "East Is West" (U). The 10 acts ran over two hours.

R-K-O, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 18.

New four-act layout costs $3,250, but is far from looking it. On getting together the show in the east bookers fell for a second-rate dance act, with a team and an ensemble, for $1,200. That's the costliest act in the show, but it's Norton and Haley who save the bill from curling up.

Intact is a case of two acts in one and two full-stage offerings, with latter on the ends, the other two in the middle. Looks funny and partly goes to prove that four-act shows are not only difficult to pattern, but seem incomplete.

Norton and Haley, standard comedy act, do their regular routine in next to closing and are weaved into the closer, "The Purple East," to build that up with some laughs. "Purple East" is an illusion affair, with an ensemble of six girls doubling for acrobatic routines. Without Jack Norton around, it couldn't raise itself above third-rate.

The illusion of the femme, posing as a statue and breaking into bits, is novel, but without gags built around it for Norton it could mean no more than that. Poser stands on a pedestal that quickly takes her through the stage floor, leaving broken parts of a regular statue. She returns the same way, but audience was nowhere near gasping Thursday night. Burlesque audiences stopped gasping at it years ago.

Opener Ralph Olsen. Sounds like a single and a new one, but a 10-people affair, consisting of Olsen, a juve dancing partner (woman) and a line of eight girls. Probably started out as a dance team lucky to get No. 2 spots in medium-grade houses, and built itself up into money through making up a flash.

Olsen and his little partner seem to have the ability, but are lacking in the proper routines and tempo. Man's feature specialty is more an exhibition of high kicking and splits, as done by an acrobatic dancer, than anything else.

Second slot a fairly good fit for Jack Major, who opens by combining a solo with accompaniment, both by pit orchestra and a phonograph on stage. Novelty of idea is somewhat of a surprise, those old gags later on are also a surprise. There was one from a Broadway show of years back. Whistling and yodeling are Major's other act properties.

A fairly good act, not as strong as some No. 2's on R-K-O road shows, but also not as weak as others that have come along. Audience reaction favorable.

If R-K-O is going to spend over $3,000 for a four-acter, why not send out some $1,500 comedy acts and buy the flash material cheaper?

Feature, "Captain Thunder" (WB), obtained for first run through Warners not wanting it for their downtown or Hollywood houses.

Pathe News and customary filler dress. Char.

PALACE, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 20.

Man and boy, there were only three lonely males on this program which started out last week to be an "all-girl" show. How those muggs squeezed into the line-up is unexplained. The males started out fine; in fact, they hogged the first turn, but beginning with the second act the ladies got more and more prominent, until they were all over the footlights and drapes in the final two turns.

Man or woman, it was a nifty show. Smooth, even entertainment starting big and ending bigger, and that's no allusion to anatomical proportions.

Enos Frazere came to town to deliver a series of difficult trapeze stunts that he made look simple by an easy manner and nonchalant workmanship.

Little Geraldine with her brother, Joe, and that dervish head-spin proved a natural click. When Geraldine started to warble the hard-boiled audience fell for her hard.

The B.V.D.-wearers made their last stand when Eddie Allen took part in an act with Doris Canfield. Allen tried to act like a perfect gentleman, but that Canfield woman insisted on clowning and made everybody laugh.

After that it was hopeless, and on the next rise the stage swarmed with women, and redheads. All kinds of redheads, but they had one thing in common: they all played musical instruments, and were traveling incognito under the label of the Hollywood Redheads, led by that fancy baton-waver, Babe Egan. The ladies played and danced and sang, and asked the audience how they liked it. The audience said they liked it. Who's going to argue with a flock of ginger-domed females?

Rae Samuels was the final femme shot heard around the loop. Real variety entertainment by a real variety entertainer. Excellent material with not a single wasted moment. She devoted her opening number to urge the folks to haul the cached dough out of the bank and buy themselves things and such.

Couple of muggs at least grabbed the screen, when Harry Langdon and Slim Summerville took the leads in "See America Thirst," the Universal feature.

Men and women were about evenly divided in an excellent afternoon house. Ladies are especially fond of this house, and who's the guy who won't join the ladies?

look like girls but do contortion stuff that suggests they may be boys, is featured in the full set without any flash backing. Make a striking picture and show startling corkscrew feats. Pipes featured youngster does back bends that seem impossible and executes them without effort. One bit is a series of back kicks, with the left heel touching the right ear.

The adagio four are likewise remarkable in their type of work, with the flying girl working in some setting, with an ensemble of six girls doubling for acrobatic routines. Without Jack Norton around, it couldn't raise itself above third-rate.

LOEW'S STATE, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 18.

With 100 Meglin Kiddies on the stage for the benefit of their friends and relatives and the week's gross, Larry Ceballos' "Icy Hot" unit goes a bit screwey. It's no fault of the stager or the company. When a flock of kids scamper around getting in the hair of everyone, it's too much to expect a smooth performance. However, the Christmas spirit is in the air, and the Meglin Kiddies are a subsidiary of Fanchon & Marco.

Idea opens with a medley of "Rain" numbers, chorus wearing slickers get all wet via stereopticon. Idea similar to that used by Metro in "Hollywood Revue." The icy hot business gets over by the orchestra working in parkas, with the hoods up behind a scrim, but after the first number the heat wins and the hoods come off. It might be turning on the heat. Betty Lou Webb follows in male impersonations, getting over well in both a straight and drunk number, and winding up in a tap. Chorus next in a familiar black and white dance used by Ceballos previously at Warners' Hollywood.

Proceedings are then pretty well gummed up by the flock of youngsters, who hoof, sing, acrobat and toe tap, all to the great satisfaction of parents. The Le Grohs get things in line again with their snappy contortionist work. Finale has the chorus, led by Miss Webb, singing "Get Hot." Gals are dressed in parkas and start peeling off things after the first chorus. At the finish they are plenty torrid. Effective and plenty strong for a finish.

Unit will add another act after it leaves here to take the place of the youngsters, who are only in for the State showing.

Bert Hollowell, formerly leader for Publix in Birmingham, Ala., opened this week as boss of the house orchestra, but stuck to the pit. "Princess and Plumber" (Fox) is the feature, with a Laurel and Hardy comedy and Fox news clips rounding out the bill.

MICHIGAN, DET.

Detroit, Dec. 20.

Show this week calls for praise. Unusually good and practically entirely built here. Using a Chicago "B" unit, but with the acts changed it makes for 33 minutes of fast entertainment. Show is supposed to be built for personal appearance of Moran and Mack.

Also serves to introduce Charlie Crafts to Detroit, sent here to fill vacancy left by Lou Kosloff. This lad seems set for as long as he cares to stay. In addition to a nice manner and appearance he has a swell pair of pipes. Selling two songs in this show, he was well received.

Introducing the O'Connor Family, Crafts announced that show was a musical menu. For the first course he introduced turkey and out came the first part of the Family act. But they turned out to be far from a turkey act. Spotted early, they stopped the show.

Band number was spotted next and Crafts took the opportunity to show Detroit his vocal ability.

With their spotting the only one available in a presentation Moran and Mack followed an act that stopped the show. In addition, to get across, they had to work in "one" with the band on the stage behind the traveler. However, had no trouble in showing why they have been around all these years.

For his encore Eduard Werner used something a little different from the usual Xmas pre-Christmas picture. Titled "Christmas the World Over," it was novel. For the finale a non-synchronous disk was used with a male chorus for a strong finish.

Picture "The Silver Horde" and business fair. Lee.

ENRIGHT, PTSBGH.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 18.

Christmas week custom in the de luxe houses of including kiddie revues continues unabated, all three, the Enright, Penn and Stanley are making quite a fuss over the tots. At this house the youngsters are all from Lou Bolton's dancing academy and arrive near the close of the show to tie things up, as they always do.

Although the show-stopping possibilities of a group of local kiddies are endless, due to the presence in the audience of a constant stream of friends and relatives, the business angle also becomes apparent. Occasionally they find a tot or two possessed of real talent. The Enright's current line-up reveals a couple who belong in this class.

Full stage lowers, girls back across lights again with Dick Powell, m. c., following to announce Three Rhythm Girls. Trio is another of those precision tap dance outfits and need more polish. Hoke band number next, Powell singing a chorus for encore. This musical gang is one of the Enright's chief assets.

Bayes and Speck closed with their smart line of chatter. They've added a few new gags since last caught in this burg. The tot unit followed.

Picture, "The Gorilla" (FN), and first afternoon show, downstairs, wasn't a quarter full. Cohen.

Last of the Old Style, Non-Smoking Ladies Are All on Broadway Now!

Broadway is the last stronghold of good old-fashioned womanhood. The fingers of all the little lassies of the hinterlands may be stained with nicotine, but hardboiled Broadway still wants to believe that nice women do not smoke.

Deliberately shutting its eyes to the cigarets that tumble out of every lady's pocketbook, Broadway tradition sticks to the legend that a lady who uses tobacco ain't no lady.

If a lady forgets and insists on smoking, then Broadway is going to make it tough for her. The dressing room at the Palace is commodious, a huge salon fitted with lots of mirrors and all sorts of roomy sofas and chairs. But no lady who traffics with nicotine may indulge in her wicked habit there. For the likes of her there is a stuffy little room away off in a corner, with shabby wicker chairs all crowded together, as uncomfortable as the righteous management can make it.

But so sunk is womanhood in 1930 that the great big, airy salon is always empty at intermission, while all the ladies huddle into the tiny smoking room for a drag. The Palace, one of Broadway's most accurate spokesman, has indicated its stand on the question of ladies and cigarets, but the ladies won't mind. Contrary, as always, they won't get back on the pedestal.

Smokeless Hostesses

Roseland ballroom takes pride in the irreproachable quality and conduct of its hostesses. They must obey a rigid set of rules, and the most important of these is "No Smoking." The management quaintly believes that no one would insult a girl who doesn't smoke, and vice versa. Hostesses smoking between dances would immediately transform a "ballroom" into a "dance-hall," a term of frightful opprobrium to the high-minded management of Roseland. So strongly does Roseland feel about the propriety of ladies smoking that a hostess caught carrying on so shamefully is straightway punished with a two weeks' layoff.

Women stroll Fifth avenue, cigaret in hand, and nobody looks. They smoke in buses, and no one cares. Yet a lady leaving the shelter of a theatre marquee for a Broadway orange juice stand inhaling a spud will cause every passerby to cast sich scornful glances that she should choke on each puff. Small boys follow her. Mothers draw their children close, shielding them from the horrible sight.

Broadway itself is firmly no smoking for women. It's those who don't belong that debauch the morals of the street. Out-of-towners and strangers from other districts bring to Broadway their new-fangled ideas about the rights of women.

The real Broadway is true to the old standards of judging a lady. A woman who smokes might just as well be dancing on table tops. Broadway has to cling fast to its illusions about what a lady does. How else would it know?

Musician Pinched for Phone Fooling in Hotel Booth

Albert A. Travers, 28, musician, living at the Manger, pleaded guilty to unlawfully operating a coin box in Special Sessions and was given a suspended sentence.

Telephone company investigators arrested Travers Nov. 21 in the lobby of the hotel after he had inserted plugs instead of nickels in a public booth.

G. V. Dance Teachers' Case Stops at Summons

Saxley V. Penfold, of 66 Charles street, well known in the Village as an exponent of dancing, was visibly vexed in West Side Court when the summons he obtained against Louis H. Chalif, head of a dancing studio, at 163 West 57th street, was dismissed by Magistrate August Dreyer.

Chalif was summoned on the charge that he was withholding some irreplaceable manuscripts and personal papers of Penfold. The latter told the court that he and Mr. Chalif had started "The Art of the Dance."

He was to be paid certain sums for supplying the ideas and expense money, stated Penfold, but trouble developed and he was ousted. He then sought the return of his papers but met with no success.

Chalif, through his attorney, denied the allegations and characterized the complaint of Penfold as ridiculous.

Rips Dancer's Wardrobe But Charge Is Dropped

Betty Montgomery, dancer, residing at the St. Paul hotel, told Magistrate Silberman in West Side Court that she declined to prosecute Arthur A. Gouin, 31, auto salesman, who was charged with destroying almost $1,000 worth of her dresses. Gouin was then freed.

The auto salesman was arrested by Detective Bill McConachie of the West 68th street station, who was informed by the dancer that she and Gouin were sort of "chums."

Gouin was alleged to have obtained a pass key and entered Betty's room. He then began his work of destruction, stated the dancer. When she returned home she found every piece of wearing apparel torn to bits.

The defendant is quoted as admitting tearing the dancer's clothes, but stated he was sorry and would make good, said the sleuth.

Editor Variety,

Dear Sir:

During the week of Dec. 6 the team of Howard Kane and Corel Ellis, playing R-K-O time, dissolved partnership. Have been advised that some person is now claiming she is Corel Ellis of the team Kane and Ellis.

Wish to state that I am no longer connected with Howard Kane and anyone using my name is doing so without my knowledge and permission.

Yours,
Corel Ellis.

Editor "Variety":

Dear Sir:

Fourteen years ago the late Junie McCree wrote me a song entitled, "Mrs. Cupid," of which I hold the copyright.

I sang the number in all the first-class vaudeville houses in the United States and Canada. I purchased the song, incidentally, outright for $500 and it is my sole and exclusive property.

Fancy my surprise when I attended a performance at the Palace, N. Y., week of Dec. 6 and heard Ken Murray give advice to the love-lorn and use the name of "Mrs. Cupid." The song, "Mrs. Cupid," and the idea is originally mine, even to the asking of the questions and the replies.

And they're asking for new material.

Respectfully,
Lydia Barry.

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

"Did you advertise for a maid, ma'am? I saw your ad in the paper. You advertised."

"Yes; come in."

"Thanks, ma'am. This place ain't so big, is it? It ain't so big."

"I really don't need a large place. You see my husband and I are at the studio almost every day."

"Are you in pitchers? You're in pitchers. You ain't got no swimming pool."

"What is your name, dear?"

"Tillie. Do you know Mary Pickford?"

"No."

"If you're in pitchers you get a million dollars a week. Why do you live in such a little place?"

"For one thing, I don't get a million dollars a week."

"I came out to California to get in pitchers. I almost did, too, only I wouldn't sacrifice my all."

"Your all what?"

"The man said he would make a star out of me if I would sacrifice my all. He was standing outside a pitcher studio and he had on overalls. He was a director. They wear overalls when they work."

"Directors don't wear overalls."

"The important ones do. I was in a studio once. I and my girl friend walked right in. I don't know how we did it unless we looked important. Al Jolson was making a pitcher and sang three songs for us. It was at Paramount, and Bebe Daniels was in the pitcher."

"Al Jolson isn't at Paramount, dear."

"Yes he is. I'm really not poor. I went to college and got smart. My folks are millionaires but they disowned me when I wanted to marry the chauffeur. So now I'm a maid."

"Did you marry the chauffeur?"

"What chauffeur? When Robert Montgomery kisses you—just makin' believe in a pitcher, I mean—when he kisses you do you feel like sacrificing your all?"

"He has never kissed me."

"He has me. I was at a orgy in his house—it has 45 rooms—and I almost sacrificed my all in every room. Do you serve good food here?"

"That's up to you, Tillie. I expect you to do the buying and serving."

"I like peanut butter. Where I worked at last they never let me buy peanut butter."

"Where did you work last?"

"At Joan Crawford's. I quit because I couldn't stand to watch her husband beat her. She's married to Bull Montana and he comes home drunk. They have 45 rooms. Her husband made advances at me and told me he'd put me in pitchers, but I said him nay. When I get to be a star I want to be able to say that I never trampled no men in the dust to get there. I want Thursdays off."

"That's alright."

"Thursdays I go out with my boy friend. He's a millionaire. He writes stories for pitchers but right now he's working on a building. He says he thinks he'll sell a story to Al Jolson about a singer whose wife left him but he had to keep on singing anyway, even when his baby died. If my boy friend sells this story he'll quit working on the building and we'll get married. He promised me that when I gave him my all."

"You did—that?"

"Every Thursday. I want Thursdays off."

Razzing The Home Town

DALLAS

(A series of stories on the inside show end of key cities, without giving the cities any the best of it.)

By Rudy Donat

Dallas, Dec. 20.

"Evah been up to Dali-lis?"

That's the big query when the discussion is of big towns. To most Texans it's still the only "show nuff" city in the state.

Billed as the "metropolis of the southwest," Dallas is commercial key of a stretch of dirt that could easily swallow four or five ordinary U. S. states, bragging of heaviest array of skyscrapers south of the Mason-Dixon line. Located on Trinity river, with Ft. Worth, "cow town," 32 miles west.

Theatrically, the town serves as a hatchery for most of activities between New Orleans and El Paso, Kansas City and the Gulf. Despite what some folks think, Dallasites don't wear six gallon Stetsons; no Indians within 200 miles of here; broncho busters are fair attractions and the burg has a rep as a hard show town.

About the first amusement venture attempted here was way back in the 80's, when some of the city dads got together and figured they might boost general biz with a fair. The country fair gradually grew into the annual Texas State Fair, which has served it's purpose of educating Texans to look to Dallas for entertainment.

Like most of other Texas towns, comparatively young, Dallas doesn't boast of many celebs. Few years back the old Bryan high school enrolled one Louise Dantzler, originally hailing from Corsicana, 30 miles south. Louise was rated as "average" stude, fair looking, quiet and popular wall flower at the gym hops. So mama Dantzler decided she'd better try more rosy fields for Louise, taking her to L. A. Now she's billed regularly as Mary Brian.

With Mary to Hollywood went one Dorothy Seastrunk, changed her surname to Seastrom, got a few minor roles, got t. b. and faded from pictures.

Back in 1901, the manager of old Cycle Park got a couple of press notices when his leading man and wife announced birth of a girl. The incident was quickly forgotten, even 29 years ago. Then Paramount groomed Bebe Daniels out of her.

From Kids, Up

At Greenville, neighboring burg, one ambitious dad was set for making a medico out of his son, sent him to Texas University. But the hard head took to singing as John Boles.

More recent Dallas sacrifices to the screen are James Hall and Ginger Rogers. Ginger used to get the razzberries pretty regular as "personality" girl in Publix prologs, etc. It was another Dallas kid, Jack Pepper, locally "Culpepper," who taught her the ropes. Jack, in vaude for several years, later married Ginger. But that didn't linger long.

The Swor family was one of the earliest stage names of the town. Bert, more recently of Moran and Mack, still carries on. Got their start when minstrels were money makers in the south, with tents and street parades.

It was to Elm street, foolishly called "the Broadway of Texas," that came, almost 39 years ago, one son of an old St. Louis banker and took a shot at show biz in the old Opera house, later renamed Majestic. Seldom heard, and even less seldom seen, Karl Hoblitzelle now is easily the biggest shot in Texas show biz. He got his interest for the amusement racket from some job he once held with an exposition. Someone told him that the southwest was virgin ground for a circuit, so Karl brought his St. Louis dough for founding the Interstate wheel, which to many is still synonimous with vaude. During that time Karl has seen some hard times. People who got a big kick out two-by-four carnies and rodeos couldn't see much in the song-and-dance stuff. It was with Mr. Hoblitzelle that a couple of well known names to Brondway made show history, Charlie Freeman and Bob O'Donnell. Between their efforts, Interstate vaude not only got recognition, but grew into the ace b. o. attraction in Texas. Interstate valuation in recent R-K-O merger was $7,000,000. Just a result of showmanship from the wide open spaces.

Other Dallas name additions to show biz include late Si Charninsky, exhib, and brothers Eph and Hyman, in a musical line, H. A. Cole, head of Texas indie exhibs and popular in Allied affairs, Louis L. Dent; and Eddie Carewe claims he once punched cattle near here with Gainesville as birthplace.

For Opera

To opera, town gave Leonora Corona, Met star. Gene Finley, of Publix eastern staff, got his start here as manager of Old Mill, then boss of station WFAA.

Local gentlemen of the press have been singularly inactive. There are four sheets, "News," "Times-Herald," "Journal," "Dispatch." John Rosenfield, Jr., holds honor as first regular critic slick enough to sell a Texas publisher on necessity of a dramatic scribe. Now they send Rosey to scout Broadway hits for road possibilities down this way that never show up.

Night life was the berries here, coupla years back. Hashers who had managed some time or other to travel around a little got a stake from bootleggers, gamblers, or both, opened upstairs joints, and the next time you'd see them would be in a shiny sport roadster. Never bothered by the cops much, but faded along with the town's big time leggers. Now Bagdad and El Tivoli remain, both where a hubby can take his frau. Mugging not so hot.

And, while a hard show town, Dallas is an artists' heaven. Music schools by the scores, every class, along with 30 or more dance schools.

The Kluxers

One thing the chamber of commerce doesn't brag about is that Dallas was once headquarters of the Ku Klux Klan, but does brag of 60 or so churches. Some managers of the old school used to meet the parsons and throw open theatres for Sunday a. m. services. And what publicity that was! Some of the boys are even accused of having sung in choirs. That was when managers were managers and a "publicity director" was just a press agent.

And it's present Mayor Tate who first tried the idea of putting managers on their word of honor, minus censor or official interference. The first squawk is yet to be registered.

A wise guy, that Tate, and a showman's friend.

Special Sessions Trial For Boy Dancer Case

Mrs. Margaret McHale, 34, 120 West 47th street, mother of James (Duke) McHale, well-known 15-year-old specialty dancer, was held for trial in the Court of Special Sessions. Bail of $500 was fixed by Magistrate Silberman.

Theodore Raderick and Mrs. Grace Cox, agents of the Children's Society, arrested Mrs. McHale in the basement of the Paramount hotel in the Paramount Grill, where the agents stated that "Duke" was dancing. He was said to be receiving $100 a week.

Recently a magistrate suspended sentence on the boy's father when he promised to take him out of "Princess Charming" and keep him from appearing in shows until he reached the age of 16.

Despite this kindness on the part of Magistrate Renaud, the family violated the promise made and "Duke" was working at the Paramount Grill. Mrs. McHale was waiting for "Duke" to finish when Raderick and Mrs. Cox placed her under arrest for permitting her minor son to dance. Duke was taken into custody by the agents on the charge of being a neglected minor.

Mrs. McHale pleaded ignorance. She told the agents that a friend of the family had told her he would get "Duke" a license to dance for $20. In the meantime she was informed that the boy could appear pending the arrival of the license, said the mother.

No Wall Flowers in Chi. Ballrooms, Volunteer Group Keeps Gals on Go

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Chicago's two biggest ballrooms are using a scientific research department, employing about 100 people, to overcome the wall-flower grief.

For 75 cents any evening, any femme, able to get about at all, can meet and dance with the town's semi-elite in these two structures, with the research department stepping in after the girl gets in the hall and making the evening happy. The scientific angle is that the 100 employees study physiognomy and psychology so as to be able to understand all guests and handle them accordingly.

Two spots, the Trianon on the southside, and the Aragon, on the north, each accommodate 3,000 dancers. They are the only ballrooms on the globe that won't let wall-flowers be wall-flowers. It is the aim of the management to make Chicago the dancer's paradise.

Each of the spots has a "400" club, which despite the ritzy name has a waiting list. These 400 patrons like dancing and get free ducats. Each member helps in the social end of the dancing. They see to it that every femme in the house gets a whirl.

The 400 mob also act as bouncers, always keeping out a weather eye. None ever do any actual tossing, but are on hand to strengthen the hall's reputation that anyone is safe beneath its roof.

Strictly Non-Alcoholic

Liquor is barred. Boys coming in with flasks are scented out by semi-gigolos, who in brushing past the suspect feel gently at his hip. If found, the wet goods must be checked until the owner leaves. His name is pasted across his bottle and as he heads home for the evening he gets it back.

Liquor checking idea is part of the scientific research department, with the argument that femmes don't like to dance with boys blowing boozy breaths.

Andrew Karzas, who promoted the two spots, has sunk about $3,000,000 in them, backed by the American Bond & Mortgage Co. Karzas has tried to make dancing on the level here, figuring there are enough lonesome dames who like to dig for the joy of it. The two spots draw about 35% suburban trade, with it coming as far away as Milwaukee. Billing extends over a radius of 100 miles of Chicago.

20% Just Watch

At present the two spots are enjoying a paying clientele of about 20% who simply look on from the balconies. Research department has also figured that about 10% of the 5,000,000 drawing power of the two halls goes in for dancing as their weakness. Last year the Trianon and Aragon got many of this 10% faction twice weekly. This year, because of the pinch, the regulars come only once a week. An increase in new faces has offset this loss.

All doormen use the ticket rejection idea on undesirables. Money is refunded a mugg if he has a dirty collar or unclean shoes. "You won't be happy here" is the phrase used when the admission charge of $1.25 is given back.

CHELSEA BANK CLOSED; SHOW PEOPLE TIED UP

New York went into another bank panic Monday night (22), and with a run continuing Tuesday morning the doors were closed by State authorities despite some $16,000,000 being dumped in to protect depositors. After a heavy withdrawal, lasting from early in the evening to late Monday night, with 400 or 500 anxious depositors at one time crowding the window lines, the Chelsea Bank, 48th street and Seventh avenue, brought about the arrest of two men for circulating false rumors.

The State Department of Banking closed the Chelsea Bank at two o'clock, Tuesday (23), taking charge of its management.

Chelsea, through its central location, has one of the longest lists of theatrical depositors in Times Square. The men arrested were Thomas Lodge, composer, of 560 W. 144th St., and Michael Melrose, of Brooklyn. They pleaded not guilty and were released in their own custody pending the bank's decision whether to press the charge.

Bank opened on time Tuesday morning with announcement that $16,000,000 from the Federal Reserve would be available.

Some depositors left after two and three hour vigils when assured it was just a run.

Bought Rod to Help Out Police, He Says; He Is An Actor, He Says, Also

Ray Justus, 26, claiming to be an actor, living at the Palace hotel, 132 West 45th street, is sorry he sought the whereabouts of a member of a gang, who sold him a loaded 38-calibre revolver for $5. Justus met the alleged gangster in a speak on West 47th street. The gangster sold the barkeep a coat for $8. The boy saw that Justus was interested and whispered into his ear.

"Buddy, I am a member of the 'Purple' gang in Chicago. I have a good buy. Take this 'rod' and give me $8. The cannon is loaded, kid, and ask no questions," said the gangster.

"Judge, I gave him $5 and he left the speakeasy. I thought it a good idea if I followed him and informed the police. As soon as he reached the street I lost him," said Justus.

"Then I entered the West 47th street station and related the facts to Lieut. Edward Moran, who directed that I be searched and the gun was found on me. I was then arrested," concluded the actor.

Magistrate Jesse Silberman in West Side Court heard Justus' story and held him in $500 bail for trial in the Court of Special Sessions.

"Never again," wailed Justus as Detective Francis Murray led him to a cell. He said his home address was 509 Sixth avenue, Las Vegas, N. M.

Annoyance Charge vs. Shrieker Is Dismissed

Yelling that he would not be escorted to an areaway, fearing physical mistreatment, Charles Gang, 53, of 461 West 45th street, was arrested in the Tivoli theatre, 839 8th avenue. His shouts almost created disorder in the theatre. An usher escorted Gang to the lobby where he had been told that the manager wanted to talk to him in connection with annoying a woman patron.

Gang then began to shriek. After much persuasion, Gang became quiet. He was then arrested on the complaint of Jack Kaplan, manager of the Tivoli.

Magistrate Silbermann suspended sentence.

Thought $20 Bills Gag

Dallas, Dec. 23.

One guy couldn't explain to cops why he stood on a busy downtown corner handing out real $20 bills—except that he had three pints on his hip. Had given away $200 before arrested.

Lot of chumps returned the greenbacks, thinking it an advertising gag. Couple of newsboys didn't take any chances and came back three times.

Tia Juana Weekly Social Chronicle Of One Wild Mob

Tia Juana, Mex., Dec. 23.

This wide open town, where thirsty Californias and others just as thirsty come to make hey hey, boasts the only English newspaper printed in Mexico. Sheet, a four-page weekly, printed on pink paper, is, according to its proprietor and editor, William Clay Siver, produced by rounders, for rounders and about rounders.

Tia Juana "Herald" is the only paper in the world that can lay claim to being a house organ for ladies, of leisure, gambling house dealers and barkeeps. Its mission is to keep the Tijuanians informed of the doings, socially and otherwise, of those here who supply the merry makers' demands for wine, women and song.

Divorce Tieup

Another mission of the "Herald" is to make easy divorces easier for Americans who come below the line to rid themselves of unwanted mates. Scattered throughout the paper are ads heralding that the "Herald" can assist in securing marital splits. Working with attorneys here in the divorce mill is part of the editor's income, via commissions.

Most of the other ads in the paper extol the virtue of certain brands of liquor or beer, or the gambling houses, cafes and saloons where the same cheer can be obtained.

When one of the Tia Juana girls falls afoul of the law it's the "Herald" which comes to her rescue. Example is the case of Flo Silverthorn, who gets a front page break this week. Yarn is headed "Second Appeal to Rounders" and asks for contributions to aid in defense of the girl, charged with killing a sailor, describing her as "one of the old timers in the entertainment racket."

Social Notes

Paper's social chatter column deals with the doings of Tia Juana's 400. One reads in the current issue that:

"Phil Kerr, expert slot machine change artist, tumbled off the wagon last week and put on a party at the Old Kentucky Barrell."

"Harry Benbrake undoubtedly enjoyed Thanksgiving more than anyone else in Ti Juana. Harry was still going good at last accounts."

"Fiscal Agent Baldomero Del Prado is keeping his men busy searching for bum liquor."

"Louis Grinstein entertained Jack Dempsey and Jimmy Crofton at the Pal's bar yesterday."

BANDITS' IDEA

Carry "Variety"—Get Your Victims Interested—Rest Is Easy.

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Harrison Carroll of the Los Angeles "Herald" reports that a studio employe went out to rest his car and noticed a man leaning against the garage reading "Variety".

When the studio worker had backed his car from the garage the stranger climbed in, displayed a pistol and ordered his victim to drive to the outskirts of town. Whereupon the bandit relieved the studio worker of his wallet and stepped from the car. Then he handed over the copy of "Variety". "There", he said, "you'll find this interesting".

"Wild Life Exposure" to the Boss Threat New Shake Along Broadway

U. P. AGGRESSIVE STAND FOR NEWS PHOTO LEAD

It is understood that when United Press, through its subsids, the N.E.A. and Acme News Service, acquired the P. and A. Picture Bureau from the "N. Y. Daily News," it was entrenching itself for the supreme fight for leadership with the Associated Press in the news picture gathering field of the world.

P. and A. was one of the three important photo and mat services components in American journalism. Other two belonged one each to the A.P. and the U.P.I. Latter worked through Acme with mats coming through N.E.A.

Shunting of P. and A. to the U.P. automatically has cut a clear boundary between it and Associated Press. With P. and A., the United Press gained affiliation with around 450 additional newspapers who are served by P. and A. Also becoming directly lined up with the Patterson-McCormick group that controls the "N.Y. Daily News" and the "Chicago Tribune" two of the largest daily organs in the U.S. This group also owns "Liberty," weekly magazine.

But of equal moment is what the buy-in means to the New York area, the most important centre from every news angle. Through P. and A. the U.P. gets a closer contact with the New York "Herald Tribune." Steadily climbing, this Reid newspaper is now the closest competitor of the "Times" in this teritory and provides both the "Trib" and the U.P. an in against the "Times" own picture service, the World Wide Bureau.

Latter is admittedly weak in the U.S. but stands pre-eminent in the foreign field where U.P. now also aims to shove Acme and P. and A. wherever possible.

In London U.P. gets its pictures through the "Illustrated News" and it also aims for similar connections or has them, according to info, already in Berlin and Paris.

In the N.Y. afternoon field the U.P. has its own affiliate, the "Telegram."

With both the "News" and the "Herald Trib" in the morning field, the U. P. can well be held to top the picture distribution scheme in the N. Y. area with a combined circulation of the two papers topping any single.

U. P., however, profits in the deal. It is inside that no cash was turned over in the deal and that U. P. merely stepped in to run and take over. P. and A. meets its own losses so far and for the new arrangements pays the Acme and N. E. A. people something like $1,500 a week for running things. This besides $450 which is paid weekly by the "Trib."

Acme will operate from the "News" building from now.

Cops After Self-Appointed Cab Door Openers in Sq.

Traffic cops near Times Square theatres are making a drive on "chiselers" dashing madly about to open the doors of cabs and, in their haste, felling men and women. Complaints have been made by theatre managers and the police have started to arrest the "chiselers," as they call them.

William Burns, 52, former actor, he said, and now jobless, living at 429 West 47th street, was arraigned before Magistrate Silberman on the charge of disorderly conduct. Patrolman Stephen McDonald, of Traffic D, told the court that the jobless actor raced through 42d street and sought to open the door of a cab.

"Judge I am out of work. I was passing and I heard a woman declare that she wished she could get a cab. And I got one for her," stated Burns. Court suspended sentence.

Le Roy Battle, 23, 11 West 115th street, was charged with the same offense. Patrolman George Reynolds stated Battle was a "pest" and annoyed showgirls. Court fined battle $5 or one day. Battle did the bit.

As a result of complaints received by District Attorney Crain's Committee of Fifty which is investigating the many rackets that are being carried on in New York, the workings of a new one along Broadway are being checked up. Already one man has pleaded guilty to his part in it and has been sent to prison.

The new gyp consists of shaking down men who hold responsible positions. The threat is made that if they don't settle a supposed bill the victim is alleged to have run up while drunk in a night club, his employers will be informed of his "wild" night life along Boradway. In many instances the sucker pays rather than endanger his job. According to the police, a group of gyp artists have banded together and have cleaned up handsomely in this game. To avoid "exposure" the victim in many cases has met the demands of the blackmailers.

The first to be sent to jail was Jay Herman, 29, of the Times Square Hotel. On his plea of guilty to attempted grand larceny he was given a term of from one year and three months to two years and six months by Judge William Allen in General Sessions.

Picked Wrong "Chump"

Herman was indicted Nov. 10 on the complaint of Edward J. Crowe, an attorney, living at 1215 Carroll street, Brooklyn. At the time Crowe was connected with a large law firm at 30 Church street. Herman on several occasions demanded Crowe pay a bill of $140 alleged to have been run up by the attorney at the "Office Club" at 156 West 54th street. Crowe had never visited the place. The "Office Club" was destroyed by fire on Oct. 10.

Crowe at first refused to meet Herman's demands and later notified the police. Detectives of the West 47th street station arranged to have Crowe make an appointment with Herman in the lobby of an uptown hotel. When the latter appeared he was handed marked bills by Crowe. As he accepted them he was arrested.

Face Full of Glass in Newlyweds' First Tiff

Maxine Barron, 33, a night club hostess, of 155 West 48th street, was freed in West Side Court by Magistrate Jesse Silberman when arraigned on a charge of throwing a drinking glass at her husband, Kenneth.

The Barrons, only married a short while, held a party in their apartment. Kenneth is a soda jerker and fixed up some orange blossoms for Maxine, he told Patrolman Walter Wirth of the West 47th street station.

After the guests had consumed a few of the orange blossoms, they began to take effect. It was late and the guests had departed. Maxine and Kenneth had words. Maxine stated that Kenneth hurled a table lamp at her, which she dodged. She told the cop that she picked up the drinking glass and tossed it at Kenneth. The latter stopped the glass with his right cheek.

Wirth was summoned and found Maxine ministering to her husband and trying to check the flow of blood. The ambulance surgeon hurried Kenneth to the hospital. Kenneth recovered and when he appeared in court he told Magistrate Silberman it was their first domestic tiff and he forgave Maxine.

Court dismissed the complaint.

Special Cop Pinched as He Demands Slot Machine

Charles King, 42, special officer employed by the Monroe picture theatre on First avenue, was convicted in Special Sessions of impersonating a police officer. He was given a suspended sentence.

According to Mrs. May Bowers, storekeeper, King flashed a special officer's badge on her and threatened her with arrest unless she turned over to him a nickel slot machine. She called a cop and had him arrested.

ERNIE SCHAAF SHADES 'CALIFORNIA SUNSET'

By JACK PULASKI

A lot of people among the fairish crowd at the Garden last Friday did not agree with the decision that gave Ernie Schaaf, of Boston, a win over Max Baer, the highly regarded California heavyweight, but both judges and the referee voted the same way. Some mugg upstairs yelled out three-quarters way through the bout: "Just another California sunset," but Baer was much better than just good looking. He tired after the sixth round. Finishing the tenth strongly and knocking Schaaf off balance twice with hard rights to the map, it looked like the coast boy might score.

Baer can give and take. So can Schaaf, and that's where the trouble was for the invader. Betting was seven to five, favoring the beaneater, and that's the way it turned out. When it was over Bugs' namesake had his left peeper shut tight, with a puffed brow placing it in shadow. The inside of his mouth must have been minced up from the claret he occasionally emitted. Schaaf was plenty banged up too.

The sixth round was the big excitement. It was then that Max landed so hard on Ernie that the Boston blond's knees sagged. To Baer's disconfiture the other guy didn't go down. Schaaf fought back desperately and near the bell Maxie was dazed and hanging on.

Draw Okay, Too

Schaaf had the better of the seventh and eighth rounds, and he damaged the tiring westerner. Ninth was even, and then the final session seemed to be Baer's. There would have been no squawk had the fight been declared a draw. Baer's excellent record punctuated with knockouts was heightened by the fact that he has been quite loquacious since arriving in New York. He is credited with saying he was afraid of nobody and figured Mr. Schaaf would just be a stepping stone. It happens, however, that Schaaf has been coming so strong that he is regarded of championship rating and has never been decisively beaten. If Baer hits as hard as they say he can and really snapped punches on Schaaf's button, then Ernie has a steel jaw. Schaaf can hit and box, as evidenced by his defeats of Tommy Loughran.

Some color to the match was added by the presence of Jack Sharkey in Schaaf's corner. They introduced several pugs and then the crowd called for Jack to take a bow—to applause for a change. Present in the Garden but not noticed was Mickey Walker.

Baer Handsome at Start

Looked as though over-confidence on the part of Baer and his manager was at fault. Schaaf proved too tough an egg for a starting appearance. Baer took punishment when it seemed as though he could have slipped punches—if he knows how. Max is game, taking socks to get in his own brand, but Schaaf hit him too hard. Baer was a handsome fellow but not quite as good-looking at the finish. Just a question how long he can take it on the chin and be himself. Most of the way against Schaaf he was the aggressor, which should have counted in his favor.

Main event was much the best of the card. Audience was loggy until the big fellows started throwing gloves. Semi-final was something of a sloppy socking match between Bob Olin and Joe Banovick. Former won but few cared much.

Big Profit In Raising Fish

By Joe Laurie, Jr.

Almost every actor you meet these days has one question: "What can I do to keep going until show business picks up?"

Just because you are an actor and have been an actor for many years, that doesn't mean to say that you must hang around the offices day in and day out until you get a job at your profession. Why wait around and spend your savings when there are a dozen and one ways of making money?

Do you know that there is a lot of dough in raising fish? You can get the eggs from the government and instead of sitting around your agent's office, why you can go to your farm (or wherever they raise fish) and sit on the fish eggs; it doesn't take more than a month to hatch 'em and you have a nice mess of fish for the market besides having plenty for your own table.

There is practically no overhead in this racket. All you need is plain water and you can keep the fish around the house in old scenery trunks, or you may be lucky enough to know some diving act that is laying off who will loan you their tank. I really don't know what particular brand of fish one should raise, but I imagine that smelts would be easy to set on and also easy to handle. And the beauty of raising fish is that you only have to come to town on Fridays.

You can carry them in a bass fiddle crate, make the usual rounds of the offices and they will think you are taking music lessons. And if you should meet an agent that looks like he can get you three days, just stick your hand in the crate and throw him a fish. Or better still, throw him a fin (not a fish fin) you'll be surprised what a fin can do with an agent these days.

Inexpensive Muffs.

Besides the fish-hatching business there are other things you can do to keep the theatrical wolf from the door. Did you ever stop to think that ear muffs can be made from the tops of cold cream cans? Just dent the lids with holes and tie on the ears with shoe laces. Ear muffs are now almost a necessity, especially when your agent tells you the salary they are offering you. One can also take old contracts, notices and collect wires and make chest protectors. And speaking of chest protectors, if you are lucky enough to own one of the old-time woolen ones, don't throw it away. You'd be surprised what good eating a chest protector nicely cooked with mushrooms makes.

In one of the musical comedy shows now in rehearsal the manager looked over the chorus boys that were on line waiting to be picked. He finally selected a tall, lean, anemic looking fellow and asked him would he like to have his picture taken with Mayor Walker, and the manager would also pay him $3 for his trouble. Well, here was a chance for him to stand in good with the manager, get publicity, get his picture taken with the Mayor and make three bucks to the bargain. The press agent of the show took the boy down to the City Hall where the news photographers snapped the picture. The next day the tall, lean, lanky, anemic looking guy was surprised to see his picture in the papers, there he was shaking hands with the Mayor and the caption read "The Spirit of Tuberculosis".

Just to show you how tough things are, I was in the post office

Jack Malloy, Jr., now city editor of Hearst's Boston "American," scooped the New York papers as well as his local opposish on being the first to break the story on the marriage of John J. Raskob, Jr., son of the millionaire, to a stenographer. Malloy was formerly in N. Y. on "The World."

Uncommon Chatter

By Ruth Morris

Bishop's Row SRO

Whatever the general opinion of the polite throwing-out-of-court of the Lindsey-Manning dispute, there was one person perfectly furious that Ben Lindsey was not horse-whipped for daring to raise his voice in the solemn hush of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

A brown-skinned gel from up Harlem way, who had put on her best sealskin and blue bonnet in the hope of seeing a bishop's triumph, left the courtroom in a rage. All the way down two flights of stairs and out into the street she voiced indignation, crusading paradoxically against free speech, brandishing a belligerent fist in the faces of innocent passers-by.

When a bishop of the Episcopal Church gets involved in legal difficulties, court rooms can hang out SRO signs. The third floor court at 300 Mulberry street, played to capacity business on Wednesday afternoon. The usual gathering of curiosity seekers was augmented by parishioners who thronged to see justice done, and by fussy old gentlemen, in dignified vestry garb, eagerly identifying themselves as witnesses.

Handling of newspapermen was complicated by attendance of sobbies, fluttering in and out, jotting down that Dr. Eliot, of Grace Church, wears a pink rose in the lapel of his clerical suit, that Mr. Tuttle has beautiful blond hair, that Judge Dreyer is a benign dear who tones up black robes with a lavender shirt and brown tie, and that Ben Lindsey, charged with "disorderly conduct" has an unexpectedly mild look for a Peck's Bad Boy.

Unfailing Colman

Ronald Colman is one leading man who never lets admirers down. In all his pictures he is true to type, a chatty, twinkling-eyed gay dog, a charming unvirtuous man-about-town, and an awfully good sort.

In "Devil to Pay," Frederick Lonsdale has written Colman a part that treads on dangerous territory. As the genial black sheep of a titled family that sips its tea in correct Grosvernor Square, the hero is just a bit too smug, taking his fun with a smart-alec flourish that smacks of William Haines. As Mr. Lonsdale himself might remark, it's a bit thick, but the Colman charm manages to fill up unpleasant crevices and produce a characterization that is smooth and gay.

In the manner popular with English dramatists, Mr. Lonsdale provides his leading man with scene in which he confides in a Cockney taxi-driver, and—since there is no old family servant hovering about—a loyable Sealyham terrier. The scene in the dog shop is cagily designed to draw audience sympathy. Any actor whose departure from a kennel could be so convincingly lamented by one of its occupants, must be a very nice fellow indeed.

The film does much better by its male Britishers than by its women, who fail at attempts to reproduce the clipped speech of West End London. Try as she may, Loretta Young cannot rid her diction of rolling American r's. She works too hard at being a smiling, healthy Mayfair product. Myrna Loy more closely approximates a blonde of the English Music Halls.

The English background is faultless, accurately reproducing the quiet taste of English homes, and the sights and sounds of Piccadilly and "the other side" of the Derby.

Standardized "Passion"

The Capitol solves the women and children problem this week by devising its stage show for the kidlets, particularly for little girls, and giving the mamas a picture made just for them.

A bamboo pavilion in the jungle shelters the stage band, dressed like Britishers in Africa. A corps of dancing lions, really girls wearing lions' heads, execute nimble steps to please the young. Acrobats and the Jack Randall sextette of adagio dancers tossing girls hither and yon amaze them. Little ones aren't old enough to recognize the age of the comics' gags, nor mind a big husky guy's singing about brooklets and Kentucky, bidding the world good morning.

Girl children may look at the beautiful ladies all dressed in black, gold and red feathers, and wish they had some feathers too. They won't notice when the curtains close on a rather bewildered finale. The people on the stage must stop some time. It would be too glorious to be true if they'd go on forever.

For Family Trade

"Passion Flower" describes the feature neatly. A "Ladies Home Journal" sort of heady love story, with a virtuous "Ladies Home Journal" finish. The good, hard working wife gets her husband back, and the selfish siren is left with nothing but desolation in prospect. Charles Bickford is the rugged fellow, first a chauffeur and then a stevedore, over whose lure two ladies fight. Ponderous, with no sense of humor to make his allure believable, he stalks through the picture grunting husky masculine sounds. Kay Johnson plays the girl who give up all to marry her father's chauffeur, like the good princess.

Her patience when children invade her love nest and her husband loses his job and she becomes a domestic drudge is saintly. Certainly her cheery acceptance of her lot isn't human. Always smiling, forever with a basket of sewing by her side, no wonder her man dashed to something more tempestuous first chance he got. Kay Francis wanted him. Heaven knows why, but she should have been sorry afterwards. She looks very dangerous in her new long bob coiffure and white organdie dresses designed subtly to hold more madness than silk. Story is daring only once, when it has the poor but honest man failing to get ahead in this world, hinting that hard work and brawn has its limitations.

Hollywood's Gift

A former picture star, absent from the screen for many years, has made a terrific comeback. Jackie Coogan, who must be all of 15 years old now, is a Tom Sawyer who might have stepped right off the pages of Mark Twain's classic. He is not only a sweet, unaffected kid, but a sincere and eager little actor. Ir. a film rich with human sympathy and inspired direction.

"Tom Sawyer" cannot be criticised in any detail; it is a flawless gem, screening the lore of childhood in which it is an insult to be called "Dude," and lowest ignominy to wear a brand new suit to school. The child-actors are perfect without exception. Mitzi Green is giving a smart performance as a prissy little girl whose blond hair winds into horrible corkscrew curls and who is constantly arranging the ruffles of fussy dimity frocks.

One of the most valuable contributors to the flavor of the film is Clara Blandick, an Aunt Polly who rules her roost with benevolent tyranny. The final sequence finds her, touched by unsuspected devotion on Tom's part, intoning "Rock of Ages" with heart-breaking religious fervor.

Par's Xmas Show

Picture houses have their own ways of celebrating Christmas joys. At the Paramount Jesse Crawford's Console is the introductory link to holiday fetes. This Yuletide it rises beneath a bower of poinsettias, contriving a Christmas card decoration against their own green leaves and the white of the organ.

The unit, "The Antique Shop," has several jokes old enough to be on sale, but is otherwise a gay and colorful assemblage of vaudeville turns. Mario Duval is a well-gowned comedy foil for Sid Marion and has a high soprano as pleasing as any heard at the Paramount. The tossed-about member of an adagio quartette performs with an abandon that menaces life and limb at every turn and bespeaks great confidence in her partners.

Leo Reisman's is a cagey presentation, arriving with soft tone and dim lighting and increasing to a blaze of brilliance and tone. The conductor follows its pace. He starts like some strange Mephisto obtaining music with magic gestures and finishes with an exhibition of musical rage that is pretty violent but, judging from applause, good picture-house.

"Royal Family" Grand Romp

Celebrity had to do its shining outside the Rivoli theatre Monday night, where a strip of red carpet led the way into a dimly lighted picture house for the premiere of "The Royal Family." Famous faces were obscured by semi-darkness. Even ushers were no respecters of persons, finding wrong seats for the great and near-great with genial indiscrimination. Only ermine coats, in generous numbers, projected their importance through gloom brightened every so often by the rays of sidewalk flash lights.

The grand play about the beautifully crazy Cavendishes, who take life with dramatic exits and entrances, has been sympathetically transported to the screen, providing Ina Claire with a part that must be dear to every actress's heart. Julie has about her all the glamor of the theatre from which she cannot escape no matter how much she longs for the peace of a quiet home in the country. Miss Claire handles the part with subtlety and rich understanding. The Haldee Wright role, which was as much as anything responsible for the success of the original play, has fallen into the hands of a fine trouper, Henrietta Crosman, who plays with convincingly grand gesture.

Miss Claire's gowns, based on period styles, have about them a lingering quality of great stage roles. A Venetian tea gown seems the right drawing room robe for a Juliet who has made theatrical history, as does Lanvin's much-worn cloth of gold evening gown. Street costumes, drawing their flavor from the '90's, are just a bit too quaint, but distinctive. Miss Claire has been daring with her choice of hats, shallow-crowned, unflattering little things that would look silly but for their suggestion of ultra-chic.

Everyone scores in "The Royal Family," but it's Freddie March's picture. His is an obvious, but very amusing, impersonation of a famous stage celebrity and he must have had a swell romp doing it.

Bushman's Shy Vaud. Manner

Francis X. Bushman, Jr., may be six feet and one of the screen's he-men, but he is intimidated by vaudeville audiences. During his personal appearance at the 58th Street, he is ill at ease showing the audience the convenience of carrying a picture-double into real life. On Monday afternoon, when a bungling stage hand pulled the wrong curtain on the final blackout, Mr. Bushman disappeared and never did return to give the ladies one last look at his handsome face and broad shoulders.

Sylvia and Harriet Darling succeed in varying the routine of the usual harmonizing sister-team. As Quaker girls, prettily gowned in pink and grey satin, they linger over a snappy novel, and return in tulle dancing frocks to sing of the hardships of being twins. After dances finishes polite and acceptable entertainment.

"Carnival of Venice" is a hybrid production that combines "The Spirit of Mardi Gras" with regulation and tap specialties. Consequently the act has no definite flavor. A tambourine specialty, done with finesse by Mme. Donatella, is the one real excuse for the act's name, but that too loses its charm by being accompanied by strictly American tunes.

The Low Down

Real names of authors:

Quex, author of "Pushed," is George Herbert Fosdike Nichols. May Yonge McNeer who with Lynd Kendall Ward authored "Stop Tim!" is Mrs. Ward. And the naughty Ovid, whose "The Love Books of Ovid" is out again, was Publius Ovidius Naso.

The Femme Angle

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Actress starred in production of a theatrical family story and allowed to sit in on story conferences when the adaptation was being wrestled with, protested at her story daughter being made a mother.

In the conference she based her kick on the fact that four generations on the screen would slow up the story.

Outside, she put her arm around the adaptor and whispered, "I'll be a grandmother! In a pig's eye!"

Going Places

By Cecelia Ager

Ladies' Ring Awards

If anyone should ask the ladies at the fights Friday night, Max Baer was the winner, not Ernie Schaaf. Long legged heavyweights with good square shoulders and slim hips, whose hair is black and curly at the same time, win even if they are knocked out, so far as the ladies are concerned.

Maxie wore a beautiful blue robe lined with gold that had a lovely golden bear on the back with "Max" scrawled in blue across it. Ernie's robe was plain maroon lined with white, no whit as fetching as Maxie's. It was so sweet of Maxie to pat Ernie on the back reassuringly at the end of each round. He even kept it up when he was licked, dear lad.

Pity his eye got all puffy toward the end, and he looked so pale. He tried so hard in the last round to act like the confident fellow he was in the first. The judges really should have taken that into consideration instead of being so relentless. It wasn't nice of them at all to disappoint him, after he'd gone to all the trouble of getting himself up so nicely.

Fully Clothed Allure

At the Palace this week nothing very much happens. Acts come on and off, but none of them endear themselves enough to the audience to be askod to stay a while. Frisco's there to tie the bill together, but Frisco never was much of a flag-waver.

Rosita, of Rosita and Ramon, demonstrates once more the superiority of the feminine Spanish attack. Clothed in sombre colors, unsmiling and disinterested, she makes herself insidiously seductive. When by chance her long, gracefully cut skirts flick up for a moment, legs have a meaning. All the nakedness of the Pearl twins in Tom Patricola's act is futile by comparison. It's fun to see how much alike twins can look and yet one is always prettier. They manifest a great willingness to dance and too much willingness to sing. However, they are young and well set up and maybe they will learn to wear more clothes from Rosita.

Nan Halperin's costume changes prove expert knowledge of what bowls 'em over on the vaudeville stage. As Scarlet Sister Sadie, a trifin' high yaller who got that way through the perfidy of a Harlem sheik, she wriggles in black cire satin and red hat and shoes. Lulu Belle never did better.

Smoldering Beauty

Tamara sings some throaty Spanish songs for a charming interlude. She knows how to make up her eyes, that girl. None of that bright blue or green eye shadow that most women put on when they're trying to look interesting. Just some warm red-brown, shaded out to her eyebrows; her hair brushed softly off her face and lip rouge that follows the shape of her mouth, not stooping to cupid's bows. Result, fascination that promises intensity. Sort of smouldering effect, done quietly and simply.

Frisco's devastating satire on Helen Morgan shows the boy understands women all right. No ordinary comic could see through the mannerisms of the tear-choked Miss Morgan. Instead of feeling sorry for her like he ought to, he shows her up. Is that fair on the part of a funny man?

Femme Angle All Wrong

There are two ways of telling a crook picture. One, the men never take off their hats, and the other, the villains are so much more attractive than the heroes. In "The Widow From Chicago" at the Strand, Edward G. Robinson is the gangster Dominic, mean, ugly, fascinating. Neil Hamilton plays "Swifty" Dorgan, a lad with crooked tendencies wavering toward going straight. But Dominic doesn't waver. He's hard all the way through. Hard to get, hard to beat, always one jump ahead of the hero. That's the kind of a guy to make a love interest believable, not a namby pamby Rover Boy.

It's a darned shame when right triumphs in the end and Dominic is betrayed to the cops. Alice White as the revengeful sister of a murdered detective is perhaps only doing her duty. How she could choose "Swifty" after she had such a hard time landing Dominic is difficult to understand.

Girls Like 'Em Tough

"Swifty" tumbled for her immediately. A girl shouldn't bother with anyone in the bag so easily. The fellows who hold out and act as if they mean it are the ones to hold a gal's interest. Aside from this error in feminine psychology, "The Widow From Chicago" is almost exciting.

Robinson makes it important. He has the authority and the ruthlessness necessary for a picture audience's conception of a gang leader. The rest of the cast are uncertain, maybe because of uncertain direction. Story is good, sustaining interest with the first rate help of Robinson, even though it is badly put together.

Miss White contributes a good pair of legs and skin-tight dresses. When she turns out to be a nice girl working hand in hand with the police instead of the yellow haired gangster's moll she was pretending to be, nobody is the least bit surprised. A girl who hesitates so daintily before saying tough words couldn't be anything but a lady. Big brown eyes that can open so widely conceal nothing, not even guile. Why, the audience was right about her from the very beginning, although the ladies were a little annoyed with her for letting a swell man like Dominic down.

French Girl Gamble Blah

The French solve the woman problem quite simply. In "Sous les Toits de Paris," a French talking picture at the Little Carnegie, dice are thrown to decide who keeps the girl. Not an excited roll of the bones either. Merely a leisurely throw, as befits the importance of the question. Pretty girls happen along often in the lives of Parisian tenement inhabitants, so there's no need to go all to pieces over the current young lady. A worthy attitude that eliminates chest heaving and emotional clutches and allows the story to unreel placidly and convincingly.

No knowledge of French is necessary to understand this mild little film. Mostly pantomime anyway. Roses crushed underfoot to indicate feminine surrender, and mice to show desolation. It's rather pleasant, meeting these old friends again gone Parisian. So they've been hiding out in France all these years. Well, well. A Griffith story, too, with a big brute of a villain and a frail little hero and a fight. And all over a girl who doesn't mind much who gets her just so she has a place to sleep.

Timid Spice

An abbreviated version of "Pinafore" does two-fold service for this week's Roxy program. It is a nice item for any Gilbert and Sullivan lover. Serves also the groups of youngsters let out of schools for the holidays. Never let it be said that Roxy's didn't do its share in passing on the spirited and gay melodies to the next generation.

It is also a good introduction for "The Middle Watch," British film, which relates farcical over-night events aboard the H. M. S. Falcon, stationed off Shanghai. The title shot flashes on scrim closing out the colorful tableau, as the Roxy chorus and orchestra intone the joy of being an Englishman so lustily that the audience is led to believe that there may, after all, be some good in a English film release.

"The Middle Watch" takes mincing steps instead of rushing through a silly sequence of events involving the unofficial over-night presence aboard a battleship of two perfectly respectable ladies. Dialog and the guilty actions of Owen Nares strive to make the situation piquant, but it's quite as circumspect as a strawberry festival—and just a shade more amusing in spite of several good performances.

Jacqueline Logan plays one of the ladies, an American girl, written from a strictly British viewpoint. Her every other word is a would-be American colloquialism, punctuated with "atta boys" and "honey-pops." To make it worse, Miss Logan is of the ingenue school, given to resting her chin on her shoulder, port side, and ogling around to windward. Dodo Watts plays the same part she created in the original Broadway play, and Muriel Abud, as a useless chaperone, is a priceless original of the shabby gentile types Bee Willie portrays.

The Parisian Front

By Christine

Paris, Dec. 14.

"Paramount on Parade" came to Paris this week and it's the most scared picture you ever saw. Fifty thousand huddles must have studied that strip of film when it came from America, so that it could be dished up to the French public completely disguised in French sauce. Now it's all sauce and no meat.

Every timid shot of American art with American artists has a prelude and an aftermath of French art with French artists. St. Granier prefaces Clara Bow's appearance dressed up as a sailor who enthusiastically spells out her name with another French sailor. Even Chevalier introduces his Franco-American appearance by explaining what America is like to a couple of concierges, and finally assures them that, in spite of liking America, he hasn't forgotten his French nor his loyalty to Paris. Any English left in the picture is quickly subtitled in French, and an acute and detailed explanation is given beforehand. The only thing left intact is the dance chorus, which is superb in technicality and snap, but whose routines are certainly not stirringly original. A funny thing these revues that try so hard to be international, and that so far have simply wound up by being merely a tortuous lesson in diplomacy to the producers but pretty meaningless to the spectators.

Meanwhile, a picture like "All Quiet on the Western Front," made in Hollywood, comes over to France gets adequately subtitled without any attempt to be a diplomatic talker and is applauded at its finish. That's an unfair comparison, of course, because one picture was born great and the other is just a hash, but it helps point out that you can still say a lot without making a heap of furious sound about it. Besides, the neighborhood playhouses in France are still crowded with audiences who seem to like foreign made pictures without the talker attached, or a "galaxy" of stars either.

Scribes on a Spree

The Anglo-American newspapermen went on what is known in England as a bit of a bust this week and all the American acts got a lot of publicity at the same time. Women are supposed to be as welcome to this affair as they would be to a Trappist monastery. However, these bright journalists solved the problem by deciding that since after the dinner they must relax and be entertained the entertainment should be provided chiefly by women. The femme specialists are therefore searched for far and wide the minute the date for the dinner is set, and this year the results were brilliant. The program of entertainers was four times as long as the dinner menu, and not a cent paid out, artistically speaking.

Thelma Edwards did her Oriental number around 1 in the morning. Drena Beach followed with her sensational waltz, and by the applause that finished her off one realized how scarce blondes are in France. Florence Starr sang and murmurs of admiration completely drowned out her song. Harry Pilcer did his most charming darndest to get that bunch of vague Americans and English to join in a French song and distributed copies of the song to all the boys. He should have done his waltz instead, because no newspaper man could look at a lot of French verses at 2 in the morning with anything but a dazed unwilling stare. Nevertheless, it was valiant of Harry to attempt it at least.

Reggie Voorhees tried out his ballroom act with his new partner, Jean Edwards, and Wilson and Root did theirs around dawn, when a waltz or a tango looks so complicated to a news searcher. When the nude dancer Colette Andris came on perfectly static in a Venetian gondola (in the Lido swimming pool) the crowd surged to the front, but there was no applause. Nothing daunted, the lady draped herself, or rather carried a veil, and writhed around in the boxing ring on the other side of the room—where Jeff Dixson's boys knocked each other about earlier in the evening—but here still was no rave from the audience. Too tired, perhaps, or too well brought up.

There was exactly one woman journalist who got herself admitted, and that was Variety's sob sister. The party broke up around 6 with the American acts still drinking tea and eating cold meat, and the American newspapermen no longer even able to take means and addresses.

Society Shows Cold

Just to prove how low swank French society has fallen through the general economic depression, soirees with paid performers are completely washed up this year. Chief Os-ka-wan, who gave his concert through the negotiations of Argentina's manager, last week remarked with a sad Indian eye that when he was here a year ago at this time he already had sixteen offers to dance in the soirees of the rich.

This season so far not one opportunity has come up, although his concert of virile American Indian interpretations was well received. That's a nasty situation for an artist who has grown out of revues and cabarets and whose pride will let him accept nothing less than a whole concert or a whole soiree.

Some French journalist went out to Paramount the other day and came back in a complete burn-up at what they are doing out at those studois. "Americanization," said he, "entire Americanization" (he was talking to a collection of American club women), "they are making machines of the actors; that is what they are doing. They turn out a picture in seven languages, but the Italian must make love in exactly the same way as the German or Frenchman or Swede, just because the set is the same. And the set is what an American thinks it should be in any one of those countries, and he is making the actor—no matter what nationality—make love in the way an American thinks it should be made."

In other words, just exactly what he said to begin with "Americanization by Paramount." But, after all, he was only a man, even if he was also a professor—and any woman, if she has any sense at all, knows that the background has nothing to do with it. An Italian does not make love like an American, even if he is only an actor, nor a Swede, nor a German, nor a Frenchman. The professor has stuck too close to his books, and one little movie love scene has upset him and caused him to generalize.

Harriett Lake, of the new Laurence Schwab show, is the daughter of one of California's vocal teachers....there are a million gags around again this Xmas about the depression....

RITZY

Leon Gordon is in Hollywood writing dialog for Fox, after several years in Australia. His name was Lillie, and his father was well known in the English music halls with an act, "Drummed Out." Gordon became leading man with Henry Jewett's stock company in Boston.

Ten years ago he reached Broadway, acting in various shows and authoring several flops, including "Watch Your Neighbor," "Blue Eyes," "The Poppy God" and "Garden of Weeds," in collaboration with Le Roy Clemens. Financial difficulties arose. Then, announced as author of "White Cargo," a big hit, charges of plagiarism created further trouble. A. E. Anson, actor, secured a judgment against Gordon. The actor is not be confused with Leon Gordon, artist, who painted portraits of Gloria Swanson, Claire Windsor, Colleen Moore, Peggy Wood, Winfield Sheehan and Mayor James J. Walker.

General Douglas MacArthur, the nation's youngest major-general, was recently proclaimed Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army. Son of the late Lieut.-Gen. Arthur MacArthur, he was divorced by Louise Cromwell. This lady, rich and fashionable, previously divorced Walter Brooks, Jr., and finally married Lionel Atwell, actor.

To add to the complications, she has a son and daughter by Brooks, he having since married Marian Rice. Atwell was first divorced by Phyllis Ralph, actress, mother of his son, John Atwell, and later divorced Elsie Mackay, actress, who eloped with Max Montesole, actor.

After years of retirement, Dorothy Dorr, long well known on the stage, returns in "Philip Goes Forth," by George Kelly. Born in Boston and educated at Wellesley College, she first acted in Chicago in 1886, and in New York, at the 5th Avenue theatre, a year later in "The Golden Giant."

In 1889 she was in "Shenandoah," along with Effie Shannon. In 1909 she was at the Harvard Stadium in "Joan of Arc," with Maude Adams.

Van Vechten's New Novel

Although critics agreed that "Parties," Carl Van Vechten's latest novel, is inferior to its predecessors, the book has had big sales. Carl was one of the "discoverers" of Harlem, and has many friends there. He married Fania Marinoff, born in Russia, but brought up here. She started acting when eight.

In 1900 she toured with Henrietta Crosman, in 1903 with Margaret Illington and in 1904 with Cissie Loftus. In 1927 she inherited a fortune from Carl's brother, Ralph Van Vechten, Chicago banker, and in 1925 she and Carl both inherited

No Use, Girls, Hollywood Freezes Up If You Try to Crash an Orgy

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Some girls who used to try living in Greenwich Village garrets now want to learn about life in Hollywood apartments. Femmes with independent incomes who want to see life away from home protection are counting on Hollywood to show them how. They believe what they have heard and read about the film colony's gaiety.

These moths want to be disillusioned. They are, but not in the way they expect.

For instance, it doesn't give them a thrill to find that the sleek-looking foreigner across the hall works in the drug store and is trying to get into pictures himself. Or that the big picture exec they know is only a second assistant director.

Hollywood apartments are filled with this type of femme. They come here hoping the worst will happen. But when their big chance comes, which isn't often in this Hays and church ruled town, they back down. They are moths with asbestos vests.

The plan of these girls when they first come here is to meet the kind of guys they can write home about. A nod from Navarro or a peep at Chevalier furnishes enough news for eight pages. Even standing next to Bull Montana in the drug store is worth four pages.

They don't know how to meet the higher ups. If through great luck they get an invite to a private party at which prominent film people are present they don't get a single page for a hot diary. The stars, directors and others steer clear of outsiders. These outsiders have a habit of asking favors.

Some men won't even put an arm around their wives when outsiders are around, for fear of being misunderstood. The outsiders don't know it, but they dampen any "wildness" which might have materialized.

Some of these girls have only a few weeks in which to learn about life, while others stay on indefinitely. The latter may eventually be taken into inner circle, but chances are against it. Some girls have been trying for years to become of the gang, but never clicked.

Near the Pacific

By Grace Green

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

At the party given by Jack Dempsey at his home to the publisher, Capt. Billy Fawcett and his wife, Jack, in the absence of Estelle Taylor (who was east attending the funeral of her grandfather) officiated as host perfectly. Before leaving, Miss Taylor had wrapped 200 Christmas gifts from 9 in the morning until 8 at night and judging from the beautifully tied and decorated boxes there are many lucky people in Hollywood.

Among the guests, Lupe Velez, whose imitations of Gloria Swanson, Dolores Del Rio and Greta Garbo are marvelous, confided sotto voce to three weaklesses, No. 1 was her Garee Cooper, two, diamonds, three, furs, Lupe was genuinely thrilled when she found the 12 karet diamond lost from Annette Fawcett's ring. Lupe wore a bright red dress and hat which is a perfect color for her vivacious, spitfire personality.

One would imagine that in Hollywood, the home of the stars, people accustomed to seeing them would pass them by more or less unnoticed, but the Dempsey party caused quite a furore on their entrance to the Blossom room of the Roosevelt hotel.

Incidentally, Jack is one of the world's shyest dancers. And not bad either. But so terribly modest and timid and apologetic in advance for his danceology that it's almost embarrassing mutually.

Stars Local Spree

Recommended for excitement and thrills are wrestling matches. We saw our first one at the Olympic stadium when Don George wrestled the championship title from Gus Sonnenberg and it's surprising how a talker star is able to keep his voice in condition to register on the screen after one of these wild yelling bouts. No doctor is necessary to tell Jack Oakie his lungs are in A-1 condition. Nor would one be required for Lilyan Tashman, Helen Twelvetrees or Edmund Lowe, all of whom rose lustily to their feet.

Miss Twelvetrees who made a hit in "Her Man," looked especially cute in a ducky brown felt hat and a brown fur coat.

It is difficult to imagine why A. A. Milne who wrote "Michael and Mary," which was at the El Capitan, wanted the male titular played with as much saccharine pollyannishness as evidenced by Henry Duffy.

Dale Winter was charming and gave a good performance as Mary. Especially becoming was her long black satin dress with the vestee and cuffs in white lace. The pearl earrings and necklace added a dignified touch.

Luncheon Spot

The Embassy seems to be the daily luncheon spot for Evelyn Brent. Usually she is smartly clothed, but not so in the ordinary black ensemble she appeared in a day or two ago. Ruby Keeler Jolson looked cute in a brown velvet, fur trimmed suit and a matching toque.

Carmel Meyers' purple flowered dress and short beaver jackette was worn with a knobby purple felt hat.

Also there was William Powell and Carol Lombard whose blonde beauty was enhanced by a chic black hat.

FASHION DECREES BE BROKE BUT GAY MOOD

At the present time it is stylish to be poverty stricken and smart to be unemployed. The American public has gotten used to fads and must have them. The business depression has become a fad—a sort of mutual and general excitement in which everyone can participate, somewhat similar to the wartime spirit.

Anyone who has no financial worries is out of the swim. Anyone who has a job gets little attention. To be out of work or on the verge of bankruptcy is the thing.

"Keeping up with the Joneses" is now tried from a new angle. People who used to pretend they had more than they had now pretend they have less than they have. It is fashionable for ladies to go to bridge parties, where they announce that they simply don't know where the taxes are coming from, and then play contract for half a cent, and pay, too.

Women who have always scorned to be anything but extravagant and who really don't have to economize now, wear cheap dresses and boast about it. And poorer people who never had any money to lose anyway, and who are not any worse off than usual, pretend to have suffered losses.

There are also many people who never dared air their shaky financial condition in former days who now, taking advantage of the fashionable opportunity, are blowing off steam and owning up to the real state of their affairs for the first time.

Though much of the poverty-stricken talk is the bunk, or at least overexaggerated talk of the moment, the general "everyone's broke" attitude has done a good deal to relieve the real mental anxiety of people who have been severely hit. Even to be fooled into thinking that everyone is in the same boat does them a lot of good.

PEDDLERS' $2,250

Dallas, Dec. 23.

R-K-O's 200 theat peddlers here netted 5,000 tickets, the first week at 60 cents. Hiking gross $2,250, with peddlers getting $750 commish.

Tickets were sold for Majestic, ace stand, and house doing good biz besides the charity boost.

Merry Christmas.

50 YEARS AGO

(From Clipper)

Sarah Bernhardt's engagement in New York came to an end with a gala performance and she departed for Boston. New York stay had scarcely evoked the expected enthusiasm and critical estimate of the French star was moderate. It was noted that the boxes were tenantless at the final performance. However, Boston was aflame with interest for her advent.

Reported that King Louis of Bavaria had summoned Richard Wagner to advise on the musical arrangements of a theatre to be built in his new $10,000,000 palace. One of the buildings was to be a large hotel for the exclusive use of players performing at the theatre.

Although the player piano had not been invented and there was no radio or talking machine, the oldest piano manufacturers in New York, Dunham & Co., failed for $50,000.

Al G. Fields was engaged as principal clown for the third season with the Miles Orton Circus and Menagerie.

"Clipper's" baseball expert discusses the year in fielding, observing that the tour had shown great progress in field team work, with players showing more disposition to back up positions. Co-operation, the article says, is sadly needed in the batsmen who were too anxious for individual showing, to give teamwork.

Baseball league convention amended its by-laws making it ground for expulsion for a club to play a league game on Sunday. Same rule applied to individual players. Umpires were brought under control of the league for the first time being subjected to same discipline as players. Al Spaulding and George Wright attended the convention lobbying for privilege of selling official baseballs.

15 YEARS AGO

(From Variety and Clipper)

The Victoria Palace, London, operated by Alfred Butt, turned in a net profit for the fiscal year (most of it war time) of $224,000. This was during the period when the British theatre in general was starving.

British Government gave out the intimation that subjects who remained in foreign countries, ignoring the draft, would be dealt with severely whenever they returned to the government's jurisdiction. Edict taken as pointed toward many English actors in the States.

Chicago enacted a new ordinance to regulate ticket speculators. It made the theatre management responsible for sidewalk gyps and set up penalties.

Picture producers and exhibitors raised a loud squawk against certain newspapers which sponsored war pictures, and then advertised them in a way to blanket all the paid-for advertisements of the regular trade. New York offenders were "American" and "World."

A group of the biggest exhibitors in America agitated a scheme to organize on a country-wide basis. Idea was to pool capital and distribute picked films from exchanges in 20 zones. Among the subscribers were Jules Mastbaum, Mitchell Mark and the Kunskys.

Tully Marshall, one of the most successful character men in the legitimate ranks, deserted the stage in favor of pictures.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

The old Harlem Opera House on 125th street, gutted by fire Monday morning when piles of old and new scenery stored in the old place, became ignited, recalls many memories to vaudevillians.

Booked by Larry Goldie in the Keith office years back, it was a gold mine. Eight acts of high class vaude was the fare before the day of headlining pictures. Many stars of today had their baptism of razzberries from the gang of tough birds that infested the gallery.

Bob O'Donnell, now a division manager for Publix, was formerly house manager at the H. O. H. It was O'Donnell's break-in spot as a manager. After O'Donnell came Sol LeVoy, now an R-K-O manager. Later came changes that made the house strictly a "showing" stand.

Acts got the usual $62.50 to let Goldie and later, Mark Murphy, take a peek. Many an act was "made" at the place and many couldn't take the razzberries. If the mob up there liked you, it was all roses. But if they took a dislike, curtains.

The place finally lost it's appeal with vaude, was dropped by the Keith people, stood idle for a while, became a picture house and then went burlesque. Lately it has just been a storage place for old scenery, new scenery and props and many old trunks, left there by outsiders, transfer people and others.

Acts are starting to burn up at the so-called "stool pigeon" system some of the picture house circuits are using. In many ways it resembles the practice which did much to help undermine the morale on the old Keith circuit.

Nowdays it's generally one of the girls in the dancing troupes who writes into the home office as to what's going on. No dirt. She's just been appointed under cover to keep in touch and for a dollar or two extra she sends in reports on discrepancies. And back will come a letter from headquarters to some performer on the order of, "It has come to our attention that you went through your routine in the third show Tuesday chewing gum. Unless, etc."

Acts complain that house managers should be able to rectify routine faults in the stage work. As it stands most of the performers know someone is carrying tales, it leads to grouches, and if they find out who it is the life of that party is made miserable.

Acts with Fanchon & Marco units in future will not receive any billing in trailers.

Due to frequent changes in casts, and cost of revised trailers, only the unit title will be designated.

Fox removed its stage bands from the Academy and Audubon, New York, Saturday (20), switching the stage shows from the presentation style to that of vaude.

it on Broadway was in the Gaiety marquee, bulbs describing "Devil to Pay" (UA) as "gay nonsense" and "polite improprieties." These are new phrasings for Broadway lights.

Fox, which bought Robert Newman's "Bad Girl," is reported as paying around $50,000 for the screen rights. Newman is said to have turned down a greater amount earlier in the play's run.

Picture bunch around New York deem it excellent screen fare with the story strictly concerning and aimed at the average film fan. Besides which there's the title—if they can use it since the new Hays ruling.

Juan Martinez Pas, Spaniard, realized his non-Italian name wouldn't give him a chance to crash the Metropolitan Grand Opera, so he changed his handle to "Giovano Martino" and passed off as an Italian.

Now in Hollywood, he has come to the conclusion that a Spaniard has a better chance in the multis than an Italian and so has gone back to his original moniker. He's playing in Spanish editions.

National Theatre Supply Co., Harley Clarke's company, is now purchasing everything for Fox West Coast Theatres. Circuit, itself, has dispensed with its purchasing agent and any such purchasing dept. is guided strictly by the eastern company.

The Nat. Theatre Supply looks to FWC as a source of profit, like any other customer, regardless of the same parent heads.

On the efficiency and economy count alone, WB and FN lots will not go in for the idea of having staff writers doing dialog treatments or scenarios in competition with one another.

That seems to be a policy on some lots, in line with the old theme song idea of having a flock of writers turn out ditties for the same picture, with the studios picking the best and scrapping the rest.

Release of Morgan Walsh, for the past several years manager of Warner Bros. San Francisco exchange, through consolidation of Warner and First National, raised a storm of protest from about 60 indie exhibs in that territory.

Upon learning of Walsh's going the exhibs signed a round robin wire of protest to the Warner New York office, but Walsh is out regardless.

As a press gag for Jean Harlow, Warren Nolan, U. A., started a contest for a nickname for the femme star, winner to get $100. Some of the names are pips.

"The Darling Cyclone," "Blonde Sunshine," "Joy Girl," "White Flame," "Passion Girl," "Gentlemen's Weakness," "Lady Divine" and "Birth of Dawn" gives the idea.

Fox Movietone News has discontinued its series of shorts featuring "Mr. Courage" and "Mr. Fear."

Ten of the clips were used in the newsreels issued bi-weekly with Fred Ryle, make-up man at the Fox studios, New York, cast as "Mr. Fear," and Bill Jordan, sound man, enacting "Mr. Courage" role.

Bartlett Cormack went west with Lewis Milestone via the canal. They completed their conferences on "Front Page" on board ship. Arriving in Hollywood, Cormack found nothing left for him to do but take the train back east two days later. Cormack is assigned to do the dialog treatment on Dashiell Hammett's "Glass Key."

Among the cuts in budgets on pictures ordered is one by Radio on Wheeler and Woolsey. Pictures for this team have been reduced to around $200,000 a feature, it is said, for the rest of their contractural life unless potentialities merit an increase.

"Half Shot At Sunrise" is understood to have cost around $750,000.

A couple of ex-press agents from Warners studio, who worked in the press room sequences of Monta Bell's "Fires of Youth," Universal fixed it for the telegraph operator to give in the Morse code an idea of what they thought of pictures. Their gag was recorded as no others on the set could read the tick-ticks.

This resulted in plenty fuss, with fan mag finally deciding to kill that

Inside Stuff—Music

R. M. C.'s reduction in price on popular sheet music has aroused plenty of pro and con discussions as to whether the lower price will help or not. Most of the publishers contend it won't.

It was said that R. M. C. would not receive much co-operation from the dealers since the cut has also reduced the dealers profit on sheet music. Under the old price a dealer would buy sheet music for 20c or 21c and sell for 30c. Under the new scale the dealer buys from the jobber for 19c and sells for 25c. This comes down to 5½c when transportation costs are deducted.

These figures are on the 16c price given to jobbers after the first 30 days. The 14c introductory price, which the jobbers get for the first 30 days, does not figure at all, according to the publishers point of view, since there is little buying done until a song gets half-way established, and that takes more than 30 days.

Publishers can't even approach a small band for a plug without having the small one demand a cut. Sometimes the publishers burn and sometime they get a laugh out of it. But they realize they've brought it on themselves. They contend that a name band is worth it, but want to know where the small guys shine in trying to imitate the name outfits.

One band leader in a swank hotel, but still a minor combo because he doesn't play to much of an audience and does little radio work, is consistently demanding a slice from all publishers. He plays one against the other, telling each publisher that he is on the payroll of another. Some give, but the majority laugh it off. He's a band unit of another leader and turns over what he gets to the boss. And maybe he's splitting with him.

Joe Shoer, band leader who was shot in Chicago while holding up a loop hat store, was well known in Detroit, having been a fixture at Luigi's until it was padlocked last April. He had previously played at the Florentine room of the Hotel Addison.

Shoer's fingerprints have since been identified as those belonging to a man wanted since 1923 for a bank robbery in Indianapolis. A curious angle is that in all the years he was here, police inspectors visited spots in which he was working both for general inspection and to enforce the two a. m. curfew. In addition he was present when Luigi's was raided for liquor violation.

While in Detroit he was seen probably on an average of twice a night, but was never suspected of being anything other then a musician.

Fox-West Coast is closely checking the Paramount in Los Angeles since New York stage policy was instituted in opposition to Loew's State with its F. & M. Ideas.

Last week the Rhythm Boys, extra attraction at Paramount, pulled a gag with the orchestra conductor, asking how many violins were in the pit. He answered eight. Rhythm lads then asked how many Loew's State had. Answer: two.

A Fox check-up man was in the house and a complaint to Publix followed.

A name band that first started with a radio chain, grew with that network and branched out because of it, is now being slowly eased out.

Some time ago this band leader started adding band units and booking them. Now it has reached the stage where he is booking in competition to his radio firm and in many instances, is underselling.

Network's method of putting thumbs down is to give the boy less and less time. Recently he was doing five and six broadcasts weekly. Now, this is down to but one and two.

Pressure is being brought to bear in New York union circles by a clique who want legislation put over barring any musician on a steady job from accepting an outside engagement and placing a substitute in his regular spot.

Argument of the clique is that conditions are such that any musician with a steady job should not jeopardize it by being away from it, and by doing so he is denying a chance to those men now out of work. Contention is that this odd job coin should go to the men now laying off.

Enmity between the two foremost crooners has reached such a stage where it has become a laugh to outsiders.

If one gets the slightest mention in print, or is praised or spoken well of in the presence of the other—fireworks. Each contends that the other is the lowest form of animal life.

Columnists bear the brunt of the attacks, since whenever they write anything about one of the two crooners, the other squawks.

Orchestra leaders are dodging the broadcasting studios except when scheduled for a program. Friendly visits with radio executives are out of the question, they declare, because of the mob of song pluggers and small publishers who frequent reception rooms hoping to buttonhole entertainers.

When a so-so band pilot walked into WMCA recently five pluggers, lying in wait, jumped on him at one time.

W. H. Woodin, president of the American Car & Foundry, has a music hobby. He composes. A group of the business head's compositions is being issued by Miller Music, Inc., which will specialize in arrangements.

Firm is currently adding to its staff to build up this department.

Luigi Romanelli, leader of the King Edward Hotel orchestra, Hamilton, Ont., has a music library insured for $35,000.

It contains all of the popular and semi-classical arrangements that have been made for his use.

in favor of "The High-Hatting Girl." Star didn't mind that so much, according to insiders.

When Metro makes "Grand Hotel," Paul Fejos will handle the megaphone. Promise was included in the studio's acquisition of the script for stage and screen.

Fejos peddled the play around Hollywood for several weeks. Only cut in the sale Fejos wanted was the directing job.

Contract which Adolphe Menjou holds with Metro reserves the right for the actor to okay starring credit.

Under it M-G-M can't give starring credit to folks appearing in the same films with Menjou except by latter's consent.

He's positively right.

The Hays Organization did not supply the U. S. Chamber of Commerce with figures on the motion picture industry, and does not authenticate those given out from Washington and published in last Friday's newspapers.

Buddy DeSylva's loss by fire at the $800,000 blaze which razed his and many other homes at the Malibu beach picture colony on the Coast included many rare first editions. DeSylva was only partially covered by insurance while his bibliophilic loss is inestimable.

INSULL OKAYS CHI. OPERA FILM

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Chicago Civic Opera Co. here is making arrangements to film the Wagner opera 'Parsifal.' It will be the first time an opera has been produced as a talker with a cast of prominent opera stars. What company will do the making has not been announced.

Understood here Samuel Insull, angel of the opera, has given his O. K. to the project, which when completed will be sold on the open market, proceeds to go towards lifting some of this year's expenses on the opera company.

TRIANGLE DARK, 400 OFF VILLAGE SLUMMING

The Triangle, one of the Greenwich Village arty theatres, folded for good last week.

Kathleen Kirkwood, who had operated the theatre for its nine years of existence, turned the lock without ceremony and handed the key back to the landlord.

The passing of the Village as a night life playground sounded the deathknell for the cellarette bandbox theatre which had been a society fad until the swanks crossed the Village off their lists.

Miss Kirkwood will engage in the play brokerage business after Jan. 1.

With the Triangle out there remain but three of the former seven arty houses in the Village, the survivors being the Grove Street, spotting shows spasmodically; the Macdougal (former Provincetown Playhouse) and the Cherry Lane, with the latter the only one of the trio currently light on a sort of two-for-one arrangement.

Husband-Angel Calls For Money-Back Deal

Charles W. Elmes, of the Lake Shore Club, Chicago, put up $15,000 to guarantee his wife, Virginia Pemberton, actress, the leading role in Rafael Sabatini's play, "The Tyrant," it was disclosed in the supreme court when a suit was revealed against Charles L. Wagner, producer, for return of the money on the ground that Miss Pemberton failed to get the role.

Supreme Court Justice Shientag denied Wagner's motion to dismiss the complaint. Elmes said he gave Wagner the money in sums of $5,000 on Aug. 15, Sept. 15, and Oct. 17, last, and that Wagner later refused to employ Miss Pemberton. The agreement also stated that Elmes was responsible for no liabilities of the play but was entitled to 25 percent of the net profits.

Baron's Legit Entry

Henry Baron, who has been inactive in the legit producing field for the past two seasons because of illness is readying for a comeback.

Baron's first will be "Lovers," adaptation of a French comedy by Maurice Donnay with Baron making the American adaptation as well as producing.

Estelle Winwood was set as star but decided to remain with "Scarlet Sister Mary."

Swindler's Stock

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Hollywood Playhouse stock held by Gilbert Roosemeyer, $8,000,000 bankrupt swindler of the Guaranty Building and Loan, will be sold to the highest bidders when the courts get around to it.

Roosemeyer was vice-president of the theatre's board of directors until two years ago. When the crash came he owned less than 10% of the stock. He has turned over all his assets to the court.

DUFFY TURNS LEGIT

Billy Duffy, fight promoter and manager of Primo Carnera, will shortly make his bow as a legit producer. Duffy's announcement is expected in about two weeks.

Nature of the play is not known.

Solved

Davenport, Ia., Dec. 23.

An actor playing stock here has solved the unemployment problem without federal aid.

Doubling behind the bar in a speak near the theatre where he goes when there's a role for him, he has drawn business to the wet spot.

TEXAS GIRL PAYS AND PAYS, $22,000 ON FLOP

A month ago New York looked like a land of glory to Elvira Stanford of Texas. Now Broadway is the street of disillusion to her. She had some money and an ambition to get on the stage. Miss Stanford got part of her wish, getting into "Love Thieves" because of her bankroll. Nearest to Broadway it got was the Bronx, where it folded owing everybody last Saturday.

It is all tragedy to Miss Stanford. Every cent of her $22,000 was tossed into the show. Securities she deposited with Equity were sold to take care of the players' salary claims. The girl herself says she is wiped out and has no money to go back home.

"Love Thieves" was put on by one Michael Kallesser who has something of a rep for writing and presenting shows of the shoestring type. Miss Stanford happened along with the bankroll and got the lead part. Previous stage experience said to be negative.

The show got into trouble, right off, opening in Toronto, a rather costly journey for a single week. The house management took care of the hotel bills and Equity paid off when the troupe returned for a week at the Windsor, Bronx. Several players waived the salary bond but held out for salary or else. Saturday afternoon, representatives of a costumer went back stage and took away costumes.

"St. Scene" Pulled After One Louisville Show

Louisville, Dec. 23.

"Street Scene," road show scheduled for four performances here starting Monday, Dec. 15, closed after the first show, when only $600 came in at the b. o. opening night and the advance sale for three more performances was only $100. Members of the cast said the stage was most inadequate they had found, and the three-story set of the tenement building was visible only about half-way up to the second story.

Performers had to dress in basement locker rooms. Show was pulled by Brady's road manager and not Thomas D. Clines, local theatrical promoter, who brought the play here, as reported in dailies. Money was refunded on advance sales.

Metro Gives Shy Leave For Schwab-Mandel Show

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

So that he might accept a part in Schwab & Mandel's new show, which went into rehearsal this week, Gus Shy's contract with Metro has been set back to September, or earlier if Shy desires. It's a leave of absence.

4-Headed Stock Co.

Williamsport, Pa., Dec. 23.

The Majestic, only legitimate theatre in a city of 50,000 population, closed last week. It opens Dec. 27 under the management of a new syndicate with stock.

The four members of the new management are Frank McCoy and Jeff Brophy, of New York; Sam Reisman, of Danville, Pa., and Daniel F. Swartz, of this city. It will be supervised by Jeff Brophy. The theatre for the past six months had tried vaude and talkers.

Censor Booms 'Interlude'

Dallas, Dec. 23.

"Strange Interlude" was stopped cold by censor at Waco, Tex., when road show went on at Temple, 50 miles farther, say the 162 score Waconians there for curiosity.

Some kick here, too, but town let it go without censor, 1,000 head of it, grossed around $9,000 in many auditorium for two days, setting record for legit in Texas.

The censor say price fails in this section.

Critic at Rehearsals Helps Actress-Wife With 'Suggestions'

Chicago, Dec. 23.

An embarrassing situation exists in the Goodman theatre here because of the insistence of Ashton Stevens, dramatic critic of the Herald-Examiner, upon attending all the rehearsals.

Entire organization, executives and actors, are on pins and needles and unwilling to assert themselves because of the importance of Stevens in Chicago theatre matters. Stevens is interested in seeing that his wife, Katherine Krug, a member of the repertory group, is sympathetically cast and properly built up.

Suggestions from the critic sometimes hamper the Goodman organization in carrying out its own ideas which do not always coincide.

Situation is rendered even more delicate from the fact that the Goodman under its present Hubert Osborne regime has been subject to fire for going "commercial" in picking its plays with an eye to the box office. In this new policy the Goodman's chief apologist in the daily press has been Stevens.

Stevens' championship of the Goodman has been extreme and a reaction has set in. While Stevens' criticism on ordinary theatrical affairs carries great weight locally his comments on the Goodman are being discounted.

U ORGANIZES OWN PLAY CO.

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Universal is decided on its previously reported idea to go into legit play producing. Universal Play Co., a subsidiary of the picture company will handle the stage plays. Idea is similar to that which Radio recently abandaned, of getting material for the screen.

Pending the arrival of Carl Laemmle in New York after the holidays, the legit department will be in charge of David O. Werner. Company is now seeking plays for production and is issuing an invitation to all authors to submit their ideas. U. will split 50-50 with the authors, on any plays produced.

Activity starts early in January.

Red Grange Star of Mrs. Primrose Troupe

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Harold "Red" Grange, former football star, is the headliner of Mrs. George Primrose's minstrels, being produced by the famous minstrel's widow in collaboration with Tom Powell. Twenty others will be in the cast.

Opening is slated for Monorowoc, Wis., Christmas night, an advance man lining up independent time, and has eight weeks of film theatres already arranged, as another evidence of tank town eagerness for stage shows.

"Charming" Judgment

A default judgment for $4,047 has been filed in the Supreme Court by Herbert Clayton and Jack Waller against Connolly & Swanstrom, Inc., representing 2½% of the gross receipts of "Princess Charming," during its presentation in New York between the weeks ending Sept. 22 and Nov. 8, last.

The plaintiffs held the American stage rights to the production and were to receive this percentage from the producers. They said that the play grossed $160,157.

GROUCHO'S AIM

Detroit, Dec. 23.

Groucho Marx said here that he is writing a play in collaboration with Newman Levy.

It will be a play of the gay 90's and will probably be a comedy. At any rate the writers hope that the effect will be there.

Thelma White Shorts

Newark Shubert Frames Stop-Gap Vaud-Revue in Musical Famine

Scarcity of musical shows for the subway circuit this season is evidenced by the fact that the Shubert, Newark, operated by Morris Schlesinger, has been dark four weeks this season through inability to get shows from either the Shubert or Erlanger booking offices. Through all of last season the Shubert, which plays musicals exclusively, was dark only three weeks.

The house, which usually grosses $40,000 and over for first-class musicals, went dark last week.

In order to avoid having his house dark for the third week in succession, Schlesinger for next week has booked a vaudeville show headed by Irene Bordoni, arranged by Galen Bogue, her manager. Line-up of eight acts will be titled "Parade of the Stars," with blackouts and enough continuity employed so that the show will pass as a legit revue.

In addition to Miss Bordoni, the bill will contain Aaronson's Commanders, Lester Allen and Nellie Breen, Duran, West and Duran, a chorus line of 12 girls and four more acts to fill. Schlesinger and Bogue are splitting 50-50 on the show and house arrangements, while several of the acts will gamble on a percentage with Bogue.

Benefits Weak

Between $1,500 and $2,000 is being turned over to the city's unemployment fund each Sunday night. This represents profits on benefits given by legit shows.

The figure is said to be a disappointment, as it was hoped to average nearer $4,000 from the performances.

SHARPE-ZIEGGY SPLIT, MAY GO ERLANGER

Sharpe is reported a possibility for an executive in Erlanger Productions and is also said to have received an offer to return to the Shubert office.

Ziegfeld announced a new "Follies," aimed for the New Amsterdam, some time in February. Decision to start the "Follies" indicated after "The Gang's All Here," which was to have followed "Vanities" into that house, switched bookings to the Shubert office which leased the Imperial to Green and Gensler. Run of "Smiles" at the Ziegfeld, however, not definite.

Erlanger office has assumed an interest in the "Follies" corporation, similar to that held by the late A. L. Erlanger and, prior to that, Klaw and Erlanger.

Crippled Bank Backers Called on to Post Bond

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Equity has notified the directors of the Hollywood Playhouse Realty Corp. that "Stepping Sisters" will not be permitted to open Christmas Day unless a bond is deposited to protect the cast.

Three of the Playhouse's directors are directors of the troubled Guaranty Building & Loan Association and a fourth is on the board of the frozen Bank of Hollywood. Books of the building and loan concern show loans to the Playhouse totaling $321,000 in Sept., 1927, and an additional advance of $50,000 the following February. Henry Duffy in nearly two years of occupancy of the house paid in $54,000 and quit owing $7,000.

Moneys received from the rental of offices in the building and the income from the adjoining automobile parking space has not yet been accounted for.

Woods' Revolving Stages For Newspaper Show

When A. H. Woods produces "Five-Star Final," a story of big city tabs, it will also have a set of revolving stages to instantly swing the different scenes into use. All new and designed by P. Dodd Ackerman.

The other show with revolving stages is "Grand Hotel."

"Sez You" Folds

"Sez You," musical produced by Aranze Productions, folded out of town after one week without paying salaries.

Equity brought the company back to New York.

Show had been out with cast on waiver of bond but with Equity taking steps to collect two weeks salary and transportation for the company in action against the producers.

BELASCO'S SLOW RECOVERY

David Belasco is slowly gaining, following an attack of pneumonia, but is still under doctor's orders.

Understood he will be in the care of a nurse throughout the winter.

Storey Suicide Sequel

Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 23.

A divorce on the charge of desertion was granted Florence J. Holland of Darien from F. Raymond Holland, in whose New York apartment Bobbie Storey, an actress, committed suicide last year.

'Daddy' Browning Taking Peeks at 'Promise Me'

"Daddy" Browning, of the notorious "Peaches" Browning incident, has been rubbering at "Oh, Promise Me," the farce at the Morosco. After Browning looked the show over, he is said to have sent his secretary, who managed to get in on a free ducat. Latter supposed to have taken stenographic notes.

Mature Lotharlo of the farce is played by Edward Robbins, whose silvery thatch resembles that of Browning.

Equity 8-Week Rule Defers Skinner Tour

Because of a ruling in which Equity adhered to its eight-week rule, the tour of Otis Skinner in "Marseilles" is off until late in January. A forced revision of the route is claimed to have lopped off three and one-half weeks of the tour, meaning that much loss for the company, newly formed to support Mr. Skinner.

"Marseilles" recently closed at Henry Miller's theatre, where Dudley Digges played the lead. Mr. Skinner liked the play and Gilbert Miller arranged to send the veteran to the road with it.

Under Equity rules when a show closes it cannot resume until after a lapse of eight weeks, unless the same cast is engaged. Virtually an entire new cast was chosen for the Skinner tour. Since there were several run of the play contracts among the original players, Equity ruled that the first cast should be paid a week's salary, if the tour started before a lapse of eight weeks. It was a matter of $3,640 which Miller refused to pay and ordered the opening weeks out of town cancelled.

"Marseilles" now due to open in Phila. Jan. 26. Among the stands cancelled are Rochester and Cleveland. Latter may be played later.

Angel Back Again

They always come back for more. William Moseley, head of a drug concern, who went in the red on "Woof Woof," will shortly back another play, to be produced early next year.

LILLIAN BOND'S FILM DEAL

Lillian Bond, lost in "The Wife's Away," has been taken by Metro on a short-term contract through arrangement with Schwab and Mandel.

Earlier this season Miss Bond was in Hammerstein's flop musical, "Luana," Mike Connolly, of the Bentham office, handled.

Australia

By ERIC H. GORRICK

Sydney, Nov. 30.

Managements say there is no Santa Claus.

Country has population of six millions, and 180,000 are unemployed right now.

One or two shows doing near capacity, but rest of bunch playing to poor grosses despite severe admission cut.

Governments just can't seem able to handle affairs without resorting to terrific taxation, with the result that more and more are thrown out of jobs weekly. Naturally theatres suffer most.

One matinee day, Variety's representative called in at only musical attraction playing town. Manager told Variety man he would put him in stalls rather than first balcony, because there he wouldn't be so lonely.

Around the suburbs, business is off, with several showmen turning their theatres into midget golf links rather than play talkers at a loss.

Vaude-revue has kicked the bucket in Sydney.

Hugh D. McIntosh quit the Saint James three weeks before his option expired. Starting off brilliantly, McIntosh had everything in his favor because the time was just about right for an attempted vaude comeback.

But McIntosh figured on playing his shows for about four weeks without a change. Okay for a while. Then his producers started serving up the same old fare that killed vaude and revue two years ago. Sydney is out but Melbourne and Brisbane continue.

Unless the McIntosh organization gets busy right away and produces something new, many actors will again find themselves among the unemployed.

The bottom is starting to fall out of midget golf boom. A couple more months and several links will shut up. The early birds got the worm, but looks like late comers will get the raspberry. Too many links around the city for the population, and folks finding it hard to part with 25 cents.

Reported a little while back that the Fullers were about to attempt a vaude comeback. McIntosh smash in Sydney may stop them although it is known that they are not doing well with their talker policy.

Roxy, Sydney, not getting much jack as an alleged long run house—not even the gross when the Fullers played oldtime vaude and revue just before the talkers first boomed over here.

Sir Ben Fuller denied any attempt by his firm at another vaude try, but probably this is only because company solidly tied up with talker contracts that cannot be broken. Nevertheless, Fuller organization would like to make another vaude comeback, and may do so next year.

Ernest C. Rolls is coming back into the legitimate field again taking over the Saint James, Sydney, and Princess, Melbourne, on lease from Union Theatres. Rolls, known as the Ziegfeld of Australia, will open with pantomime at Christmas. Following this will be "Funny Face" and "Merry Malones"—both attractions bought from the Fullers when they quit the legitimate field. Rolls will import artists, probably from America, for these two attractions filling in with Australians.

Rolls has had some big successes to his credit, producing "Rio Rita" for the Fullers some seasons ago. Joining up with George Marlow, Rolls produced "Whoopee" at the old Empire, but owing to managerial misunderstanding the show flopped and the company went into liquidation.

His only opposition over here will be Williamson-Tait who have remained in the legitimate field all along, despite many setbacks.

Perhaps Union Theatres or the Fullers are behind Rolls in his present venture, or else he is renting scenery and costumes from the Fuller organization.

"Sons o' Guns" did best business in recent times for W. T. at Her Majesty's, Sydney, but trade falling off now.

"Raffles" gave the State, Sydney, great break for three weeks' solid business. Gladys Moncrieff, noted singer, also a draw. Union Theatres intend making State opening theatre for imported acts when they introduce vaude with talkers.

Much boomed "Young Woodley" privately screened in Sydney after Censor passed for adult exhibition only.

Bramley management failed with a vaude season in Brisbane last week when stage crew refused to work unless back wages paid. Artists did their stuff as well as move the scenery for a while, but soon tired.

Stage presentations at Capitol, Sydney, proving popular with Ted Henkel and his band a feature, Clyde Hood, from Chicago, producer for U. T.

Capitol one of best bets on the U. T. chain holding up strongly with the American idea of entertainment running four shows daily. "Last Lone Wolf" and bunch talker shorts give patrons money's worth at 75 cents top.

"Road to Romance," renamed from "Road to Rome" again failed in Melbourne under the W. T. direction when produced in Sydney some seasons ago with the late Louis Bennison and Margaret Lawrence featured, the show closed after two weeks.

"Africa Speaks," privately screened in Sydney with Stuart F. Doyle of Union Theatres booking the picture for an extended season at Lyceum.

"This Thing Called Love" had fair run at Criterion, Sydney, under W. T. direction. "Possessions" will follow in under same management for run try.

Sir Ben Fuller reported some time ago that he would visit America and endeavor to interest the theatrical magnates there to invest in several new talker theatres he had in mind to build in Australia.

Depression having set in, Sir Ben has postponed his trip.

"Whoopee" big hit at Princess, Melbourne, for Union Theatres, Eddie Cantor very popular over here. "Whoopee" grossing about biggest in town.

Hoyt's Theatres, Ltd., recently reported to shareholders they had decided to withhold dividend payment because of the heavy expenditure in equipping the circuit for talkers, and the general trade depression, this despite the fact that profits earned were large enough for a dividend.

Hoyts are a tremendously strong organization controlling theatres all over Australia. Fox joining in with Hoyts gives the organization powerful standing over here.

Next year, it is reported, Hoyts will present the very latest American unit entertainment bringing all of their big time theatres right up to Broadway standards.

England Eases Out Two Veterans of Nite Life

London, Dec. 14.

William Lee, American, has left London for Paris. His permit to remain was not renewed by the Home Office. He was a night club proprietor, acting for a long time with Jack May, who was also eased out.

Lee had been in London around twenty years before the authorities moved him along. May lasted thirty-six and then got his.

Point about the Home Office here in their attitude to foreigners, particularly Americans, is the fact they never interfere with ordinary folk, and Americans resident in England for a long period do not even keep in touch with the authorities other than for registration of change of address.

Home Office only shows its hand when it reckons there may be some reason. Lately the foreign element in the night club life has been thinned out.

Puts Italy's Import Needs at 400 Films

Milan, Dec. 12.

Giuseppe Lega in the "Nuovo Giornale" of Florence has just published an article in which, though only in the mildest terms, otherwise he might find himself in trouble with the Party, he condemns the present system of cutting down the importation of foreign films.

According to this writer, the very lowest number required for the Italian market is 400 (four hundred). He also opines that the cutting out the talkie part is having the effect of destroying the cinema industry and will eventually result in throwing a great number of people out of work.

To this has replied an unknown writer saying that it is better to begin now with the surgical operation and so lead the public to look to the Italian industry to meet the want.

Lewis Visits Berlin

Berlin, Dec. 23.

Sinclair Lewis, recently in Stockholm to receive the Nobel prize, arrived in Berlin for a visit of a couple of days.

DEAH OLD LONDON IN OWN RACKET SCANDAL

London, Dec. 14.

A sharepushers' fall guy is now on trial in London after having been a stool for half the gang and thinking he was running a straight brokerage business. That's his defense, anyway.

Names don't matter so much, but before he was pinched he is said to have paid $60,000 in blackmail, and the West End lowdown is most of this went for "protection." Ordered to come through with a further $15,000, he stalled and said he hadn't any more dough, which was probably true, so the racketeers gave the tip-off and he was arrested.

Since Jake Factor beat it from here, and was followed by Charlie Guest, Jack Fritz Figel, Earl Seay, Isadore Sherman (those are the names they used this side), the tip-off on the real reason for Jack (Legs) Diamond's trip to Europe has come to light.

The gang in London got a letter from Diamond telling by list how much each had to turn in within three days in currency, no checks taken. It amounted in all to $350,000, and each of the share-pushing gang was listed as to his individual contribution.

A hurry-call meeting was held in a Strand hotel and before the three days expired the dough went in two bags of currency by private airplane to Berlin.

After that Factor beat it out of this country of law and order, and is claimed to have parted with around $200,000 for police protection from arrest not long before he ducked out.

Say Passion Play Actor Held Out on Servants

Munich, Dec. 14.

The Labor-Court in Garmisch has ruled that Lang, the actor representing Christ in the Oberammergauer Passion Play, is to pay $500.

He has charged his summer boarding guests with extra service fees which he did not turn over to his servants as was required. The money is to be awarded to four servant girls.

House Cuts Scale

Mexico City, Dec. 18.

Cine Olympia (Par. house) has dropped its tariff from 1.50 pesos to one peso (about 50 cents). In newspaper advertisements to this effect, Manager Fernando de Fuentes explains that action was taken as co-operation with government to make the public happy by assisting return of good times.

Theatre is the biggest movie house in town. Teatro Regis (Metro house) and Teatro Palacio (indie), second and third biggest pictures houses here, are keeping entrance fee at 1.50 pesos.

Mex. Fans for Silents

Mexico City, Dec. 18.

Teatro Palacio was recently the scene of a near-riot when the customers stamped feet and whistled because the English language talker had only 60 Spanish titles. House is one of three biggest in town.

Echeverria, who runs seven neighborhood houses, says the patrons in his second run shops won't stand for English tongue talkers, but are crazy about silent comedies and animated cartoons, pardoning foreign language in them in their love of the fun.

Wire Sure-Seater

Paris, Dec. 14.

Giving up the playing of silent pictures, the Studio des Ursulines is now installing Western Electric equipment.

Theatre is only a 250 seater, but is locally important as a releasing house for advanced or freak films, and enjoys considerable patronage.

Salvini's Son Dies

Rome, Dec. 23.

Gustavo Salvini, classic Italian actor, is dead here.

He was the son of the famous Thomas Salvini who toured the States in the '80's.

IN PARIS

Marlene Dietrich, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, Winchel Smith, Lotte Lehmann Krause, Bruce Gold, George H. Doran, Nina May McKinney, Clayton P. Sheehan.

French Troupe's Satire On U. S. Hit in Milan

Milan, Dec. 14.

At the Manzoni theatre, crowded beyond belief, the Madame Spinelly French company gave the 3-act comedy, "Amour a l'Americaine," by Monezy-Eon and Spitzer, a few nights ago. It is an extremely crude play and can hardly be classified as art. Nevertheless, the public became wildly enthusiastic and cheered lustily.

A millionaireness, Maud Jennings, has come to Paris to enjoy a gay whirl. Her lovers are a penniless duke, a Parisian prince and a tenor. During one of her heart raids she falls in with an honest, quiet type of man and attempts to buy him with the offer of $1,000,000.

On his refusal, she threatens to shoot him. The man, however, loves his own wife and holds out, but afterwards is nearly carried away by a devastating sex storm. Just when he is on the point of yielding, the fickle woman loses her infatuation.

The language is most salacious and offensive.

British Reprisals on U. S. Producer Outlets

London, Dec. 14.

Confidently expected here, despite denials when previously rumored, the new Leicester Square theatre, opening Dec. 19 under Sir Walter Gibbons and Walter Bentley, would link with R-K-O.

Radio has no theatres of its own this side and would doubtless welcome an outlet.

Opposition to such a move on paper is the fact Radio would be in danger of losing Gaumont British business if they took a house in opposition to the major circuit's West Enders.

This happened in the case of United Artists, who lost the "Hell's Angels" booking to G. B. through leasing the London Pavilion for the film's premiere.

Impersonator from Tex!

Paris, Dec. 14.

Owing to general business depression, vaudeville or circus shows are making no special effort to attract the thin patronage available. The only two hits in the way of specialty acts are Jack Powell at the Empire, and Barbette at the Cirque Medrano.

Barbette was born in Texas, and impersonates a woman acrobat, pulling the usual trick of whipping off the wig.

Paris Agents Organize

Paris, Dec. 14.

Finding local playwrights too easily inclined to overlook work done on their behalf, Paris playbrokers have formed a protective association under the name of "Syndicat des Agents Dramatiques."

Organization will try and regulate the way contracts are made for sales or rights, and also see to it that any agent having had a share in the sale, gets one on the commission. First president is Robert de Mackiels.

Banks' Atmosphere Pants

London, Dec. 15.

Monty Banks started directing his 16th comedy for British International this season, wearing green plus fours and a beret.

Alfred Hitchcock, Elstree's ace director said it reminded him of the Cycling Club de Gennaro.

M-G-M'S GERMAN ACTORS

Metro has engaged three German actors for the Teutonic version of "Big House", due to go into production about the middle of January. Players are Henrich George, Gustav Diessl and Walter Zilzer booked to sail for this side on the Europa Jan. 3.

Maria Tubua, Spanish actress, set for the lead in the Spanish version of "Trial of Mary Dugan" and "Madame X" and Ferdinand Mignoni, Italian scenic artist, joined the foreign colony on the Metro coast lot this week.

POND'S FILM STORY

London, Dec. 15.

Arthur Pond, New York bound, an oldtime Cockney character delineator, hopes to dispose of a film story dealing with a Cockney's reactions to America.

Egypt

By EDWARD ASSWAD

Cairo, Dec. 10.

Cinemas charges in Egypt are considerably higher than those in most European countries where picture-houses pay heavy taxes.

Many complaints are being made that charges of cinemas and theaters have remained unchanged, while prices of all materials have come down and the purchasing power of the people has decreased.

As a result, the proprietors of the Royal Cinema and the Josy Palace in Cairo have agreed to reduce the price of seats.

A campaign has been led by local press against a Soviet film entitled "The Tempest Over Asia". The film was produced by the best-known Soviet producer, and such reels are rented at prices far lower than commercial product. This is a striking example of how the censors have apparently been napping.

Great exception has been taken by many cinema-goers to the theme of the film entitled "White Shadows" recently shown for the second time in Cairo. It is regarded as a masterpiece of photography. But it has been referred to as scandalous on account of the portrayal of the white man's character in the very worst taste in a country where such a large number of cinema public are colored.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs received from the Secretariat of the League of Nations a communication relative to the international Educational Institute attached to the League which has worked out a scheme for the exchange of film between nations with the object of promoting good morals and instructing the people on scientific topics. The Secretariat of the League of Nations has decided to convene at a meeting of international experts to study a scheme for the organization of such propaganda.

A congress will then be held dealing with the questions of customs on such films, and with the necessity of making a distinction between commercial cinematographic films and films of scientific and educational propaganda.

The Kursaal theatre in Cairo has been booked for one week beginning Dec. 20, by a French comedy company from Paris headed by Marguerite Valmont and Jean Sarment offering repertory.

In January, Lucien Boyer is paying a visit with "Montmartre en Balade" and he will be followed by the Stirling English Players from Paris with "On the Spot." This company gave a fine production of "Journey's End" in Egypt last year.

The Forbes Russell comedy company are shortly returning to Egypt with a repertory of the latest London successes and with April Vivian as the "star".

Herr Alexander Moissi, who spent a week at the Grand hotel at Assuan in Upper Egypt, says he will return next year for a longer stay.

Recent engagements at the Pavilion Bleu, Alexandria, include: American duo Kent and Derence, Duo Ilia and Eugene, Angelita Velez, the Walti Sisters and Clason Lydia, Syria, Lill, Walti, Cleo and Isis Duo, Garof and the singer Rola.

The famous Lido Boys have been engaged for the Winter Palace hotel at Luxor as the tourist season is reaching its zenith.

Multi-Tongue Opera

Prague, Dec. 15.

"The Bartered Bride," famous opera by Smetana, Czechoslovakia's greatest composer, will be filmed by the Prague firm of Robert Zdrahal, in conjunction with French and German firms.

The film will be offered in the French, Czech and German languages, with a cast of artists of those countries.

VIENNA DAZED BY 2 SMASHES

Vienna, Dec. 23.

Two new attractions made their bows under the handicap of the pre-holiday season promise to be outstanding hits of the year here.

One is Ferdinand Bruckner's play, "Elizabeth of England," at the Deutsches Volkstheatre, a history of the Virgin Queen's love affair with Essex as viewed in the light of modern psychoanalysis. Piece has great literary merit and Leopoldina Konstantin in the title role gives a brilliant performance.

There is less room for doubt about the financial success of the other new arrival, "Victoria and Her Hussar," operetta by an unknown young Hungarian composer, Abraham Abraham. The composer tried once before to place the work for Vienna production, but failed. He took it to Berlin and it comes back from there and promises to run for months at the Theatre an der Wien. The plot is laid in two continents and four countries and, as far as the book is concerned, is formula Viennese material.

What is really first class about the piece is its stunning score, full of ideas and swinging rhythms. The work is a mine of popular hits and in this production is beautifully instrumentalized. The piece would stand a great chance in New York, although the book would have to be made over.

Rita Georg, in the leading part, again proved she is the leading German prima donna for light opera.

JUST A BORE

Paris Crowd Forces Blah Show to Quit

Paris, Dec. 23.

Violent protests by bored audiences has compelled the Theatre Potiniere to discontinue the play "Institut de Beaute" ("The Beauty Parlor"), not because the thing is objectionable morally, but because it's a bore. Affair really amounts to a strike of wearied theatregoers against a pest.

"Beauty Parlor" was authored by Mrs. Valcler, a wealthy dilettante authoress, who subsidized her own inane play which is supposed to demonstrate physical beautification by beautifying the soul.

London Goes All Cold On Whole Golfie Idea

London, Dec. 14.

Skeleton unit which Jaydee Williams left here framing to put over a wide picture on standard stock gag, on which Williams was talking before he left this side, Horace Judge and Cecil Williams are carrying on the office and working here. World Studio Centre multilingual idea having been dropped as no dough could be raised for it.

Sir Gordon Craig played around with Williams and Bruce Johnson on this for some time and they were relying on him to find the dough, but right near a clinch with the banks, the City went suddenly cold on the proposition and no more has been heard of it except a quiet fade-out from the Williams picture by Sir Gordon Craig, who turned his attention for a time to shrimp golf.

Latter generally is all shot here. One outfit in city located in heart of bank and stock market center at Palmerston House and running an eight-hole ten-cent game, had one player a day. Stuck that for a week and folded. Near the same is general story on teeny golf all over town now.

JO TRIX AS BOY

London, Dec. 23.

Josephine Trix is making her debut as panto principal boy in the holiday show of "Babes in the Woods" at the Lewisham Hippodrome.

CHRISTMAS BALLET

London, Dec. 23.

The Lyric, Hammersmith, opened Saturday evening with a Christmas season of ballet headed by Karsavina.

The spectacle was nicely received.

PARAMOUNT LONDON STAGE SHOWS LIKED

London, Dec. 23.

At Finsbury Park, Astoria, the Francis Mangan presentation featuring Glenn Ellyn, supported by Hellwell Sisters and 24 Mangan Tiller girls, pleased, with the native verdict it is the best fare provided locally.

Another attraction is Odall Careno. The Mangan attractions are to be the regular Astoria feature at the three other Astorias from next week on. Business is dull because of the season and the fog, but under normal conditions the presentation idea, with the Paramount resources, ought to spell box office.

The Palladium bill (vaude) was devoid of novelties, with the headliner, Tallulah Bankhead, held over and doing nicely. Moeser Jose and Sultan, the dancing horse, did very well. Attendance was the smallest in years, due to the heavy fog that jammed traffic.

PUBLIX CABLES OFFERS ABROAD FOR SIX ACTS

London, Dec. 23.

Paramount-Publix cabled offers to six acts here specifying that the booking arrangement guarantees eight weeks and calls for further options.

Acts approached are Art Hadley, Lee Gail and Co., Danny and Eddie Blue Steppers, Parker, Bobs and Band, and Rodeo Boys.

LONDON PALACE TRYS MONTH RUN VAUDE

London, Dec. 23.

Cochran's Palace goes into its three-month vaudeville season starting Jan. 5, the introductory bill being headed by the Marx Bros.

Rest of the show will have Ivy St. Helier, Leo and Walter, George Dormonde, Duffin and Draper, Okadi, Gene Sheldon, Logan and Geneva, Melody Maids and Taps and Tempo, local dance flash.

Programs will be changed monthly, with Cochran already negotiating further engagements. If the experiment promises success it will become permanent.

Initial features are not new to London outside of the Marxes.

Want Acts' Censor

The Hague, Dec. 23.

The southern Dutch Provinces, which recently agitated for a screen censor, now have enlarged their demands for supervision of other entertainment departments.

The churchmen (Catholics are numerous in the section) insist that vaudeville acts used in presentation house shall be inspected for approval, and also that there shall be a censorship over handbills and posters in connection with film shows.

For Broadway

Paris, Dec. 23.

Charles Dillingham has bought "Quick," by Felix Ganderas, for New York production.

Louis Verneuil's play, now current and called "Gigolo," is under negotiation by A. H. Woods for Broadway.

Lillie Revue Bid

London, Dec. 23.

Louis Shurr cabled Beatrice Lillie offering her the principal role in the next "Little Show" revue.

Authors are prepared to write special material for her, together with special songs.

HABIMA LONDON SEASON

London, Dec. 23.

Habima Theatre troupe, Yiddish organization, opens a season of repertory at the Phoenix theatre Dec. 29.

Cairo Concert Dates

Cairo, Dec. 23.

First of the song birds to reach Cairo for the winter season is Lady Armstrong.

She will appear at concerts here and in Alexandria.

Singer's Holland Hit

The Hague, Dec. 23.

Fay Ferguson, American soprano, is a success in concert, starting on a Holland tour at the Lyceum, Amsterdam.

SACHS' BUYER FOR U. S.

Syndicate Looking for People and Attractions for London

London, Dec. 23.

William Wilson, American producer, sailed for New York on the Cedric Saturday (20), commissioned to buy musical attractions in New York and sign people for the recently formed Joe Sachs syndicate.

Sachs is understood to have settled on leasing the new theatre in Shaftesbury avenue, now under construction by Amory Parkes and due for completion in March.

PARIS HOPE IS PARI-MUTUELS

Paris, Dec. 23.

Show business looks for better times in several ways when the new law becomes effective permitting betting on horse races without going to the tracks.

The new system calls for the use of the "totalizer" plan, as it is called in England, or what Americans call the pari-mutuels.

It is expected that one theatre benefit will be a reduction in taxes, since the mutuels will donate heavy taxes to be devoted to hospitals and other charities which now get their funds from the theatre.

The other benefit is that on days of big events at the track there will be many turf enthusiasts who remain in town instead of going to the meet to bet, and the theatre will offer them a retreat.

New London Shows

London, Dec. 23.

The Faculty of Arts theatre produced "A Full House" last week, the piece being by Anthony Armstrong, well known contributor to "Punch." It is a farce along the lines of "Twin Beds," but indifferently produced and poorly acted. Announced for three nights, although half that many would be sufficient.

"Smoky Cell," at Wyndham's, is another underworld-racketeer melodrama written by Edgar Wallace. It has no women characters. Piece was splendidly acted and very well received. It starts off with an absorbing first act, but tapers off in tension toward the end. Show business insiders are divided in views of its prospects, but the attractions looks like one of general public appeal.

"Chelsea Follies," at the Victoria Palace, proved an excellent revue of the suburban or provincial type. It was written and produced by Archie DeBear and should enjoy a successful run at popular prices.

"Jane's Legacy, by Eden Phillpotts, new at the Duchess, has the general form of "The Farmer's Wife" except that it is even more stogy. Scene is laid 100 years ago, perhaps with the purpose of minimizing the improbabilities of the plot. But the device is not altogether satisfactory.

GOOD AT COLISEUM

Continental Dancers Score and Kays Cinch for Presentation

London, Dec. 23.

Of the newcomers at the Coliseum (vaude), opening yesterday (Monday), Dora Kasan and Nester Continental, dancers, went over nicely. They make a remarkably good-looking couple and are an ideal cabaret feature.

Cal and Mona Kay, English versatile entertainers, ought to be a cinch for picture house presentations.

R-K-O Housewarming

London, Dec. 23.

Opening of the new R-K-O offices here Dec. 19 was made into an occasion. Everybody in filmdom was present and the big office was converted into a dance floor, with a bar and buffet within reach.

All three departments were well patronized.

Clicks in South Africa

Capetown, Dec. 23.

The International Artists Lodge, German organization composed of more than 6,000 vaudeville and circus performers, will pay a monthly old-age pension to all members who have been in good standing for the past ten years and are over 65 years of age beginning in January, 1931. Lodge has a New York office. To meet this obligation the regular dues will be slightly increased, the Board of Directors announced, and the pension will be raised or lowered occasionally, depending upon the financial condition of the Lodge which will also hold benefits to augment the fund. The German government has granted the society permission to hold vaudeville shows on "sacred concert" days, when stage attractions are usually banned, for this purpose.

Some members under 65 years of age who have been receiving benefits will continue receiving them as at present and no one on the pension list will be required to pay any further dues although all of them must make their usual contributions to the death fund.

Through the provisions of the pension plan more than 100 members will automatically receive their benefit after the first of the new year. Performers who have reached the prescribed age and have belonged to the Lodge for more than 10 years will receive pensions in proportionately larger amounts.

TWO-ROLE PLAY SUCCESS

Verneuil's Paris Piece Found Amusing In Holland

The Hague, Dec. 23.

The French play "M. Lambertier," by Louis Verneuil, produced here by the Hofstadtoonel, is a substantial success.

Piece is a trick idea there being only two characters in the action. Players are Vanderlugt Melsert and his wife, Annie Van Ees. The pair achieve the remarkable goal of holding the attention of an audience for an entire evening.

STOLL'S REPORT SHOWS PROFIT CUT IN HALF

London, Dec. 23.

The Stoll Theatres Corp., which made a profit of $500,000 in the previous fiscal year, shows a net for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 of $200,000.

Announcement is made that "with a view to conserving resources pending better times, the company will pass the usual dividend at this time."

CHARGE CRITIC PANNED RIVAL TO BOOST SELF

Vienna, Dec. 23.

Hot argument is on here on the subject, "Should a critic be allowed to write plays?" The popular verdict is "Shoot them all."

Dr. Beer, director of one of the theatre concerns, wrote a scathing attack on the playwright Sassman, after Sassman had torn apart one of Dr. Beer's productions. The piece was Bruckner's "Elizabeth of England," in which Beer was interested.

Then Dr. Beer wrote an open letter to Sassman, charging the playwright panned his show because he (Sassman) had written a historical drama himself and intended to have it produced, for which reason, the argument runs, he tried to belittle the "Elizabeth" piece.

Watson's Trick Science

The Hague, Dec. 23.

James and Fred Watson, doing the flashy electric experiments which are known to American vaudeville, have made something of a sensation at the Arena, Rotterdam.

Fair work with high tension currents for spectacular effects on the stage.

Lauder's Shorts

London, Dec. 23.

Production is current at Gainsborough studios (London) on a series of song shorts featuring Harry Lauder, who is trouping his stuff to the mikes for the first time.

Series is being made in conjunction with Welsh Pearson, that unit's first work in the talker field.

Atmosphere Hunt

Paris, Dec. 23.

Cole Porter and George Hale are vacationing here awaiting the arrival of Ray Goetz, due Jan. 7.

When Goetz arrives here they will all go jaunting to Berlin, London and Budapest, looking for local color for the fall production of a story authored by Herbert Fields.

Chevalier Censored

London, Dec. 23.

The Chevalier concert booked for Cardiff, Jan. 4, was canceled summarily.

The chief constable of the Welsh town intimated that the French man's songs would have to be submitted for censoring in advance.

CAIRO NIGHT 'CLUBBERS

Cairo, Dec. 23.

Palace hotel cabaret in Heliopolis reopened Dec. 21 with a new show.

In the personnel, besides local entertainers, are Nina Guglari, from the Paris Opera Comique, Siciliano and Partner and the Boileau band.

"FLORODORA" MAN DIES

Sydney Ellison, Long Ill, Passes Away in London

London, Dec. 23.

Sydney Ellison, producer of "Florodora" and the man who conceived the Sextette idea that was the rage of England and the States in the 90's, died Saturday (20) in London.

Ellison was for many years producer for George Edwardes at the old London Galety and was credited with many musical comedy successes. Of late years he had been in ill health and recently worked as a super.

5-Act Bill for Havana Comprises Many Girls

Five acts, with transportation paid, left New York Saturday (20) for Havana, Cuba, for two weeks at the Empresa Tolon National theatre.

Engaged through Victor Trava Morena, they are: Ellis Gold, Nash Sisters, Gladys Faye, Meryda Montes and Mayer Twins.

Soph's European Dates

London, Dec. 23.

With exception of one night at the Royal Palace, Ostende, Sophie Tucker has never played the Continent. But the big Mommer is now taking the plunge.

Soph plays Nice and Cannes Feb. 1 to 19, then the Empire, Paris, for two weeks. From March 5 to April 5 Sophie goes to the Cabaret der Kommiker.

Annual Circus Mild

London, Dec. 23.

Bertram Mills' annual circus opened yesterday at Olympia Hall. It discloses no outstanding novelty in spite of several first appearances.

Show probably will do its usual successful six weeks to satisfactory returns.

"MIMI" IS "FOLLOW THRU"

Paris, Dec. 23.

"Mimi," new at the Ambassadeur and starting out favorably, turns out to be only the American musical "Follow Thru" with a new title.

No reference whatever to the original.

HAMILTON-DOLLIE WED

Paris, Dec. 23.

Ord Hamilton and Dollie, of the sister team Dollie and Billie, were married here.

ACTS' FOREIGN DATES

Harry Roye and Billie Maye sail today (24) on the "Paris" to open Jan. 2 at the Paramount, Paris, for a month's engagement, after which they go to the Palladium, London.

Postal-Theatre League Scheme Called on "Week to Week Basis"

"This proposition is on a week to week basis," a Postal Telegraph official is reported telling the former box office men at Postal's theatre ticket agency Saturday night. The statement was made at the time that all but four ex-treasurers who have been handling tickets for the Postal agency were discharged.

The curtailment of expense by Postal, which ordered a cut of 66 per cent in its ticket agency operating outlay, came as a surprise except to those actually aware of the ticket situation. The replacement of men, all expert ticket sellers, with girls was regarded with some alarm in Broadway's box offices.

The troubles of the Theatre League in its attempted control of tickets are known to have mounted since Postal came into the picture.

Intrest on Wane?

It is patent that Postal is now actually directing the League. Several managers who were active a month or so back and who hailed the League and especially Postal as the saviour of the situtlon, are said not to have appeared at recent meetings. Several managers have gone to Florida.

The secret to Postal's authority in the League is the fact that Postal agreed to make up any deficiency in the League's operating expenses. That probably, however, does not take in the original bankroll of about $30,000 raised through notes endorsed by a half dozen managers.

The League's finance committee is meeting this week in an effort to straighten out its money matters and to determine ways and means of ensuring revenue. Some theatres are not paying one per cent on the tickets sold by the recognized agencies. The latter have evaded the idea of the League to pay it 10 cents per ticket which would void the 1% levy on the theatres. Postal has kept its bargain of paying 10 cents on each ticket it sold or approximately $600 weekly. League's expenses are probably three times that.

It is charged by League critics that the League has hurt Broadway's business instead of aiding it and in the worst general business depression in recent times. The charge is based on the number of tickets handled through the League or via its rules.

During October the then 16 accredited brokers were selling approximately 39,000 tickets weekly. When the brokers walked out and six agencies were recognized in addition to Postal the distribution dropped off 25%. That is, the present system is running far less efficiently than the original set-up. During November, when business should have improved, the six recognized agencies sold about 24,000, while Postal has been selling around 6,000 tickets weekly. That means a loss of nearly 10,000 tickets weekly, compared to the first plan, disregarding any normal or expected increase.

No Formal Term Contract.

The explanation of the "week to week" statement may be that Postal did not sign a binding agreement with the League. It is known that the managers individually have not signed with Postal.

Postal's retrenchment has not only affected its ticket agency but that of the League. The accounting department of the League will be discontinued next week (Jan. 1). It was expected that statistics compiled by the department would be of value. Postal apparently thinks otherwise and since it agrees to take care of League operation losses, is reported having ordered the accounting department out. H. H. Farquhar has been in charge of the department. He was associated with Harlow D. Savage (League's executive secretary) in International Combustion and the reorganization of other plants and and businesses. The men have been close friends, but Savage is apparently powerless in the matter.

Cumbersome Routine

To sell each ticket or issue the order at Postal has consumed 15 minutes. Checking up with the man in charge of the rack, writing out the order, withdrawing the tickets and placing them in envelopes and telephoning the customer to find out if he ordered the tickets, uses up the time. It is a system devised to keep gyps and diggers from getting good tickets and has not worked out. And it is going to take inexperienced girls longer than that.

One of the foolish things ordered by the League and acquiesced in by several showmen who were hot for the League, was to discontinue the advance sale by mail orders for certain hits. Mail orders asking for tickets five and six weeks in advance were not filled—because the agency allotments "had to be protected" and such tickets might go to gyps. The answer is that gyps will not buy tickets that far in advance, not taking a chance on whether the show will be in the demand by then and refusing to tie up their coin for so long ahead. Reported that those shows are now back to filling mail orders again.

JEWISH HOUSES RESUME ON UNION CONCESSIONS

New York's nine Jewish theatres reopened Monday (22) after two weeks' darkness. Agreement was reached last Friday (19) when everybody except the musicians agreed to a cut. Managers still hope that the musicians will line up, but agreed to reopening the theatres while still holding discussions with that union.

Under the agreements, the stage hands' union allowed a cut of two men from the staffs of all the larger Yiddish theatres, and one man each in the smaller theatres. The Ushers' and Doormen's Union (branch of the Hebrew Trades Union) agreed to a 15% cut all along the line.

Hebrew Actors' Union agreed to a 10% cut on all salaries up to $90; 15% cut on salaries up to $145; 20% up to $200 and 25% up to $600.

Legitless Dayton

Dayton, O., Dec. 23.

After four weeks of its new picture policy, the management of the Victory, legit house since 1866, declares it is likely that no road shows will be seen here this season.

Difficulties of taking care of picture operators during the time legit shows occupy the house complicate the situation.

Eddie Small Giving Up N. Y. Casting Office

Unable to obtain a permit from Equity to carry on a legit casting business, Edward Small has decided to discontinu. his New York office Jan. 1. Maurice Abrahams and Bertha Karp, in charge of Small's agency in the east, are both considering offers to join the staffs of licensed agents.

Another "Lifetime"

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Myron Fagan, out here for the past eight months writing for pictures, is contemplating a return to New York.

He has hopes for a new play, "Hollywood Be Thy Name."

Stocks on Commonwealth

Easton, Pa., Dec. 23.

The players' Guild Stock that opened here on September 19 closed and an announcement was made that the players will return after New Year's to run the company on their own.

New Britain, Conn., Dec. 23.

Lawrence and Julian Anhalt have withdrawn as producers of the New York Players (stock) at the Capitol. The company will continue on a commonwealth basis.

AUBERT-SHEEHAN FOR S-M

John Sheehan and Jeanne Aubert will be among the cast of Schwab & Mandel's "America's Sweetheart." Musical, which has a picture studio background, was originally titled "Success."

Parts originally intended for Evelyn Hoey and John Hundley have been rewritten to fit Sheehan and the French girl.

The New Way

Some maneuvering is involved in the forthcoming production of a new musical. Play is being produced by one of the younger firms, which has had signal success so far.

Hooking up with one of the biggest costume designers in the business, the dress firm agreed to make all costumes without a cash remuneration. If the show flops the costume company gets no coin at all. If it's a hit, the dress people get paid the actual cost of the costumes plus $10,000 after the production "nut" has been paid back to the producers.

It's much like actors gambling with the management on a percentage basis, and is evidently an arrangement of the times.

Legit Firms May Meet on Wage Cuts

Erlanger's, Shuberts and the house managers of their respective theatres are reported to have a conference set for the early part of next week, probably Monday or Tuesday.

Discussion will probably center on the problem of stage hands' and musicians' salaries, with expectations of making a wage cut. All other ends of the theatre, including actors and front men, have taken chops already, it is pointed out.

It is supposed an adjustment of the two year contract, signed last fall, is sought. It is hoped that by means of these cuts, admission prices will be lowered.

If not successful some of the houses belonging to these men may close.

Outwitting Yeggs on Pay Roll Worries Mgrs.

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Following the "Lysistrata" backstage holdup when three of Chicago's gat-toters walked away with the show's $3,500 payroll, company managers around town are adopting various methods to prevent similar occurrences in other troupes.

Fred Zweifel, company manager for Ed Wynn's "Simple Simon," is paying off the company on a different day, at a different hour, and in a different place and manner each week so that no yegg can get any advance dope on the handling of the payroll.

Ben Holmes, Salesman

The Shuberts are sending Ben Holmes, directing for them in New York, to Los Angeles to stage the Coast production of "Ladies All" and others.

Holmes leaves N. Y. this week and while on the Coast will try to promote the sale of talker rights to a long list of Shubert plays, both musical and dramatic.

If and When

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

"Spring Song," Bella Spewack's new play which was tried out for a week at the Pasadena Community Playhouse with Vera Gordon starred, is being primed for New York production early next year. If and when, Vera Gordon will be in it.

The Noes Have It

Patterson McNutt's idea of starring Maurice Chevalier in a legit play has gone cold and is definitely off. McNutt wanted the Frenchman for the lead in "The Palace" by A. E. Thomas and Karl Volmuller.

Plan fell through after Paramount said no.

Revamped "All Things"

"Of All Things," musical produced by Aranze productions which folded in Atlantic City two weeks ago, will shortly come in again, with revisions all around.

Ruth Draper in N. Y.

Ruth Draper will follow Carolya Goya at the Comedy on Dec. 26 where she will give her character sketches for four weeks at a $3 top.

Inside Stuff—Legit

All newspaper copy for the film billed it Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in "Outward Bound," with Leslie Howard, and Howard produced a contract calling for featured position. The actor got no satisfaction from the local film exchange, however, as the boys here claim that young Fairbanks meant more to film fans than Howard. In nationally prepared copy on "Outward Bound," Howard's name was carried above that of Fairbanks, though not in the local stuff.

Situation in a current revue has one of its stars not at all in the spirit of the thing and been wanting to drop out from the very beginning. Producer, too, is willing to let him go, since he feels the trouble involved in keeping him isn't worth while besides the cut in the salary list would help.

But the producer can't let go because the comic is under contract to another firm and the firm that owns him has a part of the present show. And the comedian can't, of course, break his contract.

Sidney Buchman, young playwright, has the unusual record of having the only three plays he has written accepted for production. "This One Man" was produced by Krakeur and Lubin, "Storm Song" is rehearsing for Robert V. Newman, and "Hide in the Dark" has been taken by Arthur Lubin.

That pantomimic-interpretive number which Marilyn Miller did in the second act of "Smiles" has been out of the show about a couple of weeks.

Book changes have also been spasmodically made plus new tunes for the score. In this regard two additional songs are already being used which were not present at the opening, and it is said more melodies are to come.

A comedy by a well known playwright announced for production next month by a producer, who is now seeking an angel to bank roll the piece, according to those who have read the script, makes "Frankie and Johnnie" sound like a bed time story.

Daring nature of the play has caused several angels approached by the producer to duck for cover.

Wealthiest stock concern on record, with more money behind the venture than the usual Broadway legit outfit, is Robert McLaughlin's stock now operating in Detroit. Company, which is cleaning up, is backed by H. B. Stair, formerly of Stair & Havlin, and Lee Shubert.

Stair still goes around the theatre turning out lights.

A considerable amount of the trade which William Bolitho's Communistic play, "Overture," is getting at the Longacre is coming from radical Jewish and liberal newspapers.

It's said these publications, because of the nature of the play, are giving their whole hearted support.

Walter Damrosch may be backing "The Life Line," by Gretchen Damrosch Finletter, which Leo Bulgakov is producing. Damrosch is the conductor and composer and father of the playwright.

Bulgakov's rep venture last year was financed by Harry Moses, owner of the American rights to "Grand Hotel."

Jane Carroll former prima donna in the legit who attracted some attention at the Metropolitan last season, has quit opera. She says she doesn't want to get fat and one has to be fat to sing opera.

After quitting the Met she started dieting and is down to 125 pounds. About a year ago Miss Carroll became Mrs. Crummie and was listed in the Social Register. But she and her husband are off that list—they found out that Miss Carroll was an actress. She laughed that off as easily as the Met contract.

Waiving Cast Claims on Flop Filed at Equity

Basil Ziegler, producer of "Of All Things," musical which folded in Atlantic City two weeks ago, has been added to Equity's "bad boy" list of managers.

Claims against Ziegler have been placed at Equity by "Things" principals, who waived bond and were stranded when the show closed. Claims include hotel and transportation, with Equity refusing to help the actors because of the bond waiver.

"Things" chorus has been paid off from the two weeks' bond posted.

Duffys East

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Henry Duffy, coast legit operator, and Dale Winter (Mrs. Duffy), leave for New York Jan. 15 to shop for new plays.

"McCOY" LOOKS COLD

"The Rale McCoy," by M. J. J. McKeown, announced for production by Sam Lowett, has apparently folded for good.

Arthur Sinclair and Maire O'Neill, slated for "McCoy" leads, sailed for Europe last week and will go into "Old Man Murphy" by Pat Kearny for Robert Newman when they return.

Moss, Fontana Go Vaud

Moss and Fontana have stepped out of the Billy Rose show, "Sweet and Low." They will play vaude for a time and will remain in New York for a club engagement now under consideration.

ERLANGERS RELINQUISH CHICAGO BLACKSTONE

Chicago, Dec. 23.

The Blackstone theatre lease has not been renewed by Erlangers. The house will be operated by Tract Drake, owner of this property as well as the Blackstone and Drake hotels.

Ed Wappler, present manager, will remain as Drake's representative, booking the house independently. First attraction is Mrs. Fiske, with the theatre advancing railroad fare for the troupe from New York City. Mrs. Fiske opens Jan. 12, following the current engagement of George M. Cohan in "The Tavern."

Future Erlanger bookings will be concentrated at the Erlanger theatre on Clark street. Aaron Jones continues as manager of the latter house.

ENGAGEMENTS

Claibourne Foster, "Bad Girl" (road).

Four Eaton Boys, Four Merrymakers, "You Said It."

Edward Crandall, "Much Ado About Nothing."

Fewer Attractions Promise Big Holiday Reward if Boom Comes

Broadway slowed up further last week with the closer approach to Christmas. With the holiday falling on this Thursday, the actual start of the holiday theatre-going is not expected until Friday. Next week punctuated by New Year's will be the real holiday clean-up for theatres, if real trade does come this season.

The holiday card of premieres has boosted the number of attractions on Broadway to over 40, but there are still plenty of dark spots, more than any holiday season in recent times. Any swing to the legit should benefit the whole because of the comparatively limited number of shows.

"New Yorkers" $54,000

Doubtful if anything in town sold out for all performances last week. However, "The New Yorkers" maintained an amazing pace by grossing $54,000 its second week. The show is in the largest capacity house (Broadway) on Broadway, and it is possible to exceed $60,000 weekly. Nothing is even close to "New Yorkers" in point of gross. All other musicals well under $40,000, and several former leaders under $30,000.

"Petticoat Influence," last week's sole entrant, was well regarded and started off to a pace of $13,000, good at this period. Actual dramatic leaders are "Grand Hotel," "Once In a Lifetime," "Tonight or Never," "Elizabeth the Queen" and "The Vinegar Tree."

A Kiss of Importance" suddenly folded at the Fulton Saturday, house going dark. "Roar China!" leaves the Beck this week; "Elizabeth the Queen" moving down from the Guild, which presents "Midnight" next week. Gaided openings next week are "Meet My Sister," Shubert, and "The Queen at Home," Times Square.

Average grosses indicated for most part because general business under normal week before Christmas.

"Ballyhoo," Hammerstein's (1st week) (M-1,265-$5.50). Presented by Arthur Hammerstein; producer's second major musical this season; opened Monday.

"Brown Buddies," Liberty (12th week) (M-1,202-$3). Colored show dropped under $10,000; has been doing fair business and may last through winter.

"Elizabeth the Queen," Guild (8th week) (CD-914-$3). During subscription period did around $18,000; a bit less last week but strong and moves to Beck next week; "Midnight" follows here.

"Fine and Dandy," Erlanger's (14th week) (M-1,531-$6.60). Was tied for leadership at an average of $40,000 under three weeks ago; under $30,000, but should come back next week.

"First Night," Eltinge (5th week) (CD-802-$3). Management hopeful, but business very light to date.

"Five Star Final," Cort (1st week) (CD-1,043-$3). Presented by A. H. Woods; newspaper play by Louis Weitzenkorn; opens Friday (26).

"Flying High," Apollo (33d week) (M-1,168-$4.40). One week more to go, then tours; was a musical leader last season; lately around $25,000; succeeding attraction in doubt.

"Grand Hotel," National (8th week) (CD-1,161-$4.40). Very little affected; dramatic smash is leader of non-musicals with $31,000 indicated on nine performance basis.

"Girl Crazy," Alvin (11th week) (M-1,387-$5.50). One of season's real musical hits; grosses around $40,000, until pre-holiday slump; $35,000 indicated last week.

"Greeks Had a Name for It," Harris (14th week) (C-1,060-$3). A comedy hit that was getting nearly $20,000 weekly; around $15,000 lately but should come back.

"Green Pastures," Mansfield (44th week) (CD-1,050-$4.40). Aimed for better than a year's run; held up to over $19,000 until Thanksgiving; then $16,000, but still strong.

"Kiss of Importance," Fulton. Closed last Saturday; a flash of business first week then dropped; house dark.

"Life Is Like That," Little (1st week) (C-1-600-$3). Presented independently (Orrie W. Lacey) written by Jo Millward; opened Monday.

"Lysistrata," 44th St. (30th week) (C-1,322-$3.85). Continuance through winter in doubt bar has made a run of it; after averaging $20,000 during autumn, slipped to $15,000.

"Man in Possession," Booth (9th week) (CD-768-$3.85). English show started off very well with a $12,000 pace; slipped recently under $9,000.

"Nina Rosa," Majestic (13th week) (M-1,717-$5.50). Resumed Monday after laying off last week; had been getting $25,000 but dropped to $20,000 or less.

"Oh Promise Me," Morosco (6th week) (F-893-$3.85). Laugh show that should make the grade; an agency buy missed here; about $12,000.

"On the Spot," Forrest (9th week) (D-1,015-$3). Started off at $14,000 and went above that mark; estimated around $12,000 recently.

"Once in a Lifetime," Music Box (14th week) (C-1,000-$3.85). Only at Thursday matinee was pre-Christmas slump felt; could have been avoided by better ticket distribution; average $23,000 weekly.

"Overture," Longacre (4th week) (CD-1,019-$3). Claiming strong advance sale and a betterment in pace last week, which is unusual at this period; over $9,000.

"Pagan Lady," 48th St. (10th week) (C-969-$3). A money show, though not with the actual leaders; had been averaging $15,000; last week about $12,000.

"Petticoat Influence," Empire (2nd week) (C-1,099-$3). Promising start with exceptional matinee draw indicated first week; the gross rated $13,000 or better.

"Purity," Ritz (1st week) (C-945-$3). Presented by Lee Shubert; adapted from the French by Ralph Roeder; opens Thursday (26).

"Roar China," Beck (9th week) (D-1,189-$3). Final week; slipped after six week subscription period, but well regarded try; "Elizabeth the Queen" moves down next week from Guild.

"Stepping Sisters," Royale (36th week) (F-1,118-$3). Still here and with cut rate coupons is making a little money; average $5,000.

"Smiles," Ziegfeld (6th week) (M-1,622-$6.60). Getting fairly good trade, but not what a musical of its pretence should draw; around $35,000 indicated.

"Strictly Dishonorable," Avon (67th week) (C-830-$3.85). One more week for long run comedy hit; next attraction "Made in Hollywood" (with another title) due Jan. 5.

"Sweet and Low," Chanin's (6th week) (R-1,413-$5.50). Breaking even and may make a run of it; grosses lately more than $20,000 weekly.

"That's Gratitude," John Golden (16th week) (C-900-$4.40). Average better than $15,000, but since Thanksgiving dropped down to $12,000; should last through winter.

"The Inspector General," Hudson (1st week) (C-1,094-$3.85). Presented by Jed Harris; adapted by John Anderson from original of Gogol; opened Tuesday.

"The Life Line," Vanderbilt (1st week) (C-771-$3). Presented independently (Leo Bulgakov Associates) written by Gretchen Damrosch; opens Saturday (27).

"The New Yorkers," Broadway (3rd week) (R-1,900-$5.50). Great pace maintained by new musical success; second week almost as good as first, with takings nearly $54,000.

"The Truth Game," Ethel Barrymore (1st week) (C-1,090-$3). Presented by Lee Shubert; written by Ivor Novello, who is co-starred with Billie Burke; opens Saturday (27).

"This is New York," Plymouth (5th week) (CD-1,042-$3.85). Paced around $11,000; figured a good agency show if the buy system was in vogue.

"Three's a Crowd," Selwyn (11th week) (R-1,067-$5.50). Average pace has been over $34,000; a bit less in slump weeks, but one of Broadway's smashes.

"Tonight or Never," Belasco (6th week) (CD-1,000-$3.85). Started out at better than $19,000 and maintained the pace; among the comedy leaders and expected to run the season.

"Up Pops the Devil," Masque (13th week) (C-700-$3). Did very well first two months but not among leaders; $11,000 to $12,000 for a time; down under $8,000 recently; should click however.

"Vanities," New Amsterdam (26th week) (R-1,702-$5.50). Held to rather good money during off weeks and may last through winter; about $22,000.

"The Vinegar Tree," Playhouse (6th week) (C-968-$3.85). Comedy hit; figured to run into warm weather; average for opening weeks rated over $17,000.

Other Attractions

"King Lear," Ambassador. Fritz Leiber's engagement; starts Thursday (25).

"Electra," New Yorker; performance in French with Madeleine Lely in title role; opens Friday (26).

Ruth Draper, Comedy (4th Friday (26); has been coming up.

Davenport's Indoor Circus. Jolson's; two weeks; opened Monday.

"Twelfth Night" and "Mr. and Mrs. Bottle," Maxine Elliott's; Jane Cowl in alternating attractions.

"Mrs. Moonlight," Bijou; 5th week.

Casting as Is

There is a potential producer in New York who placed an actor under contract for $300 a week.

Then he borrowed $20 from his player.

Now, with an associate in the contemplated production, he is sleeping in the actor's room waiting for things to break.

ANNUAL SLUMP CUTS INTO CHI.

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Business dove sharply for most of the legits with the Christmas spirit taking the rap for the dive. It becomes increasingly difficult for run pieces to keep away from the cut-rate system that has five of the town's 11 open houses in its toils. Now "Lysistrata" goes on the chopping block with the advent of 1931.

Two openings—George Cohan in "The Tavern" at the Blackstone Sunday and Fred Stone in "Ripples" at the Illinois Monday—both to a first-night sell out. "Berkeley Square" opens Christmas night at the Selwyn, with the house dark four days after "Dracula" closed Saturday (20th) for the road. Femmes gave "Dracula" a big play, and the big necking drama had a nice farewell tally.

"Simple Simon" held its opening week figure of $26,000, and headed the parade. Ideal for the holidays, and with kid appeal the show missed the pinch that swept through the Rialto. The rest took the slap, but, compared to year ago, there are more houses open, and proportionally more business, despite the wail of blues. One and two years ago Chi legits closed before the holidays. This year they all remained open.

Estimates for Last Week

"Dracula," Selwyn (3d, final week) (D-1,086-$2.50). Got $8,000 or better on its final week. Liked by femmes who like to scream and be frightened, and they supported it right the 20th with "Berkeley Square" opening Christmas night.

"Lysistrata," Majestic (6th week) (D-1,997-$3.50). Fell away to $14,000 and set to go on the cut-rate plan after Jan. 1. Piece now feels it will be successful, as it became a Chicago institution when several boys walked back stage and took away the pay roll.

"Michael and Mary," Harris (3d week) (D-1,084-$3). Around $10,000.

"Mendel, Inc.," Adelphi (6th week) (C-1,110-$2.50). Skipping along at $10,000 a drop from last week, but still strong.

"Old Rascal," Garrick (6th week) (D-1,276-$3). Holding steady at a little over $10,000, which is collected with the aid of the cut-rate plan.

"Ripples," Illinois (M-1,500-$4.40) —A sell out the opening night (Monday).

"Simple Simon," Grand (2d week) (M-1,200-$4.40). Keep the opening week figure of $26,000, with conditions favorable for continued good biz.

"Subway Express," Erlanger (5th week) (D-1,319-$3). Down to $9,000, but will be held to prevent the house going dark, and with the hope it will build after the holidays. Cut rating.

"Three Little Girls," Great Northern (12th week) (O-1,365-$3.85). Didn't do so bad at $12,000.

"The Tavern," Blackstone (D-1,219-$3.00). Had a sellout Sunday night of old friends who came to see George M. Cohan.

"Young Sinners," Apollo (12th week) (CD-1,443-$3). With the slump it shipped under $11,000, which is a fair figure for the piece and the light overhead.

Only 2 Philly Houses Open; Broad Dark Xmas Week for First Time

Philadelphia, Dec. 23.

Only two houses opened last week and both of them had heavy dramatic fare—Shaw and Pirandello. Business was fine for both shows. The Guild turned in $17,000 with the second and final week of "The Apple Cart" at the Garrick, and the Professional Players got a remarkable $12,000 for the third week of "As You Desire Me" at the Walnut.

Latter play, ragged at the opening and not very well regarded by the critics, has gained each week here and now shapes up as a possible smash due to rewriting of second act. Excellent trade here is directly attributable to subscription campaign, the Professional Players having established themselves very solidly in this, their second year. They have not had a losing week so far this season, eleven weeks in all.

This week presents a muddled theatrical situation. The Erlanger and Shubert are the only houses open up to Christmas. The Erlanger has "Sweet Adeline" with a fine advance sale and the Shubert has "Artists and Models." On Christmas Day the Walnut reopens after three dark days with "As You Desire Me," which winds up its local stay on Saturday. Also on Christmas the Forrest will be relighted with the Lou Holtz musical, "You Said It" and the Chestnut will get "Blackbirds."

The Garrick has a last minute single week's booking, opening Tuesday with Brock Pemberton's new comedy, "Made in Hollywood." The Broad, probably for the first time in its history, will be dark Christmas Day. It will not reopen until next Monday, when "Storm Song," with Francine Larrimore, is scheduled. Also on Monday will be "Popaze" at the Walnut and "Green Grow the Lilacs" at the Garrick. January promises "Flying High" at the Shubert, and the 12th will find "Street Scene" at the Chestnut and "Strictly Dishonorable" at the Broad. "Scarlet Sister Mary" and "Michael and Mary" are booked for the 26th at the Forrest and Walnut, respectively. Otherwise bookings for next month are in an extremely chaotic state, with many rumors but few definite arrangements.

Estimates of Last Week

"Sweet Adeline" (Erlanger, first week). Fine advance for this musical, which may put this hoodoo house back on the map. Engagement indefinite.

"Artists and Models" (Shubert, first week). In for two weeks only. House was dark last week.

"Made in Hollywood" (Garrick, one week only). Opens Tuesday, last minute booking. "Green Grow the Lilacs" next Monday. "Apple Cart" got $17,000 last week; very good.

"As You Desire Me" (Walnut, 4th week). House dark first three days of the week. Reopening Christmas matinee. Fine last week with $12,000.

"You Said It" (Forrest, first week). Opens Christmas night, house having been dark for a week due to flop of "Sons o' Guns."

"Blackbirds" (Chestnut, first week). Also opening Christmas after house has been dark for several weeks.

Frisco Grosses

San Francisco, Dec. 23.

Only three legitimate theatres were doing business last week and none of them getting a real play. As a pre-Christmas week it was as bad as expected and perhaps a little worse. Stores were jammed with crowds, but not many buying.

Duffy's Alcazar has "Stepping Sisters" in its seventh and final week and got under $3,500, maybe out of the red and maybe not. At the President, another Duffy house, "It's a Boy" in second week also Brodied because of the season. Under $4,000.

At the Tivoli "The Clutching Claw" also got a pre-Christmas smack, around $3,000. Tivoli will have no performances Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, but will open Christmas night with "The Cradle Snatchers."

H'wood Legits Could Be Counted on Hands Of Two-Fingered Gnu

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Hollywood held up whatever legit business there was last week with two shows open. In Los Angeles all was dark and dismal.

At the El Capitan "Michael and Mary" was put on the trucks Saturday night after a good four weeks. Getaway week was not riot at $4,600, but considering the holidays and a couple of bank closings it wasn't so bad. Joe E. Brown, from pictures, opened in "Elmer the Great" Sunday.

At the Music Box the Civic Repertory is back at work after a week's layoff, with "Peter Pan."—Barrie play is naturally aimed at the children. First week got $5,600, about average.

Two openings scheduled for Christmas Day, "Up Pops the Devil" at the Belasco and "Stepping Sisters" at the Hollywood Playhouse.

Estimates for Last Week

"Michael and Mary" (El Capitan, 4th, final week). Finished at $4,600, above average. Engagement showed best profit for the house in some time.

"Peter Pan" (Music Box, Civic Rep, 1st week). If the kids aren't getting too smart it'll be okay; $5,600 for first week is above average.

the other day and noticed how many people are using one cent stamps.

These are some of the ideas that the films have given the public about back stage:

That the stage manager is a gruff guy and boss of the whole show.

That chorus girls have swell dressing rooms.

That managers all wear checkered suits and smoke cigars.

That the acts all eventually play the Palace.

That the leading lady has two or three maids.

That everybody can walk right into anybody's dressing room.

That the back stage doorman bangs our with the coat room girl, and gives advice to the leading lady.

That all actors live in cheap furnished rooms.

That stage hands handle the actors roughly.

That an actor can make up in two minutes.

Why doesn't someone start a musical show with a marriage and finish up with a big divorce fandango?

Soon we will see shows advertised "produced by the Postal Telegraph Company." This fact is that the telegraph company had a piece of show business. Pittsburgh Figures

Pittsburgh, Dec. 23.

First time in years around here legits have kept lights up week before Christmas, and the innovation not so profitable.

"In the Meantime" saved at Nixon by Guild subscription, window sale for this one amounting to little. Under $10,000, if that, and piece looks like one of the Guild's weak sisters.

At the Alvin, "Bird in Hand" got off to a nice start with a Monday benefit, but after that settled down to amble along as best it could. Maybe $8,500.

PLAYS ABROAD

GIGOLO

(Revival)

Three-act comedy by Louis Verneuil at the Theatre Daunou, Paris, Dec. 6.

Charlotte	Mme. Jane Marnac
Jacques	Pernand Gravey
Lucien	Lucien Baroux

Play retitled "Gigolo," formerly known as "L'Amant de Coeur," which means the same thing, has already been done abroad under the English title of "Triangle."

It is undoubtedly Verneuil's masterpiece, and is due for good business at the Daunou, where it was put for a limited run.

Story seeks to show that no woman can really love the man who keeps her, as demonstrated by the fact that the impecunious lover of the first act, when he has become rich in the third, is replaced as "gigolo" by the formerly wealthy man, now broke, who used to keep the woman.

There are only three characters in the play—one woman and two men. The men parts are acted fairly, but Jane Marnac, as the woman, is magnificent and draws heavily. She not only acts in the play but staged it, and manages the house for the run, doing great business with the production, cost of which is trifling as compared to the business. It is one more instance of a revival doing better business than a new play this season. Maxi.

MUSSE

Four act comedy by Jules Romains, Atelier, Paris, Dec. 5.

Mme. Jean Musse	Suzanne Rousset
Jean Musse	Charles Dullin
Pettigrue	Julien Bertheau
The Controller	Marco Behar
Lepape	Duard Flis
Arthur Flabertow	Michel Duran
The President	Francois Vibert
Manager of Agency	Edmond Beauchamp
Mme. Laure	Marcelle Charles Dullin

This comedy is not so much a brief against hypocrisy as against every kind of restriction which is brough to bear on mankind by the necessity of maintaining social order. Though America is not specifically mentioned, it is obvious that American current laws are aimed at more than those of any other country.

Story is that of an average Frenchman who kicks at every petty annoyance resulting from existing laws, and finds that whereas he could get by with a little tactful dissimu'ation, plain dealing gets him in trouble every time, whether with the customs inspectors or the tax collector. The man is thoroughly annoyed and tries to get protection from a league, the purpose of which is the protection of modern man. He witnesses one of the meetings, and finds that instead of increasing personal liberty, each member hypocritically grinds a personal axe and wants more laws restricting personal liberty.

Thoroughly disgusted this time, he goes to a private detective agency and asks if it is possible to be protected against the extremes of law and order. Eventually the manager puts him in touch with a woman, who is really a procuress, and who demonstrates how easy it is to do things without being caught. As an instance, she reveals that the president of the league is no better than others. Last act, taking place in the president's house, shows the reformer being convicted by the free-thinker of hypocrisy and double-acting.

The play is staged by Charles Dullin, actor-manager of the Atelier, in the intentionally crude way the house is noted for. As a matter of fact, staging is very unimportant for the play, as it is more a philosophical discussion than anything else.

Acting is fair all round, with the principal parts excellently done by Charles Dullin as the man who kicks against the fetters of social life; Francois as the president, and Marcelle Dullin as the procuress.

There is no love story of any kind, the whole thing remaining on a purely philosophical basis, and expounding the idea that modern man is the victim of laws, supposedly made to improve him, but really making people hypocrits.

Play seems to be in for a fair run in Paris, and would probably succeed wherever people are interested in social problems, and bothered by excess of legislation. Maxi.

BOEN

Paris, Dec. 10.

Comedy in three acts by Jules Romaine at the Odeon, Dec. 7.

Boen	Arquilliere
Menuise	Aime Clariond
Menuise	Aime Clariond
Hebingre	Louis Seigner
Putiau	Bonifas
Futarel	Baconnet
Herve	Claude Farge
Jacqo Parker	Jacques Dumesnil
Madame Hebingre	Eva Reynal
Sabine	Chrysaline

Play, put on at the Odeon for its reopening after remodelling, is a decided hit.

Story is that of a small French industrialist, who, through lack of proper bookkeeping, doesn't know whether his assets or his liabilities are larger. After putting an expert accountant to work on his books, he discovers that he is worth a lot of money, and also has an offer from an American firm to sell them a valuable patent, the inventor of which he never paid. Sudden wealth goes to his head and he suddenly wants to be good to everybody out of all proportion, and, acting as a nouveau riche, wants to shower presents on his stenographer and induce the wife of his inventor employe to become his mistress by raising the man's salary out of all reason.

Except for that particular woman, he finds everybody strongly refusing his presents, curtain closing on his disgust at not finding people appreciating his goodwill and the beauty of his poverty expounded by his stenographer and his son's teacher.

Aime Clariond as the impecunious school teacher, happily living in poverty, is excellent, and so is Mlle. Chrysaline, who does the part of a well-bred but impecunious stenographer. Rest of the cast is fair, with Arquilliere acting the role of the industrialist rather too much like a shop foreman. There is no love element in the play, since the attempted seduction of the employe's wife by the industrialist is purely mercenary, and designed to show one evil effect of wealth suddenly placed in hands not used to it. The author's open desire to give an expose of a theory and to expound every argument pro and con, sometimes slows up the play, though on both sides some very human lines draw applause. The coarse satisfaction of the man who suddenly finds himself wealthy when he was fearing poverty, is very well described. On the other hand, the moral advantage of poverty strongly appeal at times to the audience.

Staging at the Odeon is rather poor. The only set used shows the shabby office of the industrialist, hardly improved in the last act when he has become rich.

Despite the fact that purely dramatic interest is often marred by the author's desire to sermonize and its poor staging, play is playing S. R. O. Marx.

OUT-OF-TOWN REVIEW

Writers' Club

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Writers' club proved only 25 per cent effective in its selection of one-acters to open its season of monthly programs. With four on the bill only one of them lived up to the standard set in the past.

Curtain raiser, "Losing Women Without Men," an abbreviated femme "Journey's End" by Lenore Coffee and William Cowen, Hollywood scenarists. This, too, was the only one of the quartet holding promise for a future in professional ranks.

Some of the lines were a little rough in spots but in Sapolioed form the sketch could fit well in vaude. Picture possibilities also look heavy, offering more meat for adaptation purposes than the majority of plays or stories bought for the screen.

Play deals with a unit of women ambulance drivers at the front, captained by a society leader who brought her social distinctions into the war zone, especially pronounced when she learns that one of her drivers had spent a couple of hours in a hotel room with her son.

Girl was set for dismissal on morality charges but she twisted the reasoning processes of the older woman when she argued that the interlude was sacrificial on her part to give the boy a few pleasant minutes before he moved up probably to get bumped off.

Older woman then has to choose who shall remain behind in the station, which is in for sure destruction. She picks herself for the billet, sending the girl away feeling the kid now means more to her son than she does.

One character, an ex-chorine, was ably filled by Cecil Cunningham.

"The Artist's Model" molded on a blackout routine gave an opportunity for a fine character bit by Tempe Pigott as a George Belcher type of English old hag, but further than that it offered nothing. Written by George Patrick.

Same for "How Firm a Foundation," a high school dramatic type of piece, anent the Ladies' Aid Society choosing the architecture for its proposed new clubhouse.

Also on the bill was George Bernard Shaw's "Dark Lady of the Sonnets."

Fewer names than usual graced the opening bill. Best known were Lionel Belmore, Carmelita Geraghty, Mary Forbes and Cecil Cunningham.

First Drop in Months

Minneapolis, Dec. 23.

Business at the Shubert was very much off, the Bainbridge dramatic stock company having a poor week for the first time in several months. A gross of around $3,500 evidently reflects pre-Christmas and depression influences. The offering, "The Ghost Train," did not hit so well.

Stock burlesque at the Gayety also had rough sledding. "The Broadway Ramblers" got under $3,000.

After a spell of darkness the Metropolitan and Lyceum light up again New Year's week. The former will have "Michael and Mary" and the latter "A Month in the Country."

RUSS OPERA BIG

Paris, Dec. 14.

Despite the reaction against anything Russian which has lately set in, Russian opera again goes big.

Success of the Russian Opera at the Champs Elysees, results in a touring company, managed by Slawjansky d'Arcenel, leaving for the French provinces, after which it will play Spain, Belgium, Holland, Italy and Germany.

Arthur Hammerstein, a specialist in operetta, turns to the lighter form of musical comedy in "Ballyhoo." It is a fairly diverting show, but the premiere Monday night did not indicate rating among the leaders. Probably will draw moderately.

"Ballyhoo" is rather a one-man show, with W. C. Fields the star. Fields is a genuinely funny comedian. He worked up a bass viol bit into the biggest laugh of the evening and late in the going. Fields brings back the pool table bit for further giggles; also the cigar box manipulation, at which he is adroit. In the first act a skit with one of those pint-sized motor cars tickled the house more than anything else in that section.

There is a book to this show—too much book, really. The story is related to C. C. Pyle's nearly famous across-the-continent footrace, referred to as the "bunion derby" a couple of years back. The promoter in the book is "Q. Q. Quale," and Fields, minus that black mustache, looks like Pyle. A troupe of entertainers accompanies the runners; also a football ace known as "Whitey Duke" instead of Red Grange, who was with the Pyle foragers. Quale is constantly in trouble with bill collectors in every stand, and there are attachments, just as reported about the Pyle race. Finish is in Hollywood with a dash of picture stuff.

A kid runner and his kid sweetheart, along with the caravan as his sister, carry the story all the way. Rather a book fault, it seemed, because too much was alloted to the youngsters. The girl is Jeanie Lang, a cutie from pictures, and very good with numbers. The boy is Don Tomkins.

Grace Hayes is Flora Fay, in love with Quale, who tangents with Goldie La Marr, the troupe's lead, played by Janet Reade. Among the contestants are the Slate Brothers, whose slow soft-shoe work sent them to a big score twice. Not identified were two hand-balancing youths who worked in a training bit and impressed.

"Ballyhoo" has several numbers that may make up for book lapses. Easily the standout song is "No Wonder I'm Blue," first given by Miss Hayes and repeated by others. Miss Reade's chance came with "I'm One of God's Children," and she sent it across with the best individual score. Back of her for a time was the ensemble, more animated than at any other spot and with striking light effects. Miss Reade is sporting the latest platinum shade of hair-dress. She, too, had much of the story to carry; and it may have detracted from her performance. "Throw It Out the Window" might get something, but "If I Were You" has a better chance, and nicely handled by little Miss Lang. Chaz Chase had his inning in the first act, and it was noticeable that the stage was dusty. Max Hoffmann, Jr., used late in the show and just a bit. William Blanche (Shorty) used by Fields more than usual.

The chorus numbers looked good, though the girls are not overworked. Earl Lindsay did the directing, going in for buck and wingling, and getting results. Ted Black's band worked on the stage in two scenes, stressing the "You" number.

With a couple of the run musicals due to slide out of town soon, "Ballyhoo" should have a chance, since it has laughs and tunes. Cast supporting the star not so hot. Ibee.

LIFE IS LIKE THAT

Comedy drama with music in three acts and one scene by Jo Milward. Presented at the Little, Dec. 22 by Curtis W. Emery. Staged by Paul Edouard Martin. Music by Clifford Lang, Jack Hyman, Hazel Chisolm and Helen Kaminsky.

Tong	Hanaki Yoshiwara
Elizabeth Courtney	Mary Morris
Charlie Reed	Alan Davis
Delores	Helen Shipman
May Addison	Doris Covert
William Courtney	Edward Pawley
Jane Barton	Peggy Shannon

(By arrangement with Wm. A. Brady, Jr.)

Jimmie	James K. Rogers
Dr. Ramsey	William H. Barwald

Confused and incoherent play. One murder is the outcome of an unhappy mating that's surrounded with three romances on the queer. It's all supposed to deal with modern sex aspects, but it's no credit to the theatre. Even at the low top of $2.50 it wouldn't be a bargain to the generality of theatregoers. But with small cast, a small theatre and low cost, sensation-seekers among the cut-raters might keep it going for a few weeks.

It's one of those morbid conceptions of life. Even when the play has a sane moment or two side issues confuse it.

One fortunate twist to the piece, however, is that the goofy society wife with a basso-contralto voice has a bad alim. She might have left low Peggy Shannon, the pleasantest moment of the play, instead of the oriental valet.

There's a song in the second act sung by Helen Shipman in the vaude manner. It got an encore. Maybe that's drama. The way the author attempts to hinge his philosophy on the innate goodness of a character that was remarkably careless about men is something to marvel at. No glamour or charm to the character. The dialog is handed out as the "frank modern" kind, but really just commonplace sex drivel.

There's a maudlin incident about a betrayal of a chorine. The seducer makes good when he learns of the girl's real dilemma. He was just a man bruised by life when his first sweetheart turned out a disappointment.

Moscow and Russia come in for helpings, and so much so that one wonders for a while if it isn't going to turn propaganda.

Altogether the author tries to hinge a tale showing how there might be some good in the worst of us. But he gets mixed up in his own debate.

Curtis Emery, the producer, is from the former partnership of Lohmuller & Emery, who made "Virtue's Bed" last season, and Lohmuller is now backstage, again with Earl Carroll. Emery at that time promised a $3 theatre, and it looks like he's trying to make good. Shan.

Ubangi Savages Are Stranded Homebound

Paris, Dec. 14.

Saucerplate women originating from the African inland town of Fort Archambault, are now stranded in the French equatorial African coast town of Mutadi. Following their appearance in Paris and America they were going back home, when the death of explorer Bergonier, who had brought them over, occurred during the trip back.

His widow, who is in destitute circumstances, could not undertake to pay for the return voyage. The French-African authorities are trying to help the saucerplate women to go back to their native town by obtaining free passes on the African railroad for them.

Another book reviewer goes on the air as a part of the American Book Bindery's campaign to aid the book business. He is Harry Salpeter assistant to Harry Hansen, book critic of the New York "World."

FUTURE PLAYS

"Mr. Eno," by C. K. Munro is next on list for Charles Hopkins for production at the Hopkins, New York.

Munro authored "At Mrs. Beams," produced by the Theatre Guild, season before last.

David Morris will have the cast lead in "The Best of Families" by Anita Hart, which Thomas Kilpatrick is producing. Piece, formerly called "Baby in the Case," goes into rehearsal next week, Joe Graham directing.

Betty Blythe, pictures, will shortly make her bow in legit, coming in via "Paging Danger" by Clare Cavallo, society woman, and Leighton Osmun.

Piece will be produced next January by George Staten and John McKaig.

Cast of "Wet or Dry," by Slater La Master, Associated Theatrical Producers producing, includes J. H. Taylor, Victoria Montgomery, Rocco Caparaso, Doris Rider, Harold Cathman, Lauriel Woods and Charles Sobel. Piece slated for rehearsal next week.

Harry Feinberg, picture producer (Real Art) and Jack Stern, Jewish legit producer, are back of the Associated Theatrical Company, new outfit. Cast is reported going in on commonwealth plan.

Feinberg and Stern have also taken "The Eternal Mother" by Harry Kalmonovitz. Play has already been given in Jewish theatres.

"Criminals," by Ferdinand Bruchner, has been taken by Sidney Ross. Play was produced by Max Reinhardt just before the German production of "Grand Hotel," now current.

New indie producing office was opened last week by George Auerback, who will shortly project "The World's Greatest Lover," by S. K. Lauren. Auerbach was previously connected with Sidney Ross, N. Y. producer, and Richard Boleslavsky, picture director.

Alan Dinehart, legit actor, has turned producer and is currently casting "Yesterday's Husband," by Harry Siegel and Dinehart. "Husband," starring Dinehart, will go into rehearsal next week.

First dramatic show ever to have real monkeys, and not just actors in the cast, will be produced next fall by Alexander McKaig, who has taken "Achilles Had a Heel," new drama by Martin Flavin. Scene is laid in a zoo. Taking in the monks, title and locale only other thing the play needs is a theme song.

"Air Mail," by Kirby Hawkes and Jo Milward, has been taken by Emery as his second, to follow "Life" immediately. Emery has leased the Little.

"One Can't Marry a Poor Girl," tentative title for play by Istvan Zagon, is currently casting for Alexander McKaig. Piece goes into rehearsal around Jan. 1.

McKaig has tabled production of "Wooden Weddings," by Dwight Taylor, previously announced.

After changes in rehearsal, "Meet My Sister," a new Shubert show, opened yesterday (23) in the Majestic, Brooklyn, and will move to Broadway, opening Dec. 31 at the Shubert, N. Y.

"Made in Hollywood," which Brock Pemberton is producing, will not open cold at the Avon, New York, as first planned, but will play two weeks out of town instead, opening at the Nixon, Pittsburgh, next week.

"Mission Stiffs," by Hubert Warren, goes into rehearsal next week (29) with Joseph Bernstein figuring as producer.

Cast includes Ethel Keppler, William Seamon, Harry Mudere, Theodore Degnam, Helen Devlin, Grace Cornell, H. N. Arden and others. Piece is a satire on commercialized panhandling.

"They're In Again," a rewritten version of "Potash and Perlmutter Detectives," by Montague Glass and Jules Eckhardt Goodman, produced in New York four years ago, is being readied for revival by Collins & Adams, with Robert Leonard and Sam Mann set for the leads. Leonard was in the original production opposite Ludwig Satz. Piece will play the subway circuit and then head for Chicago.

Jack Linder, vaudeville booking agent, will produce "The Daughter of Diamond Lil," a new play now being completed by Miss Adeline Leitzbach. Linder presented "The Squealer" and Mae West in "Diamond Lil." She will not be in the Leitzbach vehicle, which goes into rehearsal on Jan. 5.

Show will be produced by Gordon and the Erlanger offices for spring.

"Who Goes There?" mystery melo, has gone into rehearsal, with Howard Burke as producer.

Cast includes Raymond Cronin, Ellwood Engelhart, Joseph Harvey, Gertrude Lyons, Thomas Healy, Arthur Busch, Frank Sullivan, Eugene Kenney and Edward Shields.

"In the Meanwhile," produced by the Theatre Guild and shaping up on tour, will undergo change of title to "Midnight" when the piece steers into the Guild, New York, next week (29).

The Guild's other production, "Green Grow the Lilacs," will be held out for several additional weeks until the Guild finds a suitable spot for it in New York.

"She Means Business," written by Samuel Shipman and produced by James Elliott, with Frederick Stanhope stager directing, is rehearsing in Knights of Columbus hall, New York. The cast includes Ann Davis, Ben Bard, Millard Mitchell, Wallis Clarke, Lee Kohlmar, Ruth Donnelly, Douglas Wood, Edwin Walter, Huston Richards, Kathryn Kohler, Gladys Deering, Herbert Rawlinson, Tom Tempest, Desiree Foster, Forrest Huff and Robert Cummings. Show opens in Jackson Heights, Jan. 12, and plays Jamaica the following week.

"Zero Hour," by Lyman Brown, is another Elliott production, with Alice Brady starred.

"Hobo," by Frank Merlin, will be directed by the author under Elliott's banner. Among the principals are Joseph Sweeney, Paul Kelly and Evelyn Rue. The show opens in Washington Jan. 19, has a week in Newark and then comes into New York.

"Good Times," a musical comedy with an all-Negro cast, will be produced by Walter Brooks. Book is by Luther Yantis and Walter Brooks, with score and lyrics by Al Von Tilzer and George Whiting. Piece scheduled to go into rehearsal late next month.

Alice Brady has been signed by James Elliott as star of "Zero Hour," by Lyman Brown, which Elliott will produce next month.

Support cast now being engaged with show scheduled for rehearsal in two weeks.

"Jersey Lightning," by Langdon McCormack, has been taken by Jules Leventhal. Cast will star Sylvia Bidwell.

"The Chalk Circle" is being produced by I. Richter, new legit producer.

"The Stork Is Dead," Hungarian play which folded recently after a few weeks in New Jersey, is being readied again for another try with Paul Trebitsch producing.

Reported the show will be on commonwealth basis.

"Making Mary," musical by Harold Orlab, was slated to go into rehearsal Monday (22). Ford Gordon and Z. D. Berry, owners of the New Yorker theatre, are reported backing the show.

"Daisies Won't Tell," musical coming in via Alexander Leftwich and Alfred Cheney Johnston, with Alexander Grey and Lester Allen starred, goes into rehearsal Dec. 29.

"Uncle Moses," a new play by Sholom Asch, opens at Maurice Schwartz's Yiddish Art theatre tonight (24). Mr. Schwartz is in the title role. Asch is the author of "God of Vengeance."

Gerald Clark and George Mercer have formed a legit producing partnership to produce "Elmer's Dilemma," authored by Clark, who will also direct the piece.

"Taxi Fare," farce by Martin J. Mooney, is being cast by Robert V. Newman and goes into rehearsal in two weeks.

Newman now has "Storm Song" starring Francine Larrimore in rehearsal and due to open out of town in two weeks after which the young producer will direct attention to "Taxi Fare."

The Theatre Guild has acquired the rights to three new plays, all foreign works which will be added to its current season production list. They are "Miracle of Verdun," by the late Hans Chlumberg; "The Sailors of Cattaro," by Friedrich and "Three Times Waterloo," by Eugene Curster.

The Guild which formerly adhered to seven productions a season already has launched nine productions this season, the three named bringing its output to 12 with possible other additions.

"Red Lights," travesty on New York's traffic system by Howard Avery, goes into rehearsal next week with the author as producer.

Cast includes William Riley, Matt Gregory, Ralph Davis, Frank Shaw, Marion Bollerman, Beth Lynch, Kathleen O'Sullivan, Jane Carter, Elaine Hill, Dorothy Balsar and Thomas Quinn.

"Tour De Mond," adapted by Thomas Wood Stevens from Jules Verne's "Round the World in Eighty Days," will be produced by the Theatre Assembly in February. Stevens has already presented the show in Chicago.

"The Venetian Glass Nephew," musical by Elinor Wylie and Ruth Hale, will be produced by Walter Greenough in February. "Nephew" will be produced apart from the Theatre Assembly's program, also directed by Greenough.

Sensitive Boston

Because Boston censors objected to the part of a pansy role in "Sisters of the Chorus" of that nature was rewritten for the Boston showing.

Part now is a "ham actor."

2 Shows Out

A sudden withdrawal was added to last Saturday's closings on Broadway. Another show will call it a date this week.

"A Kiss of Importance," presented at the Fulton by Arch Selwyn, was taken off after three weeks. First week promising, but trade dropped right off. When cast declined the suggestion of a salary cut the lights were doused.

A KISS OF IMPORTANCE

Opened Dec. 1. "Embarrassingly bad," Gabriel (American). "Too insubstantial to last," Hammond (Her-trib). "Holds one's interest throughout," Rathbun (Sun). "Variety" (Ibee): "Limited draw indicated."

"Roar China!" presented by the Theatre Guild, will close Saturday at the Beck. It is in its ninth week. Attracted some attention and did very well during subscription period, several weekly grosses being around $18,000. May have made some money.

ROAR CHINA

Opened Oct. 27. "Decorative, but it isn't drama," Garland Telegram). "A grand melodramatic spectacle," Seldes (Graphic). "Depressing entertainment," Winchell (Mirror). "Variety" (Ibee): "Will not extend more than double the six-week subscription period."

AHEAD AND BACK

Sam Freedman, p. a. for "Wet or Dry."

Aaron Singer, p. a., "Monkey Business" (Teichner & Young).

Larry Nelmes, back, "Blue Ghost" (Jimmie Cooper, road).

Myles Murphy, ahead, Los Angeles Civic Repertory's "Peter Pan."

Francis X. Hope, general manager James Elliott's production, with Nellie Revell general press representative.

Bloodthirsty Town

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 23.

"Outward Bound" was too profound for the Majestic theatre.

The show opened here last night, but the patrons walked out as they couldn't understand the plot.

They said they want sex and murder.

Stocks

Dramatic stock goes into the Casino, Wildwood, N. J., next week (29) with Thomas Burroughs operating. Company includes Jane Carter, William Maher, James Murphy, Albert Gutschow, Dorothy Dillon, Frank Kavanaugh, Marie Martette, John Kennelly and Robert Rowe.

CONCERT

Carola Goya, interpreter of dances from Spain, is playing a week's engagement at the Comedy theatre. She has youth, grace, beauty and ambition plenty. In her first novelty, "Cadiz," dressed as a bride in white satin and her head crowned with a white mantilla, she danced to delightful rhythm, playing her castanets in response to the moods of Albeniz's music.

Her tacoheo, inspired by a melody of Font, was lovely. Her "Fado," from Portugal, had to be repeated. Between the dance groups Beatrice Weller played harp solos.

2,588th Philharmonic

Sunday afternoon the 2,588th concert by the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York, under the direction of Toscanini, was given at the Met. This director's popularity is the answer to a capacity house. A body of finished musicians gave spirited presentations, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in F minor brought forth storms of applause. Outstanding were the "Thunderstorm," Tempest and Shepherd's song, "Glad and Grateful Feelings After the Storm."

The annual recital of the Princeton University Glee Club at Town Hall is always a real event. This time they played a program made up of numbers from Grieg, Andsky and Taneieu. All the glee clubs seem to be making an artistic step forward with classical repertoire rather than the sentimental ballads of years ago. Dr. Alex Russell at Princeton is the inspiration of the group, and the beautiful way in which these students interpret their music is a tribute to his directorship.

Met's Xmas Oratorio

Bach's Christmas Oratorio was given by the Society of the Friends of Music, Bodansky conducting, at the Met, Sunday afternoon. Mme. Matzenaur (contralto) was the soloist. She still remains the great artist, her voice as fresh as ever. She has spontaneous beauty, poise and grace. The other soloists were Ethel Hayden, soprano; George Meader, tenor; Fraser Gange, bass-baritone; Louis Robert, organist and Curt Ruhroetz, harpsichordist. Miss Hayden's voice, although not exceptional, is pleasing and shows good training, and much intelligence. Mr. Meader and Mr. Gange were not in their usual good voice, but it was a fine performance.

The boxes were well filled and the spirit of Christmas was evidenced, many of the women wearing corsages of holly.

Victor Chenkin gives extraordinary recitals of character songs. His Sunday night at the Craig was an exceptionally brilliant one. He is a unique artist, and his Ukranian songs of the Middle Ages and of Old France, Hebrew songs and those of the poet, Jean de Beranger, were thrills for his large audience. Joshua Fischermann accompanied.

Woman's Glee Club

The Woman's University Glee Club gave its 15th Concert and the first event of its eighth season, under Gerald Reynolds' direction at Town Hall. The object of this Glee Club is to provide a field of social song for college women graduates. Five young Americans, Robert Delaney, Robert Russell Bennett, Quinto E. Maganini, Randall Thompson and Aaron Copeland were represented with music written for the club's 63 singers and half a dozen soloists, Ruth Crawford is the only woman writer of the group, but her chant "To an Angel" was finished too late for rehearsal.

The chorus assisted by Madeleine Marshall at the piano and by Ruth Chalmers, Margaret Hall and Marjorie McIntosh as solo voices, gave Mr. Bennett's dazzling "About a Lorelei."

Christmas songs were sung by the Downtown Glee Club, under direction of Channing Lefebvre, in Carnegie Hall, assisted by the Choir Boys of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. These boys in a group made a picturesque set for cold Carnegie.

German Operetta Film

The birds sing it, the street boys whistle it, the pianos play it as the curtain to "Zwei Herzen in ¾ Takt" ("Two Hearts in Waltz Time") separates and the picture is on at the 55th Street Playhouse. It's all lovely, fascinating stage sets, bright action and good rhythm of music and the audience leaves satisfied.

This dainty Viennese Operetta has been going strong for three months, mostly at capacity. The music and musical direction is under Robert Stolz and he knows his direction.

Gretl Theimer is a beautiful blonde German type and is fetching in a white tulle, tight waist and very full skirt. In a cafe scene she wears a simple black crepe with a throw of white, and has a pretty and pleasing voice, also dances very well. Anni Lohmeier (Irene Eisinger), is a most attractive, brunette and wears good looking clothes. Her one outfit of beige afternoon, one piece, with a beige fur coat and large shawl collar of beige fox is smart and in an evening gown of white satin she is lovely, her voice while not large has color.

Olga Didur and Claudio Frigerio, two of the Met's talented new singers this season, appeared with Dorothy Norman, pianist, in the holiday program at the Plaza's artistic mornings. Illuminated Christmas trees, with festoons of foliage, decorated the ballroom, which held an audience of 1,000 fashionables.

Miss Didur gave three encores after singing a Spanish "Jota" by De Falla, and Mr. Frigerio sang Spanish and Italian popular songs to guitar accompaniment.

Miss Didur had a fetching outfit of ruby velvet, long sleeves and square neck, and the ladies of the audience were swathed in furs, jewels and what-not, these mornings buzz with excitement and interest, and are the best patronized of any of the morning musicales given.

Harry Cumpson was heard in a piano recital at Town Hall, he is attempting in his modernistic style to interpret Bach in his own way, but his conception seems far removed and he made of Bach's music a noisy affair.

legacies from Avery Hopwood, dramatist.

Frances Upton and Tunney

Frances Upton, to whom Lou Holtz has long been attentive, is featured in the new Holtz show, "You Said It." Daughter of Frank Upton, New York policeman who became a detective sergeant, she was born in the same Greenwich Village house as Gene Tunney.

She once worked in the music department of Wanamaker's and later went into the chorus. When "Talk About Girls" opened at Great Neck, Eddie Cantor saw the show and saw Miss Upton. He got her into the "Follies," and later gave her a leading role in "Whoopee."

Vince Astor's Ma

Lord Michelham and his brother, Jack Michelham, have been visiting in New York. Their family name was Stern, and they are the sons of the late Lord Michelham and Geraldine Bradshaw. The mother, when past middle age, married Frederick Almy, handsome young American cowboy, who had been connected with a rodeo in London. Shortly after her death, Almy married June Dibble, English mannequin employed in Paris by Jean Patou. The present Lord Michelham married Blanche Capel, sister of the late Arthur Capel. Arthur married a daughter of the late Lord Ribblesdale by his first wife.

Ribblesdale is survived by a widow, Ava Willing, who divorced the late Col. John Jacob Astor, and is the mother of Vincent Astor, of New York. The late Lady Michelham (who married the cowboy) preferred Bohemia to society, and her intimate friends included Ethel Levey, Sophie Tucker and Harry Pilcer. Almy was once sued by Owen Moore, film actor (first husband of Mary Pickford), to recover a loan of $3,400. Three years ago, when Almy arrived in New York from Europe, he had to pay a fine of $650 for bringing in liquor.

Seattle recently had its turn in the "Razzing the Home-Town" series; but the name of Guy Bates Post, a native son, was omitted.

LITERATI

"For Men Only"

Beth Brown dug into the internationally famous "line" of old New Orleans for her latest book, "For Men Only." A sub-title says "Women will love it." They likely will. Between that and the title, "For Men Only" should leap into the best seller class, although it will not become a talking picture. The name is one reason, but the subject matter is the bar for the screen.

Miss Brown has sturng her best story around Josie Arlington, the queen for all time of the New Orleans red district. It was Josie who thought she was entitled to a tomb through her rigidly lived-up-to-resolve that no virgin should ever enter a house she ran. So Josie Josie built the mausoleum for herself before she died. She died from a stroke one evening when finding the boy friend with her convent-bred niece.

The book tells nearly all of this. It also relates how the ever present "cribs" of New Orleans operate, along with the introduction into book form of Lulu White, another "line" queen, but of creoles, in the same day, and district.

These traditional recollections in the sporting circles of the second U. S. shipping port, are smartly and snappily interwoven by Miss Brown. Her book, in the main, holds for women in that it tells what they always are eager to know, for men through its unlimited suggestions, of "girls," men, coppers and red lights.

And it makes the queen of the line almost heroic in her sterling defense of Tessie Christmas, a tramp from Washington, who finally killed her seducer in Josie's house in N. O.

Newspaper Club Offer

In an attempt to get out of the red, the New York Newspaper Club is holding out an offer of reinstatement to members in arrears who pay current dues before Jan. 31. Club is considering moving to new quarters in the New Edison Hotel shortly.

Boom in Book Poetry

With the book market at a low ebb, poetry racketeers are suddenly finding themselves in on the heavy dough. These lads, who depend for a living on femmes who want to see their poetry in print, have never had so many chumps as they are finding today.

One Brooklyn lad who has been in the racket for seven or eight years never had such a good season as this one. During the past month he published about 15 books. And the orders keep rolling in.

Way in which stunt generally works is this: An mute Miss or Mrs. Milton appears at the office of one of the "poetry publishers" and submits a book of her "poetry." Publisher is always willing to go ahead with the printing, but finds out first how much dough the "poet" is willing to spend. Fancier books cost more. Illustrations sometimes run up the bill. If enough of the long green is visible the publisher can even manage special print, numbered editions, etc.

Greatest revenue, though, is from the books that are put out at about three hundred bucks. Publisher manages to get about two hundred copies of the book printed for that dough. He sends a few around for reviews, and turns the rest over to the poet. If the poet can manage to sell the books, some return on the investment is gotten. If not—it doesn't matter much because their ego is satisfied, which is all most of them want anyway.

Before the book business hit the rocks in general these poetry publishing racketeers didn't get anywhere near as heavy a play. Reliable publishers were more willing to take a chance on dubious poetry once in a while in order to give their lists some variety. Also a number of the big houses accepted publishing assignments on payment of cash. Now they don't. It isn't worth the bother. But the little guys, specializing at it, can make a healthy penny. And do.

No Yiddish Book Public

Yiddish New Yorkers will go to the Yiddish theatres, of which there are a number, and read the Yiddish newspapers, of which there are very many, but won't read books in Yiddish. Just no demand, and few Yiddish-language publishing houses in business, and these turning out mostly religious texts.

Result is that writers in Yiddish of book-length material must publish their own works to get into print. Instance is that of David Kazansky, highly-regarded by the few that read books in Yiddish. Completing a five-volume novel, Kazansky has been obliged to publish it himself, but with limited funds, has put only the first two volumes into print.

Yiddish newspapers and others interested buying even review copies of the first two volumes of the Kazansky work, so that the author can put the remaining three into print.

In the case of David Pinski and other well known writers in Yiddish, it's not unusual for their works to get a first publication in an English translation to earn enough money to get it out in the original Yiddish.

Cincinnati "Post's" 50th

Cincinnati "Post" is to celebrate its golden anniversary Jan. 12 with a dinner at the Hotel Gibson that will bring together the greatest array of newspaper celebrities in the city's journalistic history.

Besides members of the local staff, executives, general editors, feature writers and comic artists of the Scripps-Howard chain, will be present Robert P. Scripps, Roy Howard, George B. Parker, W. G. Chandler, Odd McIntyre, Eddie Guest and Joe Williams.

McIntyre was a reporter and desk man on the "Post" some years since, and enjoyed the best break of his life when he was let out for ignoring a last-minute bulletin of a rumor of an earthquake in a foreign country in which great loss of life was reported. The story proved bigger than the flash rumor, and, fortunately for Mac's present career, was played up by the opposition afternoon paper.

The "Post" is one of many papers now featuring McIntyre's daily column, for which service it pays several times as much per week as it paid him for full-time duties.

A Smart Feller

J. George Frederick has just published three books, "Humanism as a Way of Life," "Cooking as Men Like It," and "Fifty Hand Picked Common Stocks," and edited a symposium entitled "A Philosophy of Production," with contributions from Henry Ford, Bernard Baruch, Sir Philip Gibbs, Owen Young and other authorities.

Inside on "It Girl"

Daisy DeVoe, reports to the contrary notwithstanding, has written the series of newspaper articles under the caption "Clara Bow's Secrets, the Confessions of the 'It' Girl's Secretary," appearing in the New York "Graphic" and syndicated. This was arranged by the Famous Features Syndicate which also handles the "Floyd Gibbons Speaking" daily strip in the Eve. World (New York), and elsewhere.

Miss DeVoe made no attempt to belittle Miss Bow, for whom she worked two years.

Miss DeVoe was contracted to write 12 chapters and she sent them in to the New York office of the Syndicate at times by air mail and then later wired some of them. Several were ordered rewritten which Miss DeVoe did without any protest. And the Syndicate at no time received any squawk from Miss Bow.

Book Jacket Ads

Book publishers conferring on the advisibility of adding advertising sections to the back-sections of books for added revenue, a la magazine style, have scrapped the plan, with the ads to go on the book jackets instead. Chief argument against the ads going into the back sections of the book proper, as voiced by advertisers consulted, is that not all readers finish a book.

Ads on the book jacket idea all set, with a central advertising organization to handle. Because of limited amount of advertising that could be carried, it was deemed not profitable for individual advertising departments. Publishers will farm out the book-jacket space to the central organization, which will act as a sort of national advertising agency.

Paris Herald Lit. Ed.

Elliott Paul, author of "The Governor of Massachusetts" and a half dozen other books, has been appointed Sunday and book editor of the Paris "Herald." Although Paris is the haven of America's literary bad boys, and has been for years, the "Herald" has gone along without paying much attention to the arts. Now, with Paul's appointment, it begins to look as though they're going to become tony in their attitude towards books, writers, painters, etc. Paul was the editor of "Transition," a magazine published in Paris for several years that printed only the very modern moderns and made it a big literary success. He left the mag. about a year and a half ago and it folded soon afterward.

Best Seller Makers

The Charles Denbo advertising agency, which had the book publishing business pretty well sewed up, now has a competition in Franklin Spier. Latter, which is also handling the advertising of book publishers exclusively, has already lined up about eight publishers and making attractive offers to the others.

Denhard, pioneer in the business, is said to be responsible for the creation of more best-sellers than any other single person. Despite what the general impression is, best-sellers don't happen, but are made.

Fritz Blocki on Wire

Fritz Blocki of the Chicago American has started handling his regular theatrical column in that sheet from his bed at St. Joseph's Hospital at Hot Springs National Park, Arkansas. Blocki has had a bad seige of arthritis and has been away from his desk about six weeks.

Blocki will contact his Chicago news sources of wire and letter from Arkansas until he's entirely better. Mrs. Blocki has also been ill from the exhaustion of looking after her hubby.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Blocki have been de-tonsiled by the medicos.

House Organ Goes Mag

Instance of a house organ expanding into a national mag is that of "Charm." Intended originally to interest the women customers of the Bamberger store in Newark, it has expanded into a general women's mag and now takes advertising.

With a nice circulation, "Charm" takes on a new size in February, together with new features in keeping with the new policy.

Book Titles, Too

As evidence that the English have funny ideas about book titles, there are Nell Martin's novel, "Lord Byron of Broadway," which was published in England as "What Price Melody?" J. George Frederick's "What Is Your Emotional Age?" was revamped to read "Am I?" and Beth Brown's "The Tired Trolley Car" was rechristened "The Weary Tram."

One Good Turn Deserves—

John Dos Passos' "Oriental Express" is now being translated into French by Blaise Cendrars, author of "Sutter's Gold."

The European Runaround

By Frank Scully

On the Continent.

Socialists are squawking strongest over Snowden's plan to make the Government carry London opera on the hip.

First gag was to gyp profits from B. B. C., Government broadcasting unit, to wet-nurse opera.

Snowden now plans to pull Covent Garden out of the red with $25,000 advance and then subsidize the tenors $90,000 a year for the next five years.

Tax-paying boys, no like.

Barker Still Barking For Dough

On top of that Granville Barker keeps crying for a National theatre.

All this is Grade A Socialism, but the laugh is the carmine-tinted minds who ought to be strongest for it (like Swaff) are all shouting, "Over my dead body!")

"A Kidding Has Been Arranged"

This Emlyn Williams whose "Murder Has Been Arranged" has gone from the Repertory Players to St. James's theatre, is a Wallace trouper, and young enough to be rated at least "promising." He played "Angelo" in the original "Spot" company, and is the Austrian cop in "The Mouthpiece." He's only 25.

As training for tough mugg roles, Williams has an Oxford M. A. degree and is overboard on languages, beginning with Welsh, which was all he spoke until old enough to know better.

They have no word for "theatre" in Welsh, so he had to learn English.

"A Murder Has Been Arranged" took him two weeks to write, he says.

That doesn't seem possible.

Sinjun and Shaw on Talkers

St. John Ervine is telling the Canadians to build sure-seaters as their answer to Famous Players' freezout of legit productions. He thinks Shaw is the greatest mind since Ibsen, but not great enough to pay much attention to, apparently.

Shaw says legit is dead. He's already aboard the talker lugger. He was against filming his plays as silents because they would have been a competition to his companies on tour, or in translation.

He's for talkers because they've made legit become the competition—and very feeble competition at that.

A shrewd showman, this Shaw.

India Out as Musical Background

Tough Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson have got their Drury Lane musical by the British censor by changing an Indian rebellion into one more remotely Oriental. China, Manila, Manchuria—anywhere but India, says the censor.

India seems to be a ticklish subject among the nervous old ladies of Downing Street since Ghandi shaved his head.

The change means that Marie Burke, Clarice Hardwicke and Bobbie Howes will be, among others, on Sir Alfred Butt's payroll not thrown out of jobs.

They could, of course, have tried another change—throwing the sap censor overboard.

Nobody ever seems to think of that.

Painless Sequestering in Nite Clubs

In Continental class spots nobody is allowed to dance except in evening clothes.

For tact the London Kit-Cat has a darb idea in this connection. You do down in a "lift." In wearing a business suit, you're let off one floor down. This turns out to be the balcony. You overlook the orchestra, dance floor and more formal diners. You also have a tiny 10 x 10 dance floor of your own.

If you're full-rigged, the "lift," of course, takes you down to the main floor with no stops. You're not conscious of any steering on the part of the staff.

Proof of this is that not one person in 10 is aware of the personally-conducted parking place gag on a first visit.

Time Contracts on Endorsements

Stars approached to plug beauty preparations should sign only short-termers, the older girlies say.

Otherwise, when their signing-mugging days are over, they'll find entry into the refined rouge racket full of hurdles.

Lina Cavalieri, for one, finds her beauty biz in Paris hampered by a rival cosmetic to which she gave the unqualified rave (for a price) years ago.

Now that rave is being used against her.

Denny, Old Screen Star, New to Home Town

S. R. Littlewood, critic, is telling how Reginald Denny, "with a general exterior that reminds one with astonishing closeness of Chevalier himself," is likely to push Maurice out of the ring for the smilesmanship of the world as a result of his work in "Those Three French Girls."

Only he calls him Richard Denny.

Really, as Shaw said about Samuel Butler, the English don't deserve to have great people.

Square Shooting Sam Collects

Sam Goldwyn, shrewdest of showmen, got a big play on that star-searching thing of his.

Cables telling he was coming over "in search of new faces, new stars, and new youth to work with" got a wide plug everywhere.

He couldn't get it though if he were a four-flusher. When he hunts for new material he usually hunts.

Those Banky, Colman, and Laye jobs of Sam's are his real credentials, not a lot of p. a. hooey that's never fulfilled and was never meant to be.

Cedric Belfridge, ex-Hollywood chatterer for foreigns, and now p. a. in London, will have a cinch spreading Goldwyn around.

His chief job will be to keep out the Metro and Mayer billing.

"Where's My Wandering Bar Tonight?"

That "Wonder Bar," which mixed its phoney cocktails first at the Kammerspiele in Vienna and then got carted to Paris by Harry Pilcer under the pulmotored title of "Nudist Bar," is now in London.

It bucked Cochran's "Ever Green," Chevalier and Lauder for the early December big money.

Andre Charlot staged the London version of this "Love Among the Gigolos." Same staging idea as elsewhere, with audience as part of the show, nite club style.

It won't set anybody's hair on fire. Salter blames the difference in production ideas if the thing fails to click in London as it failed in Paris.

In Vienna everybody knew, he says, what it was all about, knew the whole script in fact. In London, only the cues.

5% Tax, Concerts and Radio To Help New York Musicians

At a meeting called by the A. F. of M. Dec. 16 to relieve unemployment among union musicians of Greater New York it was decided to put a 5% tax, Jan. 4, into effect on the earnings of every member of Local 802, either permanently employed or who earns enough from single engagements to equal the minimum weekly union scale.

There was also provision for Sunday morning musical concerts every week for the next six months or longer to raise a fund of not less than $500,000.

Both steps decided upon almost unanimously by three special committees, one appointed at a recent meeting of 802 as representatives of the union at large, the second composed of governing board of 802 headed by Joe Weber, who is also Federation president, and the third composed of men now working in restaurants, hotels, theatres, symphony orchestras and the Metropolitan Opera house.

According to Mr. Weber a mammoth symphony of 200 or more musicians will play Sunday a. m. concert at $1 top, with eminent conductors handling batons. The rights for the concert broadcast are expected to bring in a tidy sum to relief fund.

Dole System Under Protest

The system is resented by many musicians and therefore the money raised both through taxation and benefits will be used for salaries to the unemployed after the cases requiring emergency distress assistance have received attention.

This is not the first time the 5% tax has been voted for 802 men. About two months ago the tax was announced by the governing board but withdrawn.

A majority of the orchestras in dance halls and those playing single club dates work for less than half the face of their contracts. Where a musician should receive $120 weekly for playing certain hours he is often actually paid $40 or less, yet the 5% tax would reduce his salary $6 a week since it is based on what he is supposed to but does not, actually receive.

Edward Canavan, president, 802, said the local has a fund of $50,000, which has been partly used during the past month to help members in emergency. The rapidly depleting amount, according to Canavan, needs immediate support.

First Unemployed Concert

The first of concerts by the Unemployed Co-operative Orchestra for benefit of unemployed musicians will be held Saturday night, Jan. 3, at Mecca Temple.

Mmes. Ernestine Schumann-Heink and Germaine Schnitzer, concert pianist, will be the guest artists.

Rudy Vallee will lead a dance band of 20 men who will play for charity in the Mecca Temple Pavilion.

Thompson Chain Giving a Copy With Each Cup of Coffee

The John R. Thompson Co., operating restaurant chain, giving each customer a song titled "Buy Now," published by themselves. The title page has a picture of Ernie and Billy Loos, billed over station WGN in Chicago as the Thompson's Musical Chefs.

Kahn's Music Paper

Roger Wolfe Kahn, son of Otto H. and former orchestra leader, may enter the publishing business with a new trade paper.

Kahn is sending out feelers on a sheet to cover music and pictures only.

Gene Austin Gets English Song

Gene Austin and Marty Bloom returned last week from a 12 months' tour on the road.

Irving Urelles, with Harry Bloom Music, back after five weeks on the road.

Detroit, Dec. 23.

Music publishers are giving up their offices and equipping their pluggers with bicycles. Finding that the only way to get their songs planted is out at the spots where the music is played they believe the offices an unnecessary expense.

It has been known for some time the only ones patronizing the offices were radio acts appearing on remote stations and band leaders who play a one night a year engagement.

ASK U. S. BAN

Hamilton, Can., Unions Would Bar Yank Musicians

Ottawa, Dec. 23.

The Canadian Government has received a petition from the labor unions of Hamilton to bar all United States theatre or dance orchestras from the Dominion because of unemployment among Canadian musicians.

No action yet.

Musical Changes at Stanley in Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Dec. 23.

Ralph Harrison, orchestra leader here and recently at the Harris, went to the Stanley last week as pianist and musical contractor, succeeding Herman Middleman.

Most of the Stanley band has been retained.

Don Bestor and band at William Penn hotel for several months, goes on a barnstorming tour. He playing one week at the Stanley beginning Jan. 12.

Herman Bernie's $4,000

Herman Bernie took 40 musicians to Pittsburgh Dec. 22 to play at the debutante party of Mrs. R. H. Semple's daughter. Band received $4,000 for the date.

Those Street Sellers!

San Francisco, Dec. 23.

Song sheets with the lyrics of all latest popular numbers appeared on the streets last week with crew of street venders hawking them at ten cents per copy.

Will Osborne is now on WOR for three weekly broadcasts, starting last week. This means he will not tie up again with CBS.

Drama's Song Plug

Plugging a dramatic play by means of songs will be tried out by Curtis Emery. Latter will shortly open "Life Is Like That," in New York.

Tunes of "Lavender and Old Lace" and "Weary Soul," from the Emery show, will be released a few days by Harms after the play opens, as also disc records of both numbers made by three companies.

BANDS CRYING BLUES

New Year's Eve Bookings Shot By Small Money Offers

Ridiculous offers which band and orchestra bookers are receiving for bands for New Year's Eve have just about killed their biz for this New Year's Eve. Although bookings last year weren't up to customary quota, they were still far above the present number for this year.

The money offered the b. and o. boys have the bands shedding real tears. All they appear to want to spend for a band for New Year's Eve is $15 or $20 a man, which, according to bookers, is ridiculous. Almost any kind of a band wants $50 per man that night, even if they play for $20 or $25 any other night.

Opera Singer's Suit Over Disc Endorsement

Claiming that Speak-O-Phone, disc reproducing firm, represented in advertising that she had indorsed that company's discs when she had not made such indorsement, Emma Redell, concert singer, now with the Chicago Civic Opera, has filed a damage action against that company. Miss Redell asks an injunction against the firm further circulating such indorsement. Suit was brought in the N. Y. Supreme Court for $25,000 damages.

Exhibit in the case is a circular folder which carries several prominent theatrical names as indorsers of the company's sound reproducing methods. The disc which Speak-O-Phone makes is of metal and is apparently aimed for home consumption.

Defense is that the circular came from the California distributing company of the same name as the makers. Latter are in New York and when receiving the paper from California believed the indorsement by Miss Redell legitimate.

The New York firm claims that when it found this was not so it ceased using Miss Redell's name.

Bill Jacobs Resigns

Bill Jacobs, sales manager, Red Star, has tendered his resignation to take effect Jan. 1. He recently returned from a coast-to-coast trip for the firm. He joined the staff at Irving Berlin in 1919 and had been there until Jan. 1, 1930, when he switched over to Red Star.

will be limited to five minutes unless importance of a story warrants more. The most important news will be sent out even during commercial programs.

If the idea gets over, Bank of America will attempt tie-ups with key stations throughout the country and sell time to national advertisers. Beverly Hills is just outside Los Angeles and without a local daily newspaper. KMPC has a 500-mile coverage and is owned and operated by the MacMillan Petroleum company, independent refiners.

Some time ago a New York promoter advanced a radio news idea entailing the planting of reporters throughout the city to immediately phone the story direct to the ether transmitter from the scene or source of the story as a running account of what was happening. It never went through.

802 Regulars Prevail Over Radical Element In Union Elections

After Local 802, in annual election last week, had re-elected the old governing board and the trial board for the New York musicians' union, Edward Canavan, chairman of the local, declared that "the reign of terror which radicals in our ranks hoped to institute was rejected." He added that 802 would continue along the lines of the past.

Canavan was further emphatic regarding what he termed the defeat administered to those in the union who sought to prevent out-of-town musicians working here. He said: "Of the 32 men nominated for the governing board, the four chosen were those who are now serving their third year. The same is true of the nine men chosen from among a list of 60 proposed for membership on our trial board. With the results of this election definitely established all ideas of refusing to allow out-of-town members to work here, or forcing them from Greater New York through 'freezing out' methods, are at an end. Local 802 will not tolerate the use of force in depriving visiting members of the federation from earning a living.

The local has a membership of more than 16,000, and the differences in race and language have been blamed for many misunderstandings. At the last general closed meeting over 6,000 men congregated but not more than 10% of them could hear the speakers or follow the proceedings. This led to minor disorders. A still previous gathering had ended in a riot.

Those elected to the governing board at Joseph Abrahams, Michael Briglio, Leo E. S. Massimo and Edward Urbach. Men returned to the trial board are Harry Bennett, Maurice Bernhardt, Joseph Briglio, Daniel Bruno, William A. Deutsch, Dominick Fantilli, Max Frey, Henry H. Kielgast and Jack Zimbler. Maurice Bernhardt and Daniel Bruno were also chosen delegates to the A. F. of M. convention, from a list of six, and Max M. Richter won over Louis Wolff as delegate to the Central Trades and Labor Council.

Bands in Florida

Palm Beach, Dec. 23.

The Palm Beach Hotel roof-garden opened Dec. 17, with a twelve-piece orchestra. Cliff O'Rourke, tenor, featured with the dance and concert orchestra.

The Breakers and the Royal Poinciana will feature their daily concerts. At the tea-dances on Breakers Beach and the Cocoanut Grove Howard Lanin's orchestras will play.

George Lamaze will have his usual orchestra at Patio Lamaze. He has also assumed the management of Deauville Casino at Miami Beach.

The New York String Quartette will play at musicales at private homes.

The Royal Canadians, a Toronto orchestra, has been engaged by the Mayflower.

The Everglades Club will feature concerts on certain nights, followed by dancing, Bernar Barzeley as leader, making his debut on New Year's Eve.

The Restaurant Flamingo is open. Miss Lillian Baldwin, who was in Europe all fall, has arrived to serve as hostess at The Breakers.

RADIO NAME CONFLICT

Radio Music Co., Inc., which publishes popular songs, has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Henry Segal, 3 East 14th street, to restrain him from using the name Popular Radio Music Co., asserted to have been taken in order to obtain some of the plaintiff's business by deception.

ASHTON WITH PUBLIX

Johnny Ashton's band, playing through the Pacific northwest, has left that territory to open in a Publix unit at Omaha Jan. 3.

SPOT IN FILMS FOR MUSIC —WARNER

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Jack Warner states that music properly placed in talkers will be commercial at the box-office and both WB and FN will continue turning out light stuff with a song or two interspersed.

The Warners have Kern Harbach, Fields, Rodgers and Hart, Hammerstein and Romberg, Kalmar and Ruby and kindred teams under contract. Studio attitude is that these writers for many years have been trained where to spot songs in librettos and have proven themselves commercial. The only qualification might be a minimization of songs for pictures.

An indication that Paramount still has hopes for the return of musicals in one form or another is the studio's maintenance of a minimized music staff. Among those under contract are Sammy Coslow, Jack King, Nat Finston, Arthur Johnston and Busby Berkeley.

Latter has a straight director's ticket for a year, of which four months have already been clocked off and Berkeley has yet to receive an assignment. Paramount has made no gesture to retrieve Berkeley's agreement or any of the other music men's contracts.

MPPA's London Agent On Royalty Scouting

J. M. Dixie, secretary, Music Publishers' Association, Ltd., of London, has been appointed English representative of M. P. P. A. to handle all copyright—infringements of American music in England. Dixie, who was in New York for two weeks, sailed for London Saturday (20).

Previous to this new arrangement the M. P. A. L. itself looked out for the interest of the M. P. P. A. in England, handled all new licenses and retained a collection fee for itself. Dixie now takes over these duties personally, and will retain all collection fees.

M. P. P. A. is planning to place American music on a competitive basis with English tunes for the licensing for British cinemas.

Village Floor Show

Eddie Cantor's name is on the door of one of the private offices at Red Star.

Harold Spina has left the professional department at Universal Music to become a nite club entertainer.

Hollywood Almost "America's Deadest Spot"—Town Shutting Up After Jan. 1

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Everything and everybody are marking time here for the big holiday blow-off in night life. Then this town, perhaps the most extreme city in the world, goes dead on its nocturnal whoopee. Whatever joy spots locally are existing, are staggering along in the hopes for the usual Christmas and New Year's festivities, but everything shuts up thereafter.

George Olsen will call it a season after Jan. 1 and is shifting to Florida. Hotels will curtail their dansapation at the same time.

Kenneth Harlan's club is another weak sister which, from indications, will have to pep up miraculously or else. Other spots in town will be lucky if they can drum up a corporal's guard. The abnormality of Hollywood in its extreme individual riches and mass majority poorness, makes this city a peculiar paradox. A comparative handful is unusually wealthy, but the great majority have bucolic tastes and incomes.

Whatever night life there is flourishes on the too limited handful of spenders.

CLOSE 2 TOLEDO SPOTS

Toledo, Dec. 23.

Two nearby nite clubs got it in the neck last week by raiders. Sandusky's sole niter was closed by officials and John Rini, in charge, booked as a liquor violator. Patrons not held. Other was Joe Parker's cafe in Ann Arbor, Mich, padlocked.

Latter has been favorite drink and neck spot since 1880, which was proved by the initials and hearts cut in some of the furniture. No arrests were made although dozens of Michigan University students were found in the joint.

No Mention of Gaming Tables on Air Program

New Orleans, Dec. 23.

Club Forrest, just outside the city limits, is the only nite club in the country with a gaming casino adjunct going over the radio nightly. Its broadcasting over WSMB, local station covering all Southern states. It starts at 11 each night, running for 75 minutes.

Harry Berman, the club's m. c., is the announcer, with Jules Baduck's orchestra of 12 pieces playing the dance music and for the vocalists.

Emphasis on the air only for the floor show of the road house; no mention is made of the gaming room.

Kabarette der Komiker

Berlin, Dec. 14.

The center of the December program forms the tragi-comedy "Der Fall des Generalstabschefs Redl," by Egon Erwin Kisch, fascinatingly and effectively done and directed by Kurt Robitschek, with Wolfgang Heinz, Caecilie Lvosky, Oscar Sima, Ernst Raden, Heinrich Schnitzler, Fritz Strehlen and Ernst Prockl acting. It is received with lively applause.

The femme jazz band of Alex Hyde, consisting of 12 girls, who also appear in the Wintergarten, give a performance here also and are lively applauded.

Paul Nikolaus and Maria Ney figure as conferenciers in an amusing manner. There are also the excellent dancing couple, Natascha and Maxon; the first-class eccentrics, Presco and Campo; Valerian Schumakoff playing the balalaika masterfully, and finally Charton's puppet show. This very old art is received with interest; some new ideas have been added, such as a copy of the Waldoff, played by a puppet, but sung by the Waldoff on a record.

Finally there is again the American comedy sketch, "The New Car," played by Harald Paulsen, Alexandra, Nadler and Alexa von Poremsky.

Kay Kyser's Auto Jump

Kay Kyser and orchestra leave the Hotel Baker, Dallas, Christmas night to open Dec. 27 at the College Inn, Cleveland. Each of Kyser's men owns his own car and the boys will make the jump by motor.

Club Loses License After Yale Stags Rush Dressing Rooms

The Broadway atmosphere was a little too much for the staid old New England town of West Haven, suburb of New Haven, and home of the new Beacon Nite Club which opened with a floor show from the New York Everglades last week.

Management made the mistake of admitting a lot of Yale stags who tried to rush the chorus girls' dressing-room for a chance to dance with them. The rush was halted with no damage done, but the incident, together with some of the features of the show, caused the local police chief to withhold an operating license until changes were made.

A list of representative citizens, whom the management claimed saw nothing objectionable in the revue, had been invited and after a conference the following day between some of these citizens, town officials and the proprietors of the club, a license to operate was issued after the show was switched a bit.

A. F. OF M. OPENS FIGHT ON DISC BROADCASTS

Joe Weber, president A. F. M., personally conducting fight to prevent radio stations from using regular records for broadcasting instead of discs specially made for electrical transcriptions.

A. F. M.'s action based on contention additional musicians would be employed for recording purposes if the stations used only electrical transcription records.

M. P. P. A. reported favoring the move of the A. F. M. and may start a similar investigation to see if the doubling of records for radio use can be prevented.

R-K-O Broadcast Area Expanded After Jan. 1

After Jan. 1 R-K-O realigns the NBC stations for its weekly radio broadcasts to cover more territory, R-K-O will discount a few Southern stations from its weekly NBC hook-up and add a few more in the North. At present R-K-O goes over about 12 stations in the South. Four stations considered sufficient.

At present the NBC hook-up takes in about 40 stations from coast to coast.

Little Goes NBC

Cincinnati, Dec. 23.

Little Jack Little has signed with NBC and commences broadcasting at its New York studio early in January. His initial contract is for several months.

Little maintains a palatial home here. Besides his work for the local Crosley station during the past year, he has made personal appearances at theatres throughout the country.

WBAL ON FULL TIME

Baltimore, Dec. 23.

The Federal Radio Commission has approved the plan to synchronize WBAL with WJZ. This permits the big local broadcaster to return to a full-time schedule.

On days when WBAL's channel is being used by WTIC of Hartford, the local will be synchronized with the New York key station. It will take about eight weeks to install the new equipment. WTIC will synchronize with WEAF.

MEDBURY'S COAST SOLO

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

John Medbury's ethereal oration over KHJ, via the Columbia network, will be the only feature national hookup emanating from the West Coast New Year's eve.

Other local radio lines are laying off because of the heavy cost.

Martin Mooney Goes on the Air

Martin Mooney, New York p. a. will become radio columnist for WMCA. He will have a weekly "column" on current legit shows.

His broadcasting starts first week in January.

Four Hour New Year's Eve Trick

CBS has arranged a special program of dance music for New Year's Eve to run four hours. Fourteen bands from three continents and eight cities will be on the CBS network.

Fiction Trial Shows Radio Courtroom Is Ideal Ether Stuff

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Sensational court trials as a source of radio entertainment is being considered, following the success of the fictional trial program over WJZ in New York and KYW here.

Doubtful if mikes would be allowed in most courts except where publicity-seeking judges or prosecutors would okay. In America only time radio was employed was at the gala affair at Dayton, Tenn., for the Scopes monkey trial. In Russia the recent political propaganda trial was widely broadcast by the Soviet government.

Recent experiment with imaginary "Trial of Vivian Ware" drew a terrific response, with more than 14,000 letters sending in their verdict—13,000 for acquittal and only 1,000 for "guilty."

I. MILLER'S RADIO TRY

First Time On Air—Twice Nightly for Six Nights Over WABC.

I. Miller, the shoe company, is going to give radio a try. If it clicks the way it's supposed to, the bootery will make a 52-week proposition of the ether exploitation.

WABC will be the source of the tryout which will run Jan. 4-9 with twice nightly programs as the scheme. The double bills will be of 15 minutes' duration each with Gus Van to act as m.c. throughout the series.

The Miller management, previously ignoring radio, got the air hunch after donating $1,000 for the broadcast privilege to the recent actors' Sunday benefit at the Ziegfeld theatre.

Harry Kuh, now Van's personal manager, is handling the programs for the Miller radio try. Period will be known as "Miller's Variety Van."

GENE AND GLENN GO ON NBC NETWORK SHORTLY

Gene and Glenn, the Amos 'n' Andy of Cleveland, who broadcast daily over WTAM in that city, all set to broadcast over NBC network.

NBC's plans for Gene and Glenn not finally developed but the comics are certain to get the network after the first of the year. Not all unlikely they will broadcast from New York.

Gene and Glenn take one of the two periods now allotted to Phil Cook, who currently broadcasts twice daily over NBC but after the first of the year loses one; or Charles Hamp's period which is broadcast daily from Chicago.

'Uncle Don's' Easy $1,000

Don Carney (Uncle Don), broadcaster of kid programs for WOR, has run up his weekly intake to $1,000.

Income comes from his daily broadcast, records and books. And more of it in a chain tie-up.

MORTON DOWNEY'S CBS TIEUP

Morton Downey starts seven CBS broadcasts weekly tomorrow (Thursday).

Currently Downey is broadcasting thrice weekly from his New Club Delmonico.

Additional four broadcasts will be made via CBS, with Downey working with Freddy Rich orchestra.

FANNIE'S $2,000

Fannie Brice will be guest artist at $2,000 on the Nestle program, broadcasting over NBC Jan. 9.

75% OF RADIO STATIONS ON DISKS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

More than 75 per cent. of the radio stations in this country now use electrical transcriptions or recordings for commercial or institutional broadcasting, but chiefly commercial. Commercial accounts usually are lesser naborhood merchants who, in between a "canned" musical recital, are given an ether plug stressing bargain prices, addresses, etc.

A year ago the recorded program was synonymous with a fourth rate broadcasting station, but when WOR, Newark (Bamberger station) announced it would go in for mixing up its radio stuff with disk broadcasts, those other stations which were in doubt quickly followed suit for obvious economic reasons.

ZONING FOR STATIONS USING WAX PROGRAMS

Hollywood, Dec. 23.

Complaints from small and large radio stations, voiced here with excess of the Continental Broadcasting Corp., may result shortly in a national system of zone booking for record programs (electric transcriptions).

Kicks are that some stations release programs before the date set, with oftentimes two stations in a territory broadcasting the same program simultaneously.

Plan is for protection to radio stations like that given to theaters. A booking system similar to that used by Film Boards of Trade is probable. Under this method programs could be sold to certain large stations first and later to smaller stations as second and third runs, etc.

Johnstone Steps Up As Ass't to Aylesworth

G. W. (Johnny) Johnstone, national publicity director, NBC, is leaving that post this week to become assistant to the president, M. H. Aylesworth. Johnstone has handled NBC exploiting since its formation.

Another NBC promotion due is Dan S. Tuthill, general air time sales manager, to assistant to the vice-president, George McLellan.

Walter C. Stone succeeds Johnstone.

NO CHANGE IN MUSIC OUTLOOK

It's the same old hue and cry in the music biz—biz is off.

November showed no decided improvement in conditions, although some of the catalogs showed quite an improvement over that of October. In the main, though, were a graph of condition made since the month of September, it would show barely an upstroke for any month since then. November, then, was as slow as that of October.

Sales must be off when a firm like Lyons & Healy, of Chicago, which during the good old days of sheet music would sell 5,000 copies a week of a hit song, now sells but 1,500 copies of its number one seller.

All look forward to an improvement after the holidays.

Harm's "Three Little Words," from the Amos 'n' Andy film, "Check and Double Check," was November's outstanding hit, leading all other comers by a wide margin. Song looks strong enough to cop the ace spot for the current month, December. It also, for the first time in the past three surveys, took the top position from "Little White Lies," which in this survey slumps down to the fifth spot.

Santly's English ballad, "When the Organ Plays at Twilight," held firmly onto the deuce. Song sold strong during November and is one of those "Springtime in the Rockies" type of tunes, which, when once it catches, holds.

October's deuce, "Betty Co-Ed" (Fischer), rates fourth here, and was closely pressed by the undersongs for that spot. However, it earned it, for, though it started folding toward the end of November, its sales during the beginning of that month were strong.

"I'm Yours" Third

Famous "I'm Yours" slipped into the trey without much competition. It was high up among the best sellers all through the month.

Shapiro-Bernstein's hill-billy, "Moonlight on the Colorado," is a bit of a surprise in earning for itself a sixth and lowest notch in this survey of best sellers. This because it was not very healthy at the opening of the month. Nevertheless it came up swiftly around the middle of the month, and the last two weeks was rated with the top best sellers. It won that berth for itself by a narrow margin, edging out songs like Harms' "Body and Soul" and "Sing Something Simple," which were firm sellers during November. Also beating out Robbin's "Here Comes the Sun," another good seller during the past month, as was Donaldson's "Sweet Jennie Lee."

Songs which were listed in the last survey but which are erased from this are Robbins' "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," Remick's "If I Could Be With You," Witmarks' "Kiss Waltz" and Villa Moret's "Springtime in the Rockies." The latter song, by the way, holds the record for the most listings in this survey since the inauguration of the department. It has been listed for more than half a year.

It will be noticed that the word "pop," which was always added in brackets to the title of a song, if it were not a picture song, has been done away with this month. This because today the pops are in the majority by such a number that it is unnecessary to single them out. Only the picture songs will continue being marked as such, having the names of the pictures they are from written beside them. The rest, it will be understood, are pops.

Again "Three Little Words" wipes out "Little White Lies," this time in the Victor list of best sellers, copping the first spot for November. "Little White Lies" disappears from the curent list. Rest of the Victor dises listed are all new tunes, none having been listed in the last survey.

Victor reports a disc of much sales potentialities in "You're Driving Me Crazy," which Victor said was selling unusually well before its general release, the second week in December. It is getting terrific air attention.

Columbia shows an entirely new slate except for "Body and Soul," which was deuce in the last survey and crept up into the top rung for November.

Again "Body and Soul" remains the exception, this time on the Brunswick list. It is the only song which was there in the last survey also, being listed ace then and slipping to deuce in the current list.

In Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 20.

Four of the previous month's best sellers sank under the strain of competition and dropped to runner-up positions, with "Kiss Waltz" 7th, "If I Could Be With You" 8th, the sensational "Little White Lies" 9th, while the ever-present "Springtime in the Rockies," held on by its teeth in the 10 spot.

Out of the Amos 'n' Andy picture came a soaring song, "Three Little Words," that shot out of nowhere into the lead position, and is at present selling at an overwhelming rate, bettering its nearest rival by about two to one. "I'm Yours" is another newcomer, and going over at a fast clip, while "Somewhere in Old Wyoming" also came into the prize list. "When the Organ Played" rose from fifth to second place, but is now starting to slow down.

Jacques Renard Twice

"Three Little Words" took the lead in two of the discs, while content with the three spot in the Columbia list. Brunswick this month features a new band, Jacques Renard, which captures two ace positions in the lineup. Besides, none of the previous month's best sellers remain on any prize slate at present, though the ace orchestras still stick. Shows the extremely rapid turnover in the disc field.

"Body and Soul," which grabbed two positions on the Columbia score the previous month and remained off the two other discs, reverse the job this month, with only Columbia lacking the song at present. Ozzie Nelson comes back to the prize society for Brunswick with this song.

No freak stuff is present in any of the lists, though the previous month showed hillybilly, hot rag rhythm and string orchestrations, especially in the Victor discs.

On the Coast

Los Angeles, Dec. 20.

Music trades displayed a decided interest in life during the last week of November. Finish of the month saw sheet music, disc and instrument sales take a good leap. Business had been in the dumps since early this year.

In sheet music the locally written and published "It Must Be True" jumped to first place from nowhere on last month's list. Spurt credited to local radio plugs by Gus Arnheim and his orchestra. Same for Arnheim's recording of the number for Victor, which was pre-released and led that record company's list for the month.

Six best sellers in sheet music were split 50-50 between pop and picture numbers.

In the disc field torrid tunes were in the minority, with Los Angelenos sticking strictly to their first love, hillbilly ballads.

General outlook for the future in music sales is fair, but dealers are by no means satisfied that the increase of this month will hold up. They'll be content if they can grab off a small profit during the holidays.

Obituary

WILLIAM GROSSMAN

William Grossman, theatrical lawyer, who died last week in Baltimore of heart disease while addressing a Knights of Pythias Convention, was buried Friday in Kensico cemetary, New York. Among the honorary pallbearers were Earl Carroll, Al Woods, Arthur Hammerstein, George M. Cohan, William Laidew, Judge Gustave Hartman, Senator Royal S. Copeland, Hal Williams, Senator James E. Watson, Commissioner William F. Deegan, Grover Whalen, Corporation Counsel Arthur J. W. Hilly, State Senator Thomas Connally, Frederick Brown and Borough President Julius Miller.

Born in New York Oct. 4, 1867, Mr. Grossman was the son of Henry and Catherine Grossman. He graduated in 1882 from Public School No. 22 at the head of his class and seven years later was valedictorian of his class in the New York University law school. Admitted to the bar in 1889, he was the senior member of the law firm of House, Grossman and Vorhaus, organized in 1891.

Active in coporate, real estate and Surrogate Court matters, "Billy" Grossman was regarded generally by those who knew him as a specialist in theatrical and motion picture litigation. He was instrumental in the organization of the United Artists and an active factor in the formation of the United Booking Office. An executor and trustee of the late Percy Williams' estate he established the Percy G. Williams Home for theatrical folk at Islip, L. I. Among his clients were William S. Hart, Oscar and Authur Hammerstein, John Coogan, sr., Al Woods, Earl Carroll, Adolph Zukor, Weber and Fields, Lewis Bernstein and many others. Many of the standard forms of theatrical, motion picture and musical contracts, now in general use, were framed by him.

In recent years Grossman centered his activities on bringing conflicting interests allied with the theatrical motion picture and music publishing industries together and was considered one of the most proficient practitioners in copyright litigation. Among the plagiarism cases which engaged his attention during the past two decades were the "Bird of Paradise" and "Tipperary" suits, and he was instrumental in obtaining the United States Supreme Court decision which held that performance of a copyright musical composition in a hotel dining room was an infringement even though no admission was charged. Following that, Grossman was responsible for obtaining many other rulings in the Federal Courts favorable to music publishers regarding the performance of musical compositions in public places.

Grossman was also active in fraternal organizations and was Supreme Vice Chancellor of the Knights of Pythais, being elected to that office at a convention held in Tampa last summer. He was deeply interested in Masonry and he drafted the legislative act which consolidated the Order of the Eastern Star in its present form. He belonged also to the State, County and American Bar Associations, the International Law Society, the Elks, the Friars, and the Oak Ridge Golf Club.

He was a Republican, but numbered among his friends many eminent men in both parties. In 1892 he ran for the Assembly in the Fourth Distract of New York and although defeated received a large vote in that Tammany stronghold. His brother, Mose H. Grossman, is a former New York City magistrate.

A creator and solver of puzzles, Mr. Grossman was formerly president of the American Puzzlers League. Few of his friends were aware of his hobby for his keen and active intellect.

Surviving Mr. Grossman in addition to his brother, are his wife Mrs. Carrie Basch Grossman; two daughters, Mrs. Lillian Lignante and Mrs. Trixie Lewis, and a son, William Leonard Grossman, a senior at the Harvard Law School.

CHARLES K. HARRIS

Charles K. Harris, 65, musical composer and publisher and famous as the author of "After the Ball," died at his home in New York City Dec. 22. He is survived by his widow, two daughters, a brother and sister.

Mr. Harris was one of the first members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, of which organization he was a director for 12 years. He also was secretary of the group for 7 years and held that office at the time of his death.

Mr. Harris was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., May 1, 1865. While still young his family moved to Saginaw, Mich., where he first got the idea of a musical career from watching vaudeville actors practice.

His first published song was "Thou Art Ever In My Thoughts," which he wrote by picking out the notes while a friend transcribed them as Harris could neither read nor write music.

"After the Ball," which made him famous, was published after he went to a ball in Chicago and saw two sweethearts quarrel. At the same time he met the woman who was to be his wife.

At David Velab Belasco's suggestion he wrote a photoplay of "After the Ball," which was made by the W. B. Steiner Photoplay Co. He also wrote other pictures, including "The Barker" and "The Heart of a Man."

"Break the News to Mother," "Mid the Green Fields of Virginia," "I've a Longing in My Heart" and other songs written by Harris were famous. He also wrote the songs for "Sinbad the Sailor" and "Hello Central, Hello," sung in vaude by Charles Horwitz.

He entered the publishing business after his name as a song writer was certain, the first office being in Chicago and later another in New York.

Funeral services will be held from Riverside Memorial Chapel, 76th street and Amsterdam avenue, N. Y., at 2 o'clock today (24) with Rabbi Nathan Krass, Temple Emanuel, officiating. The pallbearers will be members of the board of directors of the American Society.

Prior to the Rabbi Krass services there will also be a Masonic service.

Interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

MRS. ROY GORDON
(Nell Healy)

Mrs. Roy Gordon, known professionally as Nell Healy, died Thursday morning, Dec. 18, in Saranac Lake, N. Y., where she had been for about a year trying to regain her health.

She is survived by her husband, Roy Gordon, and son, Roy Gordon, Jr., and two sons by a formr marriage.

Miss Healy appeared in vaude with the Gordon and Healy act, a comedy turn of the bride and groom type that had appeared in the R-K-O, Loew and other circuits for about 14 years.

The body was brought to New York for funeral services from the Plaza Funeral Parlors, 40 West 58th street, auspices N. V. A., and a mass conducted by Father McKenna of St. Malachy's Church.

Interment in Calvary Cemetery, Long Island.

FRED G. BELL

Fred Gatenby Bell, 51, actor, died Dec. 10 in Aeton Hospital, New York, where he had been for two months under care of Actors' Fund.

In his early stage career he had appeared in support of William Faversham and Cyril Maude. He was born in England, having been on the stage for some time prior to coming to this country. His last stage appearance was in "The High Road."

His widow, Gladys Hopton Bell, actress, and a young son survive.

Interment in Mt. Hope Cemetery.

LOUIS PELLICCIA

Louis Pelliccia, associated with S. Z. Poli for more than 40 years, died of a heart attack in New Haven, Conn. Pelliccia spent his early years in New York where he made wax figures with Poli. It was by exhibiting these figures in New Haven that Poli got his start in the amusement world.

Pelliccia became the first stage manager of the New Haven Bijou. He later held the same job at the larger Palace across the street, but returned to the Bijou where he was working at the time of his death.

CLARENCE E. RUNEY

Clarence E. Runey, 63, Cincinnati show print man and pioneer motion picture photographer, died Dec. 21 in Cincinnati of heart trouble.

Mr. Runey had conducted a show print business in Cincinnati since 1900 and had been the Cincinnati representative in newsreel work for various film companies. Of late he was active in getting city "shots" for R-K-O.

His widow and brother survive.

HENRI ROLPHE OTTE

Henri Rolphe Otte, 50, pictures, died suddenly of heart disease Dec. 17 in San Francisco. Funeral services were held in Los Angeles where his two sisters live.

Otte came from a noted French-German family, his grandparents being the Count and Countess of Goutche.

FLO IRWIN

Flo Irwin, 71, former vaudeville comedienne, died Dec. 20 in Los Angeles of a heart attack. She was a sister of May Irwin.

Miss Irwin's last stage appearance was made 18 months ago in coast vaude.

Ray Fern, 44, (Ray Fern and Moree) died suddenly of heart disease Nov. 19 last at his home in Philadelphia. Fern went on the stage in 1907. His widow (Moree) and parents survive.

Benny Soffo, 23, for three years with "Variety's" Hollywood advertising staff, died at Mount Olive sanitorium Dec. 19. His parents survive.

Charles H. Pope, 76, superintendent of concessions at the Brockton, Mass., Fair for the last 40 years, died Dec. 16.

Mrs. Chatainier died in Enghein, near Paris. She was the mother of Jean Chatainier, president of the French Picture Critics Association.

Girl Club Floaters

agencies which specialize in cabaret placements in and out of New York.

Any number of girls who can't get jobs as stenogs and clerks are looking to show business and hoping for an occasional job at something around a cafe. Many are of the hard-boiled school that know all the answers to any sort of a proposition.

Some of the girls are so tough that a group recently sent to a mining town cafe had to be let out by the operator of the joint when the miners complained of their unnecessarily rough methods in coin gathering.

Exes as Agents

Any job, anywhere, if only for a week, helps out and along with the outsiders storming the cafes for jobs have come a flock of ex-bookies, ex-bootleggers and every other form of ex, to act as agents for the random job seekers. There are more cabaret agents around now than ever before. They care naught about licenses, and with their office in their hat, hang around buildings where booking offices are located and grab girls as they pass, offering them jobs. These gyp agents take the biggest cut for themselves from the hard-boiled, but almost desperate type of girl now seeking jobs as entertainers or hostesses in a club or speakeasy.

Licensed cafe agents are worried about conditions, never too secure at any time, since girls who know the business are being undersold, despite the fact that the experienced girls are willing to take less than the regular percentage of the amount that nite life chumps drop in the "take" joints these days.

In the out-of-town spots the hard-boiled bunch of misfits will pass up a salary entirely, gambling on the chance of getting a money break by sitting out with saps who will take the rubber band off their rolls under the spell of the rough and ready, free and easy style.

Zack Miller Brings Divorce Suit in Miss.

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Zack Miller, owner of the 101 Ranch show, has filed suit for divorce from his present wife. Case is being heard this week at Natchez, Miss., where Miller is an extensive property owner.

Action on Miller's part is a counter suit to that of his wife's the past summer, when she asked for a divorce from Miller. This was settled out of court.

Miller is asking the custody of his two children.

TOM MIX AND RINGLING MAY GET TOGETHER

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Tom Mix may rejoin Ringling circus folds next year.

Understood that negotiations are now under way between John Ringling and Mix for the latter to star either for the Hagenbeck-Wallace or the Al G. Barnes circus.

Mix also has a picture deal as a future possibility.

Divvy on Animals

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Animals from the Sparks circus, now wintering at Sarasota, Fla., are being sent to the Al G. Barnes circus at Baldwin Park, Calif.

Sparks outfit will not be on the road this year, with the baggage stocks being distributed among the other circuses.

What disposition will be made of animals of the John Robinson circus, another shelved show in 1931, has not been decided yet. What circuses go out in 1931, however, will probably have a larger menagerie than in former years.

Missed Zack Miller

Galveston, Dec. 23.

One of best shots in Oklahoma has been employed by Col. Zack Miller as result of an attempt on his life at his ranch home near Marland, Okla., last week. Miller slammed door after answering a knock, when he saw a gun. The caller fired a shot into door and fled.

Miller left after the episode for Mississippi. He had been waging a vigorous campaign against cattle and hog thieves.

Miller is only survivor of brothers who founded the 101 Ranch show.

Driver Bros. Bankrupt

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Driver Bros., Inc., carnival tent manufacturer here, and prominent in the field a number of years, was declared bankrupt last week.

The drop-off in demand for carnival tents and banners is credited with causing the failure. Walter Driver was president.

AUTOS REPLACE HORSES

Mason City, Ia., Dec. 23.

Fair patrons crave speed so horse plays second fiddle to the automobile. Directors of the North Iowa Free Fair have voted for two-day auto races instead of horse racing.

There will be, however, a society horse show, something new here.

Millette's Paris Month

Ira Millette, aerial head balancer with Ringling Brothers for more than 15 years, sailed for Paris Dec. 16 to open with the Cirque d'Hiver for four weeks, starting Dec. 27.

Year 'Round Golfing

realized the advertising value of these contests will be gone after. Testimonials as to the beauties and difficulties of the local course are apt to be an aftermath.

Routing and ballyhoo is being put on an organized basis under Robert Harlow, former Boston sports writer, but more lately manager of Walter Hagen. Before spring, Harlow hopes to have the country circuited with enough tourneys set to keep the pros playing for prize coin throughout the summer—and maybe the year around.

This also brings up the angle of more of the better amateur golfers turning pro to take pot luck in a string of tournaments which will come often enough to give them a chance at collecting and making a living from the game.

IND. CIRCUS AT JOLSON, N. Y., FOR HOLIDAYS

Broadway has an indoor circus for the holiday weeks at Jolson's, the performers being names from the Ringling and Sells-Floto outfits. Show is billed as "Davenport's European" winter circus, with the Orrin Davenport bareback riding act a feature. Fred Bradna, equestrian director of the Barnum-Ringling show, is acting similarly and said to be the managerial head of the enterprise.

Same circus played a Shrine event in Baltimore two weeks ago and cleaned up. Shuberts looked the attraction over and the Jolson booking followed, the show being guaranteed. Show was offered continuous booking in Shuberts' houses out of town, but already booked for Shrine indoor affairs until the start of the outdoor season.

Show has the Concellos, a flying act, showing here for the first time. Girl in the act rated the best woman flier yet seen. The performers are Americans and were with the Sells show last season. Another new performance is that of Dainty Blanche, an 18-year-old aerial gymnast from abroad. Her mother was of the Klos Sisters, doing similar work. Blanche works along the lines of Leitzel.

In Ella Bradna's act there is a sensational leaping police dog, which with a short start jumps a 12-foot fence. There are 24 acts in the show, the others being Jack Joyce's liberty horses, Dock Sling Troupe, Winifred Colleano, Hill's elephants, Frisco's seals, Nelson and Nelson, Pallenberg's bears, the Arleys, Aerial Smiths, Ballstons, Kijo Kaban, Frank Mijares, Bell Trio. Among the clown turns are Chesty and Deanro (fight bit), Blutch Landolf, and Charley Smith ("Swimming").

Show carries its own band, Merle Evans using eight of Sousa's bunch.

Spokane's $70,000 Buy of Losing Park

Spokane, Dec. 23.

Acquisition of the Spokane Interstate Fair grounds by the city at a cost of $70,000 was announced. The property will become a civic recreation and exhibition center under direction of the park department.

Last fair in September left a deficit of $12,000 and stockholders and board of directors voted to sell. Property is valued at $175,000. Outstanding bond issue of $56,400, due in June, 1943, at 6%, which may be assumed by the purchaser. Property embraces 56 acres within the city limits.

Coin, Not Law, Prevents Jersey Bull Fight Idea

The proposed bull fight scheduled for Jan. 1, at Eastern League baseball park, Newark, N. J. has been called off.

While promoters of the event had assurance from local officials that there would be no opposition to the event the promoters had been unable to raise sufficient coin to guarantee Sydney Franklin, Brooklyn youth who made a name for himself as bull fighter in Spain, a sufficient sum as the main attraction.

New Jersey has no law prohibiting bull fights.

Andrew Downey Dies

Andrew Downie (McPhee), prominent circus man, died Dec. 17 at his home in Medina, N. Y.

Mr. Downie was the former owner of the Walter L. Main circus and had also owned the La Tena Circus, Downie Bros. and others.

The funeral was held in Medina, auspices local Elks.

Don't Need Barn

Chicago, Dec. 23.

Not likely the Ringlings will rebuild the barn destroyed by fire last month at Peru, Ind., former American Circus Corp. winter quarters for several of the shows.

Shelter has been found for all the stock, with the regular winter overhauling of wagons going ahead as per schedule.

CHICAGO

Variety's Chicago Office

WOODS THEATRE BUILDING—CENTRAL 0644-4401

Englewood

In spite of the pre-holiday period, business held up remarkably at this south side neighborhood stand, with only the last couple of rows in the balcony vacant when the 10-act vaude bill started Tuesday night (16).

Martin and Martin led off with some fair contortion work, better trapeze stunts and a few weak attempts at comedy. The Warners return to the house after about a year, and again clicked mainly on the strength of the two kids. Boy developing into fine hoofer, tossing off some adult steps.

"Doin' Time" is a so-so little dance flash that may live its natural life in the Sunday dates. Four girls and two men and Eddie Matthews standing out with his soft shoe dancing.

Rodney and Gould follow the dead pan tradition and smacked 'em here. All the sap dancing and clowning, with the gag about mixed hands and legs, the burlesque adagio. All there but can make the grade easily in even the better spots. Knorr Rella and Co., two women and a man, have a wobbly comedy skit about a couple of ladies who go to Reno for a divorce, bothing having married the same man. Few laugh lines. Needs plenty of fixing before it can go.

Dave Barnam and Deacons, four men, have the substance of a good comedy and singing act based on colored preacher and his assistants idea. Gives 'em an opportunity for spirituals, hot tunes and the regulation pulpit clowning. They liked it here, though the boys insisted on staying too long. Campus Frolics was another small time dance turn, seven girls and one man, with some good six-girl chorus work. Debell and Ruff show promise. Four men and two girls in a hoke comedy act founded on many gag bits, some of which need strengthening and some cleaning. Built on the Olsen and Johnson plan, with the two men working in gob outfits. But where the first turn plays the wiser houses and can get away with the rough stuff, these boys are slated at present for the family spots, and must keep away from the blue gags.

Zelda Santley taxied down from the Palace to guest star, and clicked with her impressions of Cantor, Brice and Chevalier, and registered in her own right with a highly dramatic "Ten Cents a Dance." Her take-a-peek gown was something for the boys in this district.

Mme. Verobell and company, three women and a man, closed with a song and dance presentation, with the Mme. warbling while the others tossed each other around in full.

"Lilliom" (Fox), feature.

Regal

Beginning Jan. 3 this Publix-B. & K. colored house will try switching orchestras weekly in an effort to revive the drooping receipts. McKinney's Cotton Pickers will be the first colored band, with Earl Hines following. For the year 1929 the Regal showed a net profit of $40,000. For the year 1930 it will show a loss. So alarmed are the B. & K. officials over this condition they have smacked a budget on the house which, with the start of the new year, and the name orchestras, will cut the vaude acts down to two, and some weeks, if the orchestra is high priced, no vaude.

This week's offering is doing a great deal to keep the neighbors away and in the stores. The opening is a meaningless one, which allows the line of Regal girls to drag through a shiftless dance routine in such dim lights they can hardly be seen. It means nothing and gets away as far as possible from the Christmas spirit.

Billy Sibley, a young colored lad, with a cigar, a cane, a pearl derby and some steps that are fairly entertaining, followed. He used his shoulders and hands in a couple of turns that won him a hand.

Jackie Mabeley, in a fast line of patter with Ralph Cooper, the local m. c., was the first to bring the sparse populace to laughter. Her closing solos, slightly burlesqued and tapering off at the end to bring out her singing voice, brought her back again and again.

Opening the pre-view came the Vaughn Sisters and Jimmy Hite, two young and charming girls with enough versatility as hoofers and singers to click. Hite, in an Eton suit, is as nimble and talkative with his feet as they come today. In this house, and among a race who produces natural dancers, he pulled the partere section to strong acclaim. The trio are good entertainment.

Buddy Stuart and Co., just over from England, in comedy, with music, possibly hadn't had an opportunity to whip their turn in shape. Their 15 minutes dragged. Followed the Georgia Steppers, four colored men who opened in a much-used dance routine. One sings, and another does a dance which paces the rest of the turn. Without this solo hoofing number the act has little.

Kohn and Depinto, two boys with an accordion and a fiddle, warmed on sight with their fast music and foot work. "Memory Number" gave the two a chance to recover their breath and brought out the pleasing fact that both are musicians. An excellent turn and the way and able to click in any vaude theatre.

Rose & Wilson closed with a comedy conversation of the old war days; fair entertainment. Drills helped. The two use soldier suits.

Treasurers' Club to throw their annual dance at the Bal Tabarin, Sherman, Jan. 28.

Ritz, Berwyn, one of the Lasker houses, was badly damaged by fire last week, with loss estimated at $7,500. Short circuit destroyed the stage, screen proscenium furnishings, and about the first 10 rows.

Ella Weinberg has joined the John M. Rogers agency, handling the club dept.

Deb's $1,000,000 Party

as well, with the particular show not mentioned yet. Cast and principals are to leave New York immediately after their performance Dec. 26, the night of the party, go by Doherty limousines to the Newark airport and fly to Washington in a fleet of tri-motored planes, where they will arrive, with favorable flying conditions, at two a. m. Then they'll go to the Mayflower hotel, where social Washington will be represented, as also the entire diplomatic corps.

Much criticism has been heard in various quarters because Doherty is spending this amount of money on such an affair at the time Congress is wrestling with the problem of depression. It is pointed out, however, that entertainers, caterers, the hotel people, taxicab companies, florists and others will have an opportunity to get their hands on a cool million and that this money will be distributed where it is well needed.

Doherty operatives have been in the capital for weeks booking all sorts of local entertainers who will fill in until the New York tribes arrive. There will be at least six dance bands on the job from eight o'clock in the evening, when the party starts until noon the next day, when it will be officially over.

Diplomats Immune

One of the unique features will be the diplomatic immunity that will shroud the guests. Even though Doherty himself should furnish liquor, no prohibition agent would dare put his head inside any one of the numerous ballrooms, or dining rooms, because each foreign diplomat present will have the privilege of "pouring" without interference from the law.

A supper costing $25 per plate will be served at midnight and a breakfast at five in the morning. It means extra hotel help, so waiters and attendants are looking forward to a harvest in tips.

Miss Doherty is the daughter by an earlier marriage of Mr. Doherty's wife. Aside from being the millionaire's step-daughter, she has been legally adopted by her step-father.

Miss Doherty has already made her debut in New York, but the Washington entrance into society is hailed as the big event in her young life. Her hobby is painting sport cars and giving them to her friends. It is rumored that she is going to make about 30 young Washington debs happy over the Christmas period with costly presents.

Ruth Biery Moves

Ruth Biery, western editor of the Fawcett fan publications, has resigned.

CHICAGO

Chicago Civic Shakespeare theatre added itself to the long list of recent theatre robberies. Art spot gave up $200 to a man and women hold-up team.

General Outdoor Advertising company must have got somebody sore, because the billboard company drew a bomb at its central offices.

Perhaps that ritz suburb, Evanston, really doesn't care whether or no it gets Sunday flickers. They're having plenty fun arguing about it. As soon as one judge gives 'em an okay, another court upsets the cart by ruling in favor of closed shutters. Two weeks ago it looked set for Sunday pictures when one judge said that the closing rules were based on religious prejudice and therefore not valid. Last week somebody else said the closing orders were the gospel until the city council drafts a new ordinance.

Varsity theatre has been sweating to break the blue law, but so far it's been largely a waste of time.

Petruska Club, defunct elite nite spot, was sold for $2,000 at a bankruptcy auction to the firm of Paul Ginsburg Company, auction house, which will resell the equipment at another auction. Club was owned by William Mitchell Blair.

Bandit who was shot to death in an attempted hold-up was identified by the police as Joseph Shoer, former orchestra leader of Madison, Wis., and the Luigi's cafe in Detroit.

Dr. Maurice Mesirow, husband of Irene Pavloska, Chicago Civic Opera prima donna, claims he is broke in an answer to the alimony suit filed by his first wife.

Moss Hart's Welcome

concerned with the executive and financial headaches in the east. Those coast personalities whom he might have meant seem to be even more abstract to Hart than those he says he had vaguely in mind.

Hart is glad that his struggling playwright character (Kaufman plays him on the stage on Broadway and Hart will do ditto for the Sid Grauman coast production) is founded strictly on the abstract.

Hollywood personalities to Hart are as paradoxical as they are to the average easterner who must necessarily meet and greet the screen celebs. They are either acting as much off as they are on. Others are surprisingly affable. Others are too realistically negative and induce the ever-recurrent mental interrogation: "How did they ever get where they are?"

When Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., asks Hart to go in for steam baths with him, the young playwright doesn't know what to make of it. Told that it's a Hollywood evolution of an old Roman custom, Hart will never know how much literal truth there is to this until he ventures the invitation.

Battered Ford

When rolling up in a battered rented Ford to a studio and offered a more doggy conveyance to take him back to the Ambassador, Hart observed that "this is quite an improvement." Genuinely impressed by the aluminum trimmings and everything on the big car, which an affable film star had placed at his disposal (including a Japanese chauffeur), Hart can't make up his mind whether the said film star was being genuine or just showing off when, in an earnestly apologetic tone, he said, "Don't mind it please, Mr. Hart, this is just my old car."

These and other things are perplexing the novitiate playwright in his first reactions to Hollywood.

With him is an even more practical young showman, Bob Sinclair, who stage-managed the original "Once in a Lifetime" company and who will start off the Grauman western production and then return east. Sinclair, with his practical knowledge of Broadway stage standards, cannot believe that everything in the legit is as on the downgrade as it appears to be.

Not Many Offers

Hart has not been besieged by any scenario offers out here. He had a couple from the New York end, including Paramount and U, but is not especially interested. Par wanted him to do the dialog treatment on "Merton of the Movies," which Hart rejected as being too inauspicious an opportunity for his screen debut.

Hart, figuring as the successful playwright, feels he can get more from the screen rights' sale of a successful Broadway play than if hacking away grinding out dialog for the studios direct.

Hart, who looks like George S. Kaufman, his collaborator, is being quite taken up on the coast by the Broadway and native literati, as well as those others who are curiously smitten with the idea of a never-before-in-Hollywood author doing so swell a satire on the picture biz.

Grauman, who has the Pacific coast, Canadian, Colorado and Texas rights to "Lifetime" for the stage (by arrangement with Sam H. Harris) was behested by friends to do it in a Hollywood theatre but finally decided on the Mayan, in downtown L. A. where it opens Jan. 26.

Hart himself gives the general impression that he is as genuine in his naiveness as he appears to be, acting as frankly unconscious of what it's all about as is the common opinion.

Kid Circuit Idea Off

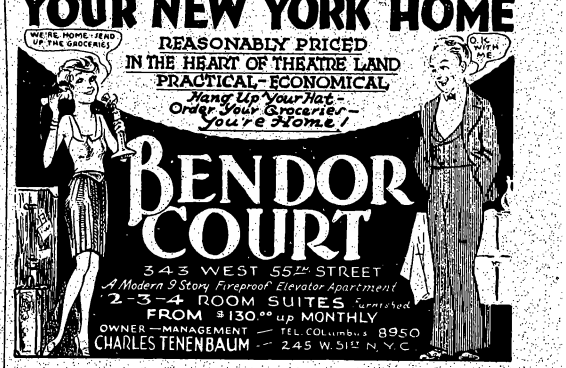
spokesmen feel that the Newark experiment would never have collapsed.

The Newark defeat has given the entire movement its worst setback. Paramount-Publix is now definitely opposed to it, claiming that the settlement of the issue will best be accomplished by the occasional introduction in regular theatres of pictures that will have a decided child appeal and yet entertain the adults.



Meanwhile, political forces in the industry are holding to the idea that the "nursery" theatre is the best answer. They are entering a campaign to educate the parents of the nation through civic bodies.

When a community evidences sufficient interest to apply for a kid theatre, then the industry's diplomats will insist upon the round-robin. If the percentage of signatures is sufficient, this will be called to the attention of local exhibitors.

But it is deemed that the Newark incident has set back the kiddie theatre idea for [illegible]

Simple Solution Offered for Long-Time Internal Strife Of Indie Exhibs—Producers

By Tom Waller

After years of internal strife and bickerings the film industry is conceding the need for a unified front to be devoted against pressure from without, stronger and more investigatory than it has ever been and attracted into development by filmdom's anxiety to air its own merry-go-round of household difficulties.

Not only producers but leaders of independent groups concede that further flashing of the tomahawk will make more grave a political crisis which is being magnified by the economic condition of the nation and the tendency of legislatures to tax heavily every luxury.

Where organization lobby work has been considered a gag by many in previous years, something to build up and knock over at will, and where indies have credited producer employees with battling the same for selfish motives and achievements for the record, the same is far from true now. Official bodies of some states have let their zeal carry them to the point where they have privately sought information on the receipts of every box office in their jurisdiction and have admitted in their communication that they want the same because they intend to exact tribute from every item and phase coming under the heading of luxury.

There are 31 states programed to consider statutes which will exact a 10%, more or less, amusement tax from box offices.

The United States Supreme Court ruling on contract and arbitration 100% the way the indies wanted it is deserving of analysis. Few of the indies realize what it is all about, much as with every move in the past.

Pre-War Footing

If the producers actually do get tough and demand money in advance, in lieu of their inability to enforce collection, indies will be on a pre-war and wartime footing as the result.

Ten years ago and less, when the indie exhib was fairly a power, the hue and cry at every convention was "Down with advance deposits." Even New York's Jimmie Walker took his turn in advising the exhibs on that score.

In 1923 the compulsory arbitration system and standard exhibition went into effect and the deposit system went at the same time pretty much into discard.

In 1923 there were hordes of fly-by-night producers, men who were able to get their pictures financed in advance because dough-on-the-line before delivery had been the system. With the new method the indie exhib didn't have to dig for cash a month in advance, and in some cases four months. That's one of the very reasons why the fly-by-nighter went by the board, regardless of shouts of "trustification," which were soon to follow.

Then the battle against contract and arbitration started. It dragged on and on and finally the indies are victorious again. But now, some of the same leaders are at last opening their eyes to the fact that politics in pictures, the part they helped play in, is little more than a merry-go-round.

Right Back

The survivors in the indie ranks are back where they started. There are some who point to the statute on New York's books against using advance deposits to finance projects. This they say will end forever the chance of any return of the fly-by-nighter. But others, more familiar with legal aspects, point to the effort New Jersey made to record the same kind of a law and that it was defeated. Others, as well, recall the simple "out" of incorporating in another state and doing business in New York.

It is the realization of this whirl-a-gig of the past 15 years—like the Aesop fable of the frogs annoying Jupiter so often for a new leader that he finally sent a stork which devoured them—that is bringing not only indies but producers into a frame of mind where flare-ups and battles are beginning to react of themselves as adolescent and futile.

One very pertinent angle so far as producers "seeing the light" is concerned comes from a high spokesmen who warns against over-caution and stringency on the new zoning system, that the system had better be elastic and not too producer-perfect, otherwise it is liable to experience an upset like contract and arbitration.

This reflection is directly in line with what some indies are planning for their next line of attack—protection. Producers, anticipating it, are already listening to the advise of one of their own intermediaries.

Long heads on both sides of the fence know that the industry can iron out its present major internal difficulties by agreeing to exchange a few baby taps on the chin.

The producers can relax a bit on protection and eliminate all fear of the advance deposit, if:

The exhibitors quit quibbling over legal verbiage, accept voluntarily the new contract and arbitration, and—pay their bills when they're due.

Par.'s New Color Process Ready, 1 Film Finished

Paramount, through its own laboratory, technicians and chemists, has perfected a new color method claiming to cost hardly more than black and white.

Process is an additive one, breaks into three colors and yet permits for simplified photography and developing on the black and white order.

Announcement of the perfection of the color, not made to the industry as yet, has been told to P-P help. Understood that Paramount does not intend to keep the process for itself, the process to be made available to the entire industry.

Paramount's color is said to have been perfected under the direction of its research department, which experimented on the Zukor farm.

It is also reported that Paramount has one feature finished in the new process. No extra or especially manufactured cameras are needed, filming being done with the ordinary machine used on the lots daily.

Official announcement of the color process to the trade is imminent any day.

$200,000 FOR MARX BOYS' NEXT PAR. FILM

Marx Brothers have reached a new agreement with Paramount on another picture. Arrangement calls for $200,000 for the boys against 50% of the net, with this $200,000 not to apply against the negative cost. Deal carries an option on two more features dependent upon the gross of the first film.

Negotiations were handled by Max Gordon with final signatures attached on board the "Paris" as the foursome was about to sail for eight weeks of picture house dates in London.

The brothers are due back in New York to start the picture in April.

WILL MAHONEY

In Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book". The Pittsburgh Press said, "Here is a statement which even when it cools, will still be true: Will Mahoney is the funniest man in the world. The funniest. The screamiest. He did something last night that I never saw before in Pittsburgh; he evoked cheers."

10,000 Ease In on Hits, But When They Flop, He's Just a Dumbbell

By Sam Shain

For every really great on Broadway there are 10,000 might-be's. Mostly in legit. On the day following the pronouncement of a hit the nearly-had-its and the almost-did-its could be stretched upright to Singapore and back.

Just so many would-be's who dream in the glamour of the show world with or without connection. They believe in their own somnambulistic adventures to create an impression of having an inside track to something. It might be anything. Most of the time that's all it is—anything.

The barber who shaves the producer and the bootblack who polishes the star's shoes. The office stenos and the office boys. The casters and the chorus boys. If they didn't have it, they heard of it, or maybe they read it. But all finger the ethereal contact with greatness, even when they don't actually know or feel.

They build their own glamour and they're countless. If the play coming in is reported as a sock over there may be any number claiming to have had some contact with it. If it flops it lays.

That's the way the expression, "He's a smart kid," happened. The bird who shoves in a flop is dumb. If it hits he's a smart kid.

What the outside world does not know and some of these dreamy contacters never realize that the same smart kid may have made his decision over night, or maybe it took two years. That's the way of plays.

On the Inside

Let an underwear manufacturer become interested in a show and everyone in his office is treading on air. They're on the inside. If they aren't reading plays they're asking for passes.

Even the casting agent will claim the honoralum of fixing a hit because the producer asked him to get certain actors. And the manicurist knows the most.

In the same way an office boy becomes an assistant to an outside world and a phone operator a secretary. The secretary, of course, is almost the boss.

Of the shows one hears the least about are the Shubert productions. So many flops a season no one cares to take credit for anything Shubert.

LAYOFFS OWE $1,000,000

Hollywood Bank Generous to Tenants Also on Collateral

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Closed Bank of Hollywood for which liquidation was ordered had outstanding over $1,000,000 in small loans without security, some to layoff actors, writers and agents, others to lawyers and agents active in show business and tenants in the Bank of Hollywood building.

These loans run up in the thousands. Loans of this class on which bank held security amount to only $300,000.

Trans-Lux Opens First 2 B'way Houses in Feb.

A new twist in amusement distribution will have gotten under way by February when R-K-O, through its affiliate, Trans-Lux, opens the first two of its planned 200 low admission scale miniature film houses in New York city. These beginners of the string will be spotted in the Lefcourt building, 49th street and Broadway, and across from the Rivoli and the Capitol theatres.

One of the miniature spots will be for feature projection. The other will be utilized as a newsreel house. It will be the second all-newsreel theatre on Broadway. Courtland Smith, former Fox exec, is the guiding chief of Trans-Lux theatre activities.

All of the Trans-Lux houses will be around 300 capacity and built in stores. Leases for the two to be shunted in the same block in the Lefcourt building have already been signed and the space is being put into shape for operation. A third is planned for around Madison avenue on 59th street.

Trans-Lux picture projection is on the ticker tape angle similar to those used in brokerage houses. It allows for a different kind of film exhibition where the celluloid is run through the back of a Trans-Lux machine and projected for any sized width on a regular screen through magnifying lenses.

Newsreel end of the plan will likely be tied in with Pathe. Latter is part of the proposed R-K-O-Pathe merger. No idea has been detailed as to whose features will be used at the miniature playhouses, but in all likelihood they will be second runs since the admission tops are to be basically low.

U Chopping $10,000 Off Cost Per Version

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Although Universal is reported making its directly shot foreign versions for less than any other large studio, even U feels that the nut will have to come down to make the ends meet.

Heretofore a shooting schedule of three weeks has been allowed on versions. Starting with the Spanish "Many a Slip," a week will be chopped off the schedule.

U's multis have been costing between $50,000 to $60,000. Studio hopes to get under the $40,000 mark by crowding production into a fortnight.

N. L. Mannheim, U's export manager, is due here from New York the coming week, when foreign plans for next year will be decided upon in confabs with Carl Laemmle.

Studio has lost its warmth toward multi-linguals and is seeking a substitute for direct shot versions. Execs here favor more synchronized versions and the plan suggested is to engage former silent "names" not working to make silents for the foreign market. Belief is old "names" will get better box office reception than stars imported for abroad.

Wandering Band

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

The ballyhoo has gone neighborhood.

Hollywood merchants have a four-piece, fancy costume, string band which wanders the neighborhood as a customer draw.

WORLD LEAGUE MAKES WAR FILM PLEA

Geneva, Dec. 27.

The League of Nations council, quartered here, is undertaking a campaign to embrace the world and aimed to discourage the making of war pictures by all countries.

The appeal has been broadcast over the world pointing out that war films are calculated to inspire militaristic sentiments and may be a source of international discord.

Incident of "All Quiet" in Germany and other pictures undoubtedly inspired the move. While it is admitted that "All Quiet" is essentially a preachment against war, it furnished the motive for a political upheaval in the Fatherland. Political partisans sought to have it appear that the version exhibited in Germany was doctored, while that shown in the States, and in other countries, contained many anti-German sequences.

Whatever the truth of the matter, the picture served as the peg upon which to hang an international controversy and the argument that such incidents react against the amity of nations.

More Versions Than Domestics at Metro

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Felix Feist, M-G-M distrib chieftain, and Howard Dietz, publicity-advertising director, are expected here early in the spring for conferences on new product for coming season's (1931-32) program.

According to advance plans, Metro will not increase its domestic output (this year 52 pictures) but in all likelihood will make more foreign versions, supplying more productions all told in Spanish, French, German and Italian than English. Annual sales convention probably Chicago in May.

Fox Trying to Keep Maureen in Hollywood

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Fox is trying to discourage Maureen O'Sullivan from making a trip to Ireland to see her parents. Studio execs have pointed out to Miss O'Sullivan the uncertainty of her returning in time to the studio in view of quota regulations.

Miss O'Sullivan has been sojourning in this country the past 14 months on a special permit, which would automatically be revoked upon her departure this time.

State Recognition for Gibson's Rodeos

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

At the next California State Legislature a bill will be offered to make the annual rodeo held at Hoot Gibson's ranch a state affair.

Ranch, situated 25 miles from here, has featured a rodeo yearly that attracts most of the crack riders.

BREON RECALLED BY F. N.

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

First National has recalled Edmund Breon, English actor, from London for a part in "Dances," next Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., film.

Breon played in "Dawn Patrol." He then returned to England to play for BIP, and British and Dominion.

He is due here Jan. 1.

DONAHUE F.N.'ING IT

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Joe Donahue is due here from the east next week to start work on "Party Husband" at First National.

He will play the part of the drunk husban opposite Dorothy Mackaill.

Fox to Protect Percentage Bookings By Servicing Exhibs With Special Dept.

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Fox will organize an extensive exhibitors' service to lend direct aid to all percentage accounts similar to that used by Warners and F. N. Service is to not only build up grosses on its pictures for exhibs, but through percentage bookings to increase its share on those engagements.

Department will function as a part of distribution under direct supervision of James R. Grainger with Roger Ferri in charge.

Grainger, now here on a product visit, is also lining up plans for the service with Ferri. Latter, here several months, leaves for New York Jan. 6 to further organize the department, lining up the staff he will marshal under Grainger's executive guidance at Fox's New York home offices.

"Partner" With Exhibit

As explained, the promotional stunt with Fox's percentage accounts outside of its own chain theatres, virtually makes Fox a partner of the exhib in latter's playing of a picture. Up to now distribs have sold exhibs pictures on percentage, gambling so far as its end was concerned by leaving everything to the account in the way of exploiting and selling products. Where the distrib has been dubious as to what the exhib might do on a picture, sufficient guarantees against percentage have been demanded.

The Fox promotional idea will embrace many angles in direct aid to exhib accounts. In addition to getting behind every picture, company will undertake special campaigns to build up newer personalities at the studio, and in key cities will handle special promotion stunts in co-operation with the local exhib.

Want to Examine Schenck In Brice-Rose Film Suits

Fannie Brice and Billy Rose are preparing action to secure an order for the examination of Joe Schenck, as head of Art-Cinema Corporation, in suits totaling $180,000 against Art-Cinema. Abeles & Green, attorneys for both Miss Brice and Rose, have prepared a plea for the examination of Schenck which will be submitted to the New York Supreme Court. Schenck is now in New York.

Miss Brice (Mrs. Rose) is suing Art-Cinema on two actions, one for breach of contract for $125,000 over an unmade second picture, and the other for back salary of $30,000 on her first UA film.

Rose's suit for $25,000 is also for breach of contract. He alleges that he was to write music and dialog for the two Art-Cinema productions in which Miss Brice was to star.

4,000 Extras Work

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Some 30 features in production during Christmas week furnished 4,000 extras checks for five working days. On Monday (22) 1,400 extras worked.

Frank Lloyd was the week's mob master, using 600 in a French village shot for "East Lynne" at Fox and three smaller groups, three other days.

Only 26 features were carried over to the next week.

CROMWELL'S BARGING

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

John Cromwell, 1. e director, and his wife, Kay Johnson, left here Friday (26) for Havana via the Panama.

Minnie to Minnies

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

Problem of what to do with minnie golf courses was solved by a fisherman. His course, on a prominent Wilshire Blvd. corner, has been converted into a trout pool. Charge is 50 cents admission with tackle furnished, and 3 trout for $1. No limit on catch.

Owner will keep trout up nights figuring to get returning night clubbers to try their luck at catching a fish for breakfast.

New British Co. Still Looking For Film Men

Delaying his return trip to England a few days, Ralph J. Pugh, English representative of the interests back of Wembley Trust and Anglo-American Films, continued his negotiations for the services of Harold B. Franklin, former head of Fox West Coast.

Pugh sailed Saturday on the Leviathan after signing M. M. Hoffman, now head of Liberty Pictures, an indie outfit, as general manager of production for Anglo-American. Hoffman, prior to branching out as a producer on his own, was connected with Paramount, Universal and Tiffany in executive capacities.

Hoffman plans to wind up his current productions in Hollywood within the next few weeks and will go to London early in February to supervise the construction and equipment of the Anglo American Film studios at Wembley. Six sound stages are now being built there.

Only Want Dreiser's Idea On "Tragedy" as Film

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Paramount doesn't want Theodore Dreiser to work on "American Tragedy" but does want his ideas on the story as a picture. Author will have supervisor's job while the yarn is in preparation either here or in New York.

Final papers, giving Par dialog rights, are about to be signed.

HARRY WARNER STILL HOME

Harry Warner was still confined to his home in Westchester at the end of last week. It is expected, however, that he will return to his office before the current week is over.

WB head received a painful leg injury when his horse fell with him while riding on his estate two weeks ago.

WANT JEANETTE AGAIN

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Paramount, which did not renew its contract with Jeanette MacDonald, would like to borrow her from Fox where she is now under contract.

Par, wants the prima opposite Maurice Chevalier again in another musical romance. Picture is due for eastern production when the Frenchman returns from abroad.

GERMANS RAP FRENCH

Paris, Dec. 27.

Much angry notice is taken here of a story published in a German trade paper decrying the French picture personnel and system.

Article says there is no system here, and that neither men nor groups of men able to handle films in a big way can be locally found.

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are 50/50 on honors for the "Big Six" among 1930's stars, "money" directors and "money pictures."

Metro's score on femme stars is 4/2 against Paramount holding the majority of the Big Six box-office magnets in Norma Shearer, Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford and Marie Dressler, as against Par's two strongest femme draws: Clara Bow and Ruth Chatterton.

Par in turn is bullish on its males with Maurice Chevalier, George Bancroft, William Powell and Jack Oakie, as against Metro with its lone Ramon Novarro, and United Artists' Ronald Colman.

Conversely Metro takes the honors with the year's "money pictures" by showing four strong flicker operas, "Anna Christie," "Blushing Brides," Caught Short" and "Divorcee," as against Fox's "Common Clay" and Paramount's "Love Parade."

Par, in turn, evens by producing four of the year's best "money" directors — Frank Tuttle, Eddie Sutherland, John Cromwell and Rowland V. Lee as against Metro's Robert Z. Leonard and Clarence Brown.

Metro scores a technical point by having its entries, Leonard and Brown, rate No. 1 and No. 3 among the Big Six directors.

The stars, like the following "money" directors, are rated by quanity and quality this past year. The bulked product of certain satellites' output in 1930, as against perhaps some lone outstanding contribution, figures in the rating, with the gross r enue and box-office returns as the primary basis for computation.

It is for this reason Lewis Milestone, for example, with his lone "All Quiet on the Western Front," despite its signal box-office distinction (plus the general recognition) cannot even rate No. 6 among the Big Six. Instead Rowland V. Lee, with his trio of serviceable box-office pictures—"The Return of Dr. Fu-Manchu" and the two Bancroft's, "Ladies Love Brutes" and "Derelict"—comes in for prior consideration.

It is on this principle of gross revenue that the Big Six among the directors sees the following ratings:

Robert Z. Leonard.
Frank Tuttle.
Clarence Brown.
Eddie Sutherland.
John Cromwell.
Rowland V. Lee.

Their relative standing, in the sequence above, is almost obviously explained by a recapitulation of each of their 1930 product which follows below:

Robert Z. Leonard (Metro), directed "The Divorcee" and "Let Us Be Gay," two Norma Shearer smash starring pictures, and "In Old Madrid," relatively weak, but holding an undeniable box-office lodestone, Ramon Novarro. Leonard like the other Metro or Paramount directors has the added advantage of certain guaranteed key city outlets for his product; channels which are denied to Universal, for example even with an "All Quiet."

Frank Tuttle (Paramount), with three Clara Bows ("True to the Navy," "Love Among the Millionaires" and "Her Wedding Night"), plus "Benson Murder Case," "Only the Brave" and "Men Are Like That," speaks for himself with his quantity output, all in one year. Say what they will about Bow slipping, the Par sales' department has a series of Bows all sold up in advance and doesn't have to work hard getting her stuff extensively circulated. That's another element which figured in these ratings—production and distribution organization.

Clarence Brown (Metro) only had two, "Annie Christie" and "Romance," both Greta Garbos, and enough to give him the trey spot. The smash of "Christie" as a money-getter figures in the computation, and rating above.

Eddie Sutherland (Paramount) is a serviceable hokum comedy director. His two Jack Oakies, "Social Lion" and "Sap From Syracuse," plus "Burning Up," not so impres-

As Chaplin Studio Figures It, 'Lights' Can Get $8,000,000 in World Rentals

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

With every theatre in the world a potential account, including wired and unwired houses here and abroad, Chaplin studio is estimating that "City Lights" can gross $8,000,000. They base this on selling the picture in the States on a $6,000,000 quota, $1,500,000 more than originally figured, and $2,000,000 from foreign countries.

If those figures are reached on sales, "Lights" will be the top picture in the history of the industry on total distribution returns. The "Birth of a Nation" did around $4,500,000 up to five years after it had been released. That takes in '15 to '19.

For America the $6,000,000 quota is the highest ever set on any single picture before release in the history of pictures. Chaplin is demanding figures for foreign countries that are proportionately as high. Neutral picture men don't see how the theatres here or abroad can stand the rate.

All offers so far have been turned down because Chaplin wants double or more. Germany, which has requested the picture strictly as a silent, offered $150,000 for rights to distribution in that country. Chaplin is asking $250,000. Russia offered the small figure of $15,000, whereas the comedian is insisting on $150,000.

So far as England and British possessions are concerned, no negotiations on distribution rights can be entered under British laws until the picture has been displayed on English soil at a trade showing or otherwise. This may result in Chaplin himself giving "Lights" a first run in London through leasing a house there on his own hook, the same as he is doing in New York and which he also plans to do in other key cities where possible.

Chaplin's Angle

Chaplin is reported entirely convinced of the distribution possibilities on his picture. So much so, say sources close to Chaplin, that while he may direct a talker with other players, as he did on "A Woman of Paris," years ago, he is determined never to appear in a talker himself.

"Lights" is claimed as a silent except for its musical score and those spots here sound effects are absolutely essential to dramatic or comedy highlights. There will be one scene with sound effects where Charlie swallows a whistle. But such street sounds as auto horns and other noises will not be recorded. There will not be a single spoken word in the picture by anyone. Advance tip is that the picture is partly a satire on talkers.

The only reason picture is being synced at all, it is said, is because so many theatres now do not have orchestras or organs.

Shot 125,000 Feet

Chaplin shot 125,000 feet of film and will cut that to around 8,000 for release, or slightly over eight reels. It's the only picture of importance that will not get a preview out here or anywhere else, except in England where trade showing for exhibs is necessary.

Following the local premiere, Chaplin goes east to attend the New York opening, sailing immediately thereafter for London. Accompanying him will be Carl Robinson. Planning to remain away for from six months to a year, the comedian will visit France, Germany, Russia, Spain (where Charlie wants to see a bull fight), China and Japan.

On returning to Hollywood, Chaplin intends to either direct a talker or start on another silent.

A Quiet Slide

Financial observers are authority for the indication that 1931 will see a general downward revision in film b.o. admission scales. This price cut will be widely and quietly sprung, according to the proposed intention.

It does not mean a drastic slashing of prices. The method will be simply to lengthen the hours during which the cheaper prices exist. It may mean that some houses will open earlier. This extension of cheap price hours is already in use by some theatres.

It indicates an inner thought from the financial men that 1931 will not bring any quick relief in conditions for the immediate future. They don't look for the commercial turning point now until late next fall.

Exhibs Want More Action And Less Talk

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Taking the tip from distributors and from exhibitor demands around the country who are demanding more action in pictures, studios are trying to cut down on dialog. In some instances they're chopping the spoken word to the bone.

While it is stated that the attempt to keep dialog down is in line with market insistence for more pantomime, no producer as yet has officially issued orders. Where the story can be told by pantomime, with action taking the place of words, scripts are being altered that way. Studio execs are sending scripts back to the writers several times, if necessary, to get the dialog down.

Tom Mix Signs New 5-Yr. Ringling Contract

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Tom Mix has reached a new five year agreement with John Ringling, the contract being closed last week.

Probable that Mix will go out with the Sells-Floto or one of the smaller circuses in the Ringling string where he will be heavily billed.

Biog on Doc DeForest Will Cost $52.50 a Copy

Dr. Lee deForest will be the subject of one of the highest-priced biographies ever issued in this country. C. S. Thompson is writing it, to be called "The Life and Works of Dr. Lee deForest." It will sell for $52.50.

There will be only 150 copies, and it will make its appearance to coincide with the 25th anniversary of deForest's invention of the vacuum tube.

Another biography of deForest, called "Conqueror of Space," and written by Georgette Carneal, a newspaperwoman, was published recently.

RUMOR ON D. W.

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Report of a current call for old fashioned drama types spread the rumor that D. W. Griffith was planning a talker version of "Way Down East" with as many of the original silent cast as obtainable.

Will H. Hays' Tough Job

Will H. Hays may mean it when he says he will divorce himself from politics when he takes the leadership of the picture industry. The suspicion the Postmaster-General was chosen for his strong party influence was general and, on the face of the record, justified. The method of the film people in negotiating the business created suspicion. Mr. Hays did nothing to allay it. His announcement that he would retire from the Harding Cabinet to take the new job left a lot to be desired. Why all this mystery about what should have been a simple business transaction?

Willingness to accept the belief that there is no joker in the Hays appointment is due entirely to the express opinion of trade authorities that have command of the inside situation. The secrecy and dodging of the preliminary dealings have surrounded the whole affair with an undesirable atmosphere of mystery which will only make Mr. Hays' task the harder, unless he himself takes things in hand and, by a statement so frank as to make his sincerity unimpeachable, clears the air of this taint of intrigue. This sort of declaration ought, of course, to come from some group of representative film companies, but such a thing is scarcely to be expected. Mr. Hays probably will have to do it himself, and the sooner he goes about it the better for his future career in the films.

The job of film trade dictator is going to be one surrounded by manifold complexities, and Mr. Hays is going to get very little help from the film business itself. The producers and distributors are paying him $150,000 a year, and they are going to hand him all their problems to make him earn it. The new dictator has got, in the first place, to create something like an esprit de corps in an industry which is rent by infinite business and personal rivalries. He must as well earn the public respect for an institution that is on trial before the country. He can make no better start than laying his position on the table with absolute candor and in convincing detail. Gum-shoeing at the outset will involve dangerous consequences later on.

Indeed, unflinching publicity would be one of his most powerful weapons. As Mr. Hays' job shapes up his task is to reconcile conflicting elements in the three branches, producing, distributing and exhibiting. He must have some power to enforce his findings, and no such authority is evident. Here is a sample of what he will face: A long time ago, before the settlement of the Edison patent litigation, there was in New York a body known as the Film Service Association, to which all the independent film exchanges subscribed in a sort of "gentlemen's agreement" to regulate credits. Some 10 metropolitan exchanges, such as Fox, Waters, Miles, Vitagraph and others, were supposed to co-operate, so that no exhibitor could jump from one exchange to another until all its obligations had been met. A Pennsylvania exhibitor taking service from Miles couldn't switch to Waters unless his Miles bills were paid, and no exchange would cut prices to get a customer away from another in the association. That was the theory, and the exchangemen met at intervals to consider disputes that arose under the system. They discussed their affairs gravely and then went out to cut each other's throats. The scheme wouldn't stick because nobody could enforce the rule. As a matter of fact, exchanges were bidding for their rivals' customers and agreeing secretly to pay outstanding service bills still owed to competitor exchangemen out of service charges. The association disintegrated.

Competition perhaps is not so crude today as back in 1910, but the spirit of the thing is only slightly modified. Ultimately, Mr. Hays will be called upon to handle the distributor-exhibitor contract and rule upon endless disputes as between distributor and producer arising out of service to exhibitors in bad standing. Expulsion from the association as a last resort will mean nothing until the industry has evolved something like a force of opinion. The whole situation is beset with many complications which can be met only with constructive pen dealings.

Hays will earn his salary many times in any event. Already several progressive reforms have been formulated which, alone, should make the Hays leadership worth while. It is proposed to organize a permanent force to deal with film thefts with a rogues' gallery and an elaborate system for the dissemination of information. Every time a film thief or the receiver of stolen film is convicted his photograph will be put on file and the trade will be circularized. The thief will be identified for all time. It is estimated that the elimination of this illicit trade in films will save the industry $1,000,000 a year. A clearing house of film company employes may be established as part of this service. One man is now employed in an executive capacity with a film company who was discharged from two other concerns because of grave irregularities involving the misuse of money ($1,800 in one case and nearly $20,000 in another) because there has never been any system for the exchange of references as between the picture companies. A central filing bureau would make this kind of thing impossible.

These matters are sat down here as samples of the constructive work the new arbiter is expected to do, but nobody outside the small group of film men who have talked with Mr. Hays knows anything about them. When announcement was made from Washington that Mr. Hays would take the new post all details of the transaction were held back. It was not even made known officially what salary the position would pay. The Washington dispatches to the New York newspapers gave not an inkling of what the Postmaster-General would do in his new capacity, a sample of the pussy-footing that has characterized the whole affair.

The only detail of the new job that was made known in Washington was that Mr. Hays would inaugurate a Saturday morning picture display for boys, "which he believes can be welded into as potent an institution for good as the Boy Scouts." Having in mind the political complexion which was put on the job in the first place, was it any wonder that the New York "World," which is independent Democratic in its leaning, should put undue emphasis upon this paragraph, carrying the sarcastic imputation that the Postmaster-General was giving up a cabinet ministry to promote nature study pictures for Boy Scouts?

Hays, by the very nature of his former position as Republican National Chairman and his record as a brilliant, political leader, must face a keen partisan press and a public made suspicious by too much secrecy from the picture people. He cannot get himself straight on the record too soon.

And yet there is going to be a political aspect to this Hays appointment that must sing up sooner or later. Mr. Hays is no novice to the value of the moving picture. His knowledge dates back to the days of the old World Film Co., before he became National Chairman of the Republican Party, and when President Woodrow Wilson was then getting and taking all the benefits the film news weeklies could give him. It was in those days Mr. Hays must have seen and appreciated what the moving picture meant to politics. Later he became National Chairman, and lined up for his next Congressional campaign. The picture exhibitor may have been a part of that campaign. And after that, not so very long either, the Republican nomination for President and Harding. That was Hays' best and he put it over.

This is where the political surprise will get in its work. Mr. Hays as a leader in his party (Republican) could take reasonable means to

DUCE PROMOTES HOME WHOOPEE

Paris, Dec. 27.

Mussolini's suggestion, which amounts to a high command, is that all loyal Italians patronize San Remo, seaport about 80 miles from Genoa, famous as a winter resort, instead of spending their money in Deauville and the other resorts of the French Riviera.

To say that the pronouncement has angered the French people is to put it mildly.

A few days ago photographers were foiled in an attempt to snapshot the gaming tables in the casino at Nice and the inference is drawn here that they were operating on behalf of the Italian government which wanted to identify Italians who were ignoring the Duce's hint.

U. S. Talkers Gaining In Greece, but Native Film Meets Obstacles

Athens, Dec. 12.

Contrary to what is happening elsewhere in southeastern Europe American talkers are gradually gaining ground in Greece, this being due largely to the activities of the manager of Fox film for Balkans and Near East. There is no doubt that German Klangfilm is striving to break through, but the taste of Greek public is more inclined to American story types and American language.

Several German talkers did not arouse any special interest and hardly could hold up for a week. Most of the wired houses have Western Electric equipment and for winter season four new theatres were opened. So, it may be said that at the moment there are no theatres in Athens for dramatic performances. Kotopouli-troupe is now making a tour in United States, and another Greek troupe went a few days ago to Turkey.

The attempt of a Greco-German concern to form a society with a view to producing native talkers for Greece, Turkey, Roumania and eventually Yeugoslavia, failed largely due to the fact that in each of these countries there are small concerns operating with very small success. The initial idea of the Dag-film company was to concentrate all film productions for the Balkans in Greece.

Heavy Taxes

The Greek government does not seem to favor the progress of the talkers. An additional tax of about 2% is charged on admissions to talkers, revenue going to the Greek National theatre. This is due to the activities of Greek musicians, who find their position rather difficult owing to a growing interest in mechanicals. As a result of competition all Greek theatres had to lower the entrance fees for talkers by 20-30%. A few days ago the Greek Censor banned the film "When I Was a Robber" on the ground that it might inspire crime.

The new Greek film "Daphni and Cloe," whose subject-matter was taken from a love story in ancient Greek mythology did not attract special interest, in spite of great advertisement.

Ache in Foreign Versions

By Fred Stanley

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

After a year of foreign production in Hollywood, it's anybody's guess as to where the bulk of the future multi-linguals will be made, here or in Europe. It's still in the pro and con status, as is virtually every phase of foreign production. An uncertainty as to its future is apparent all around.

When the year started only one direct-shot version had been made. This was Metro's "Lady to Love," from the stage play, "They Knew What They Wanted." After that all the studios got in. Just where the step would take them was unknown, and still is. But it seemed the thing to do, although to retain the foreign grosses meant a sizeable boost in production costs. The days of an expenditure of a few thousand dollars for titles in every language, to cover the whole world, were over.

Producers were faced with expenditures of anywhere from $50,000 and up to four times that for versions in each language. With fewer spots to play their pictures, due to the slow wiring of houses abroad, it was obvious that a substantial profit from other than English speaking countries was quite a way off. This was a real headache in view of the fact that some of the majors looked upon the non-English speaking countries to give them 25% of their grosses.

It is still too early for the producers to figure just what the foreigns will mean to their business. Truth is that the activity to date can be checked up to experimenting and, so far, it has been a case of putting money in a bag and hoping that it will come out with more of the same. Returns so far are negligible in comparison with the expenditures.

The only major studios going into foreign production on anything like a big scale locally are Metro and Warners. By the end of the year M-G planned to have 25 completed. Warners will have 18. Universal will be third in this standing.

No sooner had the producers plunged into foreign production of talkers than the realization came that the actors of the various colonies here, used previously to silents, were inadequate for sound. Then came the mad grab and combing of Europe for talent.

Metro's Imports

Almost every train has been bringing imports. In the case of Warners and Universal, with a less settled policy, it meant sending them back after their chores were done. But with Metro, almost every one of the newcomers was given term contracts. In all, the M-G-M has imported around a score of actors and actresses, six directors, and seven writers, and they are still coming and remaining on that lot.

It would seem that Metro is settled on a policy of foreign made pictures in Hollywood. This is one studio that will say "no" to the probability of shifting the production burden to Europe. For next year the policy is for a 50-50 split with domestic production. In other words, as many pictures made in alien tongues as in English.

Intention early in the year by Paramount to make its whole year's supply in Hollywood was soon put aside with the beginning of activity at its Paris, Joinville, studio. After making two French pictures, one with Maurice Chevalier and the other with Adolphe Menjou, decision then came only to make a limited number of Spanish talkers, although many in this tongue will come from the French plant. Meanwhile, 60 versions originally planned for the Coast were produced in Paris. Probability at Paramount is that all of its foreign activity will soon be centered on the other side of the water.

Warners-First National set out with a definite program of 18, six each in French, German, and Spanish. These combined studios are not committed to a future policy until the returns begin to percolate in on this first dozen and a half. It is a tossup whether future production will be here or in Europe.

Universal started late with its foreigns and currently have less than half a dozen completed. Radio also is a late starter, but decided to experiment with the running process, shooting backgrounds here and dubbing foreign players into the film in Europe. If successful, it will be a money saver, for by this method it is figured that at least two-thirds of production cost can be knocked off. But this is but another phase of the present status of foreign production experimentation.

Fox was another company which started on a plan to concentrate its multi-lingual making here, only to halt before it got under way for a survey of Europe on the matter.

What the future will be, of course, is governed by the dollar. Feeling at present is that pictures can be made abroad cheaper than here, but minus the quality of Hollywood product.

The industry feels it must have both quality and lower production costs. Where the two can best be melded will be the ultimate destination of the bulk of future foreign production. But right now its solution, solution, who's got the solution?

Units for Warfield And Seattle-Portl'd Par.'s in Fox Switch

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Fox West Coast's plans for the Publix theatres it has acquired are not definitely set yet.

However, Oscar Oldknow as regards Frisco, plans shifting Fanchon and Marco units into the Warfield, and converting the Fox into a straight production overture policy. Paramount theatre there is to ultimately drop units and become a run house, which is the Warfield's present routine. The California will be the slough house and the St. Francis will get French and Spanish talkers on weekly changes.

Portland and Seattle Paramount theatres will get the Fanchon and Marco shows now current at the Fox theatres in those cities, while the Fox sites may get a cheaper form of stage entertainment.

This nullifies the original intention to give Portland and Seattle only one stage show on the theory the towns could not stand two rival presentations.

M-G Buys 'Candle Light' And 'Way to Treat Woman'

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Metro has purchased rights to two plays, both of European origin, "The Way to Treat a Woman" and "Candle Light." Latter was given production on Broadway by Al Woods and Gilbert Miller.

"Way to Treat a Woman" will be first to enter production and is in mind for Marion Davies following completion of "It's a Wise Child." P. G. Wodehouse and George Landy are working on the script.

Other play, adapted for Broadway by Wodehouse, will also probably be done by him for talkers.

Talkers for Convicts

Columbus, O., Dec. 27.

Convicts at the Ohio State Penitentiary are to have talkers served them within the next 30 days. Purchase of the necessary sound equipment was made from RCA Photophone.

Money for the equipment and its installation was obtained through annual Christmas shows staged by the prisoners, and represent a saving covering the past 10 years. There was no Christmas show this year.

Buzzells' Mex. Divorce

Ona Munson leaves for Hollywood this week to resume for First National. While on the Coast Miss Munson will probably stop over the border into Mexico to secure a divorce from her husband, Eddie Buzzell.

Latter is also on the Coast for Columbia.

ACTOR'S SILK CO. BANKRUPT

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Huntly Gordon, picture actor doing business as "Huntly Gordon Silk Mills" in Burbank, filed a petition in bankruptcy Christmas eve (24) with $66,000 in liabilities.

U. S. FILM FIELD FOR 1930

By Sid Silverman

Pictures closed out the past year with a great alibi—the national depression. That squares a lot of things, including the reason why so many of the mergers heralded as on the brink of consummation 18 months ago have yet to reach fulfillment. It also is pointed to as the explanation of the dual drop which clipped the industry during late spring and early summer, again in the fall and into the winter. There was a flock of bad pictures, too. Meanwhile, the studios were and are frantic in their search for stories. They pushed the musicals beyond the pale of public acceptance, so they can't make pictures with tunes any more, or, at least, for a few months.

As '30 passes into history Loew and Fox have yet to officially get together, Warners and First National are physically under one roof, Pathe and Radio finally reached an understanding, but the Warner-Paramount-Radio, or any arrangement of that trio you choose, with Fox included, is still a matter of guesswork, with nothing apt to happen until the market starts to get in something like a normal shape.

Fox

The industry never had anything so financially threatening it as the Fox turmoil of last winter. The main fear was that if Fox went into a receivership the public would lose all confidence in amusement stocks and the bottom would drop out of this branch of the list. Reports were rampant throughout the cold months of top executives of other companies meeting to save Fox. It developed into the grand puzzle of the year. After first rumbling a warning as early as September of 1929, the Fox matter never straightened out until the following April, or eight months later.

It was a long and tough siege, with Fox still to be refinanced again this coming April, at which time something like $55,000,000 must be arranged for. Meanwhile, the Coast was as engrossed as the east in the Fox situation.

And the production center as a whole spent most of the past 12 months groping for the public pulse—something at which it was only spasmodically successful if grosses are any criterion, and they still are.

Early in the year the "lots" discovered that musicals were tapering off. By summer they had become "poison," especially the revue picture without a story. This marked the end of the gold rush west and the long portage back by many of the New York contingent which had suddenly found itself in demand, with salaries secondary.

Hollywood currently presents a different front than it did a year ago this time. The ranks of the songwriters have suffered heavy casualties, but the stream of stage performers, writers and directors steadily continues back as well as forth because the picture men have finally realized, in many cases against their will and in some instances not at all, that stage talent in its various departments is essential. The picture men won't realize that they're no longer just in pictures, but that it's show business now, and this is the reason the independent producer is in such a great spot right now. The theatres are hungry for good pictures.

Names

They also probed forth that few stage names mean anything as a draw on a picture house marquee, and that to build a featured stage name into a picture star is a long and tedious process—something that sound has emphasized. The performance of the stage actor is needed to hold up most of the remaining picture names and to make the story of a film get over. This is generally admitted. But those drawing names remain the first requisite and is the cause of Metro being acknowledged to have a distinct edge, due to the list of "personalities" among its players. Film circles on the Coast will concede, if pressed, that a Metro picture is 50% "over" before they start to shoot—simply because of the box office capabilities of this firm's personality lineup.

As the musical film passed out of its cycle (but apt to come back any time), it also sounded the death knell of the backstage story. Westerns suddenly sprang into popularity and prominence and then seemed to taper off as the year drew to an end. Underworld and gangland yarns became overdone, although still capable of doing business if of unusual merit, but the main cry over the late days of '30 was, and still is, for sex stories. Which is something that has been more or less true of the picture business since its inception.

Audiences

That pictures are still handicapped by the degree of intelligence of its audience (which is what some critics won't realize and the reason they continue to berate the studios for the type of product released), is as true as always but not to such a great degree as formerly. The main indication that dialog pictures are slowly educating the public appears based on it's creeping into popularity of such heroines as Ann Harding, Claudette Colbert, Constance Bennett, Jeanette MacDonald, and maybe one or two others.

Regardless of how far these women may go as screen stars, it remains a fact that between themselves and the microphone they relegated the flapper heroines to the limbo and to where the purely physical type is now hanging on the edge of oblivion. No longer does the beautiful but dumb girl intrigue when it becomes a matter of placing the admission price on the line. There has got to be some intelligence behind a personal performance because now they talk.

Another instance that the public is able to appreciate something other than a man, a girl, and a couch is the success of the George Arliss pictures. Allowing that none of these English star's films may have been dynamic successes, nevertheless, it may be said that the Arliss releases were an opening wedge and many a film will profit by the pioneering of this British actor and his type of work.

Color and Wide Screen

There are those within the trade who feel that color has cooled and no longer enjoys definite favoritism with the fan. An analysis shows no real basis for the thought other than personal opinions. Studios barked against color because of the expense and time it took to get release prints. It's been pretty well proven that the natural hues will neither break nor make a picture, but that it's desirable for a certain specie of film is as true as formerly.

And the wide screen is about in the same boat. It's still a matter of the picture itself, but the changed attitude on color came just about a year after the first all color talker.

Neither color nor the wide screen has proved strong enough as a novelty to hold up bad pictures such as sound did when it first came in. There is no more so-called "novelty money." The industry, harried by the lapses in business and the drought in story material, as a whole hoped that the wide film and screen would prove such an innovation as sound was. But this was not to be. The public merely looked at the new enlarged image, accepted it as a matter of course, and if they liked the picture told their friends to see it. They previously caught the general idea from the wide angle projection lens effect used for some road show films and later in the grind theatres. If they didn't like it they told the same people to stay away. So the industry sidetracked the wide screen in December.

Hays' Code

The studios continued to dodge in and about the annual Hays "Don'ts" as did the exploitation departments. Both of these departments were stressing the sex angle as much as they dared and as much in self-preservation as anything else. It could be noted that as figures at the box office dwindled the boys underlined the sex angle the more. And who's to blame them? The reformers, of course. An order went out early in December for everybody to tone down.

Perhaps the principal tremor of the year to run through the production end was the thought of the possibility and, perhaps, the desirability of making pictures in the east. This, as regards Hollywood, is the highest form of treason. But Paramount has assigned 17 pictures to its Long Island plant and Metro is getting its Cosmopolitan studio ready again.

Warners continues to make shorts over at Flatbush, but the short, as a program stimulant, has simply failed to develop any significance outside of some of the cartoon comedies, plus some of the animal travesties. Few, if any, have been able to draw business and the same proportion can be written off on a basis of entertainment. And the animated cartoon makers started to get so rough in their drawings, trying to outdo each other, that they drew a reprimand from the Hays office and had to tone down.

Shorts

Where the short may be heading is possibly hinted at in the edging forward of the commercial reel. Merely out and out plugs for some commodity or service, these spools are being made interesting enough to hold seven or eight minutes on a theatre's screen. And the reaction by the fan to these advertisements, as against the vaudeville type of footage, has evidently been in favor of the commercial picturization which generally gives an insight to the workings of a giant industry. Besides which the theatre gets it, or should, free of charge, or is paid to play it, thereby opening another source of revenue.

Eastern Production

However, the thought of moving production east in its entirety is not apt to come all at once because of the tremendous investment represented by equipment and property on the coast. On the other hand, there are those in the trade who see a big increase in picture making along the Atlantic before another two years have passed because of the accessibility to acting, writing and financial talent on this end. Yet, Warners and First National have made their production source Burbank and Fox will soon give up its Hollywood plant to move out to Movietone City.

Foreign Versions

Meanwhile the eastern problem is still in the future, but the one of foreign versions is not. It's doubtful if any one factor caused the coast more headaches the past year than the one of the foreign version. What to do with it and how to make it. They tried dubbing in the native dialog. They made 'em with native casts and the combination was and its not yet right. Paramount has established a studio outside of Paris to suit this purpose. Fox is supposed to be playing with the idea, and Metro has apparently rejected the thought. The foreign market is a big problem and nowhere near being solved at this date. With the revenue abroad also crops up the fact that, at the same time, pictures over here are now having to struggle to reach grosses of $600,000 and $700,000 on home territory—figures merely deemed moderate a year or 18 months ago.

Sound

There have been no radical changes in the recording of sound. Many refinements have been made. During the fall the Bell Lab uncovered a new sound valve from which much is expected on future perfection in recording.

The camera boys have probably advanced as much, if not more, than the sound men. The development of the Dunning process is one of the unsung wonders of the industry. Unsung in the sense that the public knows nothing of it, as to inform them would do much to dispel the illusion of the screen. But the picture business realizes its value to the extent that the Dunnings have passed their first $1,000,000.

Photographically, the camera men have started using their dissolves again, and the Paramount faction has discovered a new means of double photography in conjunction with the Dunning method which they've set to their own purposes.

The Theatres

On the theatre end the tendency to bring back the stage show has been marked and continues to grow. As grosses dropped circuit managements sought wildly for solutions. Those without stage fare turned to it as a semi-final resort—the last solution always being to close the house.

Theatre managements and the circuits at large do not consistently figure on the stage fare drawing above the picture, but they do want the stage flesh show to keep the house from dropping under a certain figure, regardless of the picture. That marks the difference between the average studio and theatre men. The studio factions always maintain that the picture is the thing and will do the business. To which the theatre man merely answers, "Okay, but give us the pictures." And all the studios combined have so far failed to turn out sufficient money films to hold any house out of the red for every one of 52 weeks so long as there have been pictures.

Roxy Grosses

Perhaps the Roxy, the biggest film house in the country, is as good a barometer on general picture house business for the year as any other. Where, two years ago, and less, this theatre wouldn't think of holding a picture a second week unless it did $120,000, now it's glad to hold 'em over when the tabulation reaches $90,000. Two years ago a week's gross of $90,000 sent the staff into a panic, wondering what was the matter.

For the first two years of its existence, the Roxy showed an average of $105,000 a week for these 104 weeks. The third year that improved to $107,000. It's a certainty that the average for '30 will be under $100,000, and possibly by an imposing margin. Which shows what a slump year can do to the country's leading film emporium.

The Roxy has a high of approximately $173,000 and a low of $56,000, the latter figure hung up the past year. Top gross for the past 12 months at this house was $140,000 ("Sunnyside Up"), and that came early in the year. Broadway hasn't seen a really tremendous figure in any of its major grind spots since the Capitol clicked off a little better than $109,000 ("Anna Christie") the middle of last March.

Television

Television threatened the industry throughout the year, but has yet to make its appearance and develop into the expected national theatre threat. Neither have the home, or 16mm., talkers reached the point where they're common in the home, although a drive in this direction is expected shortly. So theatres had nothing to fight but sectional epidemics, bad business conditions and bad pictures. The Coast felt the miniature golf course craze the most, and that only lasted about six or eight weeks.

As fall drifted around some of the big circuits started to cut their overhead, including personnel, but that wasn't any different than the studios, which also went on an economy rampage. A furore in theatre circuit circles was caused by the departure of Harold B. Franklin as president of Fox West Coast Theatres. This unloosed a general shaking up in that circuit with almost the same thing happening to Publix in November, although in that case its head, Sam Katz, remained at the helm.

Warners almost ran into a financial jam through over-expansion, but got by this summer's crisis when its bankers came to the rescue.

A curious sidelight on theatre operation is that the only house exclusively devoted to the newsreel which has been able to exist is the instigator—the Embassy in New York—now over a year old. This idea has been tried in other cities of major population, but without success, all folding up within a short period. The only other newsreel spot now known to be operating is in London. This one opened in September.

The year unquestionably saw a drastic drop in attendance of American pictures abroad. Sound was indisputably the cause with no satisfactory solution found to overcome the differences in the languages or poor projection. Dubbed dialog and superimposed titles both failed of their objective and at this writing the entire matter remains one big quandary.

The English Way

France figuratively went crazy about its first native made talker, but that novelty wore off, and it's once more a matter of quality over there, too. The production centers abroad continue 'way behind Hollywood in technical development, but continuously refuse to acquire aid, and pay for it, from this side, especially England. On the other hand, an English firm seems to have hit upon the most sensible idea yet emanating from those shores. That's British International, which came over here and took a New York legit house with the basic idea to find out if there were any market for English-made pictures here. And, if not, to pack up and go home.

Germany continues to holler

ADOLPHE MENJOU

Adolphe Menjou's sophisticated roles have long been almost proverbial on the screen, starting with his first sensational hit in "A Woman of Paris," 1930 saw him in several smashing hits that showed that the demand of the fans for this sterling actor has never diminished. In "Morocco" he won new laurels, as well as in "The New Moon," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's musical drama with Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore.

He has also appeared in a wide variety of foreign productions, as he speaks Spanish, French, German and Italian as fluently as he does English.

Picture "Widows"

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Hollywood is a man's town any way you look at it, but particularly regarded from the point of view of a "picture widow." And a "picture widow" if an explanation is necessary, is something like a "golf widow," only more so. Because the latter loses her husband only over the weekend and during the warm weather, but the p. w. might just as well not have a husband at all.

The "absentee husband" system as practiced in Hollywood applies to men in practically every branch of the industry. The more successful the man the more frequent and protracted his departures from the fireside.

Actors, directors, writers, executives, seem to use their homes as a place to go when they need a clean collar and their wives as a sort of glorified housekeeper. Story conferences, night shooting, location stuff, previews both in and out of town, and those important business trips to New York, all serve as perfectly legimate means of keeping the husband out of the home.

And the little woman who puts up a squawk is pretty unreasonable, because it's all on the up-and-up, and the chances are that she has a swell home, even if her husband isn't in it much, to say nothing of a couple of cars, lots of servants and an armful of diamond bracelets. And after all, what's a little companionship compared to diamond bracelets?

Other Alibis

Then, in case business doesn't keep the master out of the house out enough, there are a few other little things, such as all night poker, and heart games, bi-weekly prize fights, stag dinners and the occasional Caliente trips—"just a few of the boys"—and hunting expeditions in the north woods.

It may not be so tough on the regular picture widows, the wives of men who've always been out here. They're accustomed to it, don't know any other system and don't expect to have their husbands on any but a part time basis. But the women whose husbands have come out since the talker invasion are finding it an increasingly difficult problem. Used to the companionship of their husbands, they find the going rather rough when left to their own devices, particularly as their own devices are exceedingly limited in this town.

Outside of athletics (and very few New York women are the outdoor type) and chattering hen parties, there's little in the way of diversion. Nobody wants to look at pictures all the time and the few (and inferior) legit shows don't offer much.

No Side Stuff

Besides, women like to be with men. And the New York custom of dining or spending the evening with a boy friend or two when one's husband is busy, is frowned upon by this highly conventional community. A few of the more daring wives who've tried it have discovered that the unpleasantness of the ensuing gossip more than outweighed their time-killing defiance.

There are, of course, occasional trips back east, but they serve only as temporary measures. In many cases the husbands object because although they're not around much, they want their wives on the spot in case they should need that clean collar.

The case was perfectly summed up not long ago by one of the more recent and rebellious picture widows. Asked why she was moving from a hotel to a large house, she said, not without a trace of bitterness:

"My husband has to have a home to stay away from."

Pathe-Natan Control May Change Hands Soon

Paris, Dec. 27.

Controlling interest in Pathe Natan, currently depending on multiple voting shares, would probably change hands should the law cancelling their multiple voting rights come into effect. The multiple voting shares went from the bankers' hands to men interested in department stores.

On the other hand a large block of single voting shares, formerly held by a motor accessory operator, is now held by the same interests as control Gaumont-Aubert Franco. Company is currently without a president, owing to the late Pathe not having yet been replaced. Natan, who is managing director, is the whole works, and is making good.

FORGED FOX STOCK

Revealed on a Delivery and Feared More Phonies May Be About

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Chicago Stock Exchange panicked at discovery that forged Fox Film Class A stock certificates to the amount of $25,000 had been peddled locally.

Fear is voiced that more phoney paper may be stored in strong boxes. Stein Alstrin brokers made the discovery.

Forged Chicago stock was tendered for delivery on a N. Y. Stock Exchange transaction and the New York board broadcast a prompt warning also.

WB Starts Invasion Of Towns Sewed Up In the West by Publix

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Publix-Great States gets its first taste of competition through Illinois and Indiana when Warners opens its two new spots in Aurora and Michigan City.

Warners last week acquired sites in these towns. A. S. Graven has been named architect for the theatres, the first to hold 2,500, while Michigan City's house will seat 1,800. To be ready for operation by September.

Warners has never been strong in the midwest, with Publix having most of these smaller towns sewed up solidly. But Warner is concentrating its expansion program upon Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

Anti-Religious Scenes Provoke French Riots

Paris, Dec. 18.

The French are evidencing stronger reaction to films generally decrying institutions of religion and family life than when they find in a foreign film a sequence to which they might take offense from the national point of view. The German production of "Four Infantry Men," currently playing S. R. O., shows a French girl making love to German soldiers.

No adverse reaction. Film titled "L'Age d'Or," both sacrilegious and obscene, caused such riots that the Prefect of Police had to order the showings discontinued in the interests of law and order.

Suit has been brought by Jean Mauclere, exhibitor-owner of the theatre Studio 28, against the French censor. Mauclere showed "l'Age d'Or" distinctly anti-religious and of a red tendency. After a first riot, some cuts were made, and the showings resumed, resulting in more riots.

Film was suppressed, and Mauclere criminally indicted for having allegedly shown some sequences slashed by the censor. This he claims is untrue, declaring the censor only made this statement to cover himself after having passed the film which ultimately caused trouble.

Lubitsch Calls Unit

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

With Maurice Chevalier returning to New York from his European trip about Feb. 7, Ernst Lubitsch, who is to direct the Frenchman's next, has sent here for his studio unit.

Those making the jump to Paramount's Long Island studio are Eric Locke, business manager; Hans Dreier, art director; George Hippard, assistant ringmaster, and Merrill White, cutter.

Schenck in N. Y.

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Joseph M. Schenck has left for the east, but will not become active in Loew's. Reports on such an eventuality had been around.

He was to arrive in New York Monday (29).

ALBERT WARNER WEST

Major Albert Warner is due to leave for the Coast within a week.

He will stay out there about a month.

HOLLYWOOD ERUDITE, THOUGH IT'S PAINFUL

By FRED STANLEY

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Hollywood is getting painfully cultured.

Boys and girls of the B. T. (Before Talker) regime who used to sling the double negatives, slit their infinitives and generally commit mayhem on the King's English, are now affecting that drawing room polish.

Renaissance can all be chalked up to the influence of the stage, plus the foreign versions. Former because of the consciousness of the faulty diction and the latter because it is the vogue now to be linguistically inclined.

Harking back again to Hollywood B. T. only perfect English hereabouts was in the kitchen, those days the picture mob almost revelled in its lack of erudition. Higher art in literature was represented by the fan and the confessional mags. Parlor conversation between drinks was chewing over the dirt, except, of course, when not engaged conversationally on that then ever-present topic—Self.

New order of things seems to be tough on the publishers of the confession types of mags, but it's a boom for the purveyors of the more advanced works of literature. Not all of the culture strainers can understand their new reading matter, but currently it's just the thing to simulate that air of refinement.

Upstage

The gal who once punctuated her chatter with Billingsgate now quotes the masters, but pronounces it "marsters." The newcomers seem to be impressed but it's a laugh and blinking eyelids from the "I knew her when's."

Due to stage influence the Hollywood a's are growing broader than Back Bay's, and are on their way to give Oxford a few boat lengths in the a-stretching art. And those naughty words that used to creep into any and all conversations—just dodoes now.

Raucous Hollywood of the past has given way to a Hollywood that gets up mornings to attend its Spanish classes, its French lessons, a session with Shakespeare or the private tutor who is expected to give them that lorgnette air and the arty inflection.

Contact with the stage imports has given the colonyites a severe inferiority complex. For the sake of the future this must be remedied for baby needs new shoes and an ermine coat occasionally.

A Brooklyn accent doesn't butter any bread these days, now the pictures have gone sound conscious. But a little sprinkling of Oxford will do the trick. And how Hollywood is straining to get just that right pronunciation!

BIP Drops Tobis

London, Dec. 18.

The working arrangement between British International and British Instructional, which practically amounts to an absorption of Instructional in the bigger combine, is not set until the new year.

International executive will probably instal RCA Photophone at Welwyn, now equipped with Klangfilm, German process. All B. I. talkers are made on the American equipment.

Probability further is that the string of directors, including Anthony Asquith, will continue at Welwyn.

The Quickie Film Producer

By George McCall

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Another year has passed for the small independent producer and to him it was just another year. Two things kept it from being "the" year; lack of finances and what are we going to do with the picture after it's made?

In Hollywood a total of 70 indie pictures were turned out during the past 12 months. Of the total 16 were made for Big Four, 16 for Syndicate, six each for Continental, Chesterfield and Sono-Art. Four serials for Masco, and one each for Majestic and Liberty. Remaining dozen were produced for the state right market, some getting there, others falling by the wayside or picked up to fill some indie program.

Average cost of production was in the neighborhood of $35,000 per picture. About the highest budget went to Majestic for "Today," which ran into $95,000.

Ninety per cent of the pictures produced by indie producers this year had some sort of a sales tie-up before the picture started. In years gone by the indie producer was not afraid to get going without the sales end attended to. The fall of the state righters has made it imperative that the selling angle be taken care of, otherwise the indie producer hasn't a chance.

A big help to the indie producer of quickie programers has been the double features in neighborhood houses. Recently three eastern circuits have contracted for the product of one quickie company. The production cost is guaranteed by this tie-up. Others are going after the circuits and hope to get their product in the houses cutting out the shorts in favor of twin talkers.

Mostly Westerns

Product of the indies is practically concentrated on westerns. Cheap production coupled with easy story material is the chief reason. Most of the indies use bootleg sound, but the sales resistance caused by this is causing most to switch to the standard sound companies.

Recently the indies have been getting rid of the hard riding heros who made a name as western draws in the silent days. They found the old names mean little and are now developing their own leads.

Majestic and Liberty, both new in the indie field. Each put out their first picture on the tail end of the year. Majestic got a lucky break by selling "Today" to R-K-O for first runs. Whether it will continue or not depends on what kind of tie-up Harry Sherman can make for distribution.

Liberty, organized by M. H. Hoffman and the Halperin Brothers, got "Ex-Flame" in under the wire, but the brothers and Hoffman parted shortly after the picture was completed, with Hoffman announcing he would carry out the Liberty program.

Sono-Art was inactive for the latter part of the year. It produced six pictures during the twelve months and expects to turn out the same number in 1931.

Small Profit

The others have confined their output to the usual westerns, content to make a small profit on a small investment.

Big Four contemplates a program of 24 westerns and four specials for next year. During the past year their pictures have been contracted for by Stanley and Warner's in the east.

Continental and Chesterfield have been concentrating on the parlor drama, letting the others go after the outdoor drama.

Mascot sticks to serials.

It is doubtful if there will be any additions to the ranks of the indie quickies during the coming year. It is altogether too tough for the producer. There is no market for shorts and he must stick to features. Those producing westerns take care of about all the market can stand for that type of picture. The others producing the parlor drama find competition from the major studios too tough and that the majors sell their product at about the same price as the indie.

All in all the indie quickie has just about folded. Three years ago those indies turned out 180 features. That was before the talkers. Each year since has seen a gradual decline of independent productions, and it is figured that the coming year will not be an exception.

BOOM ON FOR SILENTS

Belgrade Storm Center of Opposition to Unsuitable Talkers

Belgrade, Dec. 27.

Native picture interests have started a campaign here against talkers in favor of the return to silent pictures. Making a good deal of progress in their gitation.

Propaganda helped greatly by the fact that Belgrade has had many talkers this winter entirely unsuitable to this territory.

Tex. Indie Groups Can't Find Out Hefley's Stand

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Questionnaire sent to all Texas indies by the new indie group, Theatre Owners' Protective Ass'n, revealed them all against state censorship except three. Several, however, are sticking to Allied in spite of its indorsement of the Horowitz campaign.

TOPA is now encountering further grief with one of its main shots, Sam Hefley, exhib-legislator. Hefley helped to organize the new group, then, the next day, signed official indorsement of Horowitz's campaign as an Allied director. Now both factions are trying to figure out just where he stands. Meanwhile, Hefley hikes off to visit relatives and wires back that he's all hot for the TOPA. And he's not due back until time for the legislature next week, with exhibs anxious to see which way he'll turn. That Hefley's against censorship seems a cinch as he's fought it for several years.

2 Agencies Have 85% Of Foreign Talent Tied-Up

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Two local agencies have 85% of the foreign players tied up exclusively, and the monopoly on the most desirable foreign talent has the studios peeved.

Producers are helpless to do anything on the transportation costs to import the average foreign player is $1,500, in addition to extraordinary terms.

Paris Prize Contest for Native French Stories

Paris, Dec. 27.

Paramount's local production new policy of making pictures more thoroughly French than heretofore, and no more adaptations of American films, is causing them to look for French stories.

To this end, they have opened a literary competition for original stories. The works submitted will be passed upon by a jury of French writers, whose names will be advance publicity vouching for the fact that the production is really from a French original. This will bring, it is expected, a favorable reaction from the local public.

Talking Pictures Booed In Union Square Theatre

The "Edison Talking Pictures" got its final kick this week when, Monday evening, at the Union Square, the audience booed the new series of talkers shown. A previous act on the bill had distributed zoboes to the audience to join in a song. Upon the talkers making their appearance the house used the held-over little mouthpieces to "kid" the talking pictures.

At the Square the talkers were placed in the center of the program and at the other Keith vaudeville houses in town the same position was assigned the Edison device. At the Colonial this was remarked as an admission by the talking picture concern the picture could not hold an audience. Last week at the Colonial the experiment was tried of having the talkers close the performance. A large number "walked out" on them. Their restoration to the centre of the show in a position the house would be forced to accept them, was at once decided upon.

The talking picture film has been forced upon vaudeville audiences in New York for several weeks, excepting at Hammerstein's. This house, not exhibiting them at all, has been doing the biggest business of any variety theatre in town.

1930 IN THE LAND OF NOD

The American Electrics

By Tom Waller

Within less than four years every picture theatre of any consequence in every part of the world has become equipped for talkers. By the time the job is complete sound will have cost the industry, universally, a good $1,000,000,000.

There are thousands of houses the globe over that as yet have no reproduction equipment. For these the electrics have knocked prices down from an original $22,000 per set to $2,990. It threatens to go a deal lower than that before the next six months.

With professional installations on a big scale out of the way and Western Electric possessing the lion share of such accounts, things talker are now looking to the fireside. General Electric in the home field holds the lock-out key for Western, at least since an agreement was made some while ago between the controlling American electrical factions that G. E. has all home privileges for 16 millimeter sound on film. By the time General gets going in the home field, despite that three producing companies have taken smnll film licenses, and that General promises release of its little projection machines early in 1931, Television may have crowded out all thought of film and domesticity.

In no era of motion picture life has there been such an undertow of politics, threats, and yet—less litigation—than that of sound.

Talker equipment today would doubtless be the original $22,000 had it not been for cut-throat tactics. At the outset Western, which featured sound, with a millionth acknowledgment for the "straight part" played by Al Jolson, swore and alleged that equipment of any worth couldn't be turned out for less than $22,000 (including most of the gadgets).

Competition

But indie outfits sprang up by the basketful; some with money but more without. Finally Western's sister-in-law, Photophone, stepped ahead of the parade and slashed. The cut made Western realize that it could manufacture with cheaper retail. Then another cut and Western, begrudgingly, followed suit.

Incidentally the indie that deserves credit for actually lowering the price is Louis Gerard Pacent, and this regardless of the hard words some exhibs have had for Pacent since then. Pacent is still a frequent visitor at the Warners although the brothers have removed many of his original installations. And the brothers are in their third year trying to collect what was originally $25,000,000 in alleged damages that has dwindled to $5,000,000, with Western, which was reported a year ago ready to settle for $10,000,000, now letting out the word that the WB boys needn't expect a nickel.

Western, again, despite the comedown in price, was so confident that no indie could manufacture without violating the electric patents that it gave DeForest the same go-by that everybody from Carl Laemmle to William Fox had done, before Jolson spoke from the projection booth. DeForest, however, won and scored on the patent of another inventor—not his own—which he had picked casually at one of those inventor's sales. General Talking Pictures that backed DeForest in this action is admitted to be in the business to collect. But Western is going to see it through and take a chance with the U. S. Supreme Court on that matter in January.

In Europe

During the bickering and snubbing the American electrics ran afoul in Europe, or at least a foreign part of it. The Tobis folk found that some of their patents looked too much like those in the American goods. Everybody over here laughed at the first contentions. German peace makers and money seekers were given the shoulder on their first trip here. Then came that injunction and Will Hays suddenly found it necessary to move his round table to neutral Paris for the convenience of J. G. Otterson of Western, Charles Ross of Photophone and the American producers by and large. That was patched up by capitulating to Tobis.

Harry Warner was in such an odd spot, having bought into Tobis as well as Brunswick and a paper mill among 20 other subsidiaries, he stuck to the sidelines.

The Tobis end seems to be working out okay. Even with victory the Americans went slow on Germany; so much so that Tobis-Klangfilm is now doing a little slashing of its own accord on amounts originally decreed fair royalties.

The big electrics have won. There's no question about that—Even houses on the Bowery regret ever having invested in indie devices which they have since discarded.

When the foreign lingo problem is solved to the satisfaction of the Sphinx, the American electrics will have sold all the Bowerys throughout the world. The price is cheap now. Any exhibitor will concede that.

Only squawk with some is that they didn't wait—like the producers are waiting on giant film.

U. Would Get Rid of Library to Other Studios

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Finding itself loaded with hundreds of stories and plays bought over a period of several years and not being used, Universal is endeavoring to dispose of these properties to other studios.

Ivan St. John, former publicity director, has been engaged as head of the department created to sell this material.

Columbia's N. Y. Tests

Columbia last week usod the facilities of the Fox studios, New York, to make tests of talent selected by Harry Cohn with Eddie Buzzell in charge of the trials.

DOROTHY BURGESS—U

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Dorothy Burgess, lately in several coast legits, has been engaged by Universal for the femme lead opposite Lew Ayres in "Iron Man."

Ornitz Eastbound

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Samuel Ornitz, free lancing since leaving Metro's writing roster, left Saturday night (27) for New York where he is publishing a novel.

By Ted Taylor

The nightmare of 1930 for Hollywood was the foreign market. It was also a tough year for actors, east and west.

When the business year ended and officials saw in actual figures what their lost revenues in foreign countries amounted to, the most frantic era of economy in years set in. Wall Street came out baldly with demands for a showdown on production costs and quality.

Early in the year studios had been making jobs to keep idle help busy. By fall they were cutting the payroll at the height of production activity.

The extravagances of spring included scrapping entire productions, buying off contracts or a cast. New productions and new contracts were immediately entered into.

The first economy of the fall season was to dig down from the shelves unreleased material for refurbishing or salvaging. The contract lists were thoroughly pruned, and engagements by the picture became the tendency, even for writers.

For writers, however, the year was one long series of shake-ups. The bewildered search for talker material was behind this, as well as the various story cycles.

Tough Year for Actors

It was a trying 12 months for film actors and aspirants. The freelances were scrambling early in 1930. Talent was being imported from the eastern stage and Europe, and being sent back almost as fast. Finally, the contract lists began to moult.

The process sobered Hollywood socially as well as economically. The old whoopee spirit was tempered by the newcomers from the stage and from abroad who were sophisticated and not too noisy about it.

Wide film was a mysterious "X" in calculations throughout the year and usurped attention in the technical field.

The quietly increasing importance of Columbia as a production source, the purchases of screen rights and laboratory and finance stock by Howard Hughes, and the unsettled plans of Universal were outstanding factors in production.

It was the last year in Hollywood for two major studios, Fox and Warner Brothers.

In picture history 1930 will go down as the year in which waste ceased being a mild misdemeanor and became a crime calling for capital punishment. And capital stepped in with a ruler.

Foreign Versions

The year began with the estimate that foreign versions were jumping the consumption of film stock 300%.

A Coast indie quit domestic quickies to specialize on Spanish and Japanese language films.

Hal Roach closed his studio and went to the other end of Culver City to make "Monsieur le Fox" for Metro in English, German, Spanish, French and Italian simultaneously.

Metro sent for 11 French and German legit leads. The first four left Paris April 30.

Paramount imported Marlene Dietrich for German versions and gave her an English send-off. Same studio decided films in minor langauges would be dubbed, and in the east the first foreign supervisor was Jacques Duval, who arrived with family May 19.

As May ended Fox was ready to start foreigns. Five features and 24 shorts in Spanish were planned.

Hal Roach bowed off the five-tonguer at Metro after three months. "Monsieur le Fox" began its third remaking. Paramount planned a Japanese version of "Par on Parade".

Universal was shooting the English "Cat Creeps" by day and the Spanish version nights during July.

Fox went foreign late in July, following its Spanish with plans for French and Italian. The latter is a new language for the majors.

Pathe decided to send four directors abroad to make quota.

Warners had troupes aggregating 60 on the way from Germany, France and Spain. After trying some Germans abroad the decision was for Hollywood. First six versions were preparing as July ended.

A few weeks later Warner was reported over-contracted on foreign players and farming them at less than cost.

In August Metro dubbed two Spanish and one Italian, retaking close-ups for lip motions to fit the language. European production was off.

Jose Crespo drew a year with Mero in Spanish leads, reported around $1,000 a week, strongest figure yet in the foreigners.

Italian dubbing of "His Glorious Night" successful and Metro decided to dub all Italians thereafter. Three German versions scheduled by Metro for the season.

Decision to make Radio's versions in Europe, using the Dunning process with background negatives taken from Hollywood, came in September. Try-out in Berlin planned on "Beau Ideal" in Spanish, German and Swedish.

Columbia decides to do foreigns.

PLAN L. A. HOLDOVERS AS OVERHEAD SLASH

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

A holdover of pictures, when meriting, with stage show also retained for two weeks, thus cutting down overhead on the long jump out here, will become the policy for the local Paramount. "Right to Love," Ruth Chatterton talker, current, will be the first to play a second week, if business possibly warrants.

Ed Smith, local operator, wants to hold the stage show along with this picture, but pending its release for the Paramount, San Francisco, week starting Jan. 2, when Fox-West Coast will be in control, this cannot be definitely planned.

Later on, any two week pictures will also mean two weeks for the units as well with reduced traveling overhead, giving a better chance to get above the house nut.

"Blue Angel" is another forthcoming Par release for local house expecting to stand a two weeks' stay.

Consol's Gen'l Mgr. Walks, And 5 Men Blow with Him

Consolidated Amusement Co., owners and directors of a string of film houses in N. Y., including the Tivoli and Times theatres on Eighth avenue, had a turnover in its managerial personnel Friday (26) when Rudolph Kuehn, general manager, put on his hat and walked out. He was followed a little later in the afternoon by five other men.

Kuehn had been with Consolidated over three years. With the absence of Lawrence Bolognio, vice-pres., to whom Kuehn made all his arrangements and reports, Kuehn claims he was gradually being worn out by petty bickering. The five others would not stay without Kuehn.

The day Kuehn walked out of Consolidated he was temporarily installed by Nate Blumberg, of R-K-O, as manager of the R-K-O Regent theatre, at 116th street, straight picture house.

Judge Henning on Coast

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Judge Edward F. Henning, who during circuits' negotiations with labor crafts this year acted as special mediator around the country for Publix, Fox, WB, Radio and Loew, is here to spend the holidays with relatives.

The Will Hays of the chain-union pourparlers returns to New York Jan. 1.

TEX. INDIE'S ROADSHOW

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Mrs. Gene DeWolfe, Texas femme indie exhib, will roadshow "Byrd at the South Pole" (Par) through the state.

Playing the flicker silent, Mrs. DeWolfe is booking small towns with school and college tie-ups. Instead of sound, she'll follow picture with lecture.

ACQUITTED OF ARSON

Findlay, O., Dec. 27.

A jury in Common Pleas Court acquitted Joseph Abdowd, 31, on a charge of burning down the Marvin theatre, of which he was manager, Nov. 5.

State's case was largely circumstantial.

After Karns for "Up"

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Universal is negotiating for the services of Roscoe Karns as the lead in "The Up and Up" opposite Mary Nolan.

Screen play is an adaption of the stage play of the same name produced in New York early this season.

Al Kelly on Shorts

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

"Leatherpushers" series having ended, Al Kelly, who directed them for Universal, is being switched to mugging Charlie Murray-George Sidney shorts.

JACKIE WARNER GOT THE STUDIO RUNAROUND

By Jack Warner, Jr.

Hollywood, Dec. 15.

Last summer, vacation and having nothing to do, I asked my Dad if he would let me work at First National Studios. Mervyn Leroy, the director, having heard of my request, asked me if I wanted to be 15th assistant director on a picture he was about to start. I gladly accepted the offer and the deal was closed.

The picture on which I worked was "Little Caesar." I think we turned out a real winner for First National. Among those in the cast were Ed Robinson, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Georgie Stone.

My first day of work dawned and I reported at First National around 10 A. M. With brief case in hand, I entered stage six to find "The Gorilla" company at work. I nearly stepped on Bryan Foy, who was directing it. He told me that I was not wanted on his picture, but I could try stage eight, where "Kismet" was shooting, and ask where "Little Caesar" was hiding.

John Dillon, director here, told me "Sunny" was on the back lot and maybe the director there knew where I belonged. William Seiter, the able director of that picture, finally told me to try stage four. There was Mervyn Leroy with Little Caesar, the machine guns and the rest. The company worked till 5 o'clock that day, but, as I had been so overworked from running between "Little Caesar," "Kismet" and "The Gorilla" sets to watch the shooting, I had to quit at 2 p. m.

My only squawk during the summer was when one of the camera men sent me to the camera department for a bucketful of film sprocket-holes. (Sprocket-holes are the little holes on either side of the film.)

Our picture was finished after several weeks. I don't remember the last part as I did not show up for it, as I had to go to Malibu Beach to rest after my strenuous summer. I hope next year the studio will be so pleased with my work they will take me on with a big raise in wages and a long contract.

Wide Screen by Trick Lens Shown in Paris

Paris, Dec. 18.

A film of standard width is currently shown in Paris giving a wide screen effect, at times either in height or in width, and sometimes being projected as normal. This is due to using a special distortion lens when shooting the film, and also when screening it.

The film was made by a French indie, named Autant Lare, and is currently shown at the Studio de Paris, a Montparnasse sure-seater, with the normal screen replaced by a much larger one.

Production, titled "Construire un Feu" ("Build a Fire"), was made entirely out of doors in the French Jura mountains. Scenario is from a Jack London novel, Jose Davert starring.

Indie's Quiet Activity

London, Dec. 18.

Audible Filmcraft, indie unit formed out of a number of British companies, some of which were in liquidation, have just produced an untitled talker, very much on the quiet.

Announcement of the picture's production has not been made, and practically no one here is aware of the activity. Geoffrey Malins directed. The studio is believed to have been the unit's own floor at Isleworth.

This marks the second talker to be made by the concern, which has done a lot of talking, mostly off the sound track.

BOLES, TOBIN CO.—STARS

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

John Boles is set to co-star with Genevieve Tobin in Universal's "Seed."

It will be his song-less part in a "U" production.

MARIE DRESSLER'S ATTACK

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Marie Dressler is recuperating at Marion Davies' ranch following a heart attack while on the Metro lot.

Trade Papers for 25 Years

In 1905 all of the national show trade weeklies were "The Clipper," "The Dramatic Mirror," "The Dramatic News," "The Billboard" and "Variety." "Variety" did not arrive until December of that year.

"The Clipper" was nearly 50 years old at that time; "The Billboard" was about 11. A midwestern weekly called "The Opera House Reporter" had some standing in its territory, especially with road, stock and rep troupes.

Of those show trade papers of 25 years, there remain "The Billboard" and "Variety."

About 1907 a small pamphlet of four pages called "The Film Index" appeared. This went along quite nicely for awhile, the first all-picture trade paper in this country. Later "The Film Index" became part of the "Motion Picture World." A long time after came the "Motion Picture News" and "Exhibitors Herald," both national all-picture trade weeklies.

Besides, in the all-film reporting field are a number of regional weeklies, two dailies in Hollywood and several nondescript picture weeklies out there.

In 1905 the dailies gave sparse attention to theatricals. Only legit to the extent of notices. With pictures, the tabloids, the yellow dailies and Hollywood scandals, the sane standard sized dailies found there was reader interest in the screen. Now any daily devotes more or less space to the screen and stage, with the screen receiving an excess.

Free Lists

In the trade paper field of the show business, it seems to have been a curious fact that notwithstanding that all of the papers of either stage or screen set themselves up as national organs, none but the trade papers including the stage end have a newsstand sale. Purely picture trade papers have had a mailing list circulation only, it seems. That the film trade papers were aware of their inability to secure a newsstand sale was made evident by the disproportionate figures of their single copy prices and subscription rates.

"The Exhibitors Herald World" is 25c a single copy, and with a $3 a year subscription; "The Motion Picture News" was 20c. per copy and $3 yearly subscription; "Variety" is 25c a copy and $10 for the annual subscription; "The Billboard," outdoor trade paper, is 15c per copy and $3 yearly. Low subscription rates such as $3 are a confession of virtually no newsstand sale and also is an indicator of liberality in a free list.

Picture trade papers are notorious for their free lists, as is "The Billboard." It holds their circulation down to the mailing list only. Such a mailing list is always under the suspicion of carrying deadheads, as there is no demand for the papers by the trade public at the newsstands throughout the country.

During the 25 years since 1905 there have been several theatrical weeklies started. Some have passed out. A couple were offshoots really from "Variety," each started by a former member of "Variety's" staff. Both flopped. "Variety" has made itself so high-gaited in weekly overhead, paying for all of its news, domestic or foreign, with large staffs at New York, Los Angeles and Chicago, besides offices in London and Paris, that to rival "Variety" in organization and news gathering sources, along with cost of operation, might involve a new publisher very heavily before he could even detect the chances for his publication.

Wire Bills

"Variety" was the first show trade paper to pay correspondents; also the first to receive cabled news, until at the present time this paper's wire and cable bills for any one month exceed those for all of the other show papers in America combined.

This is diametrically against the trade paper of 25 years ago, which took on as correspondents anyone who would subscribe for the paper, whether a grocery clerk or the town's haberdasher. Those correspondents believed that, if acting as the correspondent for a dramatic weekly, they would see free the shows coming to town. When "Variety" decided to pay space to correspondents, it enlisted only local newspaper men with show knowledge from bumping around their towns, and later dramatic editors of local dailies.

Pair of Scissors

And again, 25 years ago, the dramatic sheets then in existence knew naught of news gathering. They clipped their news from the dailies, or reprinted the publicity announcements sent in by theatrical offices. In the years when "Variety" would pan "The New York Clipper," which later "Variety" bought, "Variety" always referred to "The Clipper" as a pair of scissors. In those days the advertising columns ruled the papers. What was known as "a reader" was attached to almost every piece of advertising copy. It was the understanding of the advertiser that if the reader were not printed, the ad was not to run.

These "readers" were very funny at times. Some years ago "The Billboard" printed a phoney page ad of a fictitious vaude team, on the strength of a letter the team had written to the "Billboard" from San Francisco, saying it had a route on the Orpheum circuit and would pay as it played. Not only did "The Billboard" print the ad, but published a ridiculous "reader" accompanying it. There was not the change of one word in the "reader." It stated that the team, dancers, had been playing in Australia and had been signally honored by a command performance before the Mikado of Japan. The notice added that the team only lost one evening in Sydney, making the hop to Tokio and back within 36 hours.

The late William Donaldson, publisher of "The Billboard," suspected "Variety" as behind the frame on his paper. Donaldson complained to the P. O. Dept. that "Variety" had used the mails to defraud. "The Billboard," but the P. O. told him to laugh it off.

Donaldson never did discover who had sent the spurious ad to his paper, but "Variety" the same week "The Billboard" printed the ad, republished it with the "reader," pointing out the ludicrousness of both. Name of the act advertising was Nemssey and Yillis. Spelled backward it read "Yessmen and Silly." At that time "The Billboard" was attacking "Variety."

"The Clipper" for years was the stone wall of the show papers. Its founder, Frank Queen, had died and the weekly was continued by the late A. J. Borie. It was a legend of "The Clipper" that Queen, while operating it and who lived in Philadelphia, never went home from New York on each Saturday without at least $1,000 in cash, the week's profit from "The Clipper." Borie also was a Philadelphian. He just knew "The Clipper" as a money maker and nothing else. His favorite saying was, if a new paper started, 'I have seen them all come and go. That one will go like the rest."

$120,000 Loss

Eugene Kelcey Allen, now with "Women's Wear" as its dramatic editor, was advertising manager for "The Clipper" for a long while. Allen noted "Variety" coming along with some alarm. He repeatedly mentioned to Borie that "The Clipper" had better ginger up. Borie dismissed Allen's advice, as usual, until Allen finally resigned.

"Variety" bought "The Clipper" in 1923. "Variety" in its contract agreed to run "The Clipper" for at least one year, which it did, as an outdoor weekly. That one year cost "Variety" $120,000.

The New York "Sunday Telegraph" during all of this time was likewise known as a dramatic paper. Following the disappearance of "The Dramatic Mirror," "The Telegraph" commanded nearly all of the advertising show patronage, other than what "The Clipper" monopolized. "The Telegraph" bragged in those days the show business was worth $200,000 yearly to it. That has since dwindled to nothing. "The Telegraph" also was controlled by its advertisers, principally Klaw & Erlanger and the Keith office. It printed anything either of those two offices told it to, and the late E. F. Albee boasted of how he had made "The Telegraph" "a great paper." Albee said he had done it through his advice and influence. It was a regular routine with Albee, one of 100 he always had on tap to instruct young trade newspaper men how to get along. If they listened intently and were "good," they eventually landed on the Albee payroll. That was his way.

In the olden days, too, "The Clipper" set other styles in trade journalism that were deadly if followed. It instructed its correspondents to answer all advertisements offering something for nothing. Advertisers received any number of letters in reply to a "Clipper" ad, but never sold anything. Once when a commercial advertiser wanted to insert an ad in "The Clipper" with a 10c. key in it, "The Clipper" refused to print the keyed copy.

8c. a Line Ads

"The Telegraph," at one time seeking to lure away the music publishing advertising from "The Clipper," with the latter then having an iron grip on that line of business, gave Remick's a contract for 100,000 lines at 8c. a line. At the same time "The Telegraph" was selling commercial advertising at less than 8c. a line, "The Telegraph" did not wean away the music business from "The Clipper," and its Remick's contract was not renewed at expiration, but matters of this nature, and "The Clipper's" methods of years' standing about ruined the commercial

'Variety's' Firsts

Following is a list of departments created by "Variety" during its 25 years as regards all show paper publishing.

Practically all of these ideas have been copied by amusement publications.

The only department which the other trade papers have never had the nerve to mimic is "Variety's" Critics' Box Score on both stage and film reviewers. Otherwise their snitching has been almost 100%.

It may have been observed by readers of the trade press that whatever material other publications "copped" from "Variety" has never cost these papers a dime. For example—none has ever tried to compete with "Variety's cable service.

U. S. Film Field

against the taxes imposed upon its picture industry, and is not happy, while Russia is still turning out nothing but propaganda films and getting nowhere with them.

Early in the year Tobis-Klangfilm snarled up the foreign sound situation by a patents dispute which Warners did much to straighten out. Foreign houses were wired throughout the year so that now the number of equipments abroad is slowly but surely approaching 5,000. To keep this wire active they must play American pictures or else.

Mussolini and his board made Italy a terror for American dialog films, but rescinded somewhat when besought by native exhibitors. The quotas are still prevalent and an annoyance. The feeling against American pictures has not abated in official circles and the buying of foreign talent, to make foreign versions over here, has assuredly not done anything to help pacify the foreign picture field as regards American product.

With the general depression picture theatre operation caught attention. Due to poor theatre trade the theatres called for real operation. With most of the circuits this took the form of cutting overheads. Some of the chains and circuits seemed so busily chopping overheads and back stage that they forgot better grosses would mean more net. The front of the house appeared to be almost forgotten for a while.

Indecision on policy when the policy matter did not become ruinous through frequent changes also worked its own harm.

Some of the circuits would prefer not to exhibit their profit and loss account for any one week since last spring. Many a theatre operator must have been staying up nights wondering how and what.

Indie Exhibs

Changes have been slight with the independent exhibitors, those who have not sold to chains. Many sales to chains occurred during the late winter, spring and summer.

The indie exhibs remaining are as helpless as ever left by themselves. They pay high salaries to leaders to get the same return they got 15 years ago—the worst of it, because their leaders can give the exhibs in return for their salaries nothing but promises or prophesies.

The present indies when not desperately pushed by local conditions of business or pressed by chain opposition, may find their best opportunities to come, but that will be no credit for their leaders. The indies will fall into it, because chain theatre operation outside of downtown in the keys has not been a howling success.

The chains are too cold blooded for the neighborhood or smaller towns. The sooner the chains recognize that fact, the better off their statements will look and the sooner they will commence to turn over that class of house to the men who can operate them—the neighborhooder who started them or the small town operator who built up a neat little circuit that he later probably sold.

Indie exhibs relying upon paid leaders who talk about Washington, Congress, the Dept. of Justice, Supreme Court and Heaven knows what else, will have nothing to lean upon eventually if they don't do something for themselves. No leader can do it for them. And if the unpaid leader who may be an exhib can do it, he will do it for himself first and then forget the others.

The best thing indie exhibs now active can do is to try to make deals with the chains, not to sell their own houses, but to take on the losers or the closed houses of the chains near them and offer to operate the houses on percentage. No guarantees to be given by the indies, and the worst break they can get will be a product agreement the chain distributor probably will demand. They can even make their usual trade for that, for if the indie will remember that the distributor first of all wants to sell product he can know he has that much in his favor at the outset.

Otherwise if this fails the indie exhib must then use his native operating talent, that which put him where he is as a theatre operator and with which the chains can never compete with their chain system. If the indie exhib can't whip in competition a house manager of a chain in a neighborhood, whether the chain house has the best picture or no, then the indie should quit.

FILMDOM'S INVESTMENT

British Advance in 1930

London, Dec. 20.

Most surprising thing about 1930 has been the amazing advance made by British talker producers, who have probably surprised themselves more than anybody.

"Variety," which has given British producers more good breaks than the execs ever remember or care to admit, has listed figures all through the season showing how the home product is piling up the big grosses this side, even to the detriment of the better exploited American product.

With British International still on top of the field where size of output is concerned, taking over a New York theatre as a shop window—the first determined gesture by a British firm to put their product on the spot where the big money is—this industry in London can reckon it's sprinted well over average during the past season.

Easiest thing in the world is to take British pictures and rip them to pieces. They still are much below the American standard as international entertainment. But, already, as entertainment for the British field, they are Hollywood's most serious competitor.

Taken over the year, British producers showed their lack of gambling instinct. Execu'ves this side are too frightened to take a risk; they want their films certainties before they make them. Yet, instead of making sure by cast-iron casting and good script work, they try and make certain by buying established play successes, splitting them up into a succession of close-ups, putting a camera on the spot and watching the wheels go round.

England has turned out far too many photographed stage plays to be able to get away with it much longer. Already some of the static, long-winded talkers made here are getting the razz.

The English film clicked here because it was a change from the American, because its humor was English humor, and because it started off with a burst of patriotic approval from the papers.

All very well, as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough, a fact which the British producers must realize.

Chief offenders at the straight-play business have been Gaumont and its various subsidiaries, nearly all of whose winners this year have been lifted straight off the stage and photographed.

Fun

Films like "Rookery Nook," "On Approval," "A Warm Corner," and even "Splinters" get away with it because they contain enough verbal cracks to keep the saps laughing. Already there are signs the straight comedy will not do for the screen here and producers who have had a run of luck with stage stuff will have to wonder what motion pictures really are.

Further noticeable that some of the stage play talkers have flopped. Nearly all those which have done so are not comedies. The salvation of the photographed stage play is its laughter. Put that aside and the talker flops. "Symphony in Two Flats," which was a silly thing, has booked badly and deservedly so. It was just another photographed play.

British producers are beginning to learn the fact that some of the expensive foreigners who have been vacationing here and making pictures have not been so valuable after all. British International, although they regard most things they ever make as the greatest things on earth, probably have a pretty good idea of the value of most of the stuff. Dupont made for them, leaving aside "Atlantic," which was a big success here.

Best direction turned out in this country has been by Alfred Hitchcock for British International. This man, suitably handled, would be a big proposition.

Looking back on the year, the British success has, generally speaking, been due to ready made comedy, a lucky break which must not be mistaken for a sudden urge of genius.

Biggest winners have been "Rookery Nook," "Lord Richard in the Pantry," "A Warm Corner," and, on a smaller scale, the Leslie Fuller comedies made by International.

British International, whose pictures lead on technical standards, have not resorted to the straight play talker so much as their rivals, although much of their stuff does come within this category.

"Young Woodley," "The Middle Watch," "Suspense," "The Yellow Mask," and "The 'W' Plan," this last being taken from a novel, all scored successes, although the first two named showed no ingenuity of directorial treatment.

Length and Cost

The pitfalls of British film production which executives would be advised to clear up before the new season starts are the question of a films' length and the little matter of expenditure.

Nearly every British film is too long. This fault is partly due to the quota act, which allows every foot of film to measure up in the percentage sheet, giving a man who shows 10 reels of home-made weariness an advantage over the one who shows five reels of entertainment.

This is unfortunate, and it looks as though the producers, whose chief selling angle is the fact the film they are vending is "quota footage," will do little to combat the problem. But the fact remains at least half the films made here could be twice as good if they were cut ruthlessly.

The question of expense is difficult for the British producers, who, with the exception of British International and Gaumont British, seldom have a certain market for their pictures when completed. Even these two keep costs down, frequently below the figure which makes a good film possible.

The English and German versions of a talker recently made at Elstree cost together a little over $80,000, a price at which no man can be expected to turn out two decent pictures.

British producers would do better if they made a few films less but spent more money on them.

Companies now announcing their schedule for 1931 show, on the whole, there will be still more films made in England, and it looks at present as though the studios will turn out nearly 150 features, a figure which beats any other country except America.

This compares eloquently with the 30-odd churned out four years back.

It just shows what a quota law and a Scotsman can do between 'em.

Chap.

By Tom Waller

The picture industry, that part of it controlled by Americans, represents a total of around $3,000,000,000. Another billion will probably be tacked on by the end of 1931.

Of this, sound contributed an estimated $500,000,000, so far just in the U. S. with that phase, from the investment point of view, doubtless constituting a full billion the world over before another year.

There are statisticians and statisticians. Some claim the grosses in the U. S. weekly are $15,000,000, while high film executives, in the inner circle that isn't talking to the outter, swear that 15 figures represents daily receipts. If the latter is the case then Hollywood (speaking of the American industry as a whole) nearly triples in grosses each year its entire accredited investment.

Picture business, on returns, accordingly, is almost as good as Standard Oil. It means that each of the 22,000 theatres does a daily turn of nearly $700 on the average; that there are 6,240,000,000 tickets sold yearly at the box office to make that gross possible.

Until figures are gone into, some good and others bad, but the Hays organization not officially going on record as sanctioning any of them, and all of the film companies guarding their own, except as they are expressed in quarterly statements, a lot remains in the dark about picture business arithmetic.

Here and Over There

The U. S. is taken for granted generally as having more fans than all the rest of the world together. The figures, however, belie this and show at the same time just why American producers are so concerned over foreign screens, why they are going in so heavily for multi-linguals and why they are building their own houses on other sides of the oceans.

The U. S. right now has about 120,000,000 people each week buying into its own film theatres. But figures regarded in film circles as authentic, in fact handed out as official, show that foreign countries altogether have 10,000,000 more weekly payees than that, since the world's weekly total of film attendees is given as 250,000,000. Both estimates are exaggerated unless repeaters weekly can be figured.

The foreign situation is of paramount importance to Hollywood. Where it meant 40% of American revenue from sales in silent days, if controlled the same now as then it would mean doubtless elevation of filmdom from the fourth to the third largest industry in the world. The jump in American attendance since talk speaks for the rest of the world in that respect. In the U. S. the weekly attendance back in 1928 was only 65,000,000 and the "only" is used advisedly when the census at the close of 1930 is considered.

Getting foreign ports under old-time control is realized no cinch as the figures, and sudden interest and developing enterprise of foreign producers, substantiate. Late October showed inroads made in the talker equipment field alone, 896 fairly important European theatres buying from Klangfilm rather than the American electrics. That the foreigners are not just affecting a front that will collapse this time is further proven by the fact that Klangfilm is increasing in oversea's popularity to the point where it reached a new high of 108 installations in September.

$58,000,000 in Hollywood

The West Coast studio properties are valued at $58,000,000. This figure will also increase during the next year. It shows the vast per cent. of capitalization is represented in brick and mortar of box offices throughout the country. At the same time $165,000,000 more should be added to Hollywoodlands, that figure approximated to be the total of picture company production budgets for 1929-30. About 550 talker features are represented in the turn-out.

The industry in the U. S. until the let-outs affected on wholesale lines during late summer and early fall had a payroll of 325,000. Latest shows that current total would be nearer correct with a deduction of 10%. This is declared only temporary with reinstatements, in numbers at least, when the economic situation brightens.

Of the personnel summary, 75,000 persons are listed as employed in production. Extras are classified separately, 17,541 of the many more thousands knocking about Hollywood being officially registered with the Central Casting Bureau early in the year.

The output of printed celluloid each season is averaging 500,000,000 feet. In connection with the development, the fact has been widely publicized that more silver is used by filmdom than is minted by the U. S. government.

In other departments in American filmdom 20,000 persons are estimated as employed in distribution of pictures. Here also, is another figure, that is being slashed by merging of big production and theatre forces. The 110,000, as the number of theatre executives and employees, is nearer correct, currently. Excluding production, already accounted for, fully 30,000 people are estimated as engaged in other departments of American filmdom.

To keep all of this constantly before the American public the industry is spending around $100,000,000 yearly. The figure includes every form of advertising.

Television in Sweden

Stockholm, Dec. 15.

Baird's Television was demonstrated for the first time in Stockholm through Svensk Filmindustri in their Red Mill theatre. Stockholm is the fourth city in Europe to see the novelty, Baird's Television having previously been demonstrated in London, Paris and Berlin only. Four Swedish artists participated, Greta Soderman, formerly with the Stockholm Opera; Fridolf Rhudin, revue comedian; Alice Lindholm, violinist, and Hillmer Torsling, singer, while Waldemar Dahlquist, revue papa, functioned as m.c.

Technically, this first demonstration was not very successful. The faces could hardly be distinguished, fluttering up and down and sideways like kites in a blizzard; the sound of the apparatus drenched the voices, and the violin tones sounded like a scream.

CHAIN OPERATORS—HOW MANY?

What is a chain operator?

He's a theatre operator.

And what's a theatre operator?

What is he?

It's a question that can stand a lot of thought.

There are not over five men in America entitled to be called theatre operators in the sense the show business now understands them.

Not over five?

Maybe only three.

Maybe two.

But, listen, there may be others. Hidden away, though.

If there is latent talent as a chain or theatre operator, it must burst forth.

Bankers Know

Bankers have stumbled upon this great problem of present day show business—the theatre operator.

It has been the opinion of "Variety's" observant picture reporters for months that bankers have concluded not to approve of huge mergers until satisfied with the operator. Every day that impression becomes stronger.

Theatre operators of the legit, vaudeville and burlesque circuits of other days or this day are like babes in arms in knowledge and ability to operate, compared with the lightning-like picture chain operator of today.

Every theatre manager, director, booker or general manager of a circuit believes he is a theatre operator. He may be in his own opinion—he may be in fact. He knows his own theatre or circuit and can operate it. Perhaps he has done so successfully.

But the "theatre operator" as he is looked upon now must be able to operate 250, 400 or 750 theatres, and every one from his desk. He must do with that massive chain, every one of them, what the present operator may be doing with one, five or ten theatres.

Sub-Operated

The chain with city subsidiaries has no general operator. (This in 1928, previous to Spyros Skouras becoming the Warners' general theatre operator,) The Stanley Company is the best example. It is sub-operated in Washington, Baltimore, Newark, New York and Brooklyn. The Stanley Company has no theatre operator who directs all of its theatres.

Requirements

A theatre operator as outlined here, the super-operator, and with the liberal limit placed at five in this country right now, must know theatre construction, equipment, operation, manipulation, trading, dealing, buying, selling, and attractions (screen and stage); policies (removable, replaceable, exchangeable, interchangeable), besides adaptability of theatres for such policies, requirements of communities, eliminations of theatres, and opposition (not only in the latter as to current opposition, but for locations where building stops the other fellow keeping the community sewed up); and the booking of picture—one of the most important matters a picture theatre operator must be fully advised upon, although his chain has its own theatre film broker—and the booking of stage attractions, knowing that end as well as the screen booking end, with knowledge of prices of each, where to place and how to cut—in short, the theatre operator of this nature herein must know everything his chain departments know.

And above all he must be the sole dominating figure of his organization, the single ruler, the absolute boss.

He must be the most complete mentally equipped showman of all time, for he must not only have expert knowledge as above, but he must know all of the rest of the show business, their theatres, their strength and their weaknesses.

And after that do you think that five is too liberal an estimate? Or three?

And when you pick those capable according to these requirements you will have the three forthcoming chain operators of America.

Champ Pugs of the Colony

By Fred Stanley

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Picking the colony's fight champ for the year is no easy matter. Reduced to a matter of percentages, a survey of the season's fistic encounters give four of the contenders a clear slate. As most were one-blow fights, it is difficult for a sports writer to toss the studded belt to its proper resting place.

Most popular with the fight fans appears to be Jim Tully, who drew heavy gates on three memorable occasions. He started off with a clean decision over Jack Gilbert and followed it up with a second notch toward the championship when he stepped out of his class to meet the heavyweight contender, Arthur Caesar.

But Jim's downfall before Murph McHenry eliminates him from the top rating, although due to his aggresivness in all three encounters he deserves honorable mention.

Rex Lease and Arthur Caesar both made two bids for the championship. Lease came out on top in only one of his starts. This was his clean decision over Vivian Duncan, before a scant audience at Viv's Malibu Beach cottage. For a time he looked like a champ. But his reign lasted but a short time. Two right swings only returning blow was the handing of his card to the victor for a return engagement. It as yet has not eventuated and is not expected to be a main event even if it should come off. The mob seem to be wise to set-ups hereabouts.

Quite a disappointment also to fistiana was Caesar's appearance in the B. B. B. cellar ring in his argument with Tierney. Again the heavyweight was on the defensive and endeavored to use tactics of an oral nature rather than fistic. Scrap went but one round and was clearly all Tierney's.

Lubitsch vs. Kraly

The literati contest of the year that attracted perhaps the most colorful and ultra-smart crowd to the ringside was the silk fun fest at the swanky Mayfair when Ernst Lubitsch and Hans Kraly stepped through the ropes in an international event. Both the middleweight crowns of Hollywood and Germany were at stake.

Consensus of the sports writers was that the palm for the evening went to Kraly, although one or two writers who apparently know their fistcuffs think otherwise and voted for Lubitsch. Taking all into consideration, the fight so far as this award is concerned will have to stand in the no opinion column.

Most disappointing of all contenders of the year was Pat Harman, heavyweight, who met the femme challenger, Rita Le Roy, in the new fight stadium, the lobby of the Warner-Kelton hotel. Harman's ferociousness as a heavy in pictures naturally had the sure-thing boys laying lop-sided odds. His defensive tactics, consisting of repeated clinches, however, proved his undoing. K. O. Rita proved a one-punch gal. Harman went to the floor for the count and a loss of three teeth. The spectators turned away disappointed, feeling they had been cheated.

Champ a Woman

Reviewing all the fights it must be taken into consideration that despite the clean bills of four of the contenders that the championship narrows down to the most decisive victory of them all. With this in view there is nothing left to do but award the Hollywood fight crown this year to Radio Studio's entry, Miss Rita Le Roy. All hail the queen!

"Variety's" fight film box score is at the start of this all!

from Vivian's brother, Harold, in the Brown Derby, the popular Hollywood fight arena, took away somewhat from his otherwise unblemished glory.

Heavyweight Caesar proved the cheese champ of the year, losing both to Ed Tierney and to Tully.

Ralph Ince Koed

Ralph Ince endeavored to gain the plum in a battle royal with the combined press club. This scrap went the limit, although the dusky referee endeavored to stop the fight midway with the aid of a beer bottle. The nod eventually went to the newspaper boys; a well deserved knockout.

The Tully-Gilbert go was perhaps the most heralded event, but failed to satisfy the cash customers. This was the second historic battle to be waged at the Brown Derby ring. Like Carpentier in his mixup with Dempsey, Gilbert was the ladies' favorite. Tully easily won the bout, which ended in the first round, with both on their feet, although one knockdown scored by the hobo-author naturally swayed the referees in their decision.

In Tully's second bid for the year's laurels he apparently had a set-up in Wisecrack Caesar, whose

PAR STICKS TO PARIS

Paris, Dec. 27.

While many of the American producers have showed uncertainty where to settle for foreign production, Paramount apparently has reached a determination on its course.

Stories that Par might shift its studios from here to London or Berlin are disposed of by the formal statement of Robert Kane that the studios will remain in Joinville.

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Taking it for granted that the recent federal rulings made the standard contract void, several Texas indies have refused certain releases specified in their original contracts and are holding out only for the b. o. cards.

Local distribs are getting set to file suits, claiming contracts still in force even minus the arbitration clause.

Texas indies have held a record for squawks with distribs for years. To many of these it's just another opportunity to start a mess.

English Snoopers Get Chance at Sunday Shows

London, Dec. 19.

The legal tangle surrounding the Sunday opening farce in England has been additionally complicated this week by writs being served on the Rialto, Universal's small West End house.

Sum of $100,000 is claimed by the common informer, named Millie Orpen. Who this woman is has still to be discovered. So far she is just known as a clerk, who says she is working for no outside interests.

Under the Sunday Observance act she can claim something like $1,000 for every infringement of the Sunday opening regulations during the six months to which a common informer's information must be limited.

At the present rate this woman has a legal chance to clean up millions. Under an act passed after the Sunday act her claim can be nullified, which it will.

Legal point suggests if the claim is nullified the Sunday Observance act will be legally set off and made to look as ridiculous as it is. Attorneys acting for film interests here, while reckoning the fantastic damages being claimed are farcical, are nevertheless apprehensive lest said claims are met, in part, as a means of still keeping the Lord's Day Observance act on the books.

promote that party without consulting the whole National Committee or any of its committeemen. The impression surely went forth, when President Harding said he could see no reason to interpose an objection against his Postmaster-General accepting the proffered picture position, that the President, as the nominal head of the same Republican party, was in accord with the Hays movement. Should Mr. Hays, in person or by intimation at any future time, allow the National Committee of the Republican party to know that the picture screen of America is now for the Republicans, it's difficult to contemplate that there is a Republican National Committeeman anywhere who will gainsay Will H. Hays is a shrewd politician. Whether the Republican Committeemen are in conclave or in their home cities, there could hardly be a dissenting voice among them to a plan that removes the Democrats from the screen and keeps the Republicans on it.

But there goes with that the exhibitor of this country. Has he been pledged and by whom? Who now controls the exhibitor? But who may control the exhibitor in the future? Politics, the film distributor, the picture producer or the exhibitor as a body. Time will tell that. Neither Mr. Hays nor the National Association of the Picture Industry can answer that question at the present moment.

Presuming that the picture screen will go to the Republican party, or as the show business calls it, "gets the exclusive rights," what does the picture business secure in exchange, or what can it secure for that Republican party fealty and Hays' $150,000 yearly salary? What has been promised, if anything has been promised? Can it be the picture producers and distributors as represented in the National Association are gambling the Republican will remain in power in Washington for the next 20 years as it did before Wilson broke its record? Will the Republicans see that there is no Federal censorship of moving pictures while there is a Republican national administration? Will the Republican party guarantee a tariff against foreign-made films, to protect the native made? And if so or no, will the Democratic party, its leaders or its press, stand by quietly?

Or if it may be possible or permissible to have the national film dictator, if Mr. Hays will ever reach that pinnacle, say what the exhibitors may exhibit and what the exhibitor may not exhibit, thereby, perhaps, making Mr. Hays the National Association's choice, the national censor? In that case, would Mr. Hays at the request of Mr. Zukor, of the Famous Players, and upon the acquittal of Fatty Arbuckle in San Francisco, inform the exhibitors and the public that the Fatty Arbuckle films now held by the Famous Players may be released without fear of prejudice? That seems a question to the industry, for the Famous Players is reported to be now holding on its shelves films made by Arbuckle approximating $3,000,000 in rental values, inclusive of those Arbuckle films taken off when the comedian first became involved in his unsought notoriety.

And what power would be given Mr. Hays to act on a feature film like "Foolish Wives," now showing at the Central theatre on Broadway, New York? Could he question as to how and why that film had passed the New York State board of moving picture censorship? Could he ask why the Universal had outlayed an expenditure of $40,000 on a junketing trip of censors to Hollywood to see a film and pre-censor it in their opinion, knowing that film would come before them later for official action?

Then again for Mr. Hays is the exhibitor! The picture exhibitor believes he controls the picture business. It's not a silly belief by any means. The exhibitor has the theatre, but not alone, for the distributors hold many as well. But the exhibitor is the power—the distributor is the super-director of the picture business, made so by the laxity of the exhibitor; the exhibitor's inaction for his own self-protection and the exhibitor's inability to assert himself as a showman, though operating theatres where showmanship must count in the long run. And pictures have had a long run thus far without showmanship.

The exhibitor is the man in the picture business the National Association and Mr. Hays must reckon with. The exhibitor is not selling Wall Street stock on quotations; he is not setting the rental price of films; and he is not producing pictures. But he pays the freight for everything and is the supreme power of the picture industry. Until Mr. Hays shall have corraled the exhibitor, Mr. Hays is the arbiter of pictures in name only.

RICHARD ARLEN

Will soon start work in a new production for Paramount, tentatively titled "The Westerner," in which a cowboy cleans up a big city's underworld. This story, now being written by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt, is to be produced at the Hollywood studios shortly before the release of the current Arlen starring vehicle, "(title to be selected in a few days."

Mr. Arlen is a former extra man who, in eight years, has climbed to stellar ranks in pictures. He is another established screen favorite whose popularity grew to even greater proportions when sound came in. Arlen was starred in "The Light of Western Stars," "Burning Up" and other hits, and played vital roles in "The Virginian" and "The Border Legion."

Texas Ad League Takes Poke at Commercial Shorts

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Local ad league took a hefty slap at Publix for its recent cartoon short plug on Lysol. In its weekly organ, "Ok'd Copy," advertisers claimed "advertisement disguised as a part of the entertainment program is a dangerous plaything. Too much of that sort of business will keep customers away from the show."

Until R-K-O acquisition Interstate used screen advertising, but minus any dressing up. Panning is aimed chiefly at the "two face" angle.

The league represents foremost experts in Texas.

Limit in Moving Pictures Success at Auditorium

Biggest Thing Ever Attempted in Pictured Pantomime—Four Shows Daily of One and One-Half Hours Each—Kaleidoscopic Entertainment

By FRANK WEISBERG (Deceased)

Chicago, June 4.

The much-heralded series of pictorial reproductions, involving minutest detail and effects heretofore unknown to the moving picture industry, was disclosed at the big Auditorium for the first time Sunday evening before a large, appreciative and interested audience.

The idea of converting the magnificent Auditorium into a mammoth moving picture house attracted wide attention. It seemed to arouse as much comment as when "Advanced Vaudeville" began its reign.

Three perfect and well-equipped machines, installed by George Kleine, the Chicago film importer and jobber, alternated and kept in constant activity, avoiding delay or the usual inevitable changes in reels. Kleine also furnished all the films.

The introductory remarks by Joseph Kilgour, who graphically described the more important scenes, were crisp and adequate.

Henry Lee has unquestionably spent considerable time in gathering material for the entertainment from the different corners of the globe. He selected picturesque subjects for the photographers to develop.

The first picture is of a corps of men in Norway, energetically engaged in removing huge cakes of ice. It shows the methods adopted in transporting them from one place to another. The subsequent contribution is a panoramic view of Australia, showing the accuracy of crafts navigating steadily, while the whistles blow and steam roars voluminously with all the effects of realism, a street in Sydney is reached.

The camera has dopicted one of the most natural episodes reproduced on canvas. As a crowd surges to and fro on the main thoroughfare a fire alarm is sounded. The spectators are in an uproar and a terrific noise of fire gongs is heard. Maddened horses attached to fire-fighting apparatuses dash along, leaving the exciting crowds in commotion.

The most remarkable effect was the natural sounds accompanying the streams of water pouring from the hose.

Ireland was next brought to view. Typical personages and diversions indulged in by British officers on furlough were shown.

A tally-ho, said by Kilgour in his explanatory preliminaries, to have been taken from actual life in London, proved an interesting subject due in a measure to the incidental particulars of naturalism. The click of steel hoofs could be heard, also bugles, automobile horns and other manifestations.

A humorous subject with a good comedy situation is "Foxy Grandpa."

Shorts

Song and dance acts, minstrel first parts and other specialties carry with exact sound and inflection of the human voice are presented by a phonographic arrangement called "The Cameraphone."

The unique entertainment with appropriate organ music has been prepared by George Kleine, Henry Lee and George W. Lederer, produced under the direction of Lederer. About 50 people were employed for the effects on the stage. James L. Lederer is general manager.

Four shows are given daily and the performance runs an hour and a half. Entertainment is worth seeing and should draw crowds to the Auditorium all summer.

1,237 COAST HOUSES; 950 INDEPENDENT

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

There are 1,237 picture theatres in the three states facing the Pacific; 674 in California, 348 in Washington and 215 in Oregon. Fox-West Coast has a total of 240 of this number.

Warner houses, including their new San Pedro property, figure 13, that taking in 12 in California and one in Washington. Publix only has 10 in California, Oregon, and Washington. R-K-O has 11 in these three states. This leaves a total of around 950 independent theatres, taking in unwired houses, those closed, shooting galleries and all.

As to cities, Los Angeles leads with 115 houses, San Francisco is second at 68, and Oakland third with 25. Washington state has three cities having more than four houses. Seattle boasts 37, Tacoma 12 and Spokane nine. Oregon has only one city of over four houses—Portland, with 41.

By Roy Chartier

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

While opinion seems divided, here and in the east, on whether mass production should or could be returned to New York and environs, Southern California maintains its firm grip on picture-making. To break that grip would mean springing the biggest surprise ever to people in the industry here as well as to California itself. In production the majority waves aside the thought as absurd, with most so much a part of California that the attitude, without reservations, appears to be New York couldn't replace Hollywood.

Those who are indirectly interested in production, as well as elements profiting from studio operation here, are in the main unwilling to discuss "the wild reports" of producer exodus east.

Every indication points to a ring well filled with hats tossed in by various groups that are entrenched here, either with or by virtue of pictures if moving day ever threatens to approach.

That would take in many in picture production who are either Caly boosters or have other interests here, including property, homes, etc. But Wall Street bankers, eastern execs and most boards of directors never care about such matters if preparing to make changes.

Though it is believed in some quarters that eventual centralization of production in the east may result, in part, from growing feeling the state has not given the picture business the credit due for running L. A.'s population over the million; that values have become exaggerated and it is becoming increasingly difficult to operate from here, the majority is so callously Caly this minority faces a tough offensive.

More Favorable

New York is now looked upon generally by big execs as far more favorable than it was five years back. Entrance of talkers and the invasion of stage talent have weighed in favor of the east.

Par on L. I.

Par, first to signalize importance of that angle, has consistently increased production and facilities since reopening its Astoria plant two years ago. The California diehards say "no," yet the Par eastern studio has been turning out product equal to that made here, and this has the others guessing.

While most studios are quick to point out advantages of Hollywood, recognizing the hold this coast has on production, the higher execs are little by little giving thought to the east. Metro and U are named among those who may follow Par eastward for making of a slice of yearly programs.

Thus far the only advantage accredited to New York as a picture-making center is close proximity to legit and vaude stage, and in close contact with the home office, most important of all.

Reasons

Other advantages claimed but not generally conceded through coast's uncanny clutch on production are:

1. Nearness to home offices.
2. Better contact on distribution and theatre operation.
3. Possibility of less production politics.
4. Saving in cross-country transportation of execs, picture talent, telegraph and telephone expenses.
5. Economy on shipment of master negatives, always heavily insured for printing, most of which is now done in New York.
6. Quicker clearance on prints for eastern showings and for export.
7. Saving on industrial tax charged by California for all film on hand every May 1.
8. Availability of writers and artists who refuse to leave New York for California.
9. Greater value of production publicity through New York papers as against those here.
10. Stronger political and other influence east, that taking in newspapers.
11. Value of New York as stage

Coast to Coast—1930

By Louis Greenspan

At a casual glance over 1930 one would say a lot of things happened during this year to the great American amusement business. But for radical changes in the industry, from the tip of the Atlantic to the edge of the Pacific, possibly no other year presents so many outstanding individual and collective highlights.

Practically every branch of show business, from a gilly show on wheels to grand opera, underwent some sort of a metamorphosis. In the merry mad mixup that took place in the past 12 months none of the branches got away unscathed.

One of the most outstanding events of the year was adequately termed "The Gold Rush of 1930." With Hollywood the destination, this year saw more prospectors and speculators hitting the trail to California than any other on the record of show business. The far greater majority came trekking from New York, but there were flocks of others from all over the east, middle west, north and south. All came looking for the same thing. End of the rainbow—Hollywood. What happened before the year was out was inevitable. The supply was greater than the demand. And the journey back started before the year was half over and it's still on.

The disintegration that beset the legit stage was laid at the door of the picture producers, who for a while saw an almost complete annihilation of spoken drama by the musical and talking pictures. Nothing so drastic happened, although it can't be denied that the legit was floundering around, in pretty bad shape, possibly worse this year than in previous ones. This analysis does not go entirely for Broadway, where a hit show will get money no matter what opposition pictures may be. But it went for the great open spaces of this country, the Main Streets of America, where legit was counted out completely at one time during the year. No question that pictures was an important factor there. The downfall of the road started several years ago and it was just a gradual process of elimination.

The east, by virtue of seniority and precedence in the making and unmaking of show business, went through a period of stagnancy this year that will be talked about for a long time. With Broadway virtually moving to Hollywood, it left New York for the first time in years in a state of depression it's still trying to get out of. With the number of stage people leaving for Hollywood growing steadily in numbers, it looked for a while like the end of everything, as far as legit was concerned. Only that Hollywood closed its doors to the easterners prevented a total exodus of actors, writers and directors, from New York.

May Move Again

But regardless of what did happen or could, it's a safe bet at any time that New York will always be the metropolis for this or any other industry. Anybody who has ever lived and worked in New York will always want to go back anyway. A duplication of the exodus of show people from Manhattan to the Coast, for the picture thing, of course, may happen again and again, but it's doubtful whether the number will be the same. If experience counts for much then the lesson learned by easterners this past year should mean a great deal.

Except for the legit stage, all other branches traversed a path that fluctuated through its own conditions and reactions. Vaudeville underwent a gruelling test and after a year of experimenting seems to be no further ahead. In New York or California the situation is relatively the same. Conditions and circumstances of the time and the place applies to either east of west. At the same time the east creates what the rest of the country must later accept, so what remedies are to be found for the variety shows, if at all, will perforce come out of the east.

Through the same course emanates the picture house presentation idea. Based and founded on vaudeville, the presentation is yet a separate form of entertainment that can be changed around to meet the needs and requirements of almost any type of theatre in any sector of the counutry.

Middle West

While in the east show business was undergoing a critical operation, so to speak, conditions in the middle west showed few radical differences through the year. The rise and fall of vaudeville in and around Chicago is no longer talked about. Chicago is now but a stopping point either way. Show business in Chicago has taken on a small town aspect and differs little from its neighboring and smaller cities. Just as New York is the outlet for the rest of the east, so Chicago is the supply post for the middle west.

Pacific Coast

The Pacific Coast, starting with Los Angeles and Hollywood and extending to Frisco north into Seattle, Portland and Tacoma, up to Vancouver, will probably record its past year of show business as the most hectic in memory. So many matters of consequence happened on the west coast this year it would take books to fill in the details. Never an over-enthusiastic show center, the Coast dropped to a millenium this year, when, for example, not a single legit show out here left an imprint worth while mentioning. Vaudeville situation is another that went tobogganing through the year. At one time a fertile field for the Orpheum and Independent circuits, the western slope is just hanging on by a thin thread to its vaude new. Picture house stage shows, another big item on the Coast only a few years back, has been knocked cold and at present still trying to regain its breath.

But the Coast still has its Hollywood and its much reputed sunshine. And when the rainy and cold weather sets in the alibi is still the same. Unusual.

No Between-Season Studio Closing at Fox

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

There will be no shutdown of the Fox studio next year. With 24 completed and shipped prints to New York, four more pictures are now being edited while nine are shooting and 11 are being prepared. This brings the total up to the quota of 48.

End of February should see the final production on this year's program. Plans are for production on the '31-32 program to follow without a letdown.

W. E. CUTS WIRE PRICE

Equipment Meets Mussolini's 10% Reduction Edict in Italy

Rome, Dec. 27.

Coming into line with the nation wide reductions in prices and wages ordered by Mussolini, Western Electric has reduced the price of its equipment by 10% in this territory.

New rate covers installation and servicing of equipment.

WB's Salem Pair

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Continuing its Coast expansion program, Warners has closed for the Elsinore and Bilght theatres in Salem, Ore., the two largest indie houses there. Both are first runs.

Twenty-year leases were negotiated with owner George B. Tuhrie and Frank D. Bilght by Lou Halper, exec on theatre expansion. Bilght seats 1,000 and the Elsinore 500.

ZUKOR, THE BOSS

The Extra

By Fred Stanley

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Bucking the extra list during 1930 has been tough on the men but for the women who form the atmosphere to pictures it proved one long headache. Number of femmes looking for spots in mobs was more than twice the men, yet the male of the species connected with more than double the number of jobs.

This year has been the worst for the extra player of any year in the last decade, due to the changing type of pictures calling for fewer big scenes. The more intimate film motif is now the order, a change chalked up to the current stage influence in picture making.

Based on figures up to Nov. 1, the Central Casting Bureau's records show that of more than 17,000 extras listed by them an average of only 833 worked each day. Of this average, 563 jobs went to men, 250 to women and 20 to children.

Of those fortunate enough to work, the daily average wage paid for the extras during the 10 months was $9.81. During that time the total cost for atmospheric talent to the studios was $1,594,966. This was the industry's donation to the more than 17,000 listed.

Salary wage scale for extras remained as during the former year, ranging from $3 to $15 a day, with only 61 persons during the year getting more than the top figure. The $10 rate called for most placements both for men and women; 62,074 men were given day jobs at that rate and 31,970 women. Next most popular rate was $7.50, with day pay checks at this rate for 56,681 men and 21,964 women.

Despite the refusal of the bureau to list any more extras, except on rare requests from the studios, the town was bombarded just as heavily as in years past by newcomers hoping for fame via mob route.

During the year an average of 36 persons weekly attempted to get listed and almost all of them were refused on account of the paucity of jobs now for those already listed.

25 Years of Trade Papers

advertising for any other show paper. Up to this time that block remains.

Frank Queen, a Big Man

In all of the long record of "The New York Clipper," and it ran nearly 75 years, there stands out but one brilliant thing—its founder, Frank Queen, a man with a remarkable vision. 'Tis a pity he died before planting "The Clipper" where he could have planted it, for he innovated "The New York Clipper" as the first sporting paper of America and the first theatrical paper of America. Many of his ideas, as seen in the old files of "The Clipper," have been more latterly adopted in the modern way by the dailies.

It's pathetic to look at "The Clipper" of old and all of the innovations by Queen, who was groping many years ahead of his times in view of the great development of sports and the theatre in this country just ahead of him and note the many ideas inaugurated by that paper, and then to look at the present day trade papers, to see not one new idea. There is not a show trade paper printed in America of the past 20 years with a new idea other than "The Film Index," which started the picture trade papers, and if you wish to except "Variety."

Cheap Stealers

The trade papers have stolen from one another, and always ideas that would cost them nothing. For over 18 years "Variety" has been printing cables weekly it paid for, but no other trade paper ever attempted to steal that idea. Though weeklies like "The Billboard," Dramatic Mirror" and others stole such departures from "Variety" as New Act reviews and the Bills Next Week, while picture trade papers have stolen without even asking permission, "Variety's" creation of printing box office figures, a departure in theatrical trade journalism that cost this paper 15 years to develop and thousands upon thousands to collect and perfect. Those film trade papers even steal "Variety's" actual figures to make their theft less expensive.

"Variety" set a code that other trade papers finally had to follow. They claimed in years gone by "Variety's" hard and fast rules about advertising and notices would ruin it; that "Variety's" refusing to run "readers" of "press stuff" for advertisers on the theory that the advertisement told the story and was sufficient would also become its ruination. While other trade papers had to note after a while that the "Variety" policy of printing the truth, or as much as it could get of it, in news or notices or anything else, seemed to be the policy the show trade best appreciated after all, as it gave the show business at least one paper it might depend upon weekly for such information as it contained.

When the other papers tried to steal that idea, it was far too late; they had established a contrary reputation that could not be wiped out; their advertisers knew differently, and such readers as they had left were looking for their names in print, not news, they found their news in "Variety," for "Variety" had kept itself broke paying for that news.

A Good Reason

One more idea they did not attempt to steal from "Variety," and that was for a trade paper even to fight back against any circuit that said it would and attempted to put it out of business, as Klaw & Erlanger, the Shuberts and the Keith Circuit more than once said and so attempted with "Variety." "Variety" has been wrongly credited for the fights it entered into and passed through with all of those circuits. "Variety" fought its heaviest battle with the Keith Circuit a few years ago, with Keith's represented by E. F. Albee, who was then working against "Variety," hand in hand with Lee Shubert, a Shubert fight against this paper also being on at the same time. But men of the dailies throughout the country took up that fight against the Keith and Orpheum circuits and vaudeville; they gave "Variety" the greatest indirect circulation any paper ever had, and they got to millions of readers where "Variety" was only reaching thousands. The publicity men of the Keith and Orpheum circuits finally understood that, but again it was too late.

Yet while "Variety" was standing alone in its fights against theatrical interests which thought all they had to do to control a trade paper was to throw it a bone in the way of an advertisement, and "Variety" declining to believe in that reasoning, every other theatrical trade paper tried to aid the managers' efforts to put "Variety out of business." That is why "Variety" has never fraternized with the stagetrade papers.

Trade papers of the show business seem to be much like the independent showmen of the same business; they have made what might have become an organized journalistic profession of much strength in the trade, merely a cut-throating existence, with one seeking an edge over the other; one trying to spoil what another starts, always finding it cheaper to ape than create.

Which leaves it questionable as to any influence exerted at present by the trade papers of the stage and screen. A trade paper to command influence must command confidence. Trade papers that flirt with advertising and take editorial orders over the phone from publicity men can hardly command either.

Following closely upon the heels of "Variety's" report last week, now confirmed, that Adolph Zukor has taken $5,000,000 worth of life insurance for the benefit of Famous Players, comes the rumor of reorganization in the executive personnel of the corporation.

It is circumstantially reported that H. E. H. Connick, will shortly resign and be replaced by a man more in sympathy with the conduct of the company as laid down by Adolph Zukor, its president. Mr. Connick is in receipt of a salary of $50,000 a year and was generally understood to represent the interests of the downtown syndicate, which underwrote the $10,000,000 of a 8% preferred stock at 94 of which 330,000 shares have already been retired.

Accordingly to the freely circulated tale, Connick is regarded by the Famous Players crowd as a very able financial expert, but not schooled in show business and it was upon this rock he and Zukor clashed.

Contrary to general opinion the underwriting syndicate, other than paying for its stock, never aided Famous in its finances, doing no banking.

H. B. Rosen, who arranged the $5,000,000 worth of insurance for Zukor, is an agent in the New York Life Insurance Co. and it is understood it was through his influence reinforced by the New York Life, that a line of financial accommodations has been secured with the Harriman Bank, the Guaranty Trust Co. and several other banking concerns by which Famous Players-Lasky Corp. may receive such financial assistance as it may require from time to time for the conduct of so vast an enterprise.

The deal with the underwriting syndicate is for Famous to retire 33,000 shares of its preferred stock annually at par, so that, with the passing of each year the common shares outstanding will be backed up by that much additional assets.

The new banking affiliations looked upon Adolph Zukor as the principal asset of Famous, and it was for this reason they wished to be secured by a large amount of insurance on his life.

Asked for a statement on the above, Mr. Zukor replied:

"It's a joke".

Pressed to declare whether the new financial arrangement or the rumor was a joke, he was altogether non-committal and concluded the interview with the suggestion the reporter permit his conscience to be his guide.

Mr. Connick smiled when asked to comment, saying it was "news" to him.

In Earlier Days of F-P

This is a reprint of a story in "Variety" in 1921, touching upon one of the several critical periods in the earlier life of Famous Players (now Paramount and with the same Zukor).

The Connick referred to in this story was the first efficiency man of the show business. There never has been another in the Zukor organization.

The inside story of the time of the incident was that Mr. Zukor, with himself and associates rebelling against this representative of the bankers attempting to operate the Famous Players business with inexperience, called upon the bankers, told them that Famous Players belonged to them, that Zukor and his more important associates were through.

The bankers knew Zukor meant it.

Connick never returned to the F-P office, after that day.

The Suburban Exhib

By Tom Waller

Autos and those better 'n better good country roads are making it tougher 'n tougher for Suburban Theatre Owners.

Do what he likes he can no longer do what he pleases. His likes have got to be nearest to the nearest city's de luxe's first runs before he can draw an easy breath.

Before sound blasted his peace of mind the sub exhib had a fairly easy time of it. Whether it was second or third run, the quiet picture usually had some quality which attracted the stay-at-homes.

Strangely, and, possibly because of that, for some reason dialog on the screen (rather in the bass horn of the projection room) has caused a welching in the welkin of the village exhib. It's got to be near new or as near new as possible, but never half so old as the prints he projected in the niute days or else——Mr. and Mrs. Car Owner buy a couple of gallons extra of gas and set out to spend an extra two-bits in the nearby city for the picture that some day will hit their own honky tonk.

In a nutshell, all of this is just the reason for the small towner's lamentation concerning dialog. Even in third and fourth runs in the key cities, one hears it. Talk has killed the age limit of pictures. Before they spoke on the screen it was oke with the payees to wait until they arrived. Now, fearful that they may be behind times and miss some message, it's better to get into the car and git.

Tough Going

How is the sub exhib overcoming all of this? He just isn't. That is, with the exception of a handful who have turned arty with the hope of first running the big brother a few miles away protected by the new Hays zoning scheme of things. But, are they?

The little lad with the small investment in the small town has got to use the same paper as well as the same pictures which showed weeks before him; in some cases, months.

Sure, he's got his sound equipment in. And the reproduction is okay. He gets in enough to meet his payments to the big electrics and they can't call quits on the apparatus for another 10 years.

But right down in his vest cavity the suburb indie is a sorrowful figure. He can't buck the big chains that always have a house within a few miles reaching distance of his b. o., and he can't lick the auto industry. Last but not least it is, simultaneously, to his advantage and disadvantage.

Some of the smart little fellows in the small burgs near big lighted places are going in more and more for the community and stay-at-home angles. Whether it's the American Legion, the Masons, the K. of C. or the Rotarians, there's always a way out to keep the folks in for the tiny exhib who is on his toes. A Relief Night for any of these associations always draws their members and friends. They like the guy, since, if he is a wise one, he does the necessary handshaking, and thus tips off the rest of the neighbors that by buying at home his house is always opened to a cut with one of the other worthy local institutions.

Exhibs who do these kind of things can get by. There are enough on record already to prove that. The snooty type which depends solely upon his screen to pay is as good as lost. The big towns and their first runs are too near, both in weeks and mileage, for the grass guy to play upstart.

More teasers of the amateur, country store and a host of other nights, plus the big charitable angle, will do most to keep the tiny competitor of the big nearby chain in the biz of selling tickets on his own than anything else.

ALBERT ROGELL

Numbered among the younger set of the industry, his rise has been meteoric. As head of the company that bears his name, he is also its chief executive, and, incidentally, its ace director.

He personally directed "Mamba," one of the b. o. smashes of last year, and rounds out 1930 with his latest directorial achievement, "Aloha."

His next production, an original from his own pen, "Beloved Enemy," will go into production in January, 1931. While one of the outstanding directorial lights of the business, Rogell has a flare for the arts and is numbered among the literati of the film colony.

Must Deliver "Tarzan"

The Jungle Film Corp., which applied in the Supreme Court to compel the agents for "Son of Tarzan" films to furnish its customers with the 15th and concluding episode of the serial, got a decision requiring deliveries as testified.

However, the court directed the Jungle company to give a bond of $10,000 to indemnify the defendants from any damages that may result because of the injunction, and for the payments of any sums that may become due under the contract.

TEC ART ACTIVITY

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Charles Henderson is renting space at Tec Art to produce "Givers and Takers" starting Jan. 5.

Two Holdovers, Maybe Three, in Los Angeles Holiday Film Layout; Par. $30,000; Downtown $25,000

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Christmas business boomed generally and the pre-holiday slump was forgotten in the sunshine of improved conditions. Thursday openings coincided with the holiday and gave everybody a strong start. The early fast pace is being maintained.

Paramount, which has been averaging $15,000 for weeks, started off so well with "The Right to Love" that bookings were set back to permit a second week for the Ruth Chatterton film. First week looks like $30,000 or thereabouts.

"The Lash," day and dating at both Warner houses, is another heavy grosser with more than $25,000 certain at the Downtown taking in the New Year's Eve shows.

Probable holdover is "Hook, Line and Sinker" at the Orpheum with $15,500. Only thing that can interfere with a second stanza is a sudden switching in of "Criminal Code" for the holidays.

Fortified by a nifty exploitation campaign, "One Heavenly Night" opened well if not sensationally at United Artists.

Among the Fox West Coast houses the specials are tapering off at the Carthay and Chinese. "Min and Bill" gives way to "Lightnin'" at the former next Thursday (1), while "Morocco," now easing off, will be supplanted by "Trader Horn" at the Chinese in mid-January.

Estimates for Last Week

Carthay Circle (Fox)—"Min and Bill" (M-G) (1,500; 75-$1.50) (6th, final week). Took $7,000 for the final stanza; "Lightnin'" (Fox) opens New Year's day without the usual calciums.

Chinese (Fox)—"Morocco" (Par) (2,028; 50-$1.50) (5th week). Attraction is slipping and now down to $11,000; "Trader Horn" (M-G) due in mid-January.

Criterion (Fox)—"Paid" (M-G) (1,600; 25-75) (3d week). Holding up nicely; $15,000.

State (Loew-Fox)—"Reducing" (M-G) (2,024; 25-$1). Robust box office at not much under $30,000.

Orpheum—"Hook, Line and Sinker" (Radio) (2,270; 50-75). At $15,000, oke and may go another week; if it doesn't "Criminal Code" (Col) will move in.

Pantages (Fox)—"Tom Sawyer" (Par) (2,700; 20-40-65-90). Kids went for this one with enthusiasm; ran well above par at better than $14,000.

Paramount (Publix)—"Right to Love" (Par) (3,595; 25-75). Strong, probably around $30,000 figure that amply justifies decision to hold it second week.

R-K-O—"Madonna of Streets" (Col) (2,950; 30-65). Not bad at $14,000.

United Artists (Pub-UA)—"One Heavenly Night" (UA) (2,100; 25-$1). Opened nicely with $15,000 indicated.

Downtown (WB)—"The Lash" (FN) (1,800; 50-75). Strong at $25,000 and picture is staying another week on standard screen here.

Hollywood (WB)—"The Lash" (FN) (2,756; 25-75). With $23,000, big for this stand on wide screen; feature is remaining only 10 days until the special premiere of "Outward Bound" (WB) at $2 Jan. 5.

Louisville's Good Figures, 'Lone Wolf' Hits $10,000

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 500,000)
Weather, Cold

Holiday slump not as bad as expected. National lead again with "Last of the Lone Wolf."

Exploitation abandoned almost entirely when needed most Christmas Day surprisingly good.

Estimates for Last Week

Alamo (4th Ave.) (1,100; 15-25-40)—"Man 16 Man" (Fox). Phillips Holmes billed with Grant Mitchell; $3,275 fair.

Brown (Brown) (1,500; 15-25-40)—"Silver Horde" (Col). Average take for $3,100.

National (Class) (2,300; 30-50)—"Last of Lone Wolf" (Col) and unit. Near $10,000, comfortably profitable.

Rialto (R-K-O) (2,040; 30-50)—"Follow the Leader" (Par). Comedy rated better than most; around usual $3,400.

State (Loew) (3,252; 35-50)—"Passion Flower" (M-G). Held up fairly well; $9,900.

Strand (4th Ave.) (1,365; 35-50)—"Old English" (WB). Credited with being Arliss' best but couldn't touch his earlier receipts; about $4,300.

CINCY HAS FAIR WEEK

$23,500 for Albee—Lyric and Palace Both Around $14,000

Cincinnati, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 700,000)
Weather: Mild

Santa Claus duties of public put customary quietus on theatre patronage until day after Christmas. Combined grosses of downtown picture houses showed gain of one grand over previous week, and business wasn't bad.

Estimates for Last Week

Albee (R-K-O) (3,300; 35-75)—"Along Came Youth" (Par) and vaude. Frances Dee, Cincy girl, had prominent part in film feature; local popularity of Weaver Brothers, stage toppers, lessened severity of inevitable slump; fairly good at $23,500.

Lyric (R-K-O) (1,400; 30-50)—"Passion Flower" (M-G). Good at $14,000.

Palace (R-K-O) (2,700; 30-50)—"Princess and Plumber" (Fox). Not quite $14,000, good.

Capitol (R-K-O) (2,000; 30-50)—"Tom Sawyer" (Par). Fair at $14,000.

Strand (R-K-O) (1,350; 25-50)—"Only Saps Work" (Par). Did a nice $6,000.

Family (R-K-O) (1,140; 25-40)—"Road to Paradise" (FN) and "East Is West" (U). Okay at slightly under $5,000.

BALTO. EASES THE BUMP, $20,000 FOR CENTURY

Baltimore, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 850,000)
Weather: Fair

The hangover of the pre-holiday period until midweek crippled the week's gross. Big intake last half was not large enough to offset the slack trade of the first three days. Two houses changed bills in midweek to conform to the Thursday holiday date.

Estimates for Last Week

Century (Loew)—"Lottery Bride" (UA) (3,200; 25-60). Started slowly and got a class draw; critics very favorable, but musical lacked flapper appeal; Hal Yates' debut as m. c.; big last half, with daily turnaways; gross about $20,000.

Stanley (Loew, Stanley-Crandall)—"The Lash" (FN) (3,600; 25-60). Star apparently no longer sure-fire b. o. magnet here; opening pace lame, but holiday trade pretty good; week as whole off, at about $15,000.

Valencia (Loew-UA)—"Bat Whispers" (U) (1,500; 25-35). Maintained fair pace; about $2,800.

Parkway (Loew-UA)—"Bat Whispers" (U) (1,000; 25-35). Mystery thriller day and dated here, and house performed satisfactorily; up nearly a grand for $2,800; very good.

New (M. Mechanic)—"Princess and the Plumber" (Fox) (1,400; 25-50). First week of this one pretty good, but three holdover days not successful; just seasonal average, say $2,500.

Keith's (Schanbergers)—"Third Alarm" (Tiff) (2,500; 25-50). Week was a day short; "Blue Angel" (Par) in Xmas noon; fire film got a pretty good break, $7,000 reported.

Auditorium (Schanbergers)—"Viennese Nights" (WB) (1,500; 50-$1). Lavishness of production and beauty of music came in for favorable press comment; drawing appeal limited, however, and pre-Xmas days were way off; nice trade last half, but indifferent as whole at about $5,000.

Production Spurt

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Fox will complete its current (1930-31) program between Feb. 15 and March 1, with its heaviest production schedule as a result coming in January.

With the end of this year Fox has 30 of the 48 sold on this season completed and delivered to New York.

Universal has a heavy studio schedule ahead, with seven features to go yet on this year's program. In the lineup are "Seed," "Iron Man," "Up and Up," "People," an untitled John Murray Anderson story, "White Captive" (formerly "Quirang") and "Strictly Dishonorable."

Starting right after New Year's U activity will commence full speed.

ECLAT

Brilliancy of success is everywhere apparent within the portals of the magnificent SAVOY-PLAZA HOTEL in New York.

The elite of the world enjoy the facilities of this internationally famous hostelry which features a noted MEYER DAVIS ORCHESTRA—this season under the direction of Rudolph Bochica, renowned Russian violinist.

2 Pitt Houses O. K., Penn at $27,250 and Stanley Does $24,000

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 1,000,000)
Weather: Cold

A couple of de luxe sites managed to weather the notoriously tough week with some good showmanship. Christmas Day biz also helped.

Penn brought on Victor Hyde to stage a local juvenile follies and the stunt, employing 250 youngsters, was a rousing success. It's credited chiefly for the nice $27,250, a crackerjack figure, with "Follow the Leader." "Lightnin'" held up the Stanley in presentable fashion, probably assisted quite a bit by Ed Lowry, who's still building on stage, at over $24,000.

Others, however, slid. "Lady's Morals" couldn't do anything at the Aldine despite big ad splurges, while "Sea Legs," rated here as Jack Oakie's poorest, was dormant at the Fulton and Sheridan Square. Only got five days, both houses using a Thursday, Christmas Day, opening on "Tom Sawyer." Warner, however, did fairly with "Tol'able David."

Estimates for Last Week

Aldine (Loew's) (1,900; 35-50)—"Lady's Morals" (M-G). Liked but with seasonal depression couldn't stand up; at $6,000 or under, poor.

Enright (WB) (3,700; 15-25-35-40-60)—"The Gorilla" (WB). Weak and under $8,250.

Fulton (Shea-Benham) (1,750; 10-25-35-50)—"Sea Legs" (Par). Down at $4,000; only five days, however, "Tom Sawyer" (Par) opening Christmas, day ahead of schedule.

Harris (WB) (1,800; 10-20-30-40)—"The Pay Off" (Radio) and vaude. Just another week; maybe $4,700.

Penn (Loew's-UA) (3,300; 25-35-60-75)—"Follow the Leader" (Par). Local kid show right nice at $27,250; cagey showmanship in staging revue and local angle credited with biz; figure would be presentable here any time.

Sheridan Sq. (R-K-O)—"Sea Legs" (Par). Day and date with Fulton, downtown, and also off at under $3,000; only five days here, too, house also opening Thursday with "Sawyer."

Stanley (WB) (3,600; 25-35-60)—"Lightnin'" (Fox). Managed to get by okay, helped by Ed Lowry's growing stage draw; more than just fair at $24,000.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 25-35-60)—"Tol'able David" (Col). Would undoubtedly have fared much better any other week; maybe $8,500, fair.

TACOMA GIVES IN

Best News Is Payroll Increases for R. R. Employees—B'way $5,000

Tacoma, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 125,000)
Weather: Good

Too much holiday, but some good news broke with payroll increases after first of year announced by railroads.

"Hell's Angels" in fair second week.

Estimates for Last Week

Broadway (Fox) (1,500; 25-35-50)—"Derelict" (Par). Off at $5,000.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (1,500; 25-35-50)—"Mothers Cry" (WB). Not good at $2,800.

Rialto (Fox) (1,200; 25-35-50)—"Passion Flower" (M-G). Poor with $2,000.

2 DENVER SITES, $24,100

Kiddie Show and "Passion Flower" Get Over—Other Houses Slide

Denver, Dec. 27.

Grosses were off, as expected, with the Rialto and Paramount yanking films to start new ones Christmas Day.

Snow Sunday and cold weather hurt. Big draw at Denver was the Denver "Post" Kiddie Club show.

Estimates for Last Week

Huffman's Aladdin (1,500; 35-50-75)—"Big Money" (Pathe). Down at $5,000.

Denver (Publix) (2,300; 35-35-65)—"Remote Control" (M-G). Fair on $14,800.

Paramount (Publix) (2,000; 25-35-50)—"Passion Flower" (M-G). Got $9,300, fair.

Rialto (Publix) (1,040; 25-35-50)—"Fast and Loose" (Par). Low with $2,800.

Huffman's Tabor (1,900; 25-35-50)—"Sinner's Holiday" (WB). Did $8,000.

None of the flickers—including the lone legit show—stood up against the shopping week. Three of the pictures dropped out Thursday (25) and all houses hung up SRO that and the next two days.

"Min and Bill," coming into the Palace Christmas Day, got a big play and present signs are picture may run nine days. At the Capitol Jap and Chinese girls serving tea free to lady patrons is getting some word-of-mouth plugs.

Loew's put on standout vaude and "Sea Wolf," but couldn't do better than $12,500. His Majesty's (legit) had only fair returns with "The Blue Ghost." Princess took "Lincoln" off Xmas Day and is filling house with "Hell's Angels." The Roxy tried experiment of all French picture, "Toute Sa Vie," which clicked to tune of $2,800, good for this small theatre, and it's being held over.

Estimates for Last Week

His Majesty's (CT) (1,600; 50-$2)—"The Blue Ghost" (legit). Only fair houses but better after Xmas Eve; $7,500.

Palace (FP) (2,700; 40-75)—"Girl of Golden West" (WB). Only $10,000.

Capitol (FP) (2,700; 40-75)—"The Dancers" (Fox). Better than usual unit shows helped; broke about even on $13,000.

Loew's (FP) (3,200; 40-65)—"Sea Wolf" (Fox). Standout vaude got most of the $12,500; middlin'.

Princess (CT) (2,300; 35-60)—"Lincoln" (UA). Already seen here and faded to $5,000 on five-day run.

FOX NEAR $70,000 AND RECORD-FRISCO JUMPS

San Francisco, Dec. 27.

Big grosses marked the current week in the downtown picture houses. The Fox, with "Lightnin'," plus a special feature on the stage, hit around $70,000, smashing the house record, and the Paramount, with "Right to Love" and Mitzi Green in person also topped all previous grosses, gathering $29,000 at the b. o. Practically all other houses garnered better than usual money returns, prosperity ruling the entire street.

Estimates for Last Week

Fox (5,000; 50-65-75-$1)—"Lightnin'" (Fox). Opened Christmas Day with extra program and early morning matinee featuring a favorite radio star; set pace that indicated possibly the biggest gross house has ever had, around $70,000.

Warfield (Fox) (2,672; 50-65-90)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). In fourth week continued to drop with takings of $14,000 only fair.

Paramount (Publix) (3,698; 35-50-65-$1)—"Right to Love" (Par). Plus a smash stage show with Mitzi Green in person, drew biggest crowds this house has held in six months; both matinees and nights heavy and looks close to $29,000.

California (Publix) (2,200; 35-50-65-90)—"Bat Whispers" (U). Drew big opening and balance of week was better than average, with takings close to $20,000; best in several months.

St. Francis (Publix) (1,375; 35-50-90)—"Tante Sa Vie" (Par). First offering of foreign language features got off to an encouraging start; overhead has been smartly shaved and gross of $5,000 left nice profit.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,270; 25-50-65)—"Hook, Line and Sinker" (Radio). Total of $22,000 considered very good.

Golden Gate (R-K-O) (2,485; 30-40-50-65)—"The Dancers" (Fox), and vaude. Held usual stride with $16,300. Excellent.

MINN AND ORPH HIT GOOD CLIP FOR $37,100

Minneapolis, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 500,000)
Weather: Favorable

Despite that five days of the week came during the pre-Christmas period, two houses here came through last week with flying colors. Theatres were the Minnesota and the Orpheum.

"Lightnin'," at the Minnesota, scored a solid hit. Will Rogers is a prime local favorite and it was a truly Merry Christmas for the management. A well liked picture, "She's My Weakness," and a big kiddie revue did it in the Orpheum.

Critics acclaimed "Outward Bound," at the Century, a masterpiece and the picture received brilliant exploitation and advertising, but business, after a moderately good opening, dropped almost to nil.

Estimates for Last Week

Minnesota (Publix) (4,200; 75)—"Lightnin'" (Fox) and Publix unit. "Silver and Black Revue." Picture and stage show pleased exceptionally well; Rogers an outstanding card here; $25,100, good for season of year.

Century (Publix) (1,600; 75)—"Outward Bound" (WB). Couldn't draw, about $5,700, very poor.

State (Publix) (2,200; 60)—"3 French Girls" (M-G). Won good notices but response left a lot to be desired; lack of names may have hurt; around $5,500, poor.

Orpheum (R-K-O) (2,890; 50)—"She's My Weakness" (Radio) and vaude. Entire show won approval; added kiddie revue attraction pulled; about $12,000, good.

Seventh Street (R-K-O) (1,400; 50)—"Outside the Law" (U). Critics panned Mary Nolan harshly; around $2,600, poor.

Grand (Publix) (1,100; 35)—"Playboy of Paris" (Par) first half; "Renegades" (M-G) last half. Second loop runs. Around $2,400, light.

Aster (Publix) (900; 35)—"Dad Man" (FN). Pleased but puzzled; about $2,000, fair.

$19,500 for Proctor's Vaudfilm Is Newark's Best

Newark, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 850,000)
Weather: Fair With Snow

Proctor's, benefiting greatly by the return of vaudeville, is still topping the town. It drew an excellent gross in a bad week. Capitol and Mosque changed bills Xmas Day so the following estimates do not include the holiday.

Estimates for Last Week

Branford (WB) (2,350; 25-50-65)—"Free Love" (U) and stage show. Picture liked but $18,500 weak.

Capitol (WB) (1,200; 15-25-35-50)—"Big Trail" (Fox). On five days, $2,000 poor.

Little (Newark M. P. Guild) (299; 35-60)—"Why Women Divorce." Off with $800 on five days.

Loew's State (2,800; 25-35-50)—"Along Came Youth" (Par) and vaude. Not good with $13,000.

Mosque (WB) (3,281; 25-50-65)—"River's End" (WB). In six days $7,800 light.

Proctor's (R-K-O) (2,050; 25-40-50-60)—"The Pay-Off" (Radio) and vaude. Best in town and neat for $19,500.

Lyric, Indianapolis, Fair, Radio Name for $10,000

Indianapolis, Dec. 27.

(Drawing Population, 450,000)
Weather: Mild

Picture grosses were at low tide. Town is too near broke to spend much jack on pictures. Charity agencies yelling depression so loud that the public can't hear the voice of the film publicity lads.

First run houses nearly doubled daily ad space to get business.

Estimates for Last Week

Indiana (Publix) (3,300; 35-50-65)—"Sea Legs" (Par). Helped greatly by 90 dancing kids in local frolic, but off at $17,700.

Circle (Publix) (2,600; 25-40-50)—"Virtuous Sin" (Par). Had slow week, $8,600.

Loew's Palace (Loew's) (2,800; 25-35-50)—"Lincoln" (UA). Far from expectations; fair at $10,200.

Apollo (4th Ave.) (1,100; 25-35-50)—"Outward Bound" (WB). Failed to attract; $3,800.

Lyric (4th Ave.) (2,000; 25-35-50)—"Princess and the Plumber" (Fox). Little Jack Little, WLW radio star and local favorite, saved it; fair at $10,000.

Ohio (Publix) (1,400; 15-25)—"Maybe It's Love" (FN). Off at $1,800.

PICTURE SENSATIONAL DRAW

State-Lake Feeling Product Pinch; Biz Holds Up Fairly, 'Paid's' 2d Loop Week $32,300

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Although a couple of weak spots in the line-up, business was generally satisfactory throughout the loop for pre-Christmas week. Flock of houses changed flickers on the 25th, even the regular seven-day stands.

Chicago, ace spot, established a precedent when it let out "Part Time Wife" (Fox) after six days. Business was poor, although it was finishing better than it began. Monroe also went for the shortened week gag, chasing "Cat Creeps" in order to bring in "Big Trail" for the holiday night crowd.

Oriental, after having an excellent week with "Paid," a holdover from the Chicago, took another h. o. when "Min and Bill" was pushed in this deluxe spot after three good weeks at the run McVicker's. B. & K. was about through with the picture in the loop, but Metro-Goldwyn squawked that the film deserved at least one more week. B. & K. wanted McVicker's for its own "Morocco" for the post-holiday rush, so made the switch. Metro has been fighting of late to get its pictures spotted properly in the loop, with the pressure of the Hearst papers in town brought to bear when Publix-B. & K. starts hesitating.

Max Ascher's Spot

"Hell's Angels" finally scrammed from the United Artists after five excellent weeks. "Lincoln" replaced the 25th; but started slowly. Picture was seen by riotier mob when it ran for five weeks at the arty Punch and Judy earlier in the season. Punch and Judy was reopened by Max Ascher Saturday (27) with the "Silver Horde." Will be a second run grind spot at pop prices.

Estimates for Last Week

Castle (Beck) (299; 35-40-60)—"Juno and Paycock" (BIB). Dropped terrifically in second week, and yanked on 25th; picture had earlier run at Punch and Judy; out to poor $3,400. "Billy the Kid" (Metro) replaced, another second run in loop.

Chicago (Publix-B. & K.) (4,000; 50-75-85)—"Part Time Wife" (Fox). Stage show. Bad week; picture only stayed six days for $30,000. "Lash" (FN) opened Christmas Day, with Junior Durkin in person; started excellently to $9,000.

McVicker's (Publix-B. & K.) (1,865; 50-75-85)—"Min and Bill" (M-G). Down again in normal slide for third week to fair $19,500; went into the deluxe Oriental for another week; "Morocco" (Par) opened 25th and away to great $7,000.

Monroe (Fox) (1,000; 25-40)—"Cat Creeps" (U). Another six dayer too weak at $2,700; "Big Trail" (Fox) started nicely.

Oriental (Publix-B. & K.) (3,200; 50-75-85)—"Paid" (M-G). stage show. Held over from Chicago, and the "pink" came through well enough at $32,300.

Orpheum (Warner) (650; 40-60)—"Going Wild" (FN). Dropped in second week to poor $3,000 and out. "Divorce Among Friends" (WB) started on the holiday, but not so promising.

Palace (R-K-O) (2,300; 50-75-85)—"See America Thirst" (U). Vaude sold here as main dish; $22,-900 is good.

Roosevelt (Publix-B. & K.) (1,-500; 50-75-85)—"Lady's Morals" (M-G). For second and final week, 'way down at $10,600; went in over the Publix-B. & K. decision; "Lightnin'" (Fox) now current and doing only slightly better than fair.

State-Lake (R-K-O) (2,700; 50-75-85)—"Free Love" (U). In spite of its "pink" ticket, second weakling in two weeks; one week and out at $15,200; "Hook- Line and Sinker" (Radio) current; house needs vaude back to fight the Chicago across the street.

Studebaker (Insull) (1,200; 50-75-85)—"Zwei Herzen in ¾ Takt" (Ufa). Legit house once more goes talker; hopes that German element will flock to this one as they have to other dialect talkers; on a grind policy, and started out fairly well Dec. 26.

Punch and Judy (Ascher). (850; 50-75-85)—"Silver Horde" (Radio). Ascher family comes back to the loop; Max Ascher has taken over this house, which flopped badly as an arty spot, and will operate on a grind; house will need to fight plenty, being spotted in an out-of-the-way corner of the loop; seating capacity very small and the exchanges aren't paying much attention to what they call an insignificant house; one week runs planned. "Danger Lights" (Radio), which had a display on wide film at the State-Lake some weeks ago, already set to follow.

United Artists (Publix-UA) (1,-700; 50-75-85)—"Hell's Angels" (UA). Five weeks, one of the longest runs in many months, and profitable; final week even good at $14,-000; for full run, excellent total at $120,800; "Lincoln" (UA) replaced, and opened weekly; had previous loop run at the Punch and Judy.

Woods (Jones) (1,200; 50-75-85)—"Czar of Broadway" (U). Disappointment at $9,500; "Free Love" (U) set for second loop run this Friday (2).

TOPEKA LITERALLY SHOPS

Stores Beat Previous Year—Best Theatres Figure $3,700

Topeka, Dec. 27.

Christmas Day business didn't make up for the almost boycott of the first three days when shopping took the place of show going. Merchants reported better Christmas trade than for 1929.

Estimates for Last Week

Grand (Fox) (1,400; 50)—"Tom Sawyer" (Par). Got big play from kids in afternoons but elders stayed away and so did the kids from the higher priced night shows; total $3,700 not good.

Jayhawk (Fox) (1,400; 50)—"Sailor Behave" (WB). First three days of week only $1,500; Christmas Day helped "Fast and Loose" (Par), last half bringing week's total to $3,600, poor.

Novelty (Fox) (1,200; 50)—"Big Boy" (WB). Just over $1,000, weak.

Isis (600; 35)—"Grand Army Man." McOwen Players (stock) slipped; first week since company opened that take didn't show an increase over previous week; matinees postponed during shopping season and played each of three days of last half; failed to help and $900 poor.

'SAWYER' SOCKS B'KLYN, $56,200 AND FIRST H. O.

Brooklyn, Dec. 27.

With the kids out of school on their semi-annual vacation and "Tom Sawyer" on exhibition at the Paramount, it was inevitable that this Publix house should pull.

"Sawyer" got more ballyhoo than any other film shown here in years. Exploitation started three weeks ago and hasn't stopped. School publications were enrolled and one morning the house threw open its doors to 4,000 youngsters free of charge, a benefit for charity.

The Bergman publicity outfit at the house even landed in the sanctified editorial columns of the local dailies with mention of "Tom Sawyer." House did $56,200 and feature being held until New Year's Day. First time in the history of the house that a film has been retained.

"Hell's Angels" opened at the Brandt Flatbush (legit) during Christmas week with two shows daily. Brandt's Jamaica, also legit, with "Hell's Angels" for indef stay. Fair results.

Estimates for Last Week

Paramount—"Tom Sawyer" (Par) (4,000; 25-50-75). Great ballyhoo, scribes raved and ordered the folks to see it; first time a film held over here; $56,200.

Fox—"Only Saps Work" (Par) (4,000; 25-40-50-60-75) and stage show. Light, near $32,000.

Strand—"Scarlet Pages" (2,800; 25-35-50-60-75). Dull at $15,100.

Met—"Remote Control" (M-G) (3,577; 25-40-50-75) and vaude. Maybe $17,000.

Albee—"Free Love" (U) (3,248; 35-50-60-75) and vaude. Around $22,000.

RECORD GROSS AT CAPITOL

Foreign Made Film Story of "Du Barry" Picture Trade Sensation — 21,000 Admissions Sunday to Capitol With Total That Day $12,000—Film "Knocked Around" Before S. L. Rothafel Selected It as Capitol's Current Card

$55,000 GROSS

The current week will undoubtedly be the biggest in point of receipts the Capitol, New York, has ever had. "Passion," the First National released feature and a German made picture, which is the current attraction at the house, will without a doubt, set a record for a single week's gross for any Broadway picture theatre for some time to come. The indications Wednesday, when the gross to that day was over $30,000, was that the house would play to a little over $55,000 this week—estimated exclusive of war tax.

"Passion" is playing the Capitol on a sharing basis after the feature has drawn a gross of approximately $40,000. It is the first time a First National picture has played the house and also the initial try-out of a sharing contract.

The Strand theatre holds the First National first run right in New York under the franchise for this territory. It is understood that the picture was offered to the Strand and turned down. It is exhibiting "The Truth About Husbands," also a First National released attraction for the current week.

The keen sense of values of S. L. Rothafel, manager of the Capitol, must be credited with having picked the pictorial plum of the year in "Passion." Though American producers have consistently fought shy of costume productions and the exhibitors having likewise been wary about playing them, the general prediction was that "Passion" would flop because it was a period play on the screen. It is the visualization of the career of the famous Mme. DuBarry of the French court.

There was a private showing of the film at the International Cinema Equipment offices about two months ago, at which time those in charge of the exhibition made an apology to those assembled, stating the picture about to be screened was a "costume affair" and because of that it was not believed to have any great chance in this country.

The picture then knocked about for a little time. Another general showing was arranged after the First National had taken it over at a nominal figure (reported $60,000) but even at that time there was no great enthusiasm aroused for the production.

Finally the Capitol date was arranged and Rothafel decided one of the most necessary items to put the picture over was retitling. He called in Katherine Hillyer and worked in association with her in retreaming the titles, evolving the candle effect in them which is causing much discussion.

Only Film There

The feature itself is the only picture of any kind on the Capitol's current bill. The foreign score, brought from abroad for the picture, was discarded. Rothafel and Erno Rapee, the conductor, evolved the one now in use. Alexander Oumansky arranged the ballet for the feature and William Axt had charge of the entire ensemble. The special sets were designed and executed by John Wenger.

Neither the program nor the picture titles give any hint of who the members of the cast are, with the exception of Pola Negri, the star, playing DuBarry. Some in the trade know the production is a UFA made in Germany and realize the reason for this.

There was no special advertising campaign other than an underline for two weeks in the program and in conjunction with the regular house ads, but immediately after the opening, the news of the picture spread like wildfire.

During the week there was considerable discussion whether or not rival interests would stir up feeling against the picture because of its German origin. Its advent in New York coincident with the announcement from Germany that all American pictures that have been smuggled into that country since the armistice have been barred from the screens because German producers could not meet the competition, aroused speculation as to whether reprisal steps would be taken on this side of the Atlantic. However, it is claimed that anyone in the industry taking such a step would work an injury to the picture field as a whole by doing so.

Wednesday it was said by Rothafel an effort was made by the house management to hold the picture over for an additional week could not be consummated because of existing contracts, but that a return date at the Capitol would be played.

'Sawyer's' $67,300 at Par. Tips That Broadway Gave Slump Week Trimming—'Widow' $26,600, Strand

With the Broadway houses expecting almost anything during show business' worst week of the year, attendance reversed the field and took at least a couple of wrinkles out of furrowed brows. Patronage was steady rather than heavy, but in comparison to the apprehensive morale around it was actually good.

For instance, the Paramount chipped in with $67,300 on "Tom Sawyer." That's better than many recent weeks and the picture, as also in Brooklyn, is sticking a second week. In the Brooklyn instance the stage unit will change, but the show on 43rd street remains intact. "Royal Family" also supplied some happy moments at the Rivoli, even though this picture should have a fast getaway due to the local prominence of the play and interest in Ina Claire, for this is a town where they know her. Feature made a $5 bow and with that nailed $22,000 on its first three days, a smart clip.

Some of the houses switched attractions a day ahead of time to take advantage of Christmas Day. Wednesday night (Christmas Eve), was not good anywhere, but the "break" started the next day and it looks like a strong holiday period.

The Mayfair turned "Danger Lights" lose for "Hook, Line and Sinker" after the railroad film had grabbed $22,800 on its final five and a half days. Another midweek switchover was "Part Time Wife" (Fox) for "The Middle Watch" at the Roxy. Some controversy between the big house and Fox picture boys over a change in title for the picture made by the theatre, it being billed as "Shepper Newfounder." British film made a weak showing in getting only $36,-700 in five days at this 6,200-seater.

"Widow from Chicago" surprised the boys by plugging away for $26,-600 at the Strand, a satisfactory non-holiday gross for the spot any time of the year. "Passion Flower" also picked the Capitol up for a $56,000 total, which is better than it's been getting, while the Rialto got $32,500 on the third week of "Blue Angel."

Among the $2 group no question that "Devil to Pay" is the outstanding factor. Colman even turned them away at one or two matinees and that on its first full week, meant $17,800. "New Moon" came into the Astor, Dec. 23, but caused no particular stir in putting together an indifferent $6,800 on its initial five performances. "Mother's Cry," Winter Garden, and "Viennese Nights," Warners, both marked time and have reached the end of their Broadway rope.

Estimates for Last Week

Astor—"New Moon" (M-G) (1,-120; $1-$2). Opened Dec. 23 to fair notices and light trade; $6,800 on first five unreelings not indicative of strong bid for run.

Capitol—"Passion Flower" (M-G) (4,620; 25-85-$1.50). Made house spurt pre-Xmas week which is okay; $56,000 is well ahead of what house has been doing.

Criterion — "Reaching for the Moon" (UA) (800; $1-$2). Made its debut Monday (29); "Hell's Angels" out after sticking 21 weeks and outlasting twin run of film at Gaiety; dribbled away to nothing toward finish, but deemed to have made excellent stand on unique exploitation run.

Cohan—"Birth of a Nation" (Tri) (1,137; 25-50-75) (2nd week). Old faithful doing all right; held its own during slump period then leaped as weight lifted Christmas Day; first week $6,900 and stands chance of climbing.

Gaiety—"Devil to Pay" (UA) (808; $1-$2) (2nd week). Outstanding twice daily film of the Street; when they turn 'em away at matinees it even makes the trade talk; sweet $17,800 first full week, but must now battle sterner opposition as new $2 entries are at the Astor, Criterion and Warners; seems certain to stick for healthy run.

Globe—"Cohens-Kellys in Africa" (U) (1,065; 25-50-75). Pulled in midweek to let "Charley's Aunt" (Col) come in; serial feature length comedy didn't do so well, $6,900 in five days.

Central—"All Quiet" (U) (916; 50-75) (2nd week). Comeback try on grind to keep house open fairly successful.

Mayfair—"Danger Lights" (Radio) (2,200; 40-$1). Chopped off in middle of sixth day at $22,800; not bad; "Hook, Line and Sinker" (Radio) current.

Paramount—"Tom Sawyer" (Par) (3,664; 65-85-$1) (2nd week). Hailed as swell piece of work and despite dull period pushed house ahead of previous week which had a star's personal appearance to help; just a normal bill around this one for a neat $67,300 and picture lingers a second week.

Rialto—"Blue Angel" Ufa) (2,-000; 40-65-85-$1) (4th week). Didn't stand off seasonal sock as well as some of others, but was in third week and will probably make it six; $32,500 okay.

Rivoli—"Royal Family" (Par) (2,200; 40-65-85-$1) (1st week). Popped off at $5 Dec. 22 and looks set to go places; $22,000 first three days; local interest in play and Ina Claire gives it excellent opportunity, besides which word-of-mouth is that it is "there."

Roxy—"The Middle Watch" (BIP) (6,200; 50-75-$1.50). British film only ran five days, making way for annual Xmas show; week showing at $36,700 for time it was in; "Shepper Newfounder," theatre's own title for "Part Time Wife" (Fox) the holiday screen leader.

Strand—"Widow from Chicago" (FN) (2,900; 25-50-75). No mention of Alice White even inside the Warner office, leave alone around the theatre, but picture stepped off a smart $26,600; that's more than just all right here for a pre-Xmas week; house seems to do well with anything suggesting gangdom; Globe has the same eccentricity.

Warners—"Viennese Night" (WB) (1,100; $1-$2). Merely trailing along with "Kiss Me Again" (WB) due.

Winter Garden—"Mother's Cry" (WB) (1,418; 35-85-$1). Couldn't make grade beyond third week, and "The Lash" (FN) arrived Tuesday (30).

$10,500 Collision

Galveston, Dec. 27.

Damages of $10,500 are asked of the National Theatre Supply Co., J. C. Brown and C. A. McCormack in suits filed here by D. C. Lucus and J. W. Barry.

Plaintiffs allege injuries resulting from collision with auto belonging to the supply company.

"Variety's" First Film Reviews; The First Notices Ever Printed

Below are the first criticisms of moving pictures ever printed, and first printed in "Variety." The first one was in "Variety" dated Jan. 19, 1907.

A few of the early ones are reprinted, as a line on how pictures were noted in that day. The films were mostly one reelers. The extended pictures came long after.

"Variety" inaugurated the criticism of the moving picture through a belief the actors in the pictures, unknown and unprogramed, might be interested in the criticism. It seemed, however, shortly after they had started in "Variety" that the exhibitors were the most interested in the notices.

Film exchanges in New York and Chicago found the smooth running of their distribution interrupted through exhibitors asking mostly for the comedies they had seen favorably reviewed in "Variety."

About five years following, in 1912, a daily here or there commenced to gingerly comment upon the pictures.

The notices speak for themselves. They reveal that the reviewers were not always certain, especially with the dramas.

Picture producers mentioned in the notices later became known as "The Big Six," a part of the General Film Company which was known in its time as "The Picture Trust." The last of "The Big Six" to survive, Vitagraph, was bought some years ago by Warners. It is now the Warners' Brooklyn studio.

"THE LIFE OF A COWBOY"
(Melodramatic)
13 Mins.
Pastor's.

Edison Film

A long and interesting moving picture is the "Life of A Cowboy," shown at Pastor's. It covers a wide range of subjects and the locale seems to be really the western plains. The picture runs from a western mining camp barroom to the arrival of a stage coach at a ranch with "tenderfeet" aboard, for whose delectation trick lariat throwing is introduced, followed by the holding up of the coach by Indians. The abduction of a young girl, the chase by the cowboys through pretty woods and rolling fields to the recapture of the girl, and the tragic finale where an Indian girl shoots a murderous bad man silently crawling up on the lover of the white girl.

The series is so melodramatic in treatment that it acted on the audience like a vivid play. Sime.

(From "Variety," Jan. 19, 1907)

"AN EXCITING HONEYMOON"
(Humorous)
7 Mins.
Colonial.

Pathe Film

"An Exciting Honeymoon" is listed on the Colonial program as a new series. It combines comedy and "chasing," besides a melodramaatic touch. The fun is amusing, the picture well worked out and the audience remained in its seats until the close.

One scene, where a "ducking" party was shown caused a great deal of laughter. There is sufficient variety to "An Exciting Honeymoon" to cause both interest and amusement. Sime.

"GANS-HERMAN FIGHT."
35 Mins.
Murray Hill.

Miles Bros. Film

"Miles Bros." stamped upon the opening announcement of the moving pictures of the Gans-Herman fight at Tonopah, Nevada, on last New Year's Day guaranteed the genuineness of the pictures, which speak for themselves.

A few preliminaries showed local celebrities of the mining district, including a seven-foot sheriff, all described by Joe Humphreys, the professional announcer, especially engaged to inform the audience at the Murray Hill of the important points occurring during the fight.

The series is somewhat lengthy, partly occasioned by two changes of reels, but there is no marked delay in the eight rounds between the colored and white fighters. Excepting a slight photographic disturbance in the early part, the pictures are clear and the movements of the men easily followed. After the first round the action is rapid, the men fighting fast, with Herman making wild swings and rushes, losing his head often. Gans is careful and alert, punishing his smaller opponent unmercifully in the sixth and seventh rounds.

In the eighth the "knockout" occurs. This takes place in Gans's corner, caused by a right hand blow to Herman's jaw, and when notified in advance by Humphreys of what was coming, no one missed it.

The after scenes, with Herman insensible, the crowd surging into the ring and the sheriff ordering the building cleared ended the exhibition. The atmosphere of the prize ring being absent, with the women present unaware of the nature or seriousness of the blows, as shown in the pictures only, there is no reason why the "Gans-Herman Fight" series should not be a feature act on the bill. Sime.

"MOUNTAIN CLIMBING THROUGH A TELESCOPE"
6 Mins.
Fifth Ave.

Pathe Film

A well-sustained series. Action commences with a man and woman peering by turns through a telescope. The scene changes to the peaks of the Alps, the field of observation being round to represent the view from the telescope.

The Alpine guides and tourists are shown making a difficult ascent. One of the party falls into a deep crack of the glacier and his frantic struggles to regain his friends are shown. A rope is lowered and he is dragged to safety.

Interest is sustained throughout and the series is held together by frequent returning to the pair at the telescope where the happenings about to be shown are illustrated by the expressions of their faces. Rush.

"THE MECHANICAL STATUES"
(Humorous)
5 Mins.
Alhambra

Vitagraph Film

This is a posed picture, showing the workshop of a sculptor. A customer purchases a rather good piece of handwork—a statue which dances when wound up. Removing it to his home, a servant starts it moving, and it runs away.

After powdering his face from a flour barrel the servant takes the position upon the pedestal in an attempt to deceive the master of the house.

The discovery of the deception is the finale, bringing to a close a moderately funny series, with a deal of the humor lacking through the obvious employment of forced comedy. Sime.

"THE INEXPERIENCED CHAUFFEUR"
6 Mins.
Keeney's

An excellent example of the "cumulative chase" picture. An amateur automobilist is shown running amuck in the street. He overturns apple carts, bicyclists, baby carriages and pedestrians in his wild and dizzy flight, and at each accident the victim arises and gives chase until a fair-sized crowd is in pursuit.

The chase ends when the chauffeur bolts upon the sidewalk and wrecks a store. The crowd falls upon him and gets its revenge.

The comedy values are present, and the series held the crowd to the end. Rush.

"SCENES AT NIAGARA"
4 Mins.
23d St.

As a scenic picture the views of the Falls at Niagara are pretty. The coloring is exceptionally true. The Whirlpool is shown; also the Falls at close and long range.

The series has been patched together, as portions of the St. Lawrence River are seen, notably around Clayton, Alexandria Bay and the Racine Rapids below Montreal. Sime.

"The GRAFTER"
(Comedy)
10 Mins.
Chicago

Selig Polyscope

The makers of this film have managed to extract a considerable amount of active fun out of the subject, based upon nature's desire to secure "something for nothing." A $500 reward is posted for the recovery of a valuable engraved watch, a family heirloom.

The "Grafter" provides himself with a number of cheap imitation watches, with which he approaches persons who read the sign, and asks if they have lost the timepiece. He delivers the supposed valuable, and receives handsome reward for his honesty.

He succeeds in disposing of his "stock" to many, who, after a number of comical situations and incidents, return to demand a share of the rewards and are confronted with a large sign reading "Sold."

The picture is unusually clear and distinct, and is being exhibited to large interested audiences in a number of Chicago theatres. Wiesberg.

"THE FEMALE SPY"
(Dramatic)
8 Mins.
Keeney's

Pathe Film

A good subject having strong points and unlimited action, but chaotic in its development. It lacks the element of simplicity necessary for the exposition of dumb action.

There are frequent changes of scene and characters, but one is not always able to tell just what bearing the action has upon the story. The situations do not hold together in an easily followed line, but are scattered and what the book reviewers called "episodic." One incident in which the captured woman spy is dragged by her hair across the fields behind a wild horse was rather a disagreeable feature. Rush.

"ATTEMPTED SUICIDE"
(Humorous)
7 Mins.
Keeney's

Pathe Film

"Attempted Suicide" is a travesty on the "red tape" of the French police service; at least the characters seem French and the uniforms worn are of that nation.

A young man disappointed in love wanders to the woods, where he hangs himself to the limb of a tree. A boy, discovering him, runs in alarm to tell the gardener, who is conveniently at hand. The gardener views the death struggles, but, although having a scythe in his hand, dares not cut the rope without the presence of an officer, and hurries after one.

A mounted policeman is secured, who rides up, looks at the hanging person and returns to the station house to report, without attempting to relieve the young man from his sure death position.

The policeman, with his sergeant, returns once more, watches the last feeble struggles, and, ignoring the fate about to arrive, ride off to inform the young fellow's father. That personage, while alarmed, declines to hasten until his necktie and scarf have been properly adjusted, when all run to the woods, and the presumed suicide (by this time) is laid upon the ground.

Upon his sweetheart arriving, he embraces her madly, having been playing "possum," which may be detected by the audience through seeing a hook attached to the end of the rope in his coat. This relieves what would be otherwise a gruesome sight.

For real pure fun, with the burlesque on the idiotic police system always to the fore, "Attempted Suicide" will be difficult to beat. Sime.

"THE TEDDY BEARS"
12 Mins.
Colonial

Edison Film

Probably based upon the fairy tale of "Golden Locks" and the "Three Bears," "The Teddy Bears" series at the Colonial this week is made enjoyable through the mechanical acrobatic antics of a group of the fluffy haired little hand-made animals. The closing pictures, showing the pursuit of the child by the bear family, is spoiled throgh a hunter appearing on the scene and shooting two. Children will rebel against this portion. Considerable comedy is had through a chase in the snow, but the live bears seemed so domesticated that the deliberate murder in an obviously "faked" series left a wrong taste of the picture as a whole. Sime.

(From "Variety," April 27, 1907.)

"THE BAD MAN"
(Melodramatic)
8 Mins.

A wealth of incident keeps the series going with interest a tiptoe. The exposition of the story is clear and adequate.

A water tank railroad station in the "wild and woolly" is shown, with the cowpunchers assembled to give the expected agent a warm reception. The agent turns out to be a woman. All hands turn their attention from hazing to love making for good comedy purpose.

A tenderfoot, as evidenced by eastern clothes, is the lucky suitor. He bests the "bad man" in a fight, but later both tenderfoot and woman are overcome by the desperado on robbery bent.

The tenderfoot is tied to the railroad track, while the woman is bound hand and foot to the table within the telegraph office. She escapes in time to effect her lover's release, and the two embrace as the express rushes past.

The reel accomplishes the essential purpose of keeping an audience in their seats until the lights are turned on. Sime.

(From "Variety," March 30, 1907.)

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW"
11 Mins.

Lubin Film

A "faked" series showing the history of the Stanford White-Harry K. Thaw affair. The record of the trial has been combed over with an eye to its sensational points, and these have been strung along into a fairly complete exposition of Mrs. Harry Thaw's testimony.

The artist's studio is first shown, where, for value received, the mother brings the girl to pose. The man about town seeks an introduction and is repulsed. A stage during rehearsals is next seen, and here the two become acquainted.

In a cafe Thaw strikes the man-about-town when the latter attempts to kiss the girl.

The drugged wine and all other features of the trial are introduced, including an interior of Thaw's cell in the Tombs.

The climax in the shooting comes too suddenly. It is not properly worked up and the final scene of the courtroom is entirely out of place. In it Thaw is shown leaving the court room free. It would have been better to have introduced this part as a dream of the prisoner as he slept in his cell. Rush.

(From "Variety," Feb. 9, 1907.)

"THE TRAMP DOG"
8 Mins.
Colonial

Selig Polyscope

"The Tramp Dog" has a pathetic side, and this holds the audience. For children especially it may be readily recommended.

The scene shifts frequently and the story is told plainly, easily followed. A little girl rescuing a stray dog on the street, takes it home, and prevails upon her parents to allow the animal to remain. Lost through following an organ grinder, the dog follows the scent, locates her in a lumber yard, and leads his little companion to her home, foiling a kidnapper on the way.

The meeting of the child and the dog at the lumber yard has been apropos and well put off. If there are any pictures showing the happiness of the child upon seeing her four-legged friend they should be reinserted. Sime.

"AT THE SEASHORE"
4 Mins.

Moments of interest and some amusement in this French series are when the bathers in the surf are shown, with an abandon of manner and dress not found on this side.

The picture also shows the portable bathing houses in use on the French coast. The bather undresses and the house on wheels is dragged into the ocean by a horse, the bather descending from the bath house directly into the water.

There is a comedy finish, and the series holds attention from the outset. Sime.

First Picture House Review

People's Vaudeville

(STORE SHOW)

"People's Vaudeville" is a fair sample of the 200 or more "store shows" giving moving pictures and vaudeville in New York, except that it is perhaps above the average of its class, having most of the characteristics of the common variety of "store show" as to the carelessness evidenced in the running off of the bill and a certain disregard of its patrons once they are inside, after giving up their admission, 10 cents in this case for the night shows and five cents for the afternoon.

Located just east of the southeast corner of 125th street and Lenox avenue, the People's Vaudeville has entrances from two sides, a narrow store space having been taken on Lenox avenue and turned into a passage way leading into the theatre proper. Tickets are sold at both entrances. Originally the arcade fronts were studded with incandescent lights, but these no longer burn. The front illumination is furnished by two "flaming arcs," which make a larger show for the money.

During the early evening the show runs somewhat over an hour and includes 3,000 feet of film, two vaudeville acts and an illustrated song. If business is light they make it even longer with a fourth film and a second song. But toward 10 o'clock, when the people begin to pile up around the rear of the hall, the entertainment dwindles down to two reels and one variety turn, occupying altogether not more than 20 minutes. This is on a night early in the week. What may be done in the way of cutting down the time of shows during the rush hours later in the week can be imagined. Tuesday night the place was filled to its capacity of 300 or so, and there were perhaps another 100 standing at 10.

Stage Cards

They have a most unsatisfactory system of announcing. The names of the vaudeville acts are shown on cards, but when a reel occupies the stage the only description is a card which reads "Motion Picture." To ordinary intelligence this information is superfluous, as the picture itself is there. The name of the subject would be of some use, particularly at the People's Vaudeville, for two performances Tuesday evening there were three pictures which carried no title incorporated in the film part, and the audience was left to evolve names.

This matter of announcing picture titles is really more important than it seems at first glance. For example, at the People's they have a reel which concerns the historic episode of the "Boston Tea Party." The title failed to show, and it was not until the film was half through that the audience began to understand the real significance of the story.

Titles Important

When one considers the pains the manufacturers take to secure good, significant titles, the exhibitors might at least employ them to advantage.

Two vaudeville turns were witnessed at the People's. The first seems to be a house fixture, and is called "The People's Stock Co.," an organization of three—two men and a woman. It is enough to say that they gave this week a 15-minute version (during an early and extended show) of that old standby, "Dr. Dippy's Sanitarium." The caliber of this number may be understood from the fact that the Irish comedian said "hell" four times and "damn" twice.

The other act was Joe Weston, a song and dance arrangement, and went very nicely. Weston does a capital wooden shoe routine for a finish, and sings a song or two quite acceptably. It is an easy bet, however, that he has been studying Laddie Cliff, for in makeup and general handling of both songs and dances he shows a decided tendency to copy the English youngster.

Before leaving the People's it might be well to point out a defect in the plans of the house which is common in most store shows. Perhaps it is because of some mechanical difficulty or from a desire to get as close as possible to the street level, but there never seems to be enough "dip" from the back of the house to the stage, even with a hatless man in front one finds it difficult to procure a good view, and when there are a number of women with large hair dressing arrangements or "Merry Widow" hats, the task is utterly hopeless. Rush.

"THE MERRY WIDOW"
16 Mins.
Bijou Dream (23d St.)

"The Merry Widow," with original music by courtesy of Henry W. Savage, was the announcement of the latest thing in motion photography at the Bijou Dream. The Bijou Dream management (which for the present consists mostly of B. F. Keith in person) secured the exclusive rights from the Kalem Co. to exhibit the film for its first week, starting Jan. 20.

It is the manufacturer's idea that by presenting scenes from current New York successes residents of the provinces will have an early idea of what is being done in a musical way in the metropolis. "The Merry Widow" has been reproduced in several scenes, with the impersonators of the various roles appropriately costumed. The film was photographed to the measure of the original music, while the participants sang and acted their several roles as in the original presentation.

Without music the film would be utterly unattractive. There is no comedy elements, and the various scenes have no value merely as photographs. The music is played throughout the 16 minutes the film runs. There are three vocal numbers.

The scenes are transposed to make the famous waltz the closing view. Picture holds the interest of the curious, but did not arouse enthusiasm when first presented. The idea might, it would seem, be better applied to the old and popular operas, such as "The Mikado," "Pinafore," "The Chimes of Normandy," etc., for with these old favorites a large percentage of any sort of a moving picture audience would, persumably, be familiar.

The film is photographically excellent, but "The Merry Widow" would seem to have its greatest value in the advertising opportunities it affords in the cities where the vogue of the Savage productions in New York and Chicago is a matter of general knowledge. It is a question whether it would be of any value whatever to any exhibitor in the average city or town.

NEW MOON

(OPERETTA)

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production and release. Directed by Jack Conway. Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore starred. Adolphe Menjou featured. Adapted by Sylvia Thalberg and Frank Butler from the Schwab & Mandel stage musical. Music by Sigmund Romberg. Lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein, 2d, Lawrence Schwab and Frank Mandel. Dialog by Cyril Hume. Oliver T. Marsh, photographer. Opened $2-run at the Astor, New York, Dec. 27. Running time, 85 mins.

Lieut. Michael Petroff ..Lawrence Tibbett
Princess Tanya Stroganoff .....Grace Moore
Governor Boris Brustiloff ..Adolphe Menjou
Count Stroganoff .....Roland Young
Potkin .....Gus Shy
Countess Anastasia Stroganoff..Emily Fitzroy

Old style three cornered musical romance with the accent on the music. There's a doubt as to whether it will be easily digested by the average picturegoer. Single forte of both leads, Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore, is voice. And excellent voice. But for histrionics neither is strong. As the picture is 100% romantic with its far-fetched story and songs, the shortcomings in performance are hard on the picture.

Theatres for years have been trying to sell class singing with nothing else as pop entertainment, without success. "New Moon" runs into the same wall. It will entertain the minority who relish that which is more at home in concert. For the rest there's not enough along with the singing, either in the players or the play.

Tibbett is more a singing George Bancroft than a military lover, with that against him in the clinches. Another point of detraction for him is that "New Moon" hasn't a stand-out dramatic sequence calling for the style of heavy vocal work to which he seems best suited, such as the lashing scene in "Rogue Song."

Miss Moore, as a femme lead for a romance, departs far from the customary film type.

Had "New Moon" adhered to the flavor of its first few moments and sustained the pace, it might have resulted in a smart and sophisticated comedy. Miss Moore is a princess and Tibbett a lieutenant commanding a company of Russian soldiers. Both are on the same boat, and headed for the same port. The princess' mission is to become the bride of the governor of the distant province. The boy is to join the garrison there. They carry on an affair on the ship which conveys the impression that the affair is not so pure.

Usual conflict between the governor and the lieut over the girl takes but without consuming too much time. Tibbett is then sent by his rival to a fort in the wilds. Peculiarities of the soldiers there are featured by the consistent mordering of their commanders. Tibbett shows he's master by shooting a couple dead and then tossing over a Bancroft laugh.

Then it gets sillier. It's silliest when Tibbett takes the entire garrison out on a surprise attack against a marauding tribe of hillmen. Not a soldier left inside the fort. That's a swell piece of military strategy with the princess and her uncle left in the fort without protection. Last seen of Tibbett is his becoming wounded as the one-round battle starts and finishes. Governor arrives with reserves the next morning. Same morning a survivor crawls in saying he's the only one left and then drops dead. Thence the big surprise when, in the afternoon, the lieut returns with most of the garrison intact. He's on his horse and still singing. No explanation of where he's been all night or whether they got rid of the marauders.

Two vocal solos by Tibbett, one by Miss Moore and a duet are the most impressive singing items. With possibly the screen's top pair of pipes involved, it's probably as far as a film can go in a vocal way. But that doesn't make a picture.

Same score as in the stage version, with "Lover, Come Back to Me," practically milked of its value now, emphasized. Quality of the singing takes precedence over the melodies.

Menjou, as the non-singing governor, seemed, in spite of his role, more capable of carrying on the romance than Tibbett. But the hero had to be a warbler. Gus Shy didn't have a guaranteed laugh line until killed off at the half-way mark. Roland Young is more fortunate in comedy material. Bige.

Got What She Wanted

Tiffany production and release. Directed by James Cruze. Story and adaptation by George Rosener. Photographer, J. O. Schoenbaum, ASC recorder. At the Cameo, N. Y., week of Dec. 26. Running time, 87 minutes.

Mahyna .....Betty Compson
Eddie .....Lee Tracy
Dave .....Allan Hale
Boris .....Gaston Glass
Olga .....Dorothy Christy
Dugan .....Fred Kelsey

Should make fair fodder for the smaller houses. What it lacks mostly is action.

Lee Tracy does a wise-crackin' hoofer that might be known in a few spots. Some keen panto construction might have given it farce leanings.

Story unwinds of a foreign wife who longs for the fullness of a soulful love. It's okay because the picture has a certain amount of speed. To acquire her aim she keeps on the verge of eloping with the fresh hoofer, who leaves her flat every time. She does manage to swap into another marriage, but the happy ending has her making a trip with her first husband.

Miss Compson is the chief character, but it doesn't permit her any special opportunities. Nearly everything is in closeup, a mistake. Dorothy Christy is permitted to shine a couple of smiles, and there could have been more. Cruze directed, but it's just a fair effort. Shan.

CHARLEY'S AUNT

Columbia release of Al Christie production. Charlie Ruggles featured. Directed by Al Christie. Dialog director, A. L. Rice. Dialog and adaptation by F. M. Willis from story and play by Brandon Thomas. At the Globe, N. Y., week of Dec. 26. Running time, 88 mins.

Lord Babberly .....Charlie Ruggles
Amy Spettigue .....June Collyer
Charlie Wykeham .....Hugh Williams
Donna D'Alvadorez .....Doris Lloyd
Stephen Spettigue .....Halliwell Hobbes
Ela Delahay .....Flora Le Breton
Jack Chesney .....Rodney McLennon
Kitty Verdun .....Flora Sheffield
Sir Francis Chesney .....Phillips Smalley
Brassett .....Wilson Benge

Among farce situations created late in the last century and since then, "Charley's Aunt" remains one of the most reliable. How many mere reissues it can stand can't be guessed at, but it has carried every sort of handling up to now and including this talker version. It'll do anywhere.

Christie's, with Charlie Ruggles as a pretty safe starting guarantee, has done right by the 40-year-old femme impersonation plot and turned out an easily playable and enjoyable program comedy.

After Ruggles there's not much importance connected with the cast. Action is confined to a couple of sets, and none spacious or heavy. Picture turns out as well as it does because of Ruggles and direction plus, of course, a tested plot. Nothing flashy about it. It just steps in and cops laughs.

It's practically a one part yarn with a most desirable assignment for any aspiring light comic. One of the few times in a talker that Ruggles hasn't been called upon to do a stew.

When last filmed "Charley's Aunt" was a silent with Syd Chaplin. The difference here is the talk, and the dialog always fits as it was originally a British play. Developments run as in the past.

Probably one of the best known farce plots in print, this gag about the two Oxford students who need a chaperon in order to have two girls over for tea, and call on a third student to impersonate their aunt when the latter's arrival is delayed. In his "make" scenes with two old gents the laughs become howls.

Support cast satisfactory, but none outstanding because of extreme underwriting of the parts. June Collyer is the looker of the ladies.

Now that it has become a talker, there doesn't seem much more for "Charley's Aunt" to accomplish. But should a new medium arrive it may again hold enough if handled as in this case by Christie and Ruggles. Bige.

Shepper-Newfounder

Fox production and release. Directed by Leo McCarey. Features Edmund Lowe and Leila Hyams. From the "Saturday Evening Post" story by Stewart Edward White. At the Roxy, N. Y., week starting Dec. 24. Running time, 72 minutes.

Jim Murdock .....Edmund Lowe
Betty Murdock .....Leila Hyams
Tommy Milligan .....Tommy Clifford
Johnny Spence .....Walter Mednick
Butler .....Louis Payne
Caddy Master .....Sam Lanfkin
Maid .....Ingil Rosing
Chauffeur .....George Corcoran
Tony, the dog .....Champion

A deftly wrought light subject that is much better than program in money, one of those unusual pictures that comes in without a heavy ballyhoo, is handicapped with a blah title, but wins out on genuine quality and merit. Such a picture, although of very different kind, was "Scotland Yard."

Probably the screen situation of a waif with a mongrel dog treated in a sentimental way is as near to sure fire appeal as anything in the range of fiction, and that is only one of the multiple angles of "Shepper-Newfounder" (which is a fair enough description for describing the family tree of the pup).

Picture, also among other things, has probably the best intimate sexy sequence of the last few months, handled in a sophisticated and disarming style of comedy that makes it at once intriguing and innocent of offense. Whole picture is managed with a fine sense of blending gaiety and gulleful comedy in a tricky mingling that never gets out of control. Surface is genial comedy, but the undercurrent has a charming vein of sentiment, and the story interest is beautifully worked out in comedy pattern and balance.

Engaging quality of the picture is that it never loses the light touch. The sentimental side seems to happen accidentally and against the desire of everybody concerned. A first-rate twist is the sequence where the kid's dog strays, gets into the pound and the boy and his protector arrive pell-mell to find it in the gas chamber and to all appearances gone beyond recall.

Incident is craftily worked for exactly the right approach to a tear, when the pup miraculously twitches an ear and bobs up, saved by the good fairy that attends to small boys and mongrel pups.

Story has to do with two well-meaning young married people who get on each other's nerves—husband absorbed in business, because of a quick temper, and wife—because of her addiction to golf. Presently they separate. Husband's business preoccupation gets him a breakdown, and he is ordered to the golf course for relaxation. Here enters the heart interest in the person of a fascinating kid—Tommy Clifford plays it to the last ounce—as an under-sized caddie with a miraculous authentic touch of Irish brogue.

Husband and his golfing wife meet by chance, and circumstances bring them together the same evening alone in their own home, the background for the tricky bedroom scene mentioned earlier, and a capital bit of high comedy with knockabout incidentals. The husband-wife wrangle is resumed, and their reconciliation is delayed enough for a capital golfing sequence and a romantic build up for the clinch finale, and it's a pleasing and joyous complication to the last foot.

Cast is flawless. Edmund Lowe day by day grows in command of a true comedy finesse. In this role he is always completely abreast of his assignment and always leaves the feeling of a reserve, a sure-footed actor working well within his range.

Leila Hyams does extremely well with probably the most ambitious role of her career, a charming girl playing a not very easy part with satisfying completeness. The ill-treated wife in itself as really a feeder role and might easily have been done in a way to make it pale and incidental. But this young woman builds it without seeming effort into a positive asset to the screen story, and does it with jaunty casualness. Rush.

SUNNY

First National production and release, starring Marilyn Miller, directed by William Seiter. From the musical comedy of the same name. Featured Lawrence Gray, Joe Donahue, and O. P. Heggie. Cameraman, Ernest Haller. At the Strand, N. Y., week of Dec. 26. Running time, 66 minutes.

Sunny .....Marilyn Miller
Tom Warren .....Lawrence Gray
Jim Deming .....Joe Donahue
Wendell-Wendell .....Mackenzie Ward
Peters .....O. P. Heggie
Wrenn .....Inez Courtney
Marcia Manners .....Barbara Bedford
Sue .....Judith Wogelin
Sam .....Charles Cook
The Parker .....Harry Allen
First Officer .....William Davidson
Second Officer .....Ben Hendrickson, Jr.

Not that any additional evidence was necessary, but "Sunny" once more furnishes testimony that the straight filming of a musical comedy is a hazard. In this case it is particularly weak because of an especially innane book. The Miller name and the fame of the Dillingham production may bring 'em in big big towns, but neither means much to the interior film fan and the picture isn't there as entertainment.

The stage brand of comedy typical of the operetta offers small delight to the picture clientele which has a taste of its own in things to laugh at. Addressing polite musical comedy fun to a mob that is addicted to Sennett horseplay is thankless business all around. This subject hasn't been "talkerized" at all. The stage book has just been boiled down. It's half way polite, parlor clowning and half way goofy plot, and doesn't get anywhere.

Miss Miller gives a neat and tricky performance, but she isn't yet wise to the tricks of the camera. Hers is strictly a stage treatment. She sings twice, the numbers being pitched into the action on a music cue after the musical comedy manner. No devising of a device to introduce them.

The star does two dances which are finessed into the action more logically, one as a comedy incident in a gymnasium scene and the other in the ball ensemble. But specialists may belong in talking shorts for they don't help the flicker athletes, be they secured even with the superb drive style of Miss Miller.

Joe Donahue got pretty much all there was to be had from the comedy role of Jim, the dumbbell lover, and Lawrence Gray managed to deal with pleasant masculinity with the slightly feeble minded leading male character. Many charming girls dance in the usual background, but nobody really is of great importance to the proceedings or makes much demand upon the interest of the onlookers. O. P. Heggie, than whom there is nobody who can make more out of a comedy cockney character, was sunk in a blah role.

Physical production is excellent, and stage management is first rate as far as pictorial groupings are concerned, but it's all so pointless. There is for example a capital staging of a fox hunt with a mob of hard riding people moving through countryside scenery that is a scenic revel. All this trouble leads to nothing but the incident of the musical comedy heroine falling off her horse to make the musical comedy hero fall in love with her, which circumstance is de eloped in stereotyped musical comedy lines.

"Hook, Line and Sinker" (Radio). Indifferent comedy which will place the drawing power of the Wheeler-Woolsey combination under fire. Carelessly made picture with the comedians, perhaps, sufficient favorites to make it climb to average figures. Stronger as the class of theatre it plays descends the scale.

"Shepper-Newfounder" (Fox-Roxy). Class light comedy subject, beautifully played by Edmund Lowe and Leila Hyams. Has everything but a good title. Should do very well all over.

"New Moon" (M-G). Operetta from the stage musical of same title. Depends entirely on the singing of Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore, leads. Story, with Russian locale, no help. Not likely to mean much beyond average on swing around.

"Charley's Aunt" (Col). Good revival of vet English farce. Performance of Charlie Ruggles, in title part, and direction, the strength. Enough laughs for any audience.

"Sunny" (FN). Uninspired filming of the musical comedy. Miss Miller charming, but the material is not there.

"She Got What She Wanted" (Tiff). Nearly all in close-up this film looks okay for the art and smaller houses. Title might mean something, closely resembling a former play, as also the Betty Compson name.

TALKING SHORTS

SLIM SUMMERVILLE
"Ochi-La"
Comedy
20 Mins.
Fox, Brooklyn
Universal

Funny doldrums occasioned by a competitive love sprint between Slim Summerville and Harry Gribbon make for plenty laughs as the two play A. E. F. dumbboys in France. Some moments could be cut, although the short is good as is for general spotting. Photography, simple and recording okay.

Observation of this one brings a kinky idea of judgment that has been slanted in the manufacture of this subject. Plenty of time and room is given to screen action, making the dialog not too boring by being too much.

The big howl is where Gribbon rips a mustard plaster from Summerville's stockade to find his own phiz planted on the plaster. That's done better than it might sound. Shan.

"COLLEGE CUTIES"
Comedy
18 Mins.
Loew's New York
Educational

Another co-ed campus comedy featuring Eddie Tamblyn and suitable only for the daily change spots. Mostly slapstick situations, stereotyped, with the dialogue, direction and recording all faulty.

High spot has the freshman chased by a swarm of bees winning the paper chase, the big event of the year; gaining the affections of the girl and turning the tables on his sophomore rival. Sure-fire water stuff just about saves this one from being a total loss.

"MOVIE MEMORIES"
Commercial
9 Mins.
Rivoli, New York
Paramount

Sponsored by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., this short sets a standard for other commercials. Plugs for the ciggies are in titles spotted at the start and finish of the reel, and in that manner resembles the better class of commercial radio hours, where the product advertised is discreetly worked in.

This one is made up of news reel shots of the early nineties, with an off-screen commentator pulling some nifty cracks about the days of bustles, buggies and bicycles in San Francisco in 1903; the Gans-Nelson fight in 1906; nite life 25 years ago; a park bench flirtation scene in 1902; William F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) holding a hand-shaking reception; a group of 1901 debs whooping it up at Coney Island, and a musical show of the season of 1903. In between are two clips of a more serious nature, the funeral of President McKinley and the inauguration of President Roosevelt, with the unseen speaker's comments.

For a finish there is one of the old-time film mellers, "The Moonshiner's Bride," with the gang coming in rapid succession. Unbilled gagster did a good job, especially during the love's sacrifice episode.

With plenty of laughs most of the way, all nicely spotted, this one got applause at the finish, and can play anywhere to similar results.

"WIZARDLAND"
Vagabond Director Series
Traveleg
9 Mins.
Mayfair, N. Y.
Pathe

Tom Terris trying to talk a native cannibal dance into a hymn of hate for himself because someone has stolen the prize skull of the head hunters. Not an interesting short unless figuring that the angle of scantily clad native women means something.

That war hop the blacks go into would be outnumbered and outmaneuvered by the Boyvettes. Besides, too many children are concerned in it to permit the accompanying monolog to work up any apprehension. It boils down to mediocre travelog material.

Boy Scouts can build a fire without a match and too many women have now been seen pounding out the dinner menu in the pre-historic manner. Just a short and a chaser. Sid.

"TWIXT LOVE AND DUTY"
Comedy
12 Mins.
Strand, N. Y.
Vitaphone No. 4168

Travesty on the old fashioned western done semi-straight and really funny for a sophisticated audience. But there is no resource of comedy, no build up and a lot of the less wide awake fans might think it straight drama for much of the footage.

Works out a tabloid horse opera with plenty of gun play and hard riding with only the stuffed shirt acting of the hero to supply the comedy slant. For a wise mob it is all right, but for the youngsters and the gum chewers. Players are Esther Howard (from legit), as Gold Nugget Nell; Eddie Graham, the heavy with a comedy walrus moustache, and Walter Percival as the tent show hero. "True Blue Harold" of the Border Patrol. Rush.

LYNN OVERMAN
"HORSESHOES"
Comedy
8 Mins.
Strand, N. Y.
Vitagraph No. 1170

A comic episode of small value, but made funny in the playing of an inebriated character by Overman who has made quite a series of shorts for other producers.

Central character is a newspaper reporter continuously stewed. They send him to a murder trial with orders to give them a quick flash on the verdict pronounced on the beautiful girl accused. He fixes it with a pal to give the signal when the jury comes in by lowering the courtroom shade while the reporter himself lolls in a speakeasy within sight of the courthouse. Meanwhile, the paper is ready to go on the street with the advance story on "Acquittal" all ready.

Window shade is lowered to save the judge's eyes from the glare and the stew shoots in his flash that it's acquittal, meanwhile the jury brings in a "guilty" verdict. There is a quick plea for a new hearing of fresh testimony and the verdict is reversed in time to justify the reporter who is called "Horseshoes" because he carries one for luck.

'30 in the Land of Nod

starting with "Madonna of the Streets" in French, Spanish and German.

Universal was importing Spaniards, French and Germans, first comers due Oct. 20, "Boudoir" in three languages. Also "Blind Husbands."

Fox dropped its foreign scenario staff in October, deciding to make versions of domestics but no foreign originals.

After two months off versions, Hal Roach decided on French and Spanish for Laurel and Hardy, and Spanish for Charles Chase.

Metro's plans in November called for 18 French, seven Spanish and six German versions.

Talker Material

Producers began the year with a squawk about the scarcity of dialog stories. As '31 approaches the complaint still goes.

Will Hays gave them a bunch of "Don'ts", that made it harder in February, and inaugurated a sponging department to go over stories before production.

One studio exec said that two-thirds of the screen stories were based on "Jack the Giant Killer" and the other third on "Cinderella".

Fox solved the problem of what to do with idle writers by setting everyone writing treatments for Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee" for Will Rogers.

In July there was a general search on for fresh talent in writing and directing.

Metro inaugurated a beginner department for new writers. Encouragement of newcomers at Fox was for direction; three employes given try-out megaphones.

The Outdoor Cycle

Cowboys flocked to Hollywood in February, hearing of sagebrush revivals with sound. Fox had started an outdoor cycle with "In Old Arizona." Paramount's "The Virginian" clinched it. Since the fall of '29 there had been 23 outdoor pictures produced. Nine were in production in March and nearly 20 more programmed. Fox was issuing 11 "Outdoor Romances." Tiffany had gone western.

After "Lone Star Ranger" Fox decided George O'Brien would be another Mix.

As March ended First National suddenly lost its western flair and mobilized for musicals. Fairbanks went cold on "Days of '49" and started thinking up something else.

In April the outdoor cycle wound up with the majors and taken up by the faithful quickies.

Taps for Musicals

Musicals were still in favor as 1930 started.

In May, 1930, Warners was doing "Sweet Kitty Bellaire" with 18 songs in it. Six months later five of the six Irving Berlin numbers written for Doug Fairbanks were thrown out of "Reaching for the Moon".

The dancer classification built up by the Central Casting Bureau the previous winter was already gathering dust. Some 500 girls out of luck.

Metro's caster for musical, having had nothing to do for a long time, got another job in August.

Transportation east was hard to get.

In September only seven musicals were scheduled: four at Warners, two at Fox, and one at Metro.

Paramount was buying off songwriters. So were other lots, and the Roosevelt Hotel looked lonesome.

Two musicals came off the Radio list after a conference between, and two orginals, hinting of s. a. subbed. Radio aired 24 dancers and 12 showgirls in Oct.

"Rosalie," planned for Marion Davies, was considered out.

Musicals were still approved for foreign versions, however.

Also, George Gershwin was due in November to do an operetta for Janet Gaynor at Fox.

Metro opened November by wiping out the music department. Some refused cash settlements and stuck in other jobs. Head of the department became a supervisor.

What to do with old unreleased musicals was discovered. Metro decided to cut "The March of Time" (revue) into shorts.

Minor Cycles

In May Universal started to revive serials. In July Pathe decided to come in on the movement by remaking "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine."

Nat Levine made an indie serial and started another in October.

Universal lost its warmth for serials after "The Indians Are Coming" hit the market. Budget on "Finger Prints," already in production, was trimmed.

Pathe found exhibitors were not so excited about the serial revival and decided to wait indefinitely.

A one-studio cycle was spotted at Paramount in September—five productions with a salt-water background.

The click of "The Trespasser" and "Common Clay" had been the tip that a little heavy emotion was in order.

Remakes and Revivals

Metro waited all spring for Edwina Booth to get plump again to finish "Trader Horn". Since the year in Africa the dialog had been entirely rewritten and the real jungle scrapped for the studio imitation. The remaking continued into November.

Metro also considered dusting off another foreign location dough-eater, "Bugle Sounds", which George Hill atmosphered in Algiers.

In April D. W. Griffith added sound to "Birth of a Nation."

Metro figured it might possibly do the same with "Ben Hur."

Studios were remaking a number of silents as talkers. In May Warners bought up a batch of old Charley Rays for that purpose. Audience squawks at remakes of silents caused Warners to call off a number planned for 1930-31.

Wide Film

Radio prepared to big film "Dixiana" in January, but never did.

Lots of wide-film talk after "Happy Days" premiered east and west, but studios grew leary of the discussion as March continued.

Warner-FN joined Paramount on 65mm. Radio's poor system was also 65mm. Leaving alone at Fox 70 mm. (Grandeur).

Warners had 12 cameras ready and figured starting on a wide one about May 1.

Coast argument on wide film was the frame should be higher and not so wide. Grandeur's ratio was two feet wide to one higher, and the aesthetics wanted 4 to 3.

Technicolor would make no wide cameras until argument was settled.

Second week in March Fox put five wide-camera crews back on 35mm. machines, and postponed theatre installations for six months. However, in April the studio was preparing to shoot "Big Trail" wide.

With Grandeur equipment borrowed from Fox, Metro was making "Billy the Kid" in two sizes.

Douglas Shearer was experimenting at Metro on reducing 70mm. to standard negative, using magnifiers for projection.

Paramount was set to do "Under Western Skies" in 65mm as well as standard in April. Also just preparedness.

Radio was only "experimenting" in March but planned double width production on a railroad yarn to start the end of April.

In June Warners prepared to make 65mm talkers on film or disk. The Brothers made try-out installation of a three-sprocket projector (turn-knob for 35, 65, or 70), the system called Vitascope. The first Vitascope, Harry Langdon in "Soldier's Plaything," was announced July 22 for premiere in about five weeks. Will not be shown in 65mm.

In August, Warners was reported to have completed three Vitascopes. The cast figured "Kismet" would be the first exhibited and "Adios" next.

Besides Fox's "Big Trail" two other wide films were ready in August for release. Radio had a 65mm on "Danger Lights," and was holding back the standard film for release at the same time. Metro's first Realife would be "Billy the Kid," capable of projection on standard or wide screen.

It was disclosed that producers had an anti-stampede understanding on wide-film, in force until 1931, therefore the undercover experimenting. Firms could only display their systems in 10 key cities.

Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences had shied from wide film as a controversial and competitive subject, but called technicians and directors together in September to swap experiences. Meeting turned into a series of arguments as to the most artistic proportion for the frame.

Liberty Productions did "Ex-Flame," based on "East Lynne," both standard and wide. Hoffman took the prints east Nov. 2.

United Artists quietly made a wider of "The Bat Whispers" for simultaneous release with the standard.

At the end of the year Metro was figuring on six Realifes for the current program.

Pictures in the Home

ERPI opened a Coast campaign to sell home talker equipment in January of '30. Sound was hurting silent parlor fever.

Radio-Phonophone and Lee DeForest both decided 16mm. talkers were practicable in March. Universal was reported planning a miniature talker studio on Long Island. Estimates had projection machines in 200,000 homes and 2,000,000 able to afford them.

Only other Coast angle was that studios disarmed players shooting their home cameras on the sets.

Radio and Warners were experimenting on television early in the year. Tiffany inserted a clause for television rights in story contracts.

Radio prophesied that picture broadcasting would start in 1932. Idea to lease television sets with the objective 25,000,000 people paying $1 weekly for hear and see entertainment.

Color

Of 67 outfits claiming color schemes on the Coast early in the year, only three were producing.

Harriscolor was making 20 color cameras in March for possibly delivery by August.

Metro figured on using Multicolor for sequences in "Good News" and "Mme. Satan."

Technicolor was building new labs to open in the fall.

Warners was working on a color process requiring only a 40% jump in set lights. May 28 was the first anniversary of color talkers, premiere of "On With the Show" (WB). Since then 24 all-color talkers produced.

In August Technicolor reported its three-color process was practical but prohibitive as yet.

Howard Hughes bought 51% of Multicolor last summer and in November closed down the plant to see what makes the dollars go round. He may turn it black and white and take over United Artists laboratory business, with overflow from Paramount and Metro.

Studio feeling for color cooled.

Technicalities

The Academy got RCA and ERPI to co-operate on tests to determine the quietest camera. Winner was five decibels above the whisper level. The most efficient covering blimp developed cut camera noise down 19 decibels.

Academy planned an additional award for the most valuable scientific achievement, but nothing important enough to be recognized was developed.

Metro tried recording on wire for immediate playbacks during the production of "New Moon" in August.

Lee DeForest and M. A. Schlesinger came to the Coast in September to establish General Talking Picture headquarters.

Bell Lab reported uncovering new sound valve of much higher efficiency.

Dunning process a big factor throughout the year in film making.

Efficiency Hunt

When 1930 started the Academy was compiling a glossary of terms used in pictures, exclusive of profanity.

E. B. Derr took charge of Pathe production in February and decided to scrap the budget system. He also decided that three writers should work in succession on each script, with a final conference with the director.

The Fox contribution was a ukase to associate producers to do their own thinking.

In March at Pathe Joseph P. Kennedy tried out a new rehearsal system whereby "What a Widow" would be actually shot in three days. Didn't work. It did succeed in showing what was wrong with story and cast but it wasn't repeated; kept too many sets tied up.

The do-it-on-location plan developed in May when Fox figured it could save one-third on production costs by shooting interiors on location. Pathe went one better in July, sending Howard Higgins and Tom Buckingham on location to write the script for "Painted Desert."

The search for a more efficient method of shooting had Fox experimental shooting "Stolen Thunder" in 18 days in October. Devoting four to six p. m. each day to rehearsals for the following morning's work. Considered a success.

Production

Production activity in January was at its lowest in five years. Mob stuff was the best in four months as February started, but activity in general was not hot. Slump explained by a desire to have as little exposed negative on hand as possible when the state assessors checked March 3, an annual condition.

At the end of February Columbia had completed two new stages and gone into a production spurt. Metro had nine units active and planned building four more stages.

March opened with 1,000 extras working daily. The second week production was at its best since September, 57 features working.

Radio had spent $2,000,000 on studio expansion and figured on as much again by May 15, two stages included. Paramount was doing some building. Over 1,000 workmen were busy on construction.

Jack Gardner went to New York to build up the Fox stock company to 90 players. While other studios were talking of slicing contract lists, Universal went through its scenario department with an ax. U also notified execs they would draw half pay during April and May.

Next shakeup April, scene Columbia script department. Newspaper experience demanded of replacements.

Darmour figured on $1,500,000 for his 36 comedies for Radio.

May Jobless

In May figures showed 20 registered extras idle for every one working.

Actors, finding jobs scarce, became associate agents and sold themselves.

Warners figured on starting studio consolidation with First National in July. Fox plan was to concentrate production in Movietone City by October. Ultimately set back to this December and Feb. or March, '31, respectively.

June was plenty quiet.

Metro abolished the scenario editor and substituted two liaison men.

Arthur Caesar sold his Filipino valet down the "River's End" as an Eskimo.

Only eight indie features had been made in two months.

Columbia had two productions passing its cost high of $225,000 on "Flight." "Rain or Shine" cost over 300 g's and "Dirigible" will pass that a bit.

Some 51 features were working the third week of July. Twelve of the units were staked out on locations ranging from the Mojave desert to the South Seas.

As First National went dark on domestics Jack Warner swore off annual shut-downs starting in '31.

Year's production peak loomed for August. Fox with six features about to start was its busiest in six months.

August Economy

Then came the economy wave. The Warner-First National closings were logical. But the shake-up hitting Fox the week of Aug. 11 came in the midst of a heavy schedule. Two associate producers, two directors and three writers were optioned off; 15 writers, 13 secretaries, and 10 art directors simply lost their jobs.

Hollywood was flooded with femme secs when First National let out 18 the same week.

Extras had found the four weeks ending Aug. 16 the most consistently active of a year. Average of 1,000 jobs daily.

Stream of visiting executives from the east started in August, and studio employees were in suspense at each new conference.

Metro lists got some chopping Aug. 25, although that studio was also behind production schedule.

Revenue loss in the foreign market was thought to be the cause of the frantic moves to save money on production.

September Suspense

Fox contract list had been growing since spring. Some easterners here six months without a part. Fox started September by dropping six ingenues, making the erasures 75 since July.

Prize economy of the month was an order limiting trailers to 200 feet.

Fox studio virtually suspended two weeks, to resume Oct. 1.

Warners went dark Sept. 22 for the rest of the year.

Indies were cashing in on the talent free during shutdowns.

Columbia reached its production peak with six features in work toward the end of September.

Universal cutting the script department again in October. So was Metro.

Wall Street's yelps for less cost and more quality had the studios super-leary on material. Consequently a story shortage. Buy-as-you-go practice in several studios.

Pathe decided to put the solo contract system in effect by the end of the year.

Radio had five stories preparing in late October. Planning further ahead than the recent tendency.

Indie activity was resuming.

Middle week of October had 6,951 extra placements.

Discovery made that Wall Street sleuths had been studying costs and politics from the inside out.

By November studios were doing preliminary work on stories before deciding to buy.

The Warner valley lot was as active as any with five guest units in addition to the foreign versions. Official reopening set for December, four pictures preparing.

Out came Adolph Zukor, saying Paramount was expanding, not cutting.

Universal achieved one of the most unique economies of the year. The Laemmles were on the point of engaging Serge Eisenstein but decided not to because he would require a massive production.

Metro also considered times too hard to afford a Russian director. Eisenstein started back to Russia.

Rackets of 1930

Voice coaching.

Language school for cutters.

Marketing bureaus (scenario schools).

Femme diggers taking their gold in contracts.

Freelance p. a.'s grabbing clients off trains.

Chatterers with the location party habit.

Autograph pests collecting for resale.

Consular contacts.

City cops doing bits in pictures.

Short Circuited Stars

The first three months of 1930 were hard on stars in general. Of 83 starting the year 32 dropped or were finishing in March. Only 12 were replaced.

As for future bets—the Wampas old-timers looked over the candidates for baby stars and called off the annual selections.

Mae Murray was through at Tiffany after "Peacock Alley." She sued for $1,750,000 damages.

Another of the tiffs of '30 started in March when Universal disciplined Mary Nolan. She said she'd sue. But that was patched up in May with a new contract.

Lenore Ulric bought herself from Fox for $25,000 and same studio bought off J. Harold Murray for around $100,000.

Janet Gaynor had crawled out of sight under her Fox contract in April. When she finally returned to the lot Aug. 15 her layoff had cost her $45,000 in salary.

Dorothy Mackaill was too choosy about a part in July and Warners said she was through. She sued for $16,500. Peace in August with a new three year contract.

Squawks of 1930

Animated cartoonists can't keep their pencils off pants and outhouses. (Hays office.)

"Ingagi" slanders animals which can't defend themselves. (Professor.)

Par-BIP Stage Show Rivalry May Make Over English Vaudeville

London, Dec. 18.

Revolution of the entertainment field in England may well come about in the next year as a result of the intense competition which is about to start between Gaumont British, Associated British, and Paramount, all of whom are out to bolster cinema box offices with lavish cinema-variety programs on a scale higher than previously conceived possible here.

This drive for novelty, originality and spectacle in talker programs could easily effect both legitimate and vaudeville branches of the entertainment field here.

What it means is this: With three major film circuits, controlling between them around 500 of the biggest of the 3,500 cinemas in England, all going out for variety and revenue on a huge scale, these circuits will be able to offer terms to variety acts every bit as favorable, if not more so, than those already offered by the regular vaude chains.

Whole Season Work

Gaumont, Associated and Paramount are now in a position, or will be when their plans for cinema-variety are fully working, to offer a whole season's work to acts, imported and home.

Supported by have huge financial backing, and every one going out to bolster takings by scale presentation, these circuits can more than compete with variety interests.

Paramount, after coming into the open with their purchase of the Astoria chain, announce revue production at all their theatres, under the supervision of Francis Mangan, who handles this side of the presentations at the Plaza and Carlton, Par's West End show windows.

Paramount already has around 14 cinemas in England, with many more planned and an entire circuit being dickered for. By the end of 1931 they will be running at least 50 theatres here. Their intention is to roadshow presentations throughout their circuit of a size and brilliance unequalled here.

Associated British, British International's circuit, have engaged Douglas Murray on long-term contract. Murray was with Roxy in New York. He starts stage presentations at the Regal around Xmas. This house, British's leading West Ender, has never previously had stage shows.

Opening show will run over an hour, involve many technical innovations, and will present more than 40 artists. According to the success of this particular presentation, which is regarded as experimental by the circuit, Associated British will produce units and road-show them throughout their circuit of over 120 theatres.

Gaumont British engaged Albert de Courville to supervise variety at the New Victoria, their latest house, and intended him to develop cinema-variety throughout the circuit. Courville has now left them, and the circuit's plans for counteracting the drive by Associated British and Paramount are not yet known.

Gaumont Must Follow

Point is, Gaumont cannot afford to be left out, and from the booking point of view are in the strongest position of the three circuits, being able to offer a longer tour, and holding considerable variety interests in their combine. If Gaumont fails to make contact with the drive immediately they will find themselves out of luck in the provinces.

Smaller circuits, such as Bentley's, which controls the new Leicester Square theatre, due to open soon, have laid plans for development in the cinema-variety field. Leicester Square opens with a fixed policy of supporting talkers with top-line variety artistes.

Such names as Gracie Fields are expected to figure on the opening program. This circuit intends to book for its suburban halls and run a policy of programs containing one feature and two high-class vaude acts.

How this drive will affect legitimate and vaudeville interests remains to be seen. If the competition becomes as fierce as it threatens, the film combines will soon be in a position to offer vaudevillians better terms than the regular variety theatres.

Lillian Russell

The picture of Lillian Russell on the cover of this anniversary number echoes the dictum of 25 years ago that "The American Beauty" was the world's most beautiful woman.

Miss Russell was among the first performers to pay for a picture on a "Variety" cover. That happened in April, 1906, and for $75.

At the time, Miss Russell was about to play vaudeville after having just finished a run at the Casino theatre, New York.

MILWAUKEE SEES '31 AS A STRONG STAGE YEAR

Milwaukee, Dec. 27.

Stage fare is going to be the thing in Milwaukee for 1931, according to present indications. Musicians, stagehands and operators are emerging from the depths of despair.

With Brin opening the Majestic Christmas Day with Buddy Fisher as m. c. and 16 Carla Torney girls and vaude acts, the Fox Wisconsin will have its first real competition in some time. Also early in '31 the new Warner theatre, almost directly opposite the Majestic, will go into action with pictures and stage shows. It is planned to bring on film stars for personal appearances, according to report. A concert orchestra will be a feature.

With the Davidson offering legit attractions, the Riverside putting on R-K-O vaud film, the Gayety burlesque, and the Garfield and Mojeska, neighborhoods, giving four acts on Sundays, it looks like a majority for the stage brigade.

Loew's Orph May Follow Archduke's Tombs Date

Loew's is negotiating with the Archduke Leopold of Austria as an act for the New York houses at $600 per.

Archduke was amenable to Loew's offer to open Jan. 7, at the Orpheum, but was vetoed by a Mrs. Coburn, who recently bailed him out of jail for $7,500. She declared that vaudeville is "not dignified."

The Archduke is said to be quite witty.

If finally going vaude, Loew's will tie up with the New York "Graphic" in exploiting him. Paper is running the "story of his life" in serial form daily.

Archduke was recently released from the Tombs after a legal squabble resulting from the sale of a valuable jewel belonging to his aunt, the Archduchess Maria Teresa.

R-K-O's 2nd

R-K-O celebrates its second anniversary in its theatres during January.

Plug line will be "Greater Show Month."

Ben Serkowich, of R-K-O publicity, has been called in from the road to lay the campaign for the circuit's second anniversary, which begins in January. Move takes on the aspect of a new alignment for the R-K-O publicity division.

Jack Hess was recently switched from Chicago to New York, and George Brown, formerly of Fox West Coast, went to the Windy City for R-K-O. In addition the circuit recently took on Al Finneman, associate of Harry Reichenbach. Finneman is making a survey of New York neighborhood conditions. He may head exploitation activities for a group of neighborhoods like the 81st St., 58th St., and the Coliseum. Hess handles the Mayfair and the Globe, R-K-O Broadway spots.

Record offer up to 1920 for the picture rights to a play was a $200,000 bid for "Gold Diggers of Broadway."

Vaude in 1921

For the start of the '20-'21 season it was figured that vaudeville could give an act within Greater New York 47½ weeks in 80 vaude houses.

During the winter of '21 a check-up showed 96 full twice daily vaude weeks between the U. S. and Canada and 156 weeks of three-a-day splits.

Ten years later there are about 50 full vaude weeks on this continent and only one straight vaude theatre giving two performances daily, the Palace, New York, and that site does three shows on week-ends.

R-K-O Planning A London Deal, Wants 6 Spots

R-K-O is seriously considering construction of a major house in London and possible acquisition of a few neighborhoods in the British capital. Belief is that the vaude men would like to take over about five suburban spots and that a proposition is already on tap.

As a preparatory move to this end, Joe Plunkett, theatre operator for R-K-O, and B. P. Kahane, general counsel, will sail abroad Jan. 17 to reconnoiter.

Mike Scott's 25th Letter

New York, Dec. 24.

Editor Variety:

This is my 25th letter to the paper.

I cannot forget the first "Variety" 25 years ago at five cents, when you gave me those kind words about my step in the heel and toe in the clogs. That is what made me many friends. Those friends will stand by me till I go to play the last date.

You know what storms the Dublin Dancing Irish Man has gone through in 28 years since he came to America in 1902. When I came here in that snow storm, Dec. 14, 1902, I left behind me the wife, children, mother, father, uncles and aunts. I met my brothers here. All of the 14 are dead.

That is a hard blow to Mike. He is alone at 66. But has thousands of friends, agents, managers, performers and the public in the many parts of this world which I have roamed for 50 years.

These words are from the lonely heart of the one you all love. The old Dublin Dancing Irish Man.

Success to all my friends.

Mike Scott.

Picture press agents were agitating for as much space in the dailies as the press gave baseball. Based their argument on film attendance figures of 10,000,000 daily plus loss of interest in the national sport due to scandal. This was Oct. of '20.

Vaudeville of 1930

By Joe Bigelow

Vaudeville in 1930 has stood motionless on a treadmill that moved backward. It had nothing to do with the reverse motion, because it was just standin' there mindin' its own business. But vaudeville, or variety, or vaude, or nuts, did not do so well for or by itself, to further its own end or return to the place where it ought to be and, perhaps, would be had it not been....

Had it not been. Had it not been what? Did vaudeville fall or was it pushed?

Vaudeville's lore is based on its past, so is its present and future. Has it a future? Let that pass. "Let the past in vaudeville be passed," it was written last year. Jim Corbett was the heavyweight champion of the world, the whole world. But don't mention it. Let that pass, too. Just say he's now a pretty good straight man.

"Let the past in vaudeville be passed."

Amen.

That should go double for 1930. For 1930 vaudeville bore but slight resemblance and relation to the vaudeville of the past that is passed. The word vaudeville, in describing vaudeville of the past and the present, covers two distinct phases of amusement, not remotely alike in most ways. The vaudeville business is now a different business. That has been conceded.

Vaudeville in 1930 resolved itself into one circuit. R-K-O picked up the remnants and refashioned them to its own conception. But R-K-O did not do so for the sake of vaudeville. It had an ulterior motive, strictly a business one, and the motive was that it had to. Vaudeville has been R-K-O's insurance against bad pictures and low grosses with bad pictures.

Pictures and Overhead

Vaudeville and its 1930 slipping on a treadmill formed by the other circuits, theatres and managers. They had pictures—they didn't need vaudeville, they believed. Their grosses were more black than red and the profits as good as could be expected. Addition of vaudeville to most would have meant additional expense. They had no definite assurance vaudeville would increase the grosses in proportion to overhead. Or others were breaking even with pictures and thought they might have a loss with vaudeville. Or they were losing with pictures as is, and could lose more with vaudeville.

Timidity of others besides R-K-O over these questions really forced vaudeville back instead of ahead. They heard a demand for "flesh." But they did not answer. It might cost money to answer, they figured.

Loew's dropped vaudeville, cutting its book from 28 weeks to seven and a half within a couple of months, to play pictures straight for one or all of the above reasons. Loew's may be shortly, forced back to vaudeville as R-K-O was forced to stay.

Fox dropped vaudeville for muchly the same causes.

The indie bookers lost what little they had through their methods, and their methods were peculiarly adjacent to those of the jackass.

Fally Markus, the biggest and cleanest of the indie bookers, stepped out just before the year commenced. What consequently happened Fally apparently foresaw, and that's why Fally stepped. The others just finished dying as they had started to long before.

Heart of Vaudeville

So an account of vaudeville in 1930 is an account of R-K-O. Vaudeville was that new circuit's heritage, and a lodestone. The heart of vaudeville is in the booking office. R-K-O vaudeville's heart was weak. It was full of bad blood. It missed more often than it beat.

As almost complete reorganization of the booking office came about in the spring of '30, so did R-K-O's notion and attitude toward vaudeville, what it represented, what it meant to box offices and audiences, and what it could accomplish.

R-K-O neither saved nor revived vaudeville. But changed it most completely. All but a few of the R-K-O bills were reduced to four acts after the reorganization. The budgets are weekly expenditures of the vaudeville-playing theatres were shrunk from $5,000 to $3,000. That meant less money for acts and less acts. The R-K-O western road show route was formed. Bills were opened in New York and booked intact to the coast and back. That was the first constructive move in or by vaudeville in years. To R-K-O it meant establishment of a set stage policy from coast to coast; when the picture was weak the "always a good show" reputation of the stage might keep them coming in and hold interest until another good picture arrived.

After the heart was treated R-K-O spent its efforts with vaudeville in establishing that set policy. It has been generally successful. It has meant profit for R-K-O theatres, where losses were seen before.

To the good act it meant a 50-week route in vaudeville. A 50-week route had seemed buried in the vaudeville past that is passed. To the mediocre or poor act it meant the end of a career in the show business. The year 1930 saw the passing of 1,500 vaudeville acts to other fields. The possibility of a later chance for them in vaudeville was entirely precluded by the shortened bills and elimination of their grade of talent from the business.

Still on Their Way Out

They are still dropping out. Some are realizing it slowly and dropping just as slowly, but dropping.

Publix heard a demand for "flesh," Publix almost answered it affirmatively. But the reasons given earlier made Publix hesitate with the rest. Warners strung partially with R-K-O in regards to vaudeville belief and added some time, but not to much. Not enough to make a difference. Not much of a difference for the acts that must withdraw because there is no longer a place for them.

R-K-O probably has secured a place for its changed version of vaudeville. As long as the intact four-act bills hold up when the pictures are bad, this type of stage show will remain. It is the policy that has changed, though, and the formula of the bills, not the acts. The same acts are around.

Greatest fear of vaudeville folk who still have some confidence is that they'll be looking the same ones over for too long. The acute scarcity of break-ins and breeding grounds for new material and acts is a worry. It was more severe in 1930 than ever.

Indications are that it can't improve to a great extent or at all. That will force a new method for birth of material in the future. Acts will necessarily be satisfactory at the start or never.

Shorter bills shortened the number of acts played. Shorter budgets shortened the salaries paid. Both shortened the lives of many besides the acts for whom vaudeville had no further use. Among them were the producers of $3,500 flash acts. One act commanding $3,500 as a salary, whether deserving of it or not, could not be shoved into a bill which spent but $3,000 for four acts.

The agents' crying for good reason is history and warrants no repeating.

The Palace, New York, became the only remaining straight 2-a-day vaudeville theatre in the U. S. But akin to the old straight vaudeville theatres only on the surface and as to policy. It had to borrow from other branches of show business for its attractions. The best drawing acts at the Palace in 1930, also the highest paid, were from elsewhere, mostly pictures.

Frescott as P. A.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

Norman Frescott, actor, is to enter another branch of the amusement business soon. He will join the publicity department of the local Warner division shortly after the first of the year as assistant to George D. Tyson, WB advertising chief here.

Frescott has for some time been contributing a regular column to a local club sheet for exhibitors, managers and exchange executives.

First story on the reported boardwalk for Coney Island was printed in August, '20. Also that the old Madison Square Garden would be torn down.

Agents and the Coast

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Along with the rest of the changes, ins and outs, actions, reactions and movements of one kind or another, that have marked the year past in the film capital, perhaps the most outstanding example is the Hollywood agent as a class. Probably no other year in the history of the film business brought out so large and varied a group of artists' representatives.

Starting about a year ago, Hollywood became infested, virtually, with the agent. So much so the State Labor Commission instituted investigations before handing out agency permits. At one time during the early part of the year it was estimated that over 100 agencies were operating in Los Angeles and Hollywood, which meant from 300 to 400 agents spread over town.

These numbers were staggering considering that only a year before not over a dozen agents were identified with the picture business.

The influx and increase came out of the east. Along with the stage actors, writers and directors, followed the agent. No sooner did the trek begin when the handful of native agents began to huddle together.

The old gambling adage, "You can't win at another man's game," asserted itself immediately. Ensuing time and events proved this to be the right dope. Answer today is that several of the old guard are still here and on top, while others have gone and most of 'em forgotten.

Musicals

Musical pictures, which ultimately sounded the death knell for a great many songwriters and also actors, took toll from the agents as well. The new class of agent in Hollywood had only the stage sources to draw from. Unfamiliar with the workings, conditions and requirements of pictures, the eastern agent could only make a stab at it. If a submitted name from the stage was grabbed it was okay all around, but as soon as a casting director began talking about camera angles, types, characters, etc., pertinent to the camera, the newcomer-agent was gone. Just as an old-time, silent picture day agent didn't know one stage name from another so the stage impresario had to "cenie meenie meiny mo" when consulting a directory of picture names.

What depressed the agency situation out here more than anything else was the parade of hit and run agents, mostly from vaudeville ranks, who thought all they had to do was to promote carfare from New York, hang up a shingle and build a heavy rail around the office to keep callers from crushing the furniture. It's safe to say that in the first three months of this year from 75 to 100 such agents came, saw and blew without conquering even the sunshine.

Hit and Run

Many of these hit and run agents came out with supposed political connections that to their surprise, failed to connect. One agent, whose brother is an exec with a major company in the east, did a pretty burnup when after waiting around a month couldn't get past the front gate of the studio, despite his letters of introduction and influence. He is back in New York now with remote chances of ever returning, except for the trip.

What happened with this agent was the case with so many others. Of the several hundred agents here nine months ago, no more than a half a dozen can still be seen around. A number of these earlier groups of agents had never been in the business before. Even actors turned to what they thought was a more lucrative calling. A funny incident is recalled of the actor-turned-agent who went out to sell another thespian of his own type. Informed he could get $100 a day for him, the actor-agent took the job himself.

Last Attack

Although nearly all of the eastern agents were back at their old stands before the summer was over, a few of the more disgruntled ones were still reluctant to give up the fight without trying for one more attack at least. A combination of New York legit agents started it, intimating a freeze out of the Hollywood agent would be the result. But nothing happened and since then no more said or done.

Outside of natural breaks against the eastern agents out here, some may have succeeded if vanity hadn't played an important part. Agents of established names east came out here to find that nobody here ever heard of them before. The least important local picture agent was better known than the big shot from the east. It was just a case of where the latter couldn't or wouldn't take it.

In the final analysis the inevitable trend of the picture business itself helped to disperse and scatter the agents. With two major studios shut for the past four months and most of the others treading water for longer than that, it simmered down to a catch-as-catch-can game as for those agents left here are concerned.

Of those offices still operating the far majority are knee deep in the red. The bigger offices are taking it on the chin, figuring to hold on until conditions change. The others are just grasping onto straws that threaten to break from day to day.

Saranac's 20 Cured Cases in 1930 Unusually High There or Anywhere

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Dec. 27.

Show world's own health resort, Saranac Lake, discharged 20 patients with the official health okay on their cases during 1930. This number is considered most unusual.

The health restorative fame of the Saranac sun, becomes more pronounced when it's recalled that only eight out of large number of cases were lost during the year. Compared with other health centers, number is regarded as very high.

The "okayed" cases were Paula Campbell, Mae Johnson, Richy Craig, Jr., Keith Lundberg, Thomas White, James Williams, Oscar Lorraine, James Cannon, Dave Mavicty, Marion Greene, Irving Bloom, Elsie McGinn, Viola Allen, Al Downing, John Farrell, Edith Cohen, Hans Meyer, Ethel Jones, Tom Creamer and Sue Nace, all of whom returned to New York or home after complete recovery here.

Commish Fish

Miami, Dec. 27.

Jack Irving, m.c. at the Frolics, nearly got fish fright last week. He finally got a terrific bite an after battling with the catch for an hour, finally brought it to the surface.

It was a huge black octopus, but Irving first thought it was his last year's vaude agent coming up for back commish.

Morris Gest's "Aphrodite" knocked off $70,000 in its first week at the Auditorium, Chicago. A month later this spectacle plus Gest's other two, "Mecca" and "Chu Chin Chow," pooled a one wek's gross of $150,000 for the producer. Time: Autumn of '20.

HARRY BEAUMONT

Who since the advent of talking pictures has directed some of the most sensational hits of the talking screen.

He began his list with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Broadway Melody," and has since produced such successes as "Our Dancing Daughters," "The Florodora Girl," "Those Three French Girls," "Speedway" and others.

Metro had its "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" ready at a production cost of $800,000. Four months later, in April, picture reached a new top for $2 films by doing $22,400 at the Lyric, New York, '21. It was Valentino's start.

Probably the first use of pictures as a fast news medium was made in April, 1908, when films of the Grand National (races) at Liverpool, England, were developed on a train and shown at the Alhambra, London, a few hours later.

The cradle of vaudeville, Tony Pastor's on 14th street, New York, passed on in June, 1908, when Vitagraph leased it for summer film. In the fall of that year Pastor's became the Olympic, burlesque, under Columbia's operation, with "Bowery Burlesquers" the opening show.

William Morris brought Harry Lauder to America in February, 1908, for 20 weeks at $3,000. The Scotch comedian opened at the Lincoln Square.

What Is Vaudeville Coming To?

What is vaudeville coming to? The State-Lake policy? It looks very much like it.

The State-Lake policy takes its name from that theatre in Chicago, where a mixed bill of vaudeville and pictures is given as a continuous performance at a popular price scale of admission. Included in the vaudeville are some of the standard acts with a recognized headliner. Among the pictures is a feature film. It, therefore, combines the two drawing attractions of the best vaudeville and the best pictures-standard acts and high-class feature.

The instance making the "State-Lake policy" stand out is the Shubert vaudeville opposition. When the Shuberts opened vaudeville at the Apollo, Chicago, the Orpheum Circuit paid no particular attention. The Shuberts' Apollo opposed the Orpheum's three vaudeville theatres in that city. The Orpheum's Majestic and Palace, the big-time houses, at once felt the weight of the Shubert opposition, and did feel it until the Orpheum strengthened its programs at those houses. The Apollo was the lowest scaled of the three, but about 25 cents higher in price than the Orpheum's other house, the State-Lake. At no time since the Shuberts opened the Apollo has it affected the business at the State-Lake. Neither did the opening of two big picture theatres closely adjacent to the State-Lake dent the gross of that house. The Orpheum Circuit advertised in Chicago, when organizing into the stock capitalization plan, that the State-Lake made as high as $11,000 in one week. That would mean a gross of over $20,000, probably $23,000 or $24,000.

The Orpheum Circuit has 12 or 13 Orpheum, Junior, theatres, as they are known. The State-Lake is in this classification. The Orpheum, Junior, plays a State-Lake policy where there is a big-time Orpheum in the same city. Lately the Orpheum opened the Hennepin, Minneapolis, as the Orpheum Junior of that town with the State-Lake policy. The Hennepin has thrown theatrical Minneapolis into a panic. It has "cleaned up" the town, theatrically, with its big pop and continuous shows at low prices. It has frightened every other box office in Minneapolis, not excepting the big-time Orpheum, although the Orpheum people deny the big timer has been affected. But it has. The Orpheum Minneapolis is now in the position of having to fight its own sister theatre to obtain or hold business. If the big-time Orpheum hasn't an extra strong attraction, the Hennepin steals its business. Not all of it, but enough to count and make everybody owning a vaudeville theatre think about it.

In Minneapolis is a Marcus Loew picture house and vaudeville theatre. Marcus Loew is on the Coast at present. About a year or more ago he gave Variety's San Francisco representative a statement saying, if the Orpheum Circuit persisted in its announced intention of playing the State-Lake policy in the Junior Orpheums, the Loew Circuit would adopt a big-time vaudeville policy against it, as a necessary protective measure to the affected Loew houses. The Orpheum has 13 Junior Orpheums, mostly in cities where there are Loew theatres, but Loew is not playing big time, even at his State, New York, that is crying so loud for it the cry is heard the length of Broadway.

Big capacity houses with combination vaudeville and picture programs at 50 cents, top? Is that the coming vaudeville? Big time does two shows daily. The State-Lake policy plays four times daily (with acts doing three shows). The Loew's State, New York, has the policy but not the acts.

The continual grind of the continuous seems to follow the State-Lake houses. They do business all the time. If it isn't going to be 50 cents top that will draw them in to see a good show, maybe it will be 75. But the big capacity first, the price next, then the policy, and second instead of last, the show. This season has proven that the show and the price will do business under any circumstances, it both are right.

The Orpheum Circuit might divulge for the benefit of the theatrical business, in percentages, if not money, just what the Orpheum, Juniors, have done to the big-time Orpheums so far this season in the matter of the gross receipts. Maybe the Orpheum's financial statement will tell something. Maybe the Orpheum's abnormal and unexplainable stock drop could find an explanation in it.

Variety has a stock expert, but whether he has mentioned a comparison between the Loew and Orpheum stock quotations we don't know. But we do know this, that the Orpheum Circuit, which has not passed a dividend as yet, and the Loew Circuit that has, with the Orpheum conceded to be on as sound a financial footing as Loew's, is selling on the Stock Exchange at the same price Loew's is selling, or was as this is being written.

There may be always a field for the best vaudeville at the highest prices, like Keith's has been giving at the Palace, New York, or the Hippodrome, Cleveland, but the future for the rest of vaudeville seems to be in the future.

Good Agents and Good Talent

By Joe Bigelow

In New York now probably not more than a half dozen agents of acts and talent, known as agents, are making real money through their agency business. With only about half of that short number earning enough in commissions to get rich. The remaining several hundred New York agents range in income from comfortable to pitiful.

There is an old show biz axiom, known to all actors while not always followed: "A good agent is an asset; a bad agent is either a liability or a barnacle.

A good agent should make money for himself and for the talent he represents. Good agents always draw money unless an unfortunate trait in their make-up prevents success. But still a half dozen vaude agents in New York are thoroughly successful, or maybe not that many.

An agent, having something to sell, must know when and where to sell it. Therefore he must be a politician. He must instill confidence in himself in the buyer and the act he represents, and he must see that both have faith in his ability to deliver both ways. Therefore a diplomat. He must have complete understanding of both sides, the actor and the manager. He must be a combination business man with a comprehension of and sympathy for the artistic viewpoint. In fewer words, he must be a showman. That requisite should come first.

General belief is that besides the above talents an agent must have an "in." The inference is correct. An "in" is most desirable. Sometimes that "in" is secured through friendship or another relationship. But this sort of agent, if lacking natural ability, cannot bar the way to the buying source for superior agents. The smarter and better agent will make his own "in." The buyer needs his showmanship and the goods he has to offer, with that goods having been secured by agenting ability.

The Keith Agent

The Keith agent for years was emblematic of the artists' representative. Usually he was regarded as composite of the best features of the agency business. He was the agent pictured in all cartoons. Symbolically, he always carried a little black book. Other agents also carried black books, but the Keith agent's was thicker. He was entitled to tread the restricted "booking floor" by right of his "franchise." It did not matter how he attained this exclusiveness. He was the standout agent. His "in" was the greatest of all.

And that was plenty of "in" when the B. F. Keith's booking office booked four years of vaudeville time instead of one. The franchised boys considered themselves unfortunate if not having 40 or 50 acts working simultaneously.

Time changed everything there as it did in the rest of vaude. The circuit became R-K-O. Even before then, the "in" became less desirable. Playing time shrunk. Number of acts, too. Commissions went with both. Now the franchised "floor" agent with 50 acts working any one week doesn't exist.

Bigger Demands

In the old days booking acts with Keith's required no exceptional ability. There were so many theatres to book the acts and agents were not overabundant. A fairly good turn was a cinch to sell. All an agent had to do was have it on his list. The booker wanted it and and bought it. The agent was an unimportant intermediary in the transaction. He was merely the medium through which the booker and the actor closed the deal. He took his commission as automatically as he delivered what amounted to no more than a message between the two parties.

This was the mechanical agent in the Keith office, thriving on the softest bone a dog was ever hit with. He still exists, but isn't thriving.

In those days the best agent stood out, as he does now and always will, as the best always do in all lines. His duties were not so mechanical. They were more inspired. He sold the best acts because he was able to secure them. He made the most money.

He was the good agent who was and is an asset to the actor.

Actors and Business

Actors are supposed to be childish in business matters. They think so and so does everybody else. Actors say, like most other artists, that their artistic natures unsuit them for business. They like to think so, and as that seems to be the heritage of the actor, passed down by all acting generations, they talk themselves into believing it is a fact.

Probably fortunate in most cases, because actors seldom are showmen. They know audiences by their applause. They know a gag by the results it gives. They know or think they're good or bad according to the salaries they receive or think they warrant. But it takes a showman to know what salaries they deserve.

That's the agent's most important assignment—salary. Advancement in salary signifies advancement in professional standing, taking in ability as an actor.

Careful guidance by a prudent agent has advanced many a moderately good actor far beyond a much better one.

A good agent knows when to seek a raise in salary for his actor, but he also must know when to turn one down—for a bigger raise later on.

The old "franchise" system of B. F. Keith's "floor" probably ruined more good agency talent than it developed. It was too easy. It made the boys lazy. Things were falling into their laps. They didn't have to hustle, dig or produce. They just had to have enough of what the bookers wanted, and that was a pipe.

Most Successful

Agents who resisted that temptation were the most successful then and they remain so today. Agents who had no franchises and were therefore barred by Keith's had no such temptations to resist. They became the really successful agents of show business.

These "outside" agents, when sufficiently competent, always were the cream of the agency business and so remain. To get anywhere they had to have all the natural ingredients. The standout and most successful, William Morris, was oppressed, not helped, by the Keith "franchise" system. It took him years, and anything he had tossed into his lap later on came as a reward for his own ingenuity as a showman where he stood high, and as an agent, where he topped.

Hundreds of New York agents are now barely hanging on with one or two acts and surviving therefrom. They are parasites more or less. They are not agents in the name's sense. To advance the acts for the acts' sake and their own later on is not foremost in mind. To spurn an offer because it might later react against the act is their idea of insanity. They live on minutes and hold their acts down with them. An act's future is not their concern because they see nothing in the future for themselves.

The agents now have migrated with the rest of amusements to pictures. Hollywood was the agent's Paradise for a moment. The wheels turned backward out there, but the "in" is still most important. Ability has not yet counted as much as it will later on. It will count in pictures as it did in vaude and in the balance of the theatre.

STATIONS XMAS SPLURGE

CBS and NBC International Xmas Broadcasts Expensive

International broadcasts by both CBS and NBC Christmas Day cost plenty with only goodwill to the stations as return.

One radio authority places the cost for a hookup with Honolulu at around $3,000 or more. An indie station in New York, trying to arrange a Spanish broadcast, found that for 15 minutes connections alone would cost more than $1,500.

Figuring in the loss of commercial time, both in New York and stations included in a national hookup guns the international costs up.

DAVIS' FLA. DATES

Two Meyer Davis orchestras go south for the Palm Beach season, a unit under the direction of Danny Yates opening at the Whitehall hotel, Jan. 20, while the other under the direction of Ben Glaser starts at the Patio Lanai, similar spot, Jan. 15.

As in previous years a Davis orchestra will be spotted in Delray, midway between Palm Beach and Miami, to play for polo and race dates.

5 B. & K. SPOTS GET VAUDE AS TONIC

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Following news of the reopening of flesh in two Fox houses, four Warner spots and five indie theatres, Publix-B. & K. returns to the vaude field with six local houses, starting Jan. 5.

Houses which will have their first in-person shows in three years are the Congress, Belpark, Senate, Central Park, Belmont and Circle.

Will play five acts each, playing at the beginning six days in six days. Belmont, however, will have a special Sunday show. All of these houses have been in a bad slump for the past six months, and B. & K. is experimenting to see if vaude is the medicine. If the patients start improving, the dose will be increased.

Acts will be booked out of the Sam Herman office. Only acts working in "one" will be used in an effort to keep the number of stagehands to the minimum. Acts will be tied together by the m.c. method, which has proven successful around town lately, and with Sam Herman starting off as the announciator.

N. J. Will Slap Tax On Billboards and Call 'Sniping' Halt

State of New Jersey, through the legislature, has decided to go after the billboard situation Jan. 1 with the old eyesore spots, including all types of advertising paper, ordered cleaned up and beautified. At the same time it was decided to tax billposting.

Legislature at its last session passed a law, effective Jan. 1, which compels every billboard or outdoor advertising sign to be state licensed. No more "sniping" will be permitted, and every piece of paper put up that way, along with every unlicensed board, will bring $100 fine. The law gives the state a tax of 3c. per square foot on all types of outdoor paper.

Directly affected are most of the theatrical firms in Jersey. R-K-O, after Jan. 1, will confine all outdoor advertising in the state to windows and theatre premises, with these exempt under the new regulations.

Loew's maintains 450 big boards in the state. Publix-Paramount declares the new law does not affect it directly, as it sells all necessary paper to every house individually and each spot is locally handled by the resident manager.

Jersey figures the new law carrying the tax and penalties will automatically discourage sloppy displays and might tend to beautify the highways.

RESUMES COMBO POLICY

Pastime, Union City, N. J., which stopped vaude for straight pictures, has again installed vaude shows the last half.

Ancestors of Tap Dancing

By Bob Landry

Chicago, Dec. 22.

Clog, or nerve, dancing as it was first called had become a recognized form of variety entertainment as early as the 1860's. Cloggers dating back to this decade and the one immediately following included Charley Queen, Bill and Lou Hayle, Jack Shannon, Master Haney, Sam Howe and Barney Fagan, the latter still active in vaudeville.

By the '70's and '80's there were an army of cloggers, male and female, so great was the popularity of the diversion. Pedestral clog and other fancy arrangements for attracting individual fame amidst the keen competition that soon sprang up brought with them clog contests in which the judges often were compelled to sit under the platform, so that they could not see the contestants or be influenced by personality or appearance, rating them entirely by sound.

England gave the name tap dancing which generally superseded the expression clog, now used almost solely to identify the waltz clog largely popularized by Pat Rooney, first and second. One of the fables told of the old clog days is of an amazingly nimble American hoofer who making his first London appearance had to remove his shoes to prove to the suspicious Britons that there was no Yankee mechanism concealed.

Still Around

Of the old timers the great majority have passed on but quite a few are still living and a few active until recently. Hayle Brothers are connected with the Kansas City fire department; John Conners is at the Elk's Home, Bedford, Va.; Roxie O'Rourk until last year had a dancing school in San Francisco; Lumbard Brothers are stage doormen in New York, while John W. Gess in Seattle and Jack Shannon at the Harris, Chicago, are similarly employed.

Mike Scott, another old time clogger, writes poetry as a side line, while Walter Plimmer has been known for years as a vaudeville booker and agent.

Famous Offspring

Several of the pioneers were fathers of famous actor-sons or daughters, among them were Jere Cohan, Pat Rooney, Fred Stone, Eddie Foy, Sam Morton. Early hoofers were predominately Irish.

A roll call of the old timers, necessarily omitting some names but fairly complete and spanning the period of beer gardens, concert halls and rathskellars up to the emergence of modern vaudeville brings forward the names of:

Colored Show World

By Mark Vance

Colored show biz can only shout in a few spots. In all the other spots it hasn't the strength to shout; it can't even whisper. It's been hard hit.

Admitting their ofay brothers have been caught in the year of theatrical depression and nation-wide unemployment, the Negro show producers, theatre operators and players have apparently been caught deeper, through being less in numbers. Looking everything over there doesn't seem to be much hope other than a few straggling projects.

Almost any old year the Negro could always point to a number of individual accomplishments. This year none other than what a white producer did for an all-colored show, "Green Pastures." It is unlikely that a Negro producer would have had the temerity to have attempted such a play even in his own houses. Yet an ofay's daring made it possible for a cast of colored players to obtain a long period of stage employment. Any all-Negro producing project has no standout. Even the "Blackbirds" and the "Brown Buddies" aggregations are backed or sponsored by white money and producing brains. Neither is any sensational b. o. argument.

A few of the old T. O. B. A. reliables are still on the job, with the Whitman Sisters probably the oldest and the biggest moneymakers. Gone are the Irving Miller troupes of sixes and sevens and the Tutt and Whitney combos.

Even the bigger city run of Negro stage teams and combinations is far from what it ever was. No more Sissle and Blake as a two-man stage card. No more Miller and Lyles as a comedy-creating pair.

All Gone

Where the Negro companies that played colored houses year after year went traveling with a parking array of names for the road they are filling in today if at all, casts are thing together overnight and picking dates where they can pick attractions and they can all be had them that year.

That colored show biz has slumped low is evidenced by another white producer of a Negro unit to play the Loew time, who pany for the road; a few have attempted New York shows only to see them collapse, but as a movable proposition they pass up the road completely. No money in it, say they. And plenty of headaches.

A few Negro houses using films and "flesh" are not doing so badly in spots. But for a full layout of principals and chorines along the old days to go from city to city it's apparently suicide.

Even vaude as a regular gate proposition on the T. O. B. A. (colored circuit) isn't anything exceptional this past year. Most of the houses have been playing the cheapest kind of acts.

Southern Negro theatre operators have tried to keep their policies as formerly; have endeavored to form associations that would mean fresh traveling talent and better jumps, only to meet with upsets that just about drove them out altogether. A few have stuck and are keeping their houses open; some with all colored policies and others with the white man's films. In many of these localities the Negro gets his stage entertainment cheap, and it's cheap both ways.

No Decided Changes

There has not been any big change in the Negro show biz other than by those who have made a bit of profit out of it due to mixed programs with ofay talkers predominating and cheap vaude. Traveling companies come long now and then, all on a par with years ago when a song or two or a comedy bit plus a few eccentric comics, low syncopated hoofers and wiggly chorines supplied the show.

Colored show biz just creeps along, going and getting nowhere. Even through sections of the south there are still old store fronts doing the same old service of giving the Negro his play or screen entertainment. Up north, where there are more modern houses for the Negro, the white class of patronage seems of a higher type, yet they find their biggest fill of amusement in the white man's screen product.

Proving That a 'Variety' Mugg Is a Mugg

By Fred Allen

The "Variety" office boy chuckled as he removed his coat and prepared for a day of toil.

"It's a great world after all," he mused, looking into the dingy office mirror to make sure that he was there, in person, and that the office hadn't been wired for sound.

The mirror showed the ravages of time, and piece by piece its back had disappeared. Reporters are more in need of "quick" silver than they are of self-inspection. The looking glass bore mute testimony to the fact that it had been a constant friend in need. Unlike the members of the staff, it was the only thing attached to the paper that wouldn't cast a reflection on a casual visitor to the office.

"Geez—this mirror wouldn't be a success if it had Hellinger and Winchell on it," observed the boy aloud.

"A great crack, we'll run it on the front page—no one ever reads the rest of the paper," said a voice which sounded not unlike a Hollywood leading man the day after his option hasn't been taken up. Turning around the office boy saw that the immediate neighborhood had been defiled through the presence of Fing, "Variety's" ace critic.

Fing had acquired his miniature appellation after years of giving actors bad notices and dirty looks that any laundry would have returned with a nasty letter. His pen name was a contraction of the word Finger, and he was always ready to give until it hurt.

A well known man-about-what's-left-of-town, Fing was a compound rat who had had his face lowered to look like Ring Lardner, in hopes that it would help him write. It hadn't helped him, as a critic, and if "Variety" hadn't printed the critics' boxscore at the bottom of the page for the past two years, Fing's percentage would have been down with the arrivals from Los Angeles. He had panned everything in town from "Three's a Crowd" to an Xmas Fund Benefit, and if he could have borrowed a magnifying glass he would have razzed the love interest in the flea circus. So much for Fing.

"How's tricks," said the office boy.

"If you mean Friganza, you gotta ask somebody older than I am" said Fing as he locked his raccoon coat in the safe. He had been on "Variety" for some time.

"I mean, how're you feeling," inquired the boy.

"You can find out from any sister act in the city," returned Fing with a smirk as he waited for his laugh. That's the way it is in the "Variety" office, bon mots for one another—but there it ends.

A Swell Life

"All kiddin' aside, as the Interne said when they built a wing on the maternity hospital," continued Fing; "I'm feeling swell. I panned hell out of that show at the Hamilton yesterday. None of them acts will get another date after my notice gets to the bookers. It's a great life. I slept nine hours and this mornin' the alarm clock didn't go off. I musta broke it last week when I threw it at the old lady, an ex-performer, who was selling pretzels at the back door. Anyway, I'm layin' in bed figurin' how I can wake the wife up so she'll close the window, when an idea hit me like a riveter nudging you with his instrument. Get this—the clock is quieter than the western front, so I leans over to the crib and twist the kid's leg till it starts to yell. Sure enough, the wife is an Ex-Snorer and the window is closed quicker than an agent's door in the face of a contortionist."

"Didn't it hurt the baby?" interrupted the boy.

"What the hell, the little punk's gotta learn to take it sometime, ain't he?" continued Fing. "If you're goin' to be a critic there ain't no use in goin' half way. I heard that Winchell put his two babies on the spot for a kid with a bean blower last week. If you're gonna get the big dough you gotta be a louse. And believe me, I'm gonna be the first Siamese louse in the game."

"I don't know," broke in the office boy, "I've always heard that clean living and a good word meant everything."

"Yer wrong for win and place with them two opinions," barked Fing as he tore open the end of a Lucky Strike container and slunk into his ricketty chair. "Clean livin' won't get you no place. I know a guy in a publicity tie-up with the Lifebuoy people. He started on an endurance washing test and stayed under a shower bath for 43 days, using something like 700 cakes of soap. Today he's got webbed feet and his body's so shiny he has to stay in the house when the sun's out. That's what clean livin' did for him."

"But a good word goes a long way," parried the boy hopefully.

"Pistachios—and that's miniature for nuts—is my answer to that proverb," exhaled Fing as he pressed the lighted end of his Lucky into his wrist to see if he could take it. "No one ever made any money out of a good word, except the firm that publishes the Gideon. And they tell me the public is gettin' wise to them. Last month "Ex-Wife" outsold them two to one."

"Well, maybe I'm wrong," ventured the boy. He hadn't been with "Variety" long enough to have his ego starched.

Just Nerve

"Yer as wrong as a moron's income tax return," growled the critic. "Actors and toupees were made to be criticized. I make my living panning hams and I've lanced more swelled heads with my pen than Nathan. Actors don't scare me, son. I've panned a lion act and gone into the cage the next day looking for an ad."

At this point in the conversation, a loud thump was heard on the floor above.

"What was that?" asked the office boy nervously.

"Nothing," replied Fing. "Sime musta slipped off his chair, I guess. He keeps rolling off his chairs and daises."

"But daises won't tell," laughed the boy.

"That'll be enough of that," cautioned Fing. "It's lucky some film magnate didn't hear that crack, or you'd be on yer way to Hollywood. Save yer comedy, y'may be a master of ceremonies some day."

"Nobody ever got famous with one crack," said the kid.

"The Liberty Bell ain't had no press agent," challenged Fing.

Loud voices sounded in the room above, followed by a succession of thumps on the floor as though it were raining corpses overhead. Fing retained his tranquillity, but the boy scooted under the nearest desk.

"What's that," trembled the boy's voice from the interior of a waste basket.

"Nothin'," answered Fing; "I guess Pat Casey stopped in to say hello to Sime."

The boy came out of the basket, dusted several unpaid bills from his shoulders, and returned to his chair.

"We'd better get to work," he said, "If Casey starts saying goodbye to Sime, they'll both come through the ceiling and see us loafing."

"Okay," agreed Fing. Where's the mail?"

"Right here," said the boy, rising from his chair, "and it's pretty heavy this morning."

"I ain't panned that many acts," gasped Fing, as the boy dragged out a crate filled with letters.

A Questionnaire—and Answers

"No, it's that questionnaire," explained the boy. "The one we sent out last week. You know, the one to the vaudeville actors about conditions."

"Do we have to ask them about conditions? Can't we look out the window?" grunted the critic.

"Yeah—but actors are disappearing and this is a trade paper. We have to know what's becoming of them," argued the kid.

"They haven't found out what became of them Indians yet," countered Fing, "and I believe in one problem at a time. I don't mind panning actors but I ain't goin' lookin' for them to pursue my art."

"Well, these letters will explain everything," finished the boy.

"What was the questionnaire the boss sent out?" inquired Fing, throwing his cigarette butt on top of Halperin's desk where it wouldn't be found for days.

"I don't remember the whole of it," explained the boy, "but the idea was to find out if the standard acts had gone daylight saving. What the people were doing and how the actors were getting along, during the depression." With this he dumped a stack of answers in front of the critic.

"Bein' a critic at heart, I'm hoping for the worst," he venomed, "so get your ears ready for an audition and I'll read you some of these wails." He tore open the first envelope with fiendish glee.

"Who's that from," queried the boy.

"Strains Cats and Rats," replied Fing.

"I was wondering what had become of that act," piped the kid. "What's he say?"

"Listen to this," started Fing, as he rubbed the letterhead to see if it was engraved. "Dear Variety: You want to know what I have been doing with my cats and rats lately. I am better off than ever since I quit show business. Vaudeville was so cheesy towards the end that my rats were getting fatter than the cats. I have opened the Strain Lease Breaking Company and have more business than you can shake a stick at. If you have a stick, I have the business. If a person has trouble with the landlord and wants to break a lease, I get a contract for 30 days, pay or play, from the party.

"The first week I open in the apartment with my trained beaver Rose. She gnaws plenty of holes around the joint. I generally allow her a week to work single. No need of rushing her and wearing out her teeth on account of a beaver, with false teeth, not being worth a cent by a dam site. When Rose gets everything set, the second week I open in the apartment with the rats. I rehearse them getting in and out of the new holes. They do a Roxy drill in the living room and some single and double routines around the apartment, until the people get used to them. The third week the tenant complains to the landlord and brings him up to show him the rats. By this time the rats think they are in stock—and they put it on plenty for the landlord. The lease is broken and the family moves out. Naturally, the landlord is frantic and the fourth week I present him with a card to show that I am president of the Animated Exterminator League. I explain about my trained cats that remove rats from a building without killing them on the premises. He goes for it every time and I work the cats in pairs, to fill in the full week, and they carry the rats through the lobby in their teeth. You know the old finish we used to do. The cats miss the smell of grease paint and Proctors, Portchester, but, for myself, I am glad to be out of show business'."

After 20 Years

"He's all set," said the office boy who had listened intently.

"Yeah, but he's one in a million," croaked Fing. "Most of them must be finding it tough. Here's one from the Flying Throckmortons. It says, 'Dear Variety—After 20 years of horizontal bar work we are glad to be out of the racket. We couldn't get any vaudeville dates. Finally we had to quit playing state fairs on account of the woodpeckers flocking on the bars while we was working. The committee couldn't see us and wouldn't pay off as the contract didn't call for a bird act. We finally quit and arrived home with the three bars pretty well discouraged—not to mention our own feelings. Not for long though as my partner sold one of the bars to a midget who was a nut on pole-vaulting. That left us with one overhead on two bars, until we went into business with Minimo, the wirewalker. We rigged his wire over the horizontal bars and opened the Independent Radio Receiving Station. We ain't been able to get no messages yet, only a buzzing noise when Minimo jumps off after he practices every day.

"The resin we had left over we gave to the Home of Orphan Violinists so the concertoes won't be raspy when the kids play on visiting days. Not only that but we are not bothered by handkerchief salesmen who annoyed us for 20 years while we were acrobats. Viva la depression, Pietro Throckmorton. P. S. My partner is French and insisted on closing the letter—after years of closing shows it is only natural I guess.'"

"Say, it ain't so tough for actors as you hoped," added the boy as Fing attacked another envelope.

"Can you beat that," snarled the critic; "imagine them doin' well after the years I've panned them and the country in this condition, too."

"Everything happens for the best," echoed the boy. "It's an ill wind that blew the Shamrock in second again this year."

"Maybe yer right," hissed Fing, "but if this next letter shows that some actor is doing better than ever, I'll do something desperate."

"Don't tell me you're going to solicit advertising for the 'Clipper,'" gasped the kid.

"No," flung back Fing, "I've still got something up my sleeve, but wait till I read one more letter." As he spoke he ventilated the envelope.

"Who's it from?" asked the office boy.

Flash Act Producer

"This can't be good," chuckled Fing. "It's from Alaxe Garbo—the guy who used to put on girl acts for the booking office. Listen—'Dear Variety, I suppose you think that conditions have ruined me. Well, you're wrong, I saw the handwriting on the wall and I'm no interior decorator. I produced many a "Flash in the Pan," and when everything folded up but the 10 cent road maps, I had enough scenery left over to play any date the Grand Canyon might cancel. I stole all the ideas for my girl acts and when I had nothing left but the scenery I knew I had to get busy and cop a thought to get it out of the storehouse. As soon as I saw the golf course back of the Roxy, I got the idea. I have opened a circuit of Traveling Tom Thumb Courses. We play nothing but high class vacant stores and open lots. After the people play 18 holes the cast comes out of a prop club house and runs through the act. This way the people are ready to open if vaudeville ever comes back. Meantime, there is no storage on the scenery. Let me know when Variety is going to open an apple concession in the office as I am fond of them.

"I guess you're wrong Fing," enthused the office boy. "In spite of all of your panning and conditions, it looks as though actors can take care of themselves under any circumstances."

"Maybe you think so, but I'll show you different," yelled Fing, as he removed his raccoon coat from the safe. "If I can't make it miserable for them through the press, I'll do it in person."

"What're you going to do, Fing?" cried the office boy, as Variety's ace critic dashed for the door.

"I'm going to set fire to the N. V. A.," shouted Fing as he disappeared in traffic.

Moral

If a critic stands five feet four in his stocking feet (if stockings), he can never get even with an actor.

P. S.—Providing the actor is six feet.

O. M. SAMUEL of New Orleans—Look at 'Im

Before and After 25 Years of "Variety"

As Was in 1905

As Is in 1930

In the mugg above, two muggs in fact, you see the biggest of all "Variety" muggs.

This mugg, Samuel, has corresponded 25 years for "Variety" for nothing. Twice he has resigned in that period; thrice he went on strike, but neither when he got balky nor peevish was any attention paid to him. Each time he came back. No more notice was taken of his return as the New Orleans correspondent than when he quit.

It's only about a month ago Mister Samuel was advised by "Variety" that if he didn't stop fooling around down South and do a little work for this paper, he would be fired. He answered characteristically by wiring in a gag—collect.

The Pay Off

That's how Mister Samuel has been paid off for his "Variety" correspondence, he has had his gagging printed. Sometimes poetry by O. M. Samuel. Either or any time there's an O. M. Samuel gag or poetry in "Variety," you hear a groan from coast to coast.

How Sam got on the paper no one remembers. How he stayed on no one can explain. For years New Orleans ranked with Syracuse and St. Paul as a show town. That must have been it. No one knew he was on. His reward as "Variety's" scribbler was in meeting managers and actors. Further pleasure has been taking the actors out, mostly to that night court on Sunday evening in New Orleans.

Then came the pictures and New Orleans went off its nut. It built a deluxe on Canal street, the first theatre on that main thoroughfare. The town was so excited over the first one, it built the second before realizing that the first alone would be enough in the red. When the pictures arrived, Sammie got to reporting, even for "The States," the New Orleans daily. When Sam came to New York, and always with his wife, he wrote back to "The States" what the plays on Broadway looked like. When he went to Paris, always with his wife, Sam did the same thing. Finally, "The States" seemed to have had enough of the Samuel thing, but "Variety" still strings along with the kid, mostly because of his wife, Helen, a nice girl, with the misfortune to have as her husband a mugg.

Terrible Stuff

Of all the terrible stuff "Variety" has had to print for its only non-pay correspondent, and all of it has been worse than that, below is the most terrible.

(From "Variety," Aug. 18, 1916)

NAMES FOR TWO-ACTS

By O. M. SAMUEL

Finn and Haddie.

However, as long as the mugg works for "Variety" for nothing, he can stick, and also go away in the summer for his vacation, but if the guy should squawk for space rates or even a touch, he will be aired.

The White Rats

Reported earlier in December of the voluntary abandonment by the White Rats, renamed American Artists Federation, of its union affiliated charter from the American Federation of Labor, thusly disappeared a 30-year old 100% organization of variety players. It was second in age only to the International Artisten Loge of Germany, the parent body of all actor societies with headquarters in Berlin, where it continues in its Continental variety field.

Following the White Rats into unionized circles as representatives of the American actor was Equity, some years later. Equity also continues, in between and after creation of the White Rats in the early 1900's and Equity in 1918, or a year before, have been other actors' organziations, but none, barring a minor mid-west attempt to organize affiliated with labor unions.

The White Rats had a vivid record. It was a belligerent body and during its best years made many a fight on behalf of the variety actor. Though the White Rats went to destruction through its battles with managers, whatever benefits or concessions or improvements came about in the playing conditions of the variety artist may be traced directly to those same self-destructive struggles of the Rats society.

The Rats taught the theatre manager it is easier, better and cheaper to go along with the actor, give a point here and there, than to fight him, as the managers fought the Rats, with the managers at all times during those fights under the leadership of the late E. F. Albee. Albee fought the Rats in their first strike. He whipped them. It was Albee who again fought them as the managers' head in their second and third strikes. He whipped them again, each time, but in the end Albee whipped himself out of the show business.

It was true E. F. Albee, long before his death in 1930, would have given many of his millions to have regained the good will he never had with any genuine vaudeville artist. That ill-will made by Albee with the variety actors extended to all parts of the show business, not only with actors but managers. It all started with Albee's intense fights against the actor. And all that Albee in his final years did or tried to do to establish himself as a friend of the actor he had pursued so unmercifully for over 20 years before, availed him nothing.

That is the one great big thing standing out on the record of the White Rats—that it did something for all actors. Why it failed itself is a different story, and also of another man, Harry Mountford, an Englishman.

The Rats was founded by the late George Fuller Golden, the leading monologist of his time and perhaps ever since. The managers called Golden a dreamer, an idealist or plain idlot. Because Golden wanted to organize the actors. The vaudeville actors, who, in those days thought $150 a week and two weeks' work in succession their triumph. Yet Golden's "dreams" today are what the Actors' Equity still stand upon, what brought the Rats forward to its near-successes, and what has changed the entire internal complexion of the vaudeville player in his relations with the theatres and their managers.

Got Recognition

The Rats forced recognition, at least of the actor, if not for itself; it made the manager respect the actor, as an individual or collectively; it taught the manager the safer way is not to monkey with the actor, and that the actor to the manager is an asset, not a chattel.

Notwithstanding, and after obtaining much that it went after, besides a substantial position as the White Rats of America, Mountford knocked it all over, twice. The Rats as the forerunner of Equity should have been both; Mountford in his over zealousness for power should have realized it, and the Rats might have been the dominant actors' organization over all actors in this country, but neither it nor Mountford ever had an actual chance of obtaining either goal.

In 1905 the White Rats meeting very secretly called a strike on the Keith and associate vaudeville theatres. It was over the Keith idea of assessing its contracted actors 5% of their salary as its commission for its own booking. That was and still is an unsound commercial movement. Although the 5% commission for booking offices has grown to be an established custom of the variety show trade, it remains unsound and thereby unhealthy, for the employer.

With the failure of the Rats in 1905, a depression about organization spread over the actors. The commission charge was in effect and the sharp but brief strike of the unorganized actors had left its marks all around. The Rats maintained a one room office in the St. James building at Broadway and 26th street, which building also held the important variety managers and agents of that day.

"Variety's" Articles

In 1906, "Variety," then a very young paper, started a series of weekly articles headed: "Why the Artists Should Organize." In the Rats office in those days might be found Ezra Kendall, Ed Keogh and a few of the faithful, usually sitting around doing nothing. Never more than three seemed to be in the office at one time. None expressed any interest in "Variety" or its articles.

The "Variety" articles continued, for many months. It seemed at that time as though only "Variety" in the entire show business saw any chance of another actors' organization.

In 1907 an English act came to New York, Mountford and Walsh. They came over here on speculation and got a trial week at the Percy G. Williams' Williamsburgh (Brooklyn) theatre. They never got another week. Harry Mountford had been somewhat active in variety artists circles of England. He horned in on the Rats over here, aroused enthusiasm through his forceful speeches, was appointed an officer of the Rats and things commenced to move.

The Rats grew rapidly, and Mountford seemed overwhelmed. It was at this time he sensed power of the future, and it undid him. He called the White Rats out on strike, and again the Rats were whipped. In the interim Mountford had started "The Player," as the Rats' official organ, with the avowed intent to drive "Variety" out of the trade paper field.

This was a fatal error by Mountford. It weaned "Variety" away from the support of the Rats. In the next fight eight years after, Mountford again lost the support of "Variety" by a broken promise.

Up to the time of "Variety's" entrance into the trade paper division of the show business, no show paper had ever printed the complaint of a variety artist against a manager. That is as extraordinary as it is true. The managers completely ran all trade papers. Artists from 1905 onward for a while never did understand "Variety's" policy and would ask about it. They were correctly informed that as no other paper was doing it, "Variety" did, for "Variety."

Supported the Rats

"Variety" had given constant support to the White Rats. Mountford was permitted to take his credit, although "Variety" had been building up the Rats from 1906, while he was merely talking. Mountford should have taken the lesson of the first strike he lost, for he discovered then that when "Variety," with the White Rats having a paper of its own which practically told "Variety" the Rats didn't want its this paper withdrew its support from the Rats, many of its members remaining in sympathy with "Variety," not Mountford, although they did continue their loyalty to the Rats.

That same condition arose with the third White Rats strike, Mountford's second. Mountford broke a pledge to "Variety" when he called that third strike without "Variety's" consent. And again when "Variety" walked out on the Rats, as it had to do in face of Mountford's broken word, again ever so many members of the Rats coincided with "Variety." And the Rats lost again.

A short while after Mountford lost his first Rats strike, he called at "Variety's" office and asked the paper's publisher to have breakfast with him. This the publisher did. Present besides those two, was Johnny O'Connor, then on "Variety" and thoroughly familiar with any vaudeville situation.

Mountford pleaded for the support of "Variety" once more for the White Rats, in its news columns and for credit for advertising. It was a long argument. Mountford was accused of bad faith toward "Variety," that the starting of "The Player" with its purpose exposing Mountford's aim for power had been a bad move in many ways, and other incidents were cited.

The outcome of that breakfast was the "Variety" duo agreeing to consent to both of Mountford's requests on the unchangeable understanding that neither Mountford, nor anyone else in the White Rats, would call or permit a strike by the Rats while "Variety" was supporting the organization, without the consent of "Variety." Mountford solemnly agreed and everyone shook hands on it.

2-Way Plug

A campaign started in "Variety," the paper plugging the Rats and the Rats advertising. Recovery by the Rats was the surprise of vaudeville. Its members increased, its surplus ran up and Mountford bragged of both. He could. The Rats' cash surplus then was over $250,000. Its membership had exceeded any previous record by hundreds.

Right in the midst of this "Variety" printed a story that the White Rats contemplated another strike against the managers. Mountford did not deny it. He had never consulted with "Variety" nor any one of its staff. The story was printed in the regular custom of news gathering. Mountford did not call on or call up anyone on "Variety," but proceeded with his strike plans. The strike was first to be called in Chicago.

Wanted to Know

About a week before Mountford called his strike by the Rats, he, with Jim Fitzpatrick, called at "Variety's" office at Broadway and 45th street. He asked what would be "Variety's" attitude on the strike. He was told plenty. Fitzpatrick heard this entire conversation with other things. He joined and agreed with Mountford even after informed of the broken pledge.

In the next issue of "Variety" was an editorial against the strike. It

Britain Needs Foreign Acts

London, Dec. 18.

About 90 American acts were imported last year. Their average playing time was about five weeks, some only lasting for one week. Some hung on for six months.

Of the 90 about 18 have been considerable hits, and the same number have just got by. Nine have been definite flops, and the rest fairly good.

The cause of failure was either utterly unsuitable material or ill-advised routines.

Many of the successful acts were not worth their money, particularly in the provinces. Hence their limited stay.

Reeves & Lamport, Henry Sherek, and Fosters Agency were the major importers, Ernest Edelsten and Parnell & Zeitlin were responsible for a few.

General Theatres Corp., accounted for most of the imported acts, with Stolls lining up a small number, but in many cases this circuit played acts which had come over for General Theatres. Moss Empires and the Syndicate Halls accounted for some imports.

The vaudeville position in England at present is if anything a little better than usual. Four weeks can be had from each of General Theatres, Stolls and Moss Empires.

The Syndicate Halls are good for at least two weeks, D. J. Clarke has a month spread over Dublin, Belfast, Sheffield and Birkenhead. Lumley has the Pavilion, Glasgow, while Fred Collins can give three weeks in Scotland and a week in Liverpool. But the maximum he pays is around $500.

Picture Houses

The variety situation among the cinemas has been dealt with in this paper.

It can be reviewed here as a situation in which Gaumont British import American acts through the Bentham office, mostly for four weeks with an option of 16—never yet taken up.

The Astorias—owned by Paramount, Associated British chain, and indie circuits like Bentley's, all take acts.

Most of the Bentham acts have been unsuitable for General Theatres, either being too costly or not for vaudeville.

With General Theatres and Gaumont British pretty much the same thing, the combine could save money by combining activities and booking together. This will probably be done before long with the result contracts will be for a longer time but at lower weekly money.

Possibility is, with Paramount coming into the cinema field here on a big scale, they may import acts direct from Paramount-Publix.

Besides the three important cinema circuits, Gaumont, Associated British and Paramount, smaller circuits like Walter Bentley's take American acts as have the Hyams Brothers who own three cinemas.

Harold Lipson, owning the big indie house, the Commodore, at Hammersmith, has an occasional partiality to imported vaude talent.

With practically no discoveries in native talent the past year, there is still no alternative for English vaudeville and cinema owners but to play American and imported acts.

It looks therefore as though the demand for imported turns in 1931 will increase ore than ever—however much managers may threaten to search for new local talent.

VARIETY'S' COAST GANG ALIBIS AS BEST IT CAN

Hollywood, Dec. 24.

Variety, New York.

Gentlemen (?)

You can imagine how your Hollywood office felt when it read that deliberate insult in "Variety" concerning our failure to anticipate the Bank of Hollywood closing, thereby tying up our own money and the office's, if any.

When the Hollywood staff was still enrolled in Cherryville College the school president called a mass meeting just before the big game.

"Men," he said, "if our team loses we're going to cheer it anyway. We want them to know we're behind them whether they're victor or vanquished." Everybody clapped.

Your Hollywood office has never lost that spirit. When the picture people out here accost us indignantly and ask where the New York office gets those bum steers it prints as news, we smile politely and say: "You know, New York is the center of the world's liquor supply, and those eastern reporters can't help but get their schnozzles wet while prowling around for hot tips. Next week they'll sober up and we'll get the real facts.

That's our spirit, and it looks like we're plenty stuck with it. The last place we expected an attack was from our own flesh and blood, excluding Jack Pulaski, in the New York office.

You say we pulled a "100% muff"; by not anticipating the bank closing and not withdrawing our money. We did know about the closing—10 minutes before it happened. We immediately called a staff meeting to vote on whether we should rush over and spirit away our life savings. One of the boys was out trying to run down a hot tip that Clara Bow was in some sort of gambling fracas and had received a lot of front page publicity, so we decided to wait fc his vote. He didn't show up until the following Monday, and even then he didn't know who he was, so we decided to withdraw our accounts without his consent.

We marched over to the bank single file, and there were a lot of policemen and peasants standing around it.

"We're from Variety," we told one of the policemen. "We want to get our money out of this bank." The policeman laughed. We went back to the office and talked it over.

"Let's leave the money in there," suggested one of the boys. "If we try to take it out we're liable to start a run, and then there'll be a general panic." He paused dramatically. "Remember," he said, "the spirit we acquired at Cherryville."

So we all remembered, and we left our money in the bank. It was a sacrifice, but it averted a panic.

We hope you can see how unfairly you treated us. And by the way, several of the boys suggest that you have some large "V's" made up to be worn on our sweaters. After a staff member has three page one lead stories printed he is to be given his "V" and a testimonial dinner.

That will make us feel more like we did at Cherryville.

Yours,

The Hollywood Staff.

Irene Franklin Most Popular

The popularity contest for women vaudeville artists in the three Percy G. Williams houses ended Saturday night with Irene Franklin (Franklin and Green) a decisive winner of the American contestants, and Alice Lloyd well in advance of the English entrants.

On the last day of voting (Sunday) all but the six leaders were withdrawn. The vote for the first half dozen women:

Irene Franklin	7,414
Eva Tanguay	6,083
Alice Lloyd	2,984
Vesta Victoria	2,141
Gertrude Hoffman	1,758
Marie Dressler	1,702

Up until Friday Miss Franklin was in second place, but the week-end vote sent her swiftly to the head of the procession and every performance added to her lead. Franklin and Green are playing in Syracuse this week. Next week they are in Washington; after that they will be played around the Williams Metropolitan circuit immediately for a return date.

Unique

When the count was completed Mr. Williams conferred upon the American comedienne the title of "Queen of Vaudeville." Her position is unique, she being the only vaudeville artiste declared to be the favorite in a contest with the most prominent entertainers in the field, decided directly by a representative audience, a verdict from which there can be no appeal.

Friends of Eva Tanguay were offering to bet 10 to 1 on her chances when on Thursday she led the field by about 700 votes, but when on Sunday Miss Franklin had made up this lead and smothered the other by a margin of over 1,000 their sporting desires withered.

Vallee's Vacation Job

Rudy Vallee goes to Miami Beach for a vacation during the early part of February. He will stay away two weeks, but will continue broadcasting for the Fleischmann Hour from WJZ). Vallee may accept a hotel engagement at Miami while there. He will not do any barnstorming as he did last summer in New England.

His contract with Publix permits him to take the two weeks in winter aside from his stipulated summer leave of absence. It doesn't expire until June, 1931.

Editor Variety:

In reply to the article in Variety, May 23, entitled, "Recent Magic Expose Acts," we being the "Kings of Expose Magic," are most likely the principal ones at which the article is aimed, and being such, are well able to hold up our end against all complaints and arguments that may be made in the favor of guarding closely all magical secrets. We herewith state a few things in favor of "Expose Magician," if such we artists must be termed.

If the Society of American Magicians wish to know the proper policy to pursue to eradicate the expose of their business secrets, the most important place to begin is among themselves. When artists who belong to that society live up to the rules of their order which quite a few of them do not, the effect will soon be felt by the "Expose Magician", who belongs to no society for protection of magical secrets and is in no way bound to protect secrets and cannot be held in the manner that members of the society who expose magic should be.

We refer to a magician who has lobby photos showing billiard balls, palmed on both the front and back of his hands. Also another magician, who by photos and lithos shows cards in the same position. Also, what is more of "magical expose" than one of our most esteemed brother artists publishing a book with, "All you want to know about magicians and their methods; all the tricks you have ever seen, clearly explained and illustrated", which is on sale to anybody?

The largest manufacturer of magical goods in this country had lately on exhibit in this window a billiard ball apparatus which could be seen both front and back, the back explaining the secret to hundreds of the uninitiated public who passed the window daily.

Many other incidents could be mentioned but for lack of space.

Another object in favor of the "Expose Magicians," however crude it may seem, is the fact that it will awaken the magician and spur him on to the invention of new illusions and tricks, as tricks and illusions exposed by the "Expose Magician" are usually old and weather beaten therefore benefiting the magical art in general.

In response to the statement, "There is no man working on the stage today exposing secrets who can give a straight magical entertainment"; will say that at the age of 17 years under the name of L. P. Adams, I held down the stage twice a day, for 24 minutes at the Boston Musical Hall (now Orpheum) and I have had seven years more experience. I can safely say I could even do better now.

Adams and Mack,
"Burlesque and Expose Magicians."

New York, June 1.

Editor Variety:

Of course, as I originate all my own tricks and illusions used by me in public performances, and have them all patented in every country, I am not affected by the so-called "Expose Magicians" referred to in Variety, May 23, but am still liable to the general injury caused legitimate magicians through a public exhibition involving professional secrets of even minor tricks.

In my opinion it must appeal to every intelligent auditor who has ever witnessed a stage performance where an exposer of magic has appeared, that the person giving the expose must in the natural course of events be a very inferior magician and the reason for this is simple, since if the exposer could perform to mystify his audiences he would not have to reveal others' secrets.

It is surprising to me that an audience which ordinarily likes to be mystified will allow exposer to continue. Any one with 10 cents, if he can locate the proper store, may buy books which tell about these tricks the exposers expose. It requires no art to be an expose magician where the necessary capital in brains and money only reach the sum of 10 cents. But it does require brains to originate and perform tricks in the bright lights of the theatre, and deceive thousands of people weekly.

There is no art in exposing magic. The audience enters the theatre to be amused, but are not even entertained with this kind of stuff. Magic is art and the performance of it is an artistic exhibition if properly presented, but there is no expose magician who may claim to be an artist and have himself believed.

In my opinion the very worse legitimate magician who is a public performer will reach a higher position as an entertainer than the very best expose magician can ever hope to attain. This is relative difference between a legitimate and expose magician, if the exposer is entitled to the term of "magician" at all.

I should think managers would take a hand in this and stop the pleayune practice of these small performers who work at the expense of a legitimate magician.

I for one am bitterly opposed to the exposer without any whys or wherefores. Horace Goldin.

New York, June 1.

Editor Variety:—

Relative to the suppression of expose magic, illusions and tricks, I would like to bring your attention to various phases of that matter that may interest.

All exposers of magic are relegated to the opening position and generally stay there forever, having no possible chance of bettering their position on bill or salary.

During my engagement at Keith's, Providence, while conversing with Manager Lovenberg, he informed me that no one had been asked to expose material, and he thought acts would meet with better approval if they did not. An expose act lost its charm after the first performance, was then considered as nil and so treated.

It is self evident that it does not pay to expose magic, for the exposers of the Favs never amounted to much, and now that they are going to do the same act and not expose it, I am certain they will be able to play return dates, which is a fact I think they have never yet been able to do.

Exposers kill the goose which lays the golden eggs and instead of harming others, their own performance acts as a boomerang and sinks them into oblivion.

Years ago Hermann and Kellar had an argument and both exposed the other's tricks. Neither made any money out of the war, and their most prosperous sason was when they simply endeavored to mystify the audiences.

These examples ought to act as object lessons to exposers and cause them to desist from a practice which makes them outcasts from their profession and distasteful alike to managers and the general public. Houdini.

Montreal, Can., May 30.

Editor, Variety:—

Permit me as a magician to say a few words in re so-called magicians exposing tricks in magic.

In nine cases out of ten you will find they do not attempt to expose tricks that require skilful work with the hands, thus proving that they are not capable of doing a show that could mystify.

The sooner the magical fraternity not only of America but also England, band together tighter for the sole object of erasing these exposers, the better it will be.

I think if legitimate magicians would write the various makers of magical goods to cease supplying exposers the manufacturers would be willing to render all possible assistance. Thomas Dermott.

ROADHOUSE RAID

Galveston, Dec. 27.

State rangers raided the Silver Slipper roadhouse, near Port Arthur, and arrested three men who were bound over to the grand jury in $1,000 bail each on gaming charges. Those held were C. J. Dunn, proprietor; Pete McCarty and R. L. Haze.

Nearly 75 guests in the club were allowed to leave. Fixtures and furnishings were demolished.

Indie Evolution

An indie booker asking for a full stage comedy flash on morning of the opening day at his house was stuck with no offers at noon. He then cried for a four-people act, later a three-act, then a double.

At two o'clock, with matinee time on hand, he almost grabbed a single for the spot.

At 2:10 he settled for a midget.

Children and Vaudeville

For over 30 years vaudeville has been the entertainment for children. A variety show is like what the kids want.

Children will never tire of the acrobats or the jugglers or the magicians; they like low comedy as well as animal acts, and they like the talk of the funny men when it is not in a dramatic sketch nor a serious monolog.

After various tries by the picture theatres of programs for children made up of films and the failure to locate one positive policy that will constantly attract the children, the only certain way to bring the kids into a theatre regularly seems to be vaudeville.

The stage acts may be a part of a picture show, and the picture itself may hold the children more or less, but the certain part of the matinee or evening performance which always will be best enjoyed by the kids will be the vaudeville.

This fact was first discovered by the late B. F. Keith. Even those of middle age will recall with what scrupulousness Keit demanded that acts in the Keith theatres be thoroughly clean; he forbade swear words or anything off-side. Not because of personal disinclination for that sort of entertainment, but to make his theatres safe for children. Keith was enough of a showman to realize if he could draw and hold the children, he would get their parents. So it proved while the original B. F. Keith policy was followed. But when the Keith name was sold to theatres in towns where Keith did not operate, at $25 weekly, and the name of Keith made common by the shows as well as what kind of shows were given under that brand, Keith vaudeville started to slide.

A picture like Paramount's "Tom Sawyer" occurs now and then, a picture for children. Though "Tom Sawyer," as previously commented upon in "Variety," although a decided screen hit with the kids, failed to develop over average gross drawing power, as the parents did not turn out at night. Their children went in the afternoon when the admission prices were at the lowest. This gave the theatres big afternoon business in numbers but not in money, and with the light night trade resulted in but an average gross for the theatre.

Catching On

Vaudeville of the right kind, well booked, is quite apt to be the only entertainment that will once more catch on with the children and make them want to see a show every week. An afternoon at the theatre is a recreation for children, if they can be amused. It's a holiday to them.

Where a picture combined with the vaude is too sophisticated for the kids, that will be noticed by the parents and take care of that possible objection. Vaudeville may also draw back the children to the screen, through watching both continuously.

Vaudeville adaptable to children calls for a skillful booker. What is known as an independent booker who books for the salary only and chisels both the manager and the actor should not be permitted to book vaude bills intended to attract the young. Such bookers don't know enough about their professed business to book any kind of a vaude bill. They will merely ruin the town for the independent manager who listens to their promises.

Brand Vaude

There is a belief that but a brand vaude show can instill confidence in a house or town. There may be a deal in that. The brand name, such as Keith's before it was ruined, goes far in establishing a confidence in the show before seen. That means so much more in its acceptance and appreciation.

Acts playing four times or more daily in a vaude bill is another angle, over which there is a difference of opinion. It is unquestioned that acts playing daily four times or more (the more on the week-ends) do not give their best show. They believe they are overworked, that four-a-day makes them mechanical and that they can not stand that grind labor.

Disadvantages

To play four-a-day every day removes from the vaude circuit known as a three-a-day, the advantage of its prestige for vaude, when it goes on a par with the picture house; it estops the vaude circuit from having the best first choice of acts since the acts deem all circuits playing four-daily alike, and it prevents circuits playing four from obtaining acts as cheaply as they do when playing three-a-day and exclusive in that field.

Three-a-day makes for better bills, leaves the circuits playing them more distinctive and with a more firmly established trade, while in the long run the three-a-day vaudfilm house will return a steadier weekly gross than its wavering picture house competitor, that may jump up one week and fall down for the next three weeks.

That Other Green Room

By Joe Laurie, Jr.

I'm supposed to get out a Christmas column. Something about Santa Claus with a laugh or two in it. Or maybe to write about the laughs and heartaches the troupers have on the road on Christmas Day. Something about a couple in their dingy hotel room in a tank town, with nothing to look forward to but a lot of open time. They have a synthetic Christmas tree on a table with a couple of 10 cent store candles on it.

There's a red box with a bottle of perfume for the wife; the perfume she admired in the drug store window that you sneaked back and got for her. And there's a pair of house slippers for "daddy," besides half a dozen handkerchiefs she initialed while you were out of the room, 'cause if you saw 'em it wouldn't be a surprise.

Just little cheap gifts, but they bring you closer together. You plan when you get the breaks you will buy her a car and a home in the country. And she's going to get you a cane and swell ties and those Russian pajamas. But right now the perfume, slippers and handkerchiefs are okay. And look, he dug up a pint of gin. Not a bad Christmas at that.

Then there's the troupers on the road who can't spend the holiday with their kids. Troupers have a way of having kids all over the country. Also the gang in the big shows who get together after the performance and have a swell blowout, with a big tree, presents, wine and laughs.

Absentees

But somehow I'm far away from all these things. I am thinking of the boys and girls of the big troupe who will not be with us this Christmas. I mean the pals that passed on in 1930. The more I think of it the more I fee' there must be a place here troupers go.... I can see a big beautiful green-room; I hear voices, music and laughter....

Look, there's Will Cressy. You remember Cressy and Dayne? Well, that's Bill talking to Rudolph Shilkraut and Oscar Figman, two grand old troupers. Bill is telling them about an idea he has for a sketch and what great parts he is writing for them. Howard Langford strolls over, which reminds Bill that he can stick in a part for a great light comedian like Howard. Who's that in the corner? "When you see your sister—tell her that, tell her that." I remember that voice. Sure, it's Conroy and Le Maire, back together again.

There's Hal Parker as master ceremonies. He's calling everybody to order. "Next will be Jimmy Steiger at the piano playing an old song and dance for Patsy Doyle. Gee, how Patsy can dance! Come on make Jimmy play "Rose Colored Glasses." Who's next? Ah, Lon Chaney and Milton Sills. What fine actors they are. John Le Claire juggling while Charlie Diamond plays an accompaniment on a harp, and how he plays it. Now Fritz Williams is telling stories about his Lambs Club and Clark Silvernail is leading the applause.

Fixing the Tree

The girls are fixing the tree. There's Rene Masters, Mrs. J. C. Nugent, Adele Ritchie and Mabel Normand. They're busy hanging candy canes and toys 'cause there are some trouper's kids at this party, too. I recognize sweet little Bunny Conlin, she looks the same as she did at Winnipeg when we had that big tree for her. And the kids are all laughing; why shouldn't they? Look, A. O. Duncan, the dean of ventriloquists, has his dummies out and the k'ds love it. And who is that funny fellow clowning and taking falls all over the place? Sure, it's Gordon Dooley.

Charles Gilpin sings a Christmas carol.... and what a voice. There goes a guy puttin, his coat collar

It's Gene Green going to do his dope song. He is followed by big Jim Di mond with his acrobatic son, and dance. Don't he get 'em over pretty? Another piano solo, what's that song he's singing? "Sally." There's only one kid can sing it like that, Joe Schenck. Please sing "Cloie," Joe?....No? You'd rather play something so Jack Donahue can dance? That's strictly okay. Those magic feet.

Who's that knocking at the door? "Izzy Itchcovitz."....You can't fool us with that voice, it's Jimmy Hussey. Let him in.... what laughs with this guy....

Denver a 9:15 Town

Denver, Dec. 27.

Two radio programs by which four-fifths of Denver go to bed by are Amos and Andy and Seth Parker periods. Both are over at 9:15, which, instead of making Denver a 9 o'clock town, makes it a 9:15 city.

On Dec. 21 NBC had a chance to sell the first 15 minutes usually devoted to Seth Parker, and they did it. From 8:45 until they hooked up Parker's at nine the phones at KOA were swamped with calls. No advance announcement had been made.

LOWRY STICKS IN PITT

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

With Warners sending Jack Haley into the Ambassador, St. Louis, as m.c., Ed Lowry sticks here at the Stanley for a few more months.

Reported to have been some fireworks between the Warner divisions in Pittsburgh and St. Louis over Lowry. John Harris, local WB divisional manager, is claimed to have protested on any move, claiming that the Stanley had invested heavily in exploiting Lowry and stood to take it on the chin if he should be taken away at this time.

Tottering Burlesque

This year has been the toughest test for burlesque.

The racket, which from inception has been characterized as the cheapest form of entertainment, in nature of entertainment and not price at the gate, has deteriorated to a spot where it's practically tuning up for the swan song.

Sam Scribner, head of the erstwhile Columbia wheel, probably saw the handwriting on the wall for the washup of burlesque three years ago and vamped. Mutual Circuit, practically a babe in the field, took over the Columbia holdings and after three years is about beginning to figure Scribner was right.

When burlesque was on the toboggan and Columbia wheel attempting to give them what was classified as "refined burlesque," Mutual edged in and gave it to them "ruffined" and they went for it temporarily.

Mutual shows in the first five years of its six years' existence went the limit on rough stuff and stripping of dames. The limit is right. After having reached a point where the shows could not top the filth and undress of previous seasons, Mutual this season has found itself up against an unsurmountable barrier. The stages of the country may be crying for "flesh" but not the kind Mutual has been projecting. Mutual pegged its existence on the strip stuff and has stripped the dames as far as the law allows in liberal spots and much further than it permits in others, with the pinches and convictions in several cities the best answer.

Mutual started out with 37 shows and 37 houses last September. After a weeding out, mainly due to box office anemia at some of the wheel's best stands, the current line-up now lists 27 shows and 24 houses, which means a three-week layoff for the survivors and probably a lopping off of additional shows if several doubtful stands should toss out burlesque.

Another Try

I. H. Herk, with last season's losses in mind and in a quandary as to what might be done to resuscitate interest in burlesque attempted to do a Scribner at the outset of the season by demanding that the shows should take on an air of refinement, curtail the former successive strip brigades and get the women and children patronage at the matinees. The idea proved a bust in the first four weeks. After that the Mutuals sent forth their shock troops of soub grinders and hip dislocators, given carte blanche to go the limit with the same order going out for the comics who had been having a hard time holding in after several years on the wheel. Even this didn't help. Mutual is still floundering about for an answer.

Burlesque is still unanimous. If you've seen one show you've seen them all. If an enterprising soub should dig up an overlooked number that's perfect for a runway teaser, it's a cinch every other soub on the wheel will cop it. The wheel execs don't bother about the duplication of either.

Stood Still

Probably there's still a public for burlesque but not the kind it is getting now. Burlesque is the one branch of show business that has stood still for the past 25 years. Unless those who have enthroned themselves as the monarchs of this division of show business show something different, some real entertainment that is not outright smut and some talent that can entertain, they might just as well become convinced their golden goose has gone sterile.

Burlesque in its heyday grabbed public recognition as a leg show. The stenogs have counted this out now and they've got to give them some real entertainment, real talent and more than the current slipshod "turks" if expecting burlesque to survive at its current $1 or $1.50 top, with so much better and cheaper entertainment, all around.

Burlesque as a Killer

The greatest error committed this season by the Mutual wheel was to continue the name of burlesque. That burlesque will kill any theatre hanging it out. It smells all over any town it flies.

Whether wheel burlesque or stock burlesque gave it this reputation is immaterial; it's got it; it's there, and burlesque as a name of an entertainment is now deadly.

With the chances it is too late to change. There was a great chance for the change with the start of this season, with some burlesque houses having the only flesh shows in town.

Herk considered the change, probably with his partners, and rejected the idea. Perhaps they prefer to go bust under their original name. It's a grand principle.

Shubert "Name" Vaude Bills for Subway Route

A glorified vaudeville bill including four name acts and embellished by 16 girls, some skits from past musicals and an afterpiece, tossed together by the Shuberts as a possible means of keeping some of their dark theatres open, started at the Majestic, Brooklyn (29). Acts are Norma Terris, Jack Pearl, Harry Richman, Borrah Minnevitch, Amerique and Neville, Neal Sisters, Rex Evans, and an Albertina Rasch troupe. Some of these acts are under contract to the Shuberts.

Arthur Lyons, of Lyons & Lyons, booked the show. It is presented under the agency's name with "Broadway Personalities" as a title. Majestic engagement is reported as under a guarantee and percentage basis for the acts with a minimum guarantee on the week of $10,000 for the show.

Following Brooklyn, if it clicks, the bill will be routed over the Shubert subway route around New York and later on the road.

As Minnevitch is doubling from Billy Rose's "Sweet and Low" for a specialty in the Shubert affair, the harmonica turn will be replaced after Brooklyn. Richman's forthcoming two weeks, Jan. 10-17, at the R-K-O Palace, New York, may force another substitution.

Bill was formed without any new production expenditure, all of the bits and scenes coming from past Shubert shows. New Year's eve grab at the Majestic is figured to lift the gross to the guarantee level this week.

The Shubert theatre, Newark, operated by Morris Schlesinger, is also trying a vaude bill headed by Irene Bordoni, starting Monday (29). House has been dark four weeks straight.

Mutual Playing Solid For First Time in '30

For the first time this season all Mutual shows are working this week. This comes through the two layoff weeks being taken up by fill-in date at the State, Springfield, and the addition of Dayton, O., to the wheel.

If Springfield shows any biz tendencies it's to be added as a regular spoke.

WOOLWORTH BURLESQUE

Louisville Night Spot Operator Tries Stock at 10-25c.

Louisville, Dec. 27.

S. N. Holman, operator of the Danceland, is putting on burlesque shows of a sort at the old Opera House three times a day. He brings some of his talent from Chicago. The current bill consists of 25 entertainers, 16 of whom are women.

Frankie Cohen, who was with the Two-Bit Club, a novel night club with a maximum charge of 25c. for any single order, located in the Louisville hotel, is managing the Opera House. Scale, 10c., 15c. and 25c.

Burlesque Changes

"Sliding" Billy Watson, who was forced to quit his Mutual show, owing to an attack of appendicitis, rejoined the show last week. While he was out his part was played by Al Hilliier.

CAST AT WERBA'S

Shaw & Katz, who also operate the Gotham (N. Y.) burlesque stock, opened Werba's Brooklyn with stock Dec. 26.

The company includes Eddie Kanlan, Charles Harris, Scottie Tridell, Chick Hunter, LaVilla Mae.

RAYMOND HACKETT

Prominent on the screen in "Madam X," "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and other pictures, returns to the stage temporarily in "Up Pops the Devil," in which he is featured at the Belasco, Los Angeles. Hackett was well known on the eastern stage prior to going to Hollywood.

Picture offers for new screen roles promise a busy 1931 for this actor.

Layoff Week Gamble

At the State, Springfield, Mass., not on the Mutual wheel, Joe Catalona of the Mutual office will gamble on playing Mutual layoffs for a few weeks.

The first show, in Dec. 29, is "Silk Stocking Revue," with "Speed Girls" following week.

Burlesque of 25 Years Ago

Burlesque, an offshoot from the varieties with a dame ensemble backing the comics, was just about breezing in as substitute entertainment half way between the variety shows and the more heavier legit melodramas, in 1905. Burlesque was a natural graduation from a more crude form of honkey tonk entertainment which had preceded by a number of years in the come-on music halls.

Both of the above operated as beer gardens, mostly with waiters doubling as comics and the wide-hipped, gold-tooth dames forming the background circle, and all on the make.

Someone got an idea that this was the sort of entertainment the stags wanted, and sold the idea to the Miner boys that such a setup would be a natural as stage entertainment. The Miners went for it. The result was that Miner's Bowery, established as a variety house, used the somewhat different layout and called it "Burlesque." The classification has stuck ever since, but doesn't mean as much now as it did then.

The Miner boys got over with the idea at the Bowery house to such an extent that Big Tim Sullivan, East Side political power with a yen for show business, figured it a good sideline. Together with Dave Kraus, he took over the old Dewey in East 14th street and spotted burlesque there. The Miners branched out and installed burlesque in the old Chelsea district at 8th avenue and 26th street, calling the house Miner's 8th Avenue and later invaded the Bronx, establishing Miner's Bronx, at 149th street and Melrose avenue. The trio of houses made the Miners powers as well as pioneers in the new racket for New York.

When a sufficient number of others figured burlesque as a natural and something different, they formed the Western Burlesque Wheel, first of the wheel circuits in burlesque.

Burlesque in this era sold heavily as a leg show. The rotund choristers were an attraction in those days, also the tights, with the form flash meaning something in contrast to the shoetop length skirts the femmes were then wearing and fashionable for that period.

Squawks

When burlesque got its start, there was the usual hue and cry from the women folk that it was the most brazen, revealing and degenerate form of entertainment. They harped at it so much every mother's son had to sneak in to the shows. If a married man was trailed by the frau and copped coming out of a burlesque house, it meant a family battle. The man of the house in those days was accused of mental infidelity if caught looking at "the shapes."

The caliber of the shows provided good entertainment. The comics and other principals had to do their stuff to last. A few raw jokes crept into the librettos now and then, but it was the gals in tights that gave burlesque its characterization of naughtiness. Later the women became more broad-minded and enjoyed the shows as much as the men. Femme patronage, especially at the afternoon shows, was welcome enhancement to the weekly intake.

Money Maker

Burlesque had advanced with such strides in this era that it was one of the best money making branches of show business, calling for less outlay than the others. Miners and their group had seemingly sewed up everything in the field. But like any other money making racket that clicks, an outside mob muscled in. It happened in the form of the Columbia wheel, promoted by eastern showmen. It eventually absorbed the Western wheel. Columbia during its regime built up a circuit of 50 weeks for burlesque as against 25 which had been top for the former circuit attempts.

Old Formula on B'way

The shows of 1905 were burlesque in every sense of the word. The formula is still being employed on Broadway in the high priced revues. The gags, bits and numbers are still working in current burlesque but not as effectual as before because of the years having worn them threadbare.

Plenty of box office attractions in burlesque in this era and plenty of excitement. Little Egypt's cooch at Miner's Bowery in 1908 brought down plenty of police censure which nearly washed up burlesque. Millie De Leon's ("Girl in Blue") pranced across the stage of Frank B. Carr's "Old Bum" in Williamsburgh, Brooklyn, was another feat that nearly doused the racket a year later. Millie pranced across in the altogether during a scene change and somebody turned on the lights. You couldn't get into the place for months after that, for the mob who saw went out talking about it, figuring the accidental exposure a part of the show.

Burlesque in this era was the up and coming form of entertainment and probably one of the surest investments of show business. The shows were gotten together at a minimum of expense and were certain of from 40 to 50 weeks a season.

That was when burlesque was burlesque. It's all different now.

The Thieving "Dramatic Mirror" Caught Red-Handed With the Goods

Steals from "Variety" a "New Act" Which Never Existed—Swallows Hook, Bait and Sinker—A Sample of "Theatrical Journalism."

The impression borne by "Variety" since "The New York Dramatic Mirror" copied "Variety's" "New Act" department, incorporating it as one of the "Mirror's" features, has been always secondary to our belief that not alone content with stealing an idea from a younger journal "The Mirror" was also actually stealing "Variety's" reviews under New Acts as well.

This has been proven by the issue of "The Mirror" dated May 23, 1908, and published Tuesday, of this week. The parallel reviews below are the finger-pointing proofs.

THERE IS NO ACT NAMED "PLEASANT AND NEWBURG." THERE IS NO SKETCH CALLED "THE UNDERTAKER." BOTH THE TEAM NAME AND THE ACT ARE FICTITIOUS.

Appropriate

"The Undertaker" was selected for a title, as appropriate to the circumstances.

It having been impossible to fix upon "The Mirror's" stealing propensities with any degree of certainty for publication in its customary method of merely "rewriting" "Variety" reviews and news, a "criticism" of an entirely imaginary name and sketch was set as a trap, and "The Mirror" naturally, following its usual custom, fell into it.

The New York "Dramatic Mirror" is the "official organ" of the Comedy Club, an organization formed for "the protection of original material."

"VARIETY"
(May 16, '08)
PLEASANT and NEWBURG
"The Undertaker" (Comedy)
18 Mins.; Four (Interior)
Pastor's

Walter Pleasant and Bijou Newburg are apparently strangers hereabouts. At Pastor's no one knows them. They were on so early in the bill that hardly anybody was present to watch the sketch, "The Undertaker" is quite good in parts. An undertaker (Mr. Pleasant) with "white light" instincts has left his place of business for a trip along Broadway. Before leaving, he discarded his sombre garments, resembling a man of lively proclivities in dress.

His office boy catches him on the way with a message he is demanded immediately at Miss Society's (Bijou Newburg) apartment. Arriving there with his business instinct aroused, he gently inquires as to the departed, but only hinting at the coming period of mourning, in view of Miss Society's high spirits, which he finds himself unable to join or understand.

Miss Society, who believes he is a noted author whom her maid was instructed to call by phone to hear the first chapter of a book she is writing, thinks he is noncommittal and cold, through the well-known self-consciousness of all authors, who drop into the limelight.

Dialogue follows until the undertaker, unable to stand the levity longer in the possible presence of a deceased one, abruptly brings the interview to a close by asking if he shall send for "the wagon."

The writer of the piece is not given, but it forms a nice sketch and was capably played, deserving a better position.

Sime.

"MIRROR"
(May 23, '08)

The following new acts were seen in the local theatres last week:

Fun with a Gloomy Subject

Walter Pleasant and Bijou Newburg appeared in Pastor's in a skit called "The Undertaker." The plot revolves around an adventure participated in by an undertaker and a society woman. The former thinks he has been called for professional purposes, and the latter mistakes the undertaker for an author whom she is expecting. There is a good deal of fun extracted from the situation, and the piece was cleverly played.

The consideration the Comedy Club receives for allowing "The Mirror" to pose as an "official organ" is a commission of 20% on all display advertising secured by the Comedy Club for "The Mirror" and 15% commission on all other advertising by "The Mirror" through the Comedy Club.

In 1907 when this frame was sent against "The Dramatic Mirror," which later suspended, Tony Pastor's, on 14th street, was a continuous vaudeville show. To catch the entire performance of sometimes 12 acts, it was required to be at the house not later than 6:30. At that time Wm. Brodie played the piano. Mr. Brodie still lives in New York. The alternate pianist was Mike Bernard.

At the supper show at Pastor's one could see perhaps two Chinamen, three sailors and a couple of 14th street street strollers.

A "Variety" reporter asked Mr. Brodie if the "Mirror" man ever came in the house. Brodie said no, as far as he knew. Harry Sanderson, the Pastor's manager, who is now in Plainfield, N. J., also stated he had never seen a "Mirror" reporter in the theatre. Making it a cinch the "Mirror" was copping from "Variety" weekly, when the plant of the new act was laid.

An Ill Wind

With the fire putting the old American, New York, out of the running, stock biz at the Irving Place, N. Y., has benefitted.

New Acts

FRANK and MILT BRITTON (10)
Novelty Band
15 Mins.; Three (Special), Full Palace (St. V.)

The last band act to show up at the Palace with something really new was Horace Heidt. That was more than a year ago. Since then there have been numerous bands at the Palace, but none entirely new. None as new as Heidt since Heidt and none as new as the Brittons until the Brittons' engagement last week. This orchestra, with hokum so low that it seems to seep through the stage to reach its own level, needs no translating to be a comedy sock in any language.

The Brittons, according to the files, are two brothers who have been around for about 10 years and up to recently in a musical two-act, one at the xylophone and the other doubling in brass. "Okay deucer for the small time" was a bouquet for them, according to the same files.

This band act they've tossed together is no band act in the common sense. It plays no mentionable music. The stage band formation is merely a foundation for fast-moving and hard-striking rough house that can't be tied in vaude for comic ferocity.

A bedroom set in "three," containing some pie throwing and a flock of bare feet staring at the audience from a bed, leads to a conventional full stage band setting. The riot starts when one of the Brittons falls off his chair during a polite instrumental solo by another fellow.

Thereafter it's a nightmare of biting fiddles and breaking them over the nearest bean, with an accordionist doing silly boy in red wig and blacked out teeth and a violinist who kids his own work taking most of the punishment.

That the Brittons' 10-piece band runs 15 minutes and seems like five sums it up. Act is currently holding over for a second week at the Palace. Bige.

FRANK CHAPMAN (1)
Songs
12 Mins.; One
86th St.

Operatic baritone making his first try at vaude impressed as high-class and should have no trouble working into the money.

Four tunes should be reversed in order, according to applause. Opens with "Mandalay" and sells personality without effort. "I'm Yours" accelerated the tempo just enough to build for his third number, which usually closes, when he did a long solo from "Pagliacci" which could be replaced by a less heavy selection. Herbert's "Sweet Mystery of Life" for the encore might be replaced with another pop tune for results.

Chapman was baritone with Italian National Opera, touring group sponsored by Italian government, and made his debut in this country last season with the American Opera Company at the Casino in "Faust." Recently over NBC chains. Is right for the big spots.

RODEO BOYS (5)
Novelty Instrumentalists
10 Mins.; Two (Special)
Hamilton

Quintet playing guitars, banjos, balloons and a stove pipe have a fast act of five or six numbers that is fraught with novelty and sold without difficulty.

Curtain rises on cabin exterior with three boys playing banjos and two guitars. Two musical saws are featured in "Kiss Waltz" with a vocal chorus by one boy through a megaphone and later a trio singing.

Two harmonicas, banjo and guitar accompaniment, played during "St. Louis Blues." Two of the boys give a harmony duet by forcing air through the tightly-drawn tops of a pair of balloons.

BRENNAN and BEVAN
Talk
11 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Series of unrelated gags that don't make especially good entertainment. With even a thin thread of a story this team should be funny but the subjects are changed so frequently and suddenly that no climax is attained and they go over only so-so.

Big blonde slaps smaller comic down after a quick meeting. Chatter leads nowhere but finally they go into a clinch for a waltz that has the man taking falls before the exit.

GEORGE J. RILEY
Songs and Talk
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

A single that clicks all the way. Equally suitable for vaudeville and presentations. Riley has an act. Stopped the show here.

Formerly of Heller and Riley, he is capable of even more than shown here and should be ideal for a big spot. Two songs used for entrance and exit were individually good but the real punch lies in his stories which are mostly new and all sure for laughs. Sixth on a 10-turn bill.

LEWIS AND MOORE (3)
Talk, Songs, Dances
24 Mins.; Full (Special)
86th St.

Well-written skit by Jack Hanley breezes along at a fast pace with chatter, tunes and steps timed for hands, but could stand a finale utilizing the full cast instead of only the billed pair.

Set is Oriental hut, and act starts with two sailors, Sammy Lewis and Barney Dean, entering in large barrels. They have been shipwrecked and washed ashore. Hot native gals, La Verne Sisters,—discover them and raise rumpus. Sailors retaliate by throwing a brick through hut door which brings on Patti Moore with "Who the hell threw that brick?"

Into low comedy and a suggestive tune by Miss Moore who is rejoined by Lewis. From there on story is forgotten in favor of specialties which end abruptly with a duo version of the stair dance.

FRANK WILSON (3)
Sketch
12 Mins.; One
Hamilton

An unique dramatic skit set in Harlem, staged with simplicity and acted with skill. No hand at finish, probably due to abrupt ending and immediate blackout with none of the cast returning for bows.

Set is a street corner with newsstand in care of blind man who was Wilson's buddy in France. High-yellow gal, sweetheart of Wilson's rival gangster, tries the vamping act with intent to put Frank on the spot. Date up for later and girl off. Wilson and blind man reminisce about World War, working down to a preacher in Alabama. Wilson gives an imitation of this minister preaching a sermon, to accompaniment of soft guitar music, that is superb acting. Gal returns, he walks with her to corner and a shot is heard.

EILEEN DOUGALL and BOYS
Band, Songs
15 Mins.; Full
Lincoln Sq.

A nicely dressed and smooth running act, fit for the better grade houses. Miss Dougall is a songstress of merit with an aptitude for putting over hot blues. Melody Boys, five, consisting of two pianists, sax, trumpet and guitar, are a corking instrumentation outfit for a group so small and with so different an instrumental arrangement.

Miss Dougall, nicely gowned and a looker, steadily works in front of the band, except for moments when she is off and the boys take the spot. She opens with the pop "Blue Again," in which is interpoluted bits from "Rhapsody in Blue," neatly warbled. Three other songs of different type follow.

Band, besides musically shadowing Miss Dougall's warbling for good effect, peals out a mixture of low-down blues tunes. Band is oke enough to carry more time for itself.

JOE AND WILLIE HALE
Jugglers
11 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Familiar juggling of hat, ball and cane but done with a finesse that counts for applause. A superior brand of the kind generally used to open, boys were easily acceptable as the fourth of ten turns.

Joe is handsome straight with real balancing ability and for first portion performs stunts pestered by Willie. They work into double tricks and end with Willie remaining atop a large rubber ball while the other kicks and pushes it about.

Routines supply a flock of laughs and incidental chatter is well written.

PETER BERNARD (1)
Songs and Talk
10 Mins.; One
Hamilton

Looks like good feature for neighborhoods and suitable for a strong position anywhere. Second of 10 acts, Bernard was a surprise with four uncommon songs and did a Punch and Judy tune for an encore.

Between numbers told gags in Hebrew, Irish and Italian dialects. Has pleasing personality and sufficiently good voice to smash over songs which he acts out in dramatic fashion.

FRANK AND MAY STANLEY
Talk and Lariats
10 Mins.; One (Special)
Hamilton

Good rope twirling by a pair of troupers in white cowboy and cowgirl togs before an attractive drop. Okay openers, as here, with man getting laughs and hands on his casual remarks, delivered without an attempt to imitate Will Rogers.

Spinning a 90-foot lariat is his best trick with girl's the twirling of three little ropes, one in each hand and one with her teeth, and singing a song at the same time. She twirls and he jumps through loops for a finale.

PALACE
(St. Vaude)

Palace is in a spot to snatch a new week's record for itself. Eddie Cantor is there, and that amounts to a couple of head starts. New Year's Eve extra show and scale is another aid. Bill cost runs close to $14,000 a new high for salaries at the Palace, or around $3,000 over average. This despite only seven acts are involved instead of the customary eight or nine.

Cantor's $7,700 in his first of two weeks here covers the difference in the salary end and, in running over the budget, makes this seven-acter more expensive than the usual bills containing more turns. Cantor, of course, also makes it a show.

The headliner's remuneration, tossing more than half the salary total into one out of seven acts, would suggest that as entertainment the bill schedule might depend entirely on one item. That's the way it ordinarily turns out at the Palace when the topper is an extraordinary money turn. It naturally amounts to a one-man show immediately after Cantor's entrance, but Cantor is closing the lineup, and the difference this time is that there's quality up ahead. That every one on earlier made good almost entirely eliminated the possibility of overbalance.

When a booker must sink so much jack into one spot it's necessary to fill the other niches with a prayer apiece. Arthur Willi must have prayed hard and long this week. The other spots, fortunately enough, hold more than the prayers.

Under the heading of good fortune was the success Saturday afternoon of Frank and Milt Britton (New Acts), one of the two holdovers from the week before. Raised to next-to-closing the first part, this knock-down and drag-out band act capped its section with the much-needed hard slam.

Pretty clever all the way down, the first part. Few first halves in bills not carrying such a single salary burden have played better and accomplished more. Laid out in orthodox straight vaude fashion with an acrobatic opening, dance trio in "one" deucing and staying dumb that far, it started talking in strong comedy terms in the trey. Burns and Allen were No. 3 and grabbed their usual Palace response.

Team's crossfire routine, "Lamb Chops," after several Palace trials lately, was brightened this trip with a new line here and there. New ones neither numerous nor important enough to make this a new offering from any angle, but sufficient to take the sting out of familiarity. As a talking act for its audience the Palace can't go higher than Burns and Allen.

Up ahead as openers were Four American Aces and a Queen, casting act with an attractive name, some velvety flying, and a gasper as a finish. Final stunt involves a complete circular flight over the bars and back into a catch in the net sides. It climaxes some remarkable aerial work. Colored trio, Three Rhythm Dancers, No. 2, flashed a brand that marked them as chocolate counterparts and equals of King, King and King in the hoofing line. Seeing one of the boys winging with both feet, with either foot in a different tempo, is seeing something. The boys are effective both alone and in unison. Applause ran into the next act.

Audience had its chance to laugh with Burns and Allen, so the edge was off for Joe Frisco, the bill's other h. o. The dancing vet's repeating his material almost 100% this week, with very few changes from other Palace engagements if not last week. It must be tough to carry the title and rep of one of vaude's chief wits. Frisco probably preferred rehashing to taking a chance. Results at the end not bad, although laughs weren't up to the standard along the way. For years one of the most imitated creations in show business, the derby-cigar dance made him Saturday as he made the dance years ago.

Wild conclusion of the first part through the Brittons was toned down a bit during intermission for a trailer, the newsreel (Pathe), and some pit work. Otherwise Marion Harris' polite singing could not have followed. J. Russell Robinson, at the piano, and "Riene Des Chanteuses" as the billing. That's French. Program translation in parenthesis is "Queen of Song" and in or out of English, pretty classy. Though Miss Harris remains a classy singing single, as she always has been and just as good a singer as before, Rep selected was suited to both voice and style and calling for comment as straight vocal turns in vaude with no boners or material picking are rare. But noted that Miss Harris didn't include the mannekin number she used in the "Second Little Show." At a break-in date before the Palace the song was dropped because in featuring lyrics rather than melody, it missed in the large theatre. It's a song for the Palace, however, and should have been restored this week.

Cantor was on for 38 minutes at the end. He talked and then sang and then talked and then sang again, kept going without a halt. A court order couldn't have torn him away from the Saturday audience before the natural finish. The finale even had a tear and it was done nicely. Mrs. Cantor, the mother of Eddie's five daughters, was in a stage box and Eddie sang to her alone. It was Eddie's final wallop and the knockout.

Boy at the piano with Cantor and a girl on for a chorus of dancing. Bige.

STATE

Watson Sisters, featured here this week, made their steenth return a real holiday. After gagging all over the stage and raising howls, the girls had to beg off. The bulky Fannie ran riot. Watsons, in response, were head and shoulders above the rest of the bill, although others had no trouble pleasing a friendly audience Saturday matinee.

Par's "Feet First" (Harold Lloyd) on the screen, and the house was jammed for the first show. With the picture and the sister team, the State has a strong comedy bill.

Du Fonts received an unusual hand for an opener, mainly because of their closing bit, where the man juggles three articles, one an apple, which he gradually eats as he juggles.

Nash and Fately not so warm in the deuce with a hit-or-miss affair. Elongated boy and diminutive comedienne in a bit of crossfire, some comedy dancing and rope-talk work, a la Rogers, is the act.

Florrie La Vere and Co. started out as though it would be a straight acrobatic act, but after a few minutes switched to songs and piano. Lou Handman, composer and publisher, assists Miss La Vere at the opening with patter, and then works at the ivories, soloing with bits from his past numbers and accompanying. Miss La Vere includes a song and dance imitash of Kitty Doner. A bunnet helps with a vocal solo.

Watsons then.

Stepanoff and Co., four girls and three men, closed. Despite the cast and oke sets, act lacks life until the closing number, made up of gypsy songs and Russian hoofing by Stepanoff. Previous numbers include a comedy waltz during the tintype era and a Dutch wooden shoe bit, wherein Stepanoff's clogging was the only worthwhile feature. Opening duet, sung in French between a couple garbed in the style of 50 years ago, should be omitted. It doesn't mean a thing and doesn't clearly show what it's all about.

81st STREET

Harry Hershfield should be happy. He's getting paid for a line of parlor jokes that he's been giving away almost nightly at one benefit or another. Last of the five acts here, he sold philosophy with his Hebrew yarns for almost 20 minutes Saturday night and went off to a strong hand.

Fields and Bell, No. 2, enter with a tap dance that soon has the boys spilling over each other for comedy. Primarily acrobats, they sell their hoofing, although somewhat overdoing the falls. One plays the harmonica and the other gives an imitation of John Barrymore doing the Charleston. They work hard and have a novel exit.

On first, the Australian Waites, man and two women, undoubtedly the most accomplished performers in their field. Man limbers up throwing boomerangs at the balcony, and then settles down to tricks with the bull-whip. Without a miss he cut a piece of paper to ribbons, snapped a cigaret from an assistant's mouth, lit a match and then put it out, unfastened the catches on one woman's dress, causing it to fall off, snapped the cap off a pop bottle and, still using only the whip, took a handkerchief out of a girl's pocket. To prove that he can also be gentle he wraps the whip around wrists and, finally, a neck for the climax.

Harry Carroll and Maxine Lewis were third in a short turn comprising a couple of songs and a long vocal medley of some of Carroll's compositions. The transition from the dance into the Harry Carroll Revuette was so gradual that the audience wasn't sure just when it had happened.

On the screen, "Free Love" (U), Grantland Rice "Sportlight," Pathe News and Walter Futter's "Curiosities" (Col), short.

R-K-O, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 26.

Worthy and Thompson, colored dancers, opened with series of challenge dances. Boys were plenty strong and landed from start, but should stick to hoofing and leave the grabbing alone as their material is meaningless and antique. Jack Usher deuced with two unprogrammed femmes, scoring with a hokum sketch and three blackouts. Girls are lookers and work well with Usher's low comedy.

Peter Higgins, next to shut, stalled through three numbers with the musicians from the orchestra soloing in a chorus of two numbers, which was the wrong idea. The customers knew Higgins through his radio work and wanted some heavy vocalizing. Colleano Family closed with okay risley and ground tumbling.

"Madonna of the Streets" (Col.) and Pathe clips filled the screen end. Business good. Call.

PALACE, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Another good vaudeville show, running the booker's score well into the higher brackets. Vaudeville is holding the business to a point where a little profit is resulting in the terrifically high-geared Palace, with its weekly rental of $6,400 and other budget items in proportion.

Sensational Kikutas—six men, three girls—is one of those tense and exciting Japanese risley and tumbling turns that almost seems wasted opening a show. Beautiful oriental scenery and costumes and other evidences of the cunning showmanship of this race further enhance the turn.

Medley and Dupree, deucing, had no difficulty with standard brand of hoke nonsense. Trey was occupied by Gallo and Tisen and Co. This is Norma Gallo, formerly in Broadway musicals and cafes, teamed with Paul Tisen, who has been a frequent vaudeville visitor with string ensembles. Turn has neatness, class and speed, and got over nicely. Fred Keating and his half-kidding and half-serious magic, proved vastly diverting to the Saturday matinee mob, while Pat Rooney and his precocious heir closed and wowed with their customary eclat.

Paramount permitted R-K-O to have the Ed Wynn picture, "Follow the Leader." A good booking for the holiday week, particularly with Wynn now in town in person.

HIPPODROME, N. Y.

Nicely blended layout that should find favor during the holiday period with the kids as well as adult customers at the big Hip. No name on the bill stands out, but there's enough variety and novelty to make this a better than average lineup. On the screen "Lightnin'" (Fox) with biz at the first show Saturday near capacity.

May Wirth with Phil Wirth and other members of the equestrienne family are ideally spotted here with their first rate turn. Presenting a classy appearance, Miss Wirth and her cousin, Stella, open with a pop song. During its rendition one of the horses enters and nibbles sugar from their hands. In the spotlight it makes a pretty picture. Thereafter the act picks up a pace that is maintained to the finish. Phil carries the bundling of the cowmen both in the ring on the backs of rapidly moving horses, working all the time and getting a large quota of laughs. His disrobing bit near the close secures excellent results.

Bobby Pincus, next-to-closing, and Francis and Wallace, fourth, depend largely on hoke and knockabout comedy for results, both comics taking the slap and being pushed over after each crack. They eased by on this bill but that repetition of "the hell with it," used by both after an attempt at song, ought to go out, even if not already on the "you mustn't say that" list.

Deuce held Four of a Kind, male quartet with a couple of special voice arrangements of comedy numbers and pops that sent them off to a good hand. Paulos, Paquita and Nenita in a series of Mexican dances, mainly tangos, and native songs, opened and the Tam o' Shanters, girl band act, closed, both rating a fair amount of appreciation.

86th ST.

Where is all this depression? Surely not at this house, which was nearly capacity at the first show Saturday.

Lita Grey Chaplin, in the middle of a five-act spread, delivered four tunes with a simplicity that disarmed even those who had come expecting some sort of sensation. All of her selections is specials. Sandwiched are two torch ballads.

Six Galenos are neat teeter-board, hand-to-hand and risley balancers in feats remarkable enough to give the most staid audience a thrill.

Chaney and Fox, closing, open before a beautiful full-stage set for a Spanish number which sets them as a class team. This is followed by a gigolo vocal, delivered in a blue spot by their accompanist. A Mistinguette imitation and soft-shoe strut are the individual solos of Chaney and Fox who end with a "Just Married" dance that has most of the insinuations.

Krugel and Robels, on second, are two men with sobbing tenor voices who stand with a frothy ballad "Why Should Good Pals Say Good-Bye?". Most gags heard elsewhere.

Raynor Lehr's next-to-closing turn looked like burlesque descendent, and relied on a long routine of twists and jerks by the white and colored femme support in the act for a hand. Lehr sings, gags and dances and looks like he ought to be able to produce.

Feature, "Free Love" (U), Pathe News and shorts.

San Antonio

San Antonio, Dec. 24.

San Antonio is a principal key city of Texas. It claims a population of slightly over 200,000, but has an exceptional drawing territory of around 75,000 more.

In this city there is a Mexican colony of 45,000. It is segregated, like Harlem in New York, with its own stores and picture theatres. The Mex section seems wide open, so much so the joints try to get business in the daytime. San Antonio seems a gate to several points, principally Mexico. It draws largely from tourists, and has four first-class hotels, two of 500 rooms each.

Two national theatre circuits are represented. R-K-O has the Majestic, most elaborate, newest and biggest, also the best located. Publix has the Texas, de luxer, Aztec, second choice for first runs, and the Strand, a grind. The other single downtown house of importance is the Empire, independent. One or two small grinds at 15 or 25c. in the downtown section. Several neighborhood theatres. Scales run about the same in the de luxers, 60c. at night, with an earlier cut.

This week before Xmas, starting 19th, probably the reason for light business at the Majestic with "Up the River" (Fox) and vaude; and at the Texas with "War Nurse" (M-G) and stage presentation. The Aztec, "Tom Sawyer" (Par), started its week Saturday with a jam of kids at a 15c. rate. The kids howled, screamed, laughed and thoroughly enjoyed themselves watching the "Sawyer" picture.

R-K-O MAJESTIC

The further away from New York seems to make a greater difference in theatre operation by the circuits anyway. Here, at this huge R-K-O house, looking too big for the town on a continuous policy, the whole show appeared overly long. That a New Yorker thinks so can't be countered, as the people of the town must also agree.

On Friday, change night, the house didn't hold half an orchestra. To say half is liberal. It was too small an audience even for the week before Xmas. The night before, Thursday, the closing evening for the preceding show, the house was again very light at 8:30 and continued to get lighter until closing at 11:30.

Most noticeable in this performance is that the Majestic has an advertising moving picture curtain and no newsreel. It would be surprising anywhere if theatregoers grew fond of the same ad curtains every week in an overlong show, while the opposition has the draw of a sound news.

The Majestic's ad curtain is probably sold by the house as a concession; an ad agency's name is on it and the advertisements are all local. One drawing is of a fruit cake, another ad tells how to buy and own a home, while another informs of the entertaining merits of a roadhouse 10 miles outside the city. That's fine showmanship for the Majestic's screen, suggesting by the ad curtain that there's free entertainment in a road resort. It looks as if the Majestic has as much opposition as it can stand right on San Antonio's main street.

An R-K-O four-act vaudeville unit was on the stage, Signor Friscoe headlining and closing. Outside of Friscoe's request gag, worked very badly by him despite laughs from a couple of plants, he did very well with four Marimba players behind him.

"Pola," a monkey act, opened. Good for the kids, and grown-ups, too. This novelty opening act on R-K-O traveling units looks to be a fixture. It's a return to the former vaude booking for variety. As such it will attract the kids. One week a shooting act to open; the next a "cannon act" like Conchas, of old, something vaude hasn't seen in over five years; this week monkeys, and so on. Maddox and Clark, and Evans and Wolf were the other turns. Good enough in their way, but neither near a panic.

"Up the River" was liked by what was left of the audience when it started. When it ended not over 150 people were in the orchestra. This indicated an early turnout for the last vaude show and no draw at all after 8:15.

An "R-C-A Radiola Contest" was going on, but if creating any interest it must have died away as the contest reached its close Dec. 23.

Besides the ad curtain and no news, the Majestic had the usual trailer of coming picture and stage show. The entire performance ran about 160 minutes.

ILL AND INJURED

Miss Jackie Stern, daughter of Emil Stern, president of Essaness Theatres, Chicago, was injured in an auto accident last week, and is recovering at St. Luke's hospital, Chicago.

Ike Weber has been away from his booking office, heavy cold.

Lillbrown (Lillian Brown) in French Hospital, N. Y., recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

NEW ACTS

Hazel Green's "Black and White Revue" (15).

Bobby Earl's "Midnight Revels" (6).

George Libby and Girls (4).

TEXAS-PUBLIX

This theatre's biggest show running blemish is an overplug of its trailer. The "coming" announcement lays stress on the personal appearance of Stewart Erwin with clips from three of his pictures, shown twice in the same performance. First at the show's opening and repeated in the middle of the newsreel.

That suggested the news had been cut to pieces to admit of the insertion of the trailer, a business pitch for the best left in the newsreel was two weeks behind New York.

"War Nurse" had trouble in holding a very slight four o'clock Saturday afternoon house. This made the stage show before the band look slower than it was. A dozen line girls had two ensemble chances, besides a posed finale for them.

Ted Cooke is mc'ing, first that and nothing more, while Eddie Stanley, featured, did no better.

The standout of the show, and, in fact, the biggest stage hit seen of all the shows in New Orleans or here within a week, was Wilbur Hall, who stepped out of the band stand with his trombone. With the long-toed Little Tich shoes, and as fine a conglomeration of noise as one musician could gather, Hall whammed 'em. This is the same Hall who was the crack trombonist of Whiteman's orchestra, leaving that bandman about two years ago to become a specialist on the Publix stages. He is.

Lee Weber, the organist, turned himself into a Santa Claus while persuading the house to sing. Weber's Santy was strictly for the kids and worth the kidding he's probably receiving for his heavy whiskered makeup.

Another show that goes along as though running too long, about 150 minutes here, with the shorts.

In a town like San Antonio, with two circuit houses and business apparently off in both just now, it might do the theatres more good to temporarily agree to cut both the scale and the show. It could be done with a "for the benefit of the community" announcement, and thereby easily sent back to the former routine, when things improve. With the acres of empty seats in the Majestic and Texas something should be done, not only here but in similar situations all over the country.

It's no disgrace or discredit to cut a theatre's scale in bad business times when the pretext is so magnificently possible as to announce that since the theatre is a necessity, the management recognizes, etc.

To propagandize this country on the theatre is a necessity which will be worth a whole lot more to the theatre of the future and the good will it has failed to secure so far, anywhere in the U. S., and by any circuit, than the perhaps temporary decline of gross of and during this temporary depression.

It's worth noting that in neither the Majestic or Texas is any trouble encountered with stage voices. They easily reach the rear of the houses. It's probably due to amplification in both houses, particularly the Majestic. But, as in other de luxers, the personalities on the stage grow less visible toward the rear. Sime.

CAPITOL, N. Y.

New York, Dec. 26.

Not a pretentious offering for the holiday week. "Nite Lites," the title of this week's unit, is showy as far as the settings and the costumes are concerned, but not for entertainment.

Featured "War Nurse" (M-G) first pop priced run since its 3 showing at the Astor. For the evening show Friday, opening day of this program, house contained a fair sized crowd. Ruby Weather may have been party to advance.

Capitol units are beginning to look more and more like vaudeville. Except for the interruptions by the Chester Hale girls and the stage band, this unit ran like a vaude lay-out. Specialties by the featured acts were uneven, with two of the acts left to bear the brunt of the entertainment. Roy Rogers and Billy Farrell and Dad both took plenty of time, Rogers a bit too much. Other two acts, Dennis Sisters and Charlotte Ayers-Rene de Roche Ensemble, did one number apiece and called it a day.

Dennis Sisters are three tall titian haired girls becomingly gowned. Girls' start off with the pop waltz and wander into Frimi's "L'Amour Toujour." Harmony different and likeable.

Rogers did his vaude act in toto for a few laughs. Size of the Capitol's stage was much in Rogers' favor since he could stagger all over the place with his stew acrobatics. But taking entirely too much time. Billy Farrell and Dad, after the Dennis Sisters, were the main pillar. Both are corking hoofers. The old man, announced by Billy as 74, being remarkably light on his feet. Later into the familiar contest. Farrell is a neat tapper in any man's country. Also does upside-down taps on a board against the side of the stage.

Closing specialty was the Ayres-de Roche Ensemble, mixed sextet with one gal disappearing immediately after her appearance. A flash tango by de Roche and Miss Ayres was to the instrumentation of a girl accordionist, male guitarist and tenor.

Dave Schooler, m. c., has little to do.

Chester Hale girls on for two numbers. Closing was a snappy dance affair, the chorines dancing their routines in groups of fives. Closed amid a shower of balloons from the flies.

Vasha Bunchuk's overture of Charles Gounod's melodies up to standard.

FOX, BKLYN

Brooklyn, Dec. 26.

"Ooohla-La," a Universal short with Slim Summerville and Harry Gribbon, is the standout of a 134-minute combo show this week. That's plenty to think about for a de luxer. "Under Suspicion" (Fox), the feature, "Green Devil Idea" (F. & M.) for stage. Biz off, weather not helping when caught opening night.

Shallow unit. Not professionally alert, although a success by natural process, is Peg Leg Bates, one legged colored hoofer. Takes an encore but shouldn't make that speech. Of the 19 performers in the unit, 12 make up the Hollywood Studio Girl troupe. Best number is a tom-tom swing with drums while Miles and Kover try their adagio on a limited stage space.

Too much set, made up of rising platforms and stairs that centers with a devil cutout, all green. Regular house band hidden below the upper deck. That makes the top pretty hollow for the customers' eye and up until the final number or so the upper deck stays bare. Unit runs to around 34 minutes.

Performers work in close quarters, really one and two space. Rita Lane is the girl who sings. Face and figure drown her voice. Comedy end comes through Bobby Gilbert, Hebe fiddler and dialectician. Spots for everything and usually green even when Gilbert does his "turkey in the Straw" a la Yiddish. But that's a laugh.

Finale takes on more body drapery and serves to fill most but not all the stage as the devil centerpiece does an electric fire spree. Harvey Karles, boy hoofer, does one dance. Shan.

IMPERIAL

Toronto, Dec. 24.

Either Christmas shoppers aren't buying as much this year or else Marjorie White, hometown product, has more b.o. power than is suspected. Whichever way the land lies, the Imperial is packing them with the management not worrying about psychological problems as long as the cash register symphony keeps up.

Joe Carr, m.c. who replaced Jack Pepper, is now in Ottawa with the band here again relegated to the pit and Horace Lapp swinging the baton. Overture is one of those musical switch arrangements. Runs about 12 minutes with clever transpositions offsetting length of number.

Stage presentation fair entertainment, with Ferry Corwey offering something novel to theatregoers here. Ferry is on last doing his burlesque on vaudeville marksman. Leads to a clever musical number on a xylophone contrivance resembling a picket fence. Stage set consists of a rustic cottage surfounded by white palings. Did very well.

Running Corwey a close second for applause were Kaye and Sayre, both steppers giving the customers everything they had. Boys work nicely.

Ballet opens stage presentation with girls in country-maid costumes and poke bonnets. One thing about this line-up, whether or not their work is routine, is the even sizing of the girls. Girls have opening and closing numbers. First on toes plus arm routine and circular formations; then for finale in canary-yellow costumes and purple ostrich-feather headdresses building to a flash finale. Feature is "Just Imagine" (Fox).

LOEW'S STATE, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 26.

Holding a strong comedy flicker, "Reducing," with the Dressler-Moran team as the primary draw, the rest of the show is not especially built up. Knicker & Mayo unit and the regular Movietone news complete the program.

Unit is a frank attempt to re-establish vaudeville and accomplishes its purpose handily. Bobby "Uke" Henshaw is the m. c. and contributes his own specialty in the deuce. After his initial introductories, which are properly phrased, Ed. and Jenny Rooney, with their standard aerial calisthenics, opened and pulled a couple of thrillers that bordered on the sensational. The ankle-to-ankle holds, in mid-air, were especially relished. Henshaw's own ukeing scored, following which Nell Kelly, who has been around Broadway musicals, cavorted eccentrically. The titian comedienne is an excellent high kicker and delivered niftily with her specialty.

Closers were the Eight Allisons, a German importation doing ground tumbling and aerial tossing in a manner which distinguishes them from the Japanese school of similar acrobatics. Some of their stuff also was breath-taking, notably the double somersault and aerial interchange of human puppets as they are pedally propelled.

No line of girls in this unit, the variety sequence of four acts being preserved excepting for two almost negligible band interludes. Band is on the stage in regulation presentation house manner, but figures only slightly on the instrumentation.

Henshaw's frank invitation for opinions on the vaudeville idea got equally frank and audible response from the customers, who evidenced their appreciation of the four acts of vaude.

Business okay. Abel.

ORIENTAL, CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 26.

A New York Publix unit, instead of a Chicago built show, this week, to impress the patrons with the holiday idea. As a matter of comparison this week's offering is a sumptuous scenic bid for applause but with only Fred Sanborn and the Leon Taylor Foursome standing out on performance.

For the rest, which is pleasing, the chief claim for commendation in the 48 minutes is the gowns and color. Oriental patrons have been used to the Ainsley Lambert ballet of girls. This week the Dave Gould Ensemble of six male hoofers and six girls is at least a change.

Gypsy Bryne, a pleasing young femme, whose enunciation is perfect, leads off with some rather dubious harmony. Miss Bryne possesses enough voice to carry through, but not very strongly. Fred Sanborn has an extremely funny xylophone bit. He makes use of bones, lights, whistles, and pop guns for laughs that come plenty and fast. When he got down to serious xylophoning he also proved himself adept. His clowning is choice work and good anywhere.

Leon Taylor Foursome, of three husky males and a dainty miss, with the femme being tossed about in an adagio, good for thrills. One thing strongly in favor of the gal in the foursome she is graceful, even when hurtled across the stage. Interspersed between these acts came Billie Gerber for dancing and a song. Posing of the girls before huge dinner plates for the finale.

Show is termed "Syncopated Menu." Before it goes on Art Kahn comes up out of the hydraulic and gives out a couple of pop tunes on the piano. He also leads the pit boys. Kahn is popular locally.

"Min and Bill" (M-G) moved into this house from a two weeks' run at McVicker's two blocks south. Lines all day.

PARAMOUNT, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

For a holiday attraction, this week's stage show misses production value but includes three specialty acts that strengthen the layout. Production is "Neptune's Festival" credited to Frank Cambria.

Strictly an undersea idea. It's difficult to accept a Hungarian flyspdance, suddenly thrown in and fitting as gracefully as a fish on land.

Girl lineup belongs to Fred Evans, whose handiwork has been seen to much better advantage out here. Weakness of the girls' dancing must have been known originally for they only do the one specialty number, with their opening and finals not counting for much.

Making up for the shortage of talent in other directions are Freda and Palace, who repeat by splitting their routine for the early and late ends of the show. Backcalloop Boys are no different here than they have been for years in vaude and picture houses alike, though division of their routine didn't help any. Honors in this frolic belong to Chilton and Thomas, young colored hoofers who burn up the stage with rapid fire soft shoe and taps rarely seen around here.

ROXY

New York, Dec. 26.

Christmas revel at the Roxy has almost become a tradition, certainly an institution in the three or four years it has been an established holiday event. This year the scenario is "Snow White and Rose Red," worthy successor to the two preceding subjects, "Sleeping Beauty" in 1928 and "Babes in the Woods" last year.

All that can be done in beauty of spectacle has been done and the offering is a magnificent spectacle. What it lacks is one punch-ful novelty.

Patricia Bowman has been the hoofing of the Roxy show for all three pantomimes mentioned and this year is even more so in the absence of any specialty act that stands out vividly. This captivating dancer puts the finishing touch on the three elaborate bits of spectacle, once in a Santa Claus number, apart from the pantomime, again in a stunning water ballet as part of the fairy tale and again in the closing ensemble, the last word in royal spectacle, the marriage scene of the panto.

The spectacle runs for a wee bit over half an hour and there is almost as much of stage show besides, including an "English Carol" episode part of the overture and a novelty dance number called "Merry Christmas." There is also the news reel and two shorts at this show, the first of the evening on opening day Christmas Eve, and on top of all that the feature "Shepper-New founder" (Fox) which runs 72 minutes, making an entertainment over all of about three hours. It was much too long, both for the endurance of the audience and for the prosperity of the house, the running time precluding the usual turnover.

Considerations of time aside, it is a whopping show, breath taking in its scope and eye filling in its pictorial effects. Opening number finds the choir grouped in a rather dim medieval interior garbed in courtly Elizabethan costume and singing a group of carols. A sublimated bit of Christmas music, with the Roxy symphony backing up the augmented chorus for magnificent effects in the old familiar standard hymns, making a gorgeous finale in "Adeste Fidelis."

"Merry Christmas" is the usual toy shop background, but here shrewdly spliced into the show. Ballet is preceded by one of those Disney animated cartoons dealing with an India ink spider who gets into a toy shop and has wild experiences with mechanical toys. Final feet of the cartoon comes on a scrim drop, with lights coming on behind to disclose Santa in the person of Harold Van Duzee, the Roxy staff tenor, for a number to introduce the Roxyettes all dressed as Santas with hugo packs on their backs, packs which disappear to become ballet skirts.

Variety of specialists is introduced here: Fortunato and Cirillini, Miss Bowman and Massine, Margaret "Mickey" McKee and Stanley Bros., the first named with capital trick acrobats being the only comedy interlude and its trick finish with the little dwarf somersaulting into the bag a capital touch of.

Chorus maneuvers are stunning, one group of girls in yellow, blue and pink forming the foreground, with the others in blue green arranged in tiers back stage to simulate a Christmas tree.

The newsreel is worked in for stage outfitting purposes at this point with the pantomime opening and done in four scenes. Probably the most striking was the third, a mountain setting with a waterfall and pool and the dance ensemble dressed in watery green and silver for a lovely routine of toe dancing. For pageantry the finale outdoes even the Roxy itself. Opening in a narrow front stage, shows the villagers on their way to the wedding of Snow White and Rose Red to their princes. Flying of the forward drop still leaves the stage closed in by enormous flags held by mammoth mounted knights on lances pointed from the sides. The knights (cardboard figures reaching up to the borders) raise their lances, lifting the flags which thus drape back leaving a vista to the back of the stage looking through a double line of uplifted swords at a military wedding.

Down the same passage march the wedding procession in a carnival of color, gilt and sparkle for a climax of gorgeous spectacle. Rush.

Sure fire and can prove it all the time.

Morgan Trio, three young femmes with a flair for acro dancing that is enhanced by their looks, making the turn pleasing but too long.

Program features Oscar Baums orchestral production in keeping with the Xmas spirit and can't go wrong at this time of the year. Same goes for Earl Abel's organ interlude. Abel seems to be catching his audiences fancy for community singing. Screen features "Night to Love" with Chatterton draw asserting itself from the start.

WOLGAST-GENARO DRAW IS TAMEST TITLE TROT

By JACK PULASKI

The tot championship remains just where it was before Midget Wolgast of Philly and Frankie Genaro met at the Garden last Friday. The 111-pounders were supposed to battle for the flyweight title but it was hardly a scrap. One of the tamest title bouts seen hereabouts. They called it a draw and as some eggs said on the way out: "Well, it saved some people a lot of money anyhow."

In New York Wolgast is rated the champ. On the outside Genaro has the call, if it means much either way. Fight fans do not care, judging from the poor attendance. The National Boxing Association says Frankie is the real holder of the midget title and the match was slated to settle the matter.

Looked like the Midget was entitled to the shade but doubtless because of the questioned championship it is just as well. Adding up all the punches, the shells of about a dozen eggs might have been cracked. It is notorious that most little men can sock each other with everything and nothing happens. Why Genaro and Wolgast should have been so careful, is the annoying thing about it.

The onlookers quickly tired of the affair and became loquacious. One upstairs guy insisted on knowing when the main bout was going on. There was a general unrest and continuous comment, razzes and what not. Not one boxing thrill during the entire 15 rounds.

Before the ninth round started Patsy Haley, the referee, walked to the corners and told both kids that unless they made a fight of it, he would declare it no contest. Thereafter they mixed it up, flurry fashion. Wolgast edged to the front in the 11th and 12th rounds. In the 14th Genaro started it when he could knock out the midget. He did the most trying then and in the final frame. Wolgast looked the faster and more accurate puncher, Genaro the more rugged fellow and inclined to be tough. Little color to either fighter this time. They should toss up for the title.

Semi-final was a surprise. Jimmy Slavin, the savage West Side mick feather, losing nearly all the way to the more slender Kid Francis, announced as "of England." Slavin had his bicycle with him and how he used it.

Fans were amazed at Jimmy backing around the ring. He went so fast that at times it looked as if Francis was tired running after him. Maybe Jimmy had too much

Where Actors Hang Out

By Joe Bigelow

An analytical survey of the acting profession in regard to what it does in spare moments and for relaxation, to be thorough, must first divide the profesh into two divisions: actors working and actors laying off.

The latter class is an overwhelming majority and entitled to the feature spot in an essay labeled "Where Actors Hang Out."

Actors who are working hang out where it costs money. Otherwise there wouldn't be much sense to working. Actors laying off hang out where it is most economical.

Actors who do most of their hanging out in barrooms are fewer today. On the average, they are a more sober lot nowadays. That is, as far as public saloon and speakeasy imbibing is concerned. Speaks still get plenty. But most actors, similar to other people, find drinking within the confines of one's or somebody else's hotel room, with a bell hop as the running bartender, more convenient and pleasant.

Actors who are members of the Friars Club think the Friars the best place to hang out, and the Lambs Club the worst. Lambs think their club the best and the Friars terrible.

Actors who have their own homes on Long Island, when not traveling, spend most of their time there. Those who saved their money for just that reason are a home-loving lot, really more so than many laymen.

Actors who have a cold hang out at the Turkish bath.

Many actors while away their spare time stealing bows.

Other actors spend their days waiting to see their agent.

Paying Off

Actors who are divorced spend their time looking for just enough work to pay the alimony.

Actors who are acrobats use up excess minutes learning how to sing.

Actors who have animal acts spend their evenings bathing their dogs. As do hoofers with bad feet.

Actors who have children spend days and nights teaching the kiddies how to look cute when walking on at the finish.

Actors who are playing five-a-day in the picture houses walk from the stage to the dressing room.

Few actors waste much time talking about themselves.

Actors who think they're 90% of the act devote odd periods to looking for new partners.

Actors who are chorus girls spend entire afternoons returning gifts.

Marrying

Actors who marry 50% of a sister team dedicate their lives to wishing they had married a single.

Actors who play in the talking shorts spend hours looking for the green light.

Actors who make the jumps by auto use up spare time estimating how much they saved in r.r. fares.

Actors from Hollywood with tuxedos and actresses from the same place with decollete, spend the other six days trying to get in the Mayfair on Saturday nights.

There is no particular hang-out in New York for actors any more. They go their kibitzing together at each other's homes, at their various clubs, in a few eating places like Mrs. Gerson's, St. Regis, Lindy's and Dave's Blue Room—and on the Times Square curbstone between 46th and 47th streets.

But most actors do their hanging out with other actors.

From Beauts to Bums

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Tentative date for Galveston 1931 beaut pageant is set for June 13-17, with the town kicking in close to $2,000,000 to doll up for the visitors.

While city dads are struggling to revive town's former prestige as a resort, the burg still remains the national bums' watering place, with the podhangers so numerous this winter that police issued a blanket ban against them.

Martin Starr, director of Galveston's 1931 beauty pageant, is on the trail to line up girls for the big show.

CHI. NEW YEAR BOOZE PRICES ARE ALL HIGH

Chicago, Dec. 27.

If there ever was a home-brew year, this is. All the boys who last year got their stuff over the phone used the family bath tub and fermenting their own Christmas cheer.

Midwest sale of liquor dropped 65%, with the bootleggers moaning plenty low. Prices, however, are only about 15% below last year's figure.

Price list per case:

American Bourbon	$100
Canadian Bourbon	150
Gin	35 & 50
Champagne	110
Scotch	110
Cordials	120

In spite of the fact that Chicago is the center of liquor control, the town pays probably the highest prices in the country. Due to the terrific hauling charge from Detroit and Miami.

Bourbon is the standard Chicago whiskey, rye being very scarce. Bourbon can be had as low as $2 a pint if you're careless. Better boys were quoting $5.50 a pint.

Softening Up

One of the city's flop joints, selling rows of hard beds to the homeless at two bits a night, is getting soft. Place used to land bums in the workhouse on vagrancy charges if they showed three nights in a month.

Now the boys may not only come as often as they please, but the joint even furnished them with Christmas cards to send to their friends.

Can. Liquor Sales Slump, May Close Some Stores

Seattle, Dec. 27.

Canadian liquor was selling at $6 the imperial quart over Christmas and for the new year, this being considerable of a reduction over a year ago.

Liquor Control Board of British Columbia reports sales of alcoholic commodities declined 15% in October, 22% in November, and around 30% in December, this year over corresponding months of 1929.

Citizens of the U. S. find it cheaper to buy imported liquor at home. Canada's liquor board, due to the slump in sales, expects to close some of its smaller liquor stores.

Hollywood Hooey-Parties!

By Abel Green

Clocks Lifted at Party, but Suspected Pair Released

Barbara Lang, 22, dance hall hostess of 349 West 85th street, and Edward Kohn, 21, of 588 West End avenue, were discharged in West Side Court by Magistrate Anthony Burke on a charge of grand larceny.

Defendants had attended a party at the home of Abraham Keve, attorney, 230 West 79th street. Members of Mr. Keve's family had given the party and Kohn and Miss Lang were invited.

Several watches disappeared. Detective O'Donnell and Harvey of the West 68th, were notified, and it was alleged that one of the watches was found on Kohn. The other watches soon reappeared, the police stated.

Suspicion rested on Kohn and he and the girl were arrested. Miss Lang was charged with acting in concert. Kohn has been arrested before. The court scored the defendants and freed them when Mr. Keve stated he was motivated by the Xmas season and would not prosecute.

The nuts!

Sooner or later it all simmers down, no matter what the environments are, to another session of rewriting and re-settling the picture business.

Be it an executive's swanky shindig or a literati pow-wow or just a party get-together by the Hollywood boys and girls, fundamentally they'll (1) dish the dirt; (2) pro and con as to why and how this or that was such and such; and Nos. 1-2-3-4-5, etc., drink gin and ginger ale.

Through every party will run the same predominating keynote—the financial aristocracy of celluloid. Whoever is top-money is head-man at this party. That usually means the director or supervisor present. They in turn will create a supremacy for the handsomest femme in the room. With the male high-ups ogling the gals, everybody lays off that prospect. Attention is still innocuously focused on the supervisor or director or whoever is the leading spirit in the assemblage. These worthies in turn talk chiefly for benefit of the lady fair they are romancing with.

If it's an ulta gala, i. e., distinguished get-together in Beverly Hills or Laurel Canyon, you can almost distinguish the gradations by the inflections in the butler's voice as he announces: "Joe Doakes, a $6,000 a week director"; "Minnie Zilch, a $4,500 a week star"; "Hymie Schmeerkaze, a $750 supervisor," etc.

But ultimately and almost with prearranged objectiveness it all simmers down to tearing apart (a) a picture, (b) a star, (c) a reputation, (4) a condition.

Card Players

After that, the Hollywood party evolves further into two factional camps, the bridge players and the poker, hearts or pinochle players, who are almost inevitably divided respectively into the feminine and masculine camps.

After the party breaks up most of them meet again for a coffee at Henry's and a better time there.

Aside from these manifestations of the economic relationships being so closely intertwined with the social contacts, no other community in the world carries on so much with itself as does a Hollywood group. None seems to recognize that each is only as big as his or her job; that when it's option time in Hollywood they'll be coming back to normalcy. But, for the three months or the six months or the year that they are secure in their contracts, they are kings for a day.

The more or less uncertain Hollywood hosts and hostesses—this, as distinguished from the business executives and their families who have gone through the changing tide year after year—are always a shock to any easterner who knew them when. How they "go Hollywood" with extra shifts of Filipinos to tend bar is something which they probably guarded against when they first got out here, but somehow it gets 'em in the end.

Picture wives, whose ancestry, only a generation back, or even more immediate antecedents, went through all sorts of hardship, suddenly find that nurses and companions and secretaries are a necessity to their existence.

It's all perhaps superinduced by the strain of Hollywood parties, but it's also part of the Hollywood hooey.

"Pansy" Stuff Slipping

"Pansy" floor shows in several Broadway nite clubs are beginning to show signs of losing their drawing power.

Two clubs, the Everglades and D'Orsay last week discontinued using the boys doing male impersonations, substituting conventional girl revues and manly-m. c.'s.

Wrestling Match Riot

Toledo, Dec. 27.

More than 1,000 wrestling fans rioted in the Lucas County Auditorium Friday night. Cops called, hop bottles and drinks of several consistencies and gallons were swung.

John Kilonis, wrestler, who egged the crowd into a frenzy by his foul tactics, escaped, although Juan Humberto, his rival, took a severe beating.

SHOW BIZ DOES MERGE

"Love" $9,000 in Topeka, Biz As Iz O.K.—N.G.—Etc.

Topeka, Dec. 25.
(Pop., 125,000)
Weather: Okay

Crashing through with the biggest exploitation campaign this town has ever witnessed the Blue Mouse clanged the gong last week with a wow $9,000 for "Love's Paradise." Among the numerous innovations was a special day for men only, with a classy-looking dame parked in every other seat. Male customers got free necking privileges with each ticket, and the house was mobbed until past midnight despite three extra shows. Patrons lucky enough to be furnished the girls gratis in return for the free advertising.

The Broadway nosedived to $4,000 with "Angel No. 2," a rank copy of the original "Topaze." Manager Jones dressed himself in a gorilla suit and paraded the lobby, scaring the children away. Instead of attracting biz, Jones was replaced later in the week.

Estimates for Last Week

Orpheum (RKO) (1,500; 25-35-50)—"What Ho!" (C) and "He What Gets" split. Fair, but just fair; $3,600. fair.

Broadway (Fox) (4,500; 25-50)—"Topaze" (No. 2) (W-V). Too much like "Topaze" although producer misnamed it. $4,000; almost as bad as Noah's Ark.

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (650; 25-75)—"Love's Paradise" and "Who Done It?" Swell combo and ——— split. Forgot to look picture for last half, so stopped cold on fishing trip. $4500, terrific.

Rialto (Fox) (1,250; 25-35-50)—"Dixiana" (RKO) and "Sweethearts on Parade" (Par.). Split. Flopped on first day's biz; $3,000, terrific.

Fun in London

London, Dec. 25.

Something very funny happened here.

Receiving word that his mother was very ill, Hal Olson, who works something like Al Jolson, decided the show must go on despite his grief.

He, as you say in America, laid an egg.

BALLYHOO IS STORE GAG

With biz very bad, department stores are trying to set as a trade stimulator.

Display windows are being filled with sheer bras, corsets, brassieres and girdles.

Layoffs who used to watch building excavations now spend their days pressing noses against plate glass.

"It all goes to explained one observer. He said he spent an entire day gazing at a girdle display.

Biz is still very bad.

MGR. SHOT AS SPLITS

Chicago, Dec. 25.

Joe Givoe, manager of the Pineapple theatre, was shot and killed by Harry (Nosey) Squires, 32, and Mike (Hago) Fanzy, 26, two ex-prize fighters Saturday (24) afternoon. Givoe was counting the day's receipts in his office when the bandits entered and shot him without warning. They got $200 from the cash box and $500 from Givoe's pocket.

The thugs are hiding at 2132 Blue Island until the police cool down.

CASTOR OIL SLIPS

By Claude Binyon

A merger so tremendous in effect as to involve the whole of show biz, with Fox, R. K. O., F. & R., Sears-Roebuck, Liggett's, Listerine, Grape Nuts and 3-in-1 interested, will shortly be on the books, according to unofficial Wall Street.

What this new lineup will do to the previously announced "working agreement" between American Cheese and Castor Oil is not known, but insiders claim the new rumor takes precedence over everything.

As indication that the dent is in the bag, Americ an Can shot up to a new high today. Boys in the know point to that as the answer to everything.

"It's the answer to everything," one of them stated.

Meanwhile all firms involved are busy issuing denials that the merger is even a remote possibility.

"There's nothing to it," Jack Warner announced.

"Your firm isn't mentioned," a reporter reminded him.

"Oh," said Warner.

LENT LULL FOR L. A. LEGITS

Los Angeles, Dec. 25.

Legit grosses here continue about the same as usual. Nothing startling happened during the week, and no new openings.

Weather was okey, although a little rain Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday didn't help things any.

Night football, day football, golf, Christmas and the usual Easter lull are probably having their effect.

A scarcity of money is noticeable all around.

The Dying Nite Clubs

New York's class nite clubs have to date encountered the leanest season in a dozen years. Big openings at spots profitably operated over a long period of years were immediately followed by slim trade, even on Saturday nights. That not more than half a dozen out of 15 clubs rating a class draw would show a profit at the end of the season was an early indication.

The familiar swanky places slashed a dollar or two off their couver charges the start of the season. With most of the former spenders not caring, these have played to small trade right along.

In the Times Square section three new clubs opened in old locations. During the past months they have been getting most of the nite club business there is around these days. Two of these spots depends upon "pansy" personalities for their main draw with the horticultural touch added to the gay spots this year the most significant developements in nite club floor shows. Both joints have one or more of their male entertainers doing "drag" numbers.

As to numbers, the class clubs maintain their lead eleven being in operation to six of the middle calibre.

The 3 a. m. curfew law is still generally observed by most of the better clubs. Two all night spots protected by the hotel clause are operating while two other clubs run until dawn under a new ruling that permits the extension if the club operators own the property where the joy spot is located.

Drop in Couvers

Couver charges scaled at $5 and $6 last season, are now down to $3 and $4, while the general run of clubs are $1 and $2 per cover. In many case the fee is dispensed with in lieu of a minimun check of $3 or less.

The non-couver charging dine and dance spots, all with large capacity and lavishly mounted floor shows have doubled in number along Broadway during the past year. Several of the new spots were not paying off regularly shortly after opening and expected to fold at any time.

More than 100 girls are in the floor shows of clubs specializing in nude revues, but salaries are down, the average being $30 a week. Harlem with its numerous hot spots no longer offers much in the way of opposish to the Broadway joints. Drunkenness and disorder nowadays in nite clubs have been reduced to a minimum. In most spots gypping tactics are taboo, the operators making every effort to protect that rare customer with a bankroll and enlist him as a steady patron. Many of the old practices have been abated, forced by condition of rotten business.

As a Beer Plug

There is a new beanery serving one of those eight-course meals for 55 cents which includes such things as oysters and roast chicken. Twist is that a mug of beer at a dime must be bought. And the inside of the whole thing revolves around that mug of beer.

Restaurant is actually backed, it is said, by a big brewer. He is so sure that beer and light wines are coming back soon that he is simply building up a strong desire for foam by these low-priced food joints and he's going to have a string of 'em to plug the beer.

As for the chow, the order is to serve the best food possible for the money, without profit.

Yellow Peril Cabarets Losing Trade Through Stripped Floor Shows

Chinese restaurants are reported struggling through a season in which business is said to have fallen off 40% or more. It was thought at first that some night club patrons, deserting the later places, would give the former yellow period joints' floor shows a play. Expectations went wrong.

Considerable trade has gone over to American restaurants on Broadway offering more of a strip show. Tea rooms have also taken away, a number on or near Broadway having dance orchestras.

During the past few years some of the suey spots have been able to feature well-known "name" bands as the principal part of their shows. At present there is not one orchestra on the street figured for a better than average draw. Only two are known to any extent, the others being just bands. N. s. g. at that.

Profits on the Chinese meals run high. It is claimed by one yet the average Chinese lunch or supper, including all items of overhead, runs to a cost of 29c per meal. This was figured without the cost of floor shows, which seldom exceeds $200.

Over-Respect for Women

By Ruth Morris

Are women more respected in the show world today than 25 years ago? The answer is yes, more's the pity.

In the good old days, woman was respected for her virtue; today she is respected for her brain. She would enter a man's world and earn a man's wage, would she? Very well, then, let her do without the chivalry that was the right of a dainty creature whose skirts had not touched the mire of trade.

Twenty-five years ago, when "Variety" was a precocious cherub with an unripened green cover, woman was making dramatic entry into the office world. She was The Business Girl then, capitalized in editorial thought. She was The New Woman, a charming freak.

It was something, in those days, to be a working girl. Even a popular song called upon Heaven to protect them.

She was as much a phenomenon as the first automobile—a lovely person to be stared at, admired and accepted with amused tolerance. No naughty words might be breathed in her presence lest she bring out her smelling salts and sink to the floor.

And what is she today? Just a mugg. Her arrival at the office is not celebrated by flirtatious greetings. She's lucky if she gets as much as a passing glance or unromantic "how're ya, kid?"

As she strides to her desk, her colleagues don't hasten to extinguish asphyxiating pipes. They know she'll immediately produce cigarettes and start smoking out the office. Men tell her dirty stories because she's a good sport with an accredited sense of humor. When a taxi is not available, escorts make her walk in the rain because she's grown athletic since the days of the ridiculed Bloomer Girl.

Off Pedestal

And why? Because men respect her, darn it. She's no longer a goddess.

What of the feminist who created a stir by demanding her vote? She was a Personage at the turn of the century, celebrated by mocking cartoons, vaudeville jokes and jibing verses. How could a housewife get out of the Home and into the House? It was too delightfully silly.

But how things have changed. The men who cat-called Mrs. Catt send Mrs. Pratt to Congress.

Strangely enough, the last touch of old-world reverence for women disappeared with the saloon. At each corner hang-out the legend "Family Entrance" attested that ladies must not rub shoulders with bar-room habitues, but be isolated in sacred and discreet havens.

Do men protect the weaker sex from such contaminations now? They do not. They ask: "At what speakeasy would you like to lunch?" They do not fear some lout, in his cups, will insult their guest. She can't be insulted—she knows all the answers. In or out of a speakeasy, she demands respect and, alackaday, gets it.

Anyway, the reporter to whom this assignment was given is pretty mad at an editor who thinks she knows what went on outside the nursery 25 years ago.

The Champ Chump Town

By GEORGE McCALL

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Rackets have flourished and continue to bring forth fruit in Hollywood. Picture people, aided by flattery and their own ego, have contributed greatly to the upkeep of the gentry who believe that only morons exert energy in exchange for bread.

Hollywood for years has been a sort of west coast headquarters for the gyp gang who wish everything but three-card monte onto the picture mob. No gyp is too old to bring results. So credulous are the flickerites that the same game can be worked for year after year. The recent arrest of a jockey who worked the fixed race gag for three years in Hollywood without being caught. One director is reported to have lost close to $50,000 during that period on the chance that perhaps he was getting good information. That the nags lost was just the breaks. Others went for the gyp and lost plenty, but there never was a squawk. Picture people hate to admit they are chumps, it might have an effect on their public.

Fortune telling, personality developing, trick stock advice, fake business management, spurious jewelry, perfume, cloth and fur supposed to be smuggled into the country, shares in oil wells, fake business ventures, new isms and shisms for the development of health, questionable charities, language and vocal schools, bum real estate, non-existing clubs, crooked gambling games. In fact, every gyp in the curriculum of racketeering rolls up an impressing toll at the end of the year. A toll made impressive by the great number of picture people who love to play sucker.

"Hot" Stuff

It would seem impossible that in this more or less enlightened burg muggs could get by with the old boosting racket. Still every day the studios are visited by some gyp who is selling some type of merchandise supposed to be "hot." Picture people go for the stuff and never murmur.

Every year there is a half a dozen "Who's Who" books promoted and the picture mob are the biggest contributors. Last year none of the social publications got as far as the presses. However, the same gag has been worked for years.

Picture people never seem to get wise to the fact that they are good meat for the smart muggs. No wonder the gyp gentry genuflect at the feet of the picture names. They're the world's choice saps with their dough.

Gyp auction sales, stores that are on the verge of closing, anything at all that will attract the public, goes to work and gets a picture name to help it get by. And all the name gets out of it is the chance of a little publicity, mostly unfavorable.

Not Antique

In the last three months three picture names have been in court suing dealers in antiques because articles purchased in their stores were not authentic. Not one of the buyers thought of getting someone who knew something to appraise the articles before the purchase. Now that money is tight and some of the actors have to sell their supposed valuable furnishings, they find that their merchandise is 1930 antiquities.

Broadway in 1905

Broadway was discarding the brown derby for the tall millinery in 1905. Pulling stakes for the trek uptown.

Aside from some class eating places in the Times Square sector, Broadway's nocturnal playground for sundodgers, racket guys and their ladies had been south of Times Square. Lower Broadway made the Tenderloin and eventually the Tenderloin made Broadway.

The Tenderloin supplanted Union Square as the new spot for the stay-out-lates. Broadway was just a street until the Tenderloin passed out. After that Broadway was synonymous with the former classification, but figured a more sedate and refined monicker. When the Tenderloin moved to Times Square the racketeers, joint owners and the dames moved with it. No cover charges or Broadway columnists in this era. No curfew either. Broadway was wide open day and night.

The main night playgrounds of the period for big spenders were Rector's, Shanley's and Brown's. This trio got most of the smart trade, while the old Knickerbocker, Metropole and Jack's got the show folk and sporting men in periods of affluence.

10c. for Food and Drink

The chiselers were also with us, playing the night life with short coin but getting plenty of entertainment in the sidestreet thirst quenching emporiums where a couple of beers and a good feed from the lunch counters could be had for a dime. Entrance money was all the smart boys needed.

The sidestreets were also studded with plenty of night places, such as the German Village, Joe Adams', Billy Gallaghers, the Garden and numerous others, with most projecting entertainment supplied by singing waiters. Everybody wanting to play around and with a couple of bucks to spare all made for Broadway.

16 Legits

Broadway's theatre belt of this era had 17 houses with all but one, Hammerstein's Victoria, playing legit. From the Macy-Gimbel line (that is now but was not then) Broadway proper held seven houses with the remainder on side streets, mostly 42d, then considered the uptown deadline for the theatre district. Broadway had the Victoria, only vaude house in the Square; New York, Criterion (surviving), Herald Square, Knickerbocker, Casino and Broadway, the four latter since demolished. Harrigan and Hart were at the Garrick on West 35th street.

The 16 houses represented New York's only stands for $2 legits and comprised the theatre district of that decade. Other outlet for the legits were the neighborhoods, scaled at $1, which the attractions generally played after the uptown dates and before taking to the road.

The cabaret (now nite club) racket was about coming in. Type of shows projected were a cross between the evolutionized singing-waiter type of entertainment and the dame backing, copped from the European places. Women performers were in demand over males in most of the night places, especially in the smaller joints, where the mixing angle and check boosting made a business of understanding misunderstood. The racket still goes on, especially in the speaks of 1930.

Many structural changes on Broadway since 1905, a few new rackets, but still many of the old-timers working them and showing the newcomers plenty of new tricks.

More lights, more theatres, more joints, and more crowds now than 25 years ago, but less revelry and fun than in the days of old Broadway.

1930 in 'Variety'

By Claude Binyon

A couple of items weekly from "Variety" in 1930:

Jan. 1. Harassed William Fox refused to meet with his trustees, and Harold Jenecke, of Troy, N. Y., rushed home to tell his wife that he had been made manager of the Lincoln theatre.

Jan. 8. "Variety" celebrated its 24th birthday and R-K-O its first, while George Bancroft was reported the best b. o. draw in pictures during 1929.

Jan. 15. Determined formation of a French theatre trust was worrying American picture distributors, but a Berlin publisher squared everything by issuing a song titled "Greta Garbo Kissed Me in My Dream."

Jan. 22. More than 200 vaudeville acts around Los Angeles were looking for coffee, and eastern market victims went nerts at Miami trying to recoup lost fortunes via wheel games.

Jan. 29. The U. S. Director of Budget refused to give the Dept. of Justice extra funds for anti-merger investigations, and Lon Chaney signed a new five-year contract with Metro.

Feb. 5. Judge Thacher's decree abolished the Hays system of arbitration and standard contract, but the ticket taker on the Woolworth tower said no one jumped from his place of business because it was too high.

Feb. 12. Bootleg lyric sheets selling for 5-10 cents had publishers in a panic, and the Chicago local of the musicians' union ruled that ukelele players are musicians.

Feb. 19. Will Hays prepared his lengthy list of "don't's" for film producers, and a troupe of German acrobats were featured on an Indianapolis radio program.

Feb. 26. The "Leviathan" was being equipped with a regulation night club to offset the sale of booze on foreign ships, and W. B.-F. N. joined the Paramount camp on a 65 mm. wide film standard.

Legit and Murder

March 5. Biggest legit biz of the week on B'way was done by Cain's warehouse trucks, and Chicago bus lines inaugurated sightseeing trips to locations of famous gang murders.

March 12. A. L. Erlanger died March 7, and a "Congo cannibal" with Dr. Daniel Davenport's lecture film in Boston revealed himself as an inoffensive citizen of Harlem.

March 19. Revival of the outdoor film cycle started with 50 horse operas on studio schedules, and Edgar Selwyn, going to Hollywood for a Metro producing contract, said legit had been washed up by pictures.

March 26. Winnie Sheehan issued his affidavit against William Fox, and the N. V. A. started taking collections in theatres again.

April 2. Denver theatre unions planned opening a stock company to furnish self-employment, and Equity on the coast finally lifted its ban on Hollywood insurgents.

April 9. William Fox stepped out of Fox, receiving $18,000,000 for his Class B voting stock, and Fox's Walton theatre in the Bronx went dark.

April 16. Estimated only 15 legit stars in the United States had noticeable b. o. pull, and "The Stein Song" was bleating through every radio in the country.

April 23. Relatives of William Fox were jolted from Fox niches, and 242 of the 1,169 houses served by New York film exchanges were darkened by the increased cost of sound.

April 30. Creation of a giant film pool by the electrics, via General Talking Pictures, looked hot, and Par-Publix decided it needed flesh on its stages again.

May 7. Radio-Fox and Par-Warner were the fashionable merger rumors of the day, and a camel bought by the "Passion Play" in Chicago had a baby.

May 14. Showmen opined official Washington's attitude toward film mergers wasn't as friendly as it seemed, and Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky were dropped from Paramount screen credits.

May 21. "Ingagt" bookings were cancelled by R-K-O when the gorilla sued for back salary, and Jim Tully got a $12,000 contract to leer at John Gilbert in "Way for a Sailor."

May 28. Charlie Freeman became booking head of all R-K-O vaudeville, and rumblings of the miniature golf course "menace" were heard 'round the country.

June 4. John Mason Brown of the New York "Post" was adjudged the most accurate legit critic for the '29-'30 season, Clark Rodenback, of the Chicago "News," the best film reviewer, and "Hell's Angels," premiered at the Chinese theatre in Los Angeles.

June 11. Attempts of Pathe's disgruntled stockholders to oust the Joseph P. Kennedy group from control were seen as futile, and the operator in receivership of the Henry Duffy western legit circuit resigned when Duffy squawked that the shows were getting dirty.

Haysless Sex

June 18. The market continued floundering like a wounded smelt, and American producers discovered they could have a lot of Haysless sex fun in foreign versions.

June 25. Warners had its 25th anniversary, and the New York Theatre League became very serious about its plan to control legit tickets without the aid of brokers.

July 2. Indie picture houses saw the neighborhoods as their one big chance for a comeback, and Ringling-Barnum's saucer lip gals refused to continue on exhibition unless they were furnished with rubber boots, like the Negro customers wore during rainy weather.

July 9. Sid Silverman advised anybody to stay out of Hollywood, and Eddie Cantor resigned as president of the N. V. A.

July 16. Calvin Coolidge was rated the third-best paid newspaper columnist in America, and Lenore Ulric bought back her Fox contract for $25,000.

July 23. Germany's passage of the kontingent law ired American film producers, filmdom agreed on a new uniform contract to replace the one abolished by Judge Thacher's decision, and Dr. Lee De Forest made such gleeful statements about his sound picture patent infringement victory that Western Electric asked a court to dampen his enthusiasm.

July 30. Warners' postponed stock dividend attracted the bears en masse, and R-K-O gave that Al Trahan copy act a route.

Aug. 6. United Artists started selling its product to indies away from chains, and a Des Moines theatre was accepting spinach and eggs for admission.

Aug. 13. Of 316 feature pictures released during the year ending July 31, only 18 were smashes, and Warners looped off 400 home office employees in sudden retrenchment.

Aug. 20. Warners pulled through its financial tremor with the brothers still in control, and vaudfilm was selling at 20 cents top in Syracuse.

Aug. 27. Hollywood studios started their extensive economy drive, and Lon Chaney passed away Aug. 25.

Sept. 3. New York threatened Hollywood as a picture production center, and a circus performer in Lisbon was taken to the hospital after swallowing three live eels.

Sept. 10. Wall Street thought Fox, Loew, G. T. E. and Westinghouse would make a good combined holding company for control of the amusement biz, and Roxy left the Roxy.

Sept. 17. British talker production was finally on a profitable basis, and Chautauqua's last stands were having their most disastrous season.

Sept. 24. Harold B. Franklin walked out of the Fox-West Coast Theatres presidency with a $500,000 settlement, and Havana opened some swell divorce courts with a plea for international patronage.

Oct. 1. Oscar Oldknow became executive vice-president of F.-W. C. and "Once in a Lifetime" put the lemonlight on Hollywood.

Oct. 8. Hays issued a couple of secret invitations for foreign producers to join the M. P. P. D. A., and all the good Ford gags were transferred to Austins.

Oct. 15. Warners was turning in a $350,000 weekly profit, and U. S. producers decided that all comment on foreign version production should be written in red ink.

Oct. 22. Metro, W. B., Fox and Radio were all set for a contest to decide whose wide screen is best, and vaudeville banned bare legs.

Oct. 29. Estimated 25,000 stage actors were idle, and one of them was Solly Violinsky, marooned in Hollywood.

Nov. 5. A spool of "immoral" clips from censored features was being shown in the Ohio state capitol's projection room to a select group at $1.50 per look, and "All Quiet" was selected by the Academy as the best picture of the year.

Nov. 12. Will Horowitz, Par-Publix theatre operating partner in Houston, issued his peculiar plea for censorship, and W. B. decided it would save everything by eliminating everything at F. N. but the trademark.

Nov. 19. Film attendance dropped about 8% during 1930, and Sam Katz realigned the Publix operating staff with John Balaban as his chief aide.

Girls Get Check on Bank of U. S. in Alleged Shake Game

Ralph Steinberg, interior architect and designer of stage scenery, of 101 Park avenue, refused to be "shaken down" by two alleged racketeering femmes from Broadway, Ruth Bennett, 22, of 162 West 97th street, and Helen Lane, 21, model, of the same address, were arrested by Detectives Hendry and Dugan of the East 35th street station, when they called on Steinberg to collect some more dough, stated the cops.

In the possession of the Bennett woman, the sleuths stated, was a check on the Bank of the United States for $200 given by the artist. Miss Bennett was vexed when she realized she had a check on a closed bank.

Steinberg asserted he recently met the pair on Seventh avenue. They strolled awhile and then they accompanied him to his studio.

They had a few drinks and he showed them his work and studio. He announced that he enjoyed their company. He stated the party was over. The hour was late; the drinks gone and they had better be going, said Steinberg.

"I should say not. We know you are married and we will tear our clothing, create a scene and have you arrested for attacking us," they warned, "unless we are recompensed," the women were alleged to have said.

Steinberg stated he argued with them but to no avail. He then gave them the check on the Bank of U. S., saying he had no cash but would have in a few days. He averred they promised to return. He made an appointment at his studio. In the meantime he consulted the detectives and they told him to keep the date.

The femmes demanded $1,000 and returned to keep the date. The cops were hiding. Steinberg had a jurist visiting him when the girls entered. They asked the jurist to leave so that they could have a private chat with Steinberg. The jurist left. But the cops did not.

The sleuths, from their position, said they saw Steinberg hand over the $20. The cops stepped out and the girls were "bagged." They began to sob and denied the allegations. They were arraigned in Yorkville court before Magistrate Bernard Mogilesky and held in $10,000 bail for the Grand Jury.

Let's Not Fight

This editorial, with the same heading, was printed in "Variety" in 1925, two months after "Variety" had been "blacklisted" by the Keith-Albee circuit. Previously "Variety" had printed a series of editorials calling the big time vaudeville managements' attention to the probability of serious opposition from the picture theatre adding stage attractions to its film features, and also pointing out the wrongful methods of the big-time booking and operation. These editorials brought the Keith-Albee "blacklist" against "Variety," through the order of E. F. Albee.

No attention was paid by the big time to this suggestion of not fighting "Variety." This same editorial was repeated in the Anniversary Number of "Variety" of 1926, with added matter advising the big time, then commencing to seriously suffer through "Variety's" attacks upon it weekly, that it was not too late if the big time wished to stop its battle and "blacklist" against "Variety."

Again no attention was given by the big time, and the fight continued, with big time slowly fading. Meantime, and later, the predictions made in this editorial became matters of fact and record.

The editorial is reprinted at this time to inform the newer show business and those engaged in it that "Variety" did not start the fight with the Keith-Albee circuit and big time vaudeville; that "Variety" has never commenced an important fight against anyone or anything in the show business, but it has fought back when this or that important theatrical interest said:

"We will put 'Variety' out of business," and attempted to do so.

(Reprinted from "Variety," Dec. 30, 1925)

For over a month the Keith and Orpheum circuits have been trying to provoke a fight with Variety. And we don't want to fight. Funny, too, in a way, since we have been forced to fight so much of the show business.

About 13 years ago the Keith office picked a fight with Variety because it then wanted to promote an opposition theatrical paper. Now it wants to further its own house organ, called theatrical. To advance that paper if possible the Keith and Orpheum people with the Orpheum people led by the Keith people, would like to see Variety start a crusade against them, so that they, in their peculiar and accustomed style, could place the blame upon Variety, as the defense to oblige their vaudeville acts and agents to advertise in their own organ.

The usual course of theatrical circuits in antagonism to Variety has been to do their underhanded work under cover with Variety left nothing but its open pages. In that way the theatrical interests always have alleged that Variety was the instigator. It's a very common trick but deceives many.

Variety doesn't want to fight with the Keith or Orpheum circuits. Variety doesn't want to break hearts as the twilight of life settles down upon them. We don't want to injure big time vaudeville as it now is existing through uncovering the big time situation, nor the people concerned in it. Big time vaudeville can't stand it and the big time directors at least should be able to perceive that much. Any man fortunate enough to have assumed a high even if false position in his heyday should not want to have that shattered, in or outside of the show business.

We don't want to battle with big time vaudeville—such as it is—we don't want to fight—Vaudeville.

But if we must, we must.

It's simply the question now, as 13 years ago, whether a theatrical paper in America can remain free and independent, unhampered within the trade; whether it shall be a newspaper or a piece of cheese.

We ask big time vaudeville to let us alone in our pursuit of the theatrical newspaper business, and to let us pursue our own course, to reach the fate that we may make by ourselves and only by ourselves, but if the big time people believe they can shape our course or fate, and insist upon doing so, let them go to it—now and immediately. We don't want to fight, but we are willing to fight back.

And that means in fighting back we will find it proper and necessary to attempt to disarm our enemies, to reveal the manner of individuals and institutions fighting us, to expose how they fight us and how they have fought (and usually crushed) all who dared defend themselves against injustice, greed and monopolistic arrogance.

And then again the Keith-Albee coterie that now appears to so closely envelop the present controlling group of the Orpheum Circuit may not like the way or manner in which Variety publishes stories, reports or opinions of their vaudeville. That is something else once more, and has happened before with the Keith-Albee offices. They are in the show business and subject to publicity by reason of it; they seek publicity for themselves in every conceivable way, yet seemingly are of the belief that what the profession may be trade-internally interested in is none of the profession's business, although the profession is making it possible for the Keith-Albee theatres to remain open with vaudeville.

But please reflect, big time, before starting anything.

Let's pass out in tranquillity.

And don't forget that the very attack on Variety you now have started to make is a part of the uncovering, since it is a confession that after all nothing changes.

There have been enough broken hearts and spirits strewn upon the pathway of big time vaudeville to date.

Pause!

the 25TH Anniversary Number of

VARIETY

WM. MORRIS, Chairman

My dear Committee Members:

To you belongs the honor of this tribute to "Variety" and to Sime. The 25th Anniversary Number stands as the result of your effort, cooperation and assistance.

We hope that you will all feel a reflection of pleasure at seeing such an army of well-wishers represented therein.

The task we took upon ourselves is well done - it was a labor of love with all of us. I had to lean heavily upon you for assistance, advice and cooperation, and found each one of you ready and willing.

This Committee is honorably discharged - its duty done. Your Chairman reserves for himself only one prerogative, that he may call you all together again upon the Fiftieth Anniversary of "Variety" and Sime, and find you all as bright, as willing, and as spry as you are now.

Please accept my thanks and good wishes for a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Sincerely yours,

William Morris

Personalities in 1905

By Ruth Morris

Perusal of contemporary criticism shows 1905 a successful year for women of the theatre. Favorite actresses were celebrated, though not too numerously to dim each other's glory, and newcomers, who have since climbed to stardom, were receiving first favorable comment.

Maude Adams, after reviving "The Little Minister" at the Empire, received paeans of praise for her performance in a new Barrie play called "Peter Pan."

Mrs. Fiske, honored by Harvard University for her portrayal of Leah Kleschna, was cited by Alan Dale as a sympathetic and superior playwright for her "Light From St. Agnes," part of a triple bill at the Manhattan.

Lillian Russell, a famous beauty, was also conceded a charming comedienne on the strength of her Lady Teazle in the John Kendrick Bangs adaptation of a musicalized "School for Scandal." An account of the premiere at the Casino heralded it as a "sensation." The auditorium was crammed to the doors with notables and the floral tributes were the talk of the town.

Elsie Janis, a 16-year-old miss with her hair in a pompadour, was considered "promising" because of the hit she was making on the road in "The Fortune Teller," and a child performer, known as Gladys Smith (not yet Mary Pickford) made a decided impression at the Star theatre—prophetic name—in the part of "Freckles," a pathetic role, in "The Gypsy Girl."

In the same year Julia Sanderson was charming audiences in "Fantana" at the Lyric, in the same cast with a young man named Douglas Fairbanks, who was said to have "an unusually fine voice and more than the usual share of good looks."

Marie Dressler, two decades in advance of her real talking film triumph, was convulsing audiences as Tillie Buttins in the Weber and Fields burlesque, "The College Widower." Her appearance in a football uniform was described as "solidly, uproariously and legitimately funny."

Wolf Never Noticed

Marie Doro, Alison Skipworth and Dorothy Donnelly were doing well at the Savoy in "Friquet," in which Edgar Allan Woolf was so inconspicuous that he didn't get a write-up.

Jobyna Howland "came to the front with dramatic qualities" in McIntyre and Heath's "Ham Tree" in company with W. C. Fields, David Torrence and Harry Cooper.

Blanche Ring made a "charming impression" as a Lew Fields burlesque songstress; Blanche Bates created theatrical history in "The Girl of the Golden West"; Olga Nethersole shocked the town in "The Labyrinth" at the Herald Square; Sarah Bernhardt "repeated old-time theatrical triumphs" in repertoire at the Lyric; Stella Mayhew "added more fame to her thickly laureled crown" in "Fritz of Tammany Hall" and Kitty Gordon's statuesque beauty was an important part of "Veronique" at the old Broadway.

Old-fashioned, but Funny

The plot of "Charley's Aunt," hinging upon the unwillingness of two girls to stay in bachelor diggings without a chaperone, dates it as very old fashioned, indeed. There are probably places in this world where chaperonage is still considered necessary, but there can hardly be two attractive young women who would voluntarily leave what promises to be a good party, just because some elderly matron hasn't lent it the stamp of propriety. The acting of June Collyer and Flora Sheffield as the two girls is keyed to that maidenly departure. They droop their heads, blink their eyes, gasp, sigh, wear perfectly terrible clothes and are just too-Elsie-Dinsmore for words.

They are not the only old-fashioned note in "Charley's Aunt." For one thing there's the dialogue, barren of anything but obvious plot exposition. Without Charles Ruggles, a farceur of first rank, it would be extremely dull; with him, it makes audiences chuckle, howl, snort and practically tumble out of their seats. It's awful—but they like it.

E. CANTOR AT PALACE, A STAR IN VAUDEVILLE

Eddie Cantor has never been more of a star than at the Palace this week. He is the personification of matured celebrity, out of black face and in a beautiful color scheme that is the last word in what the well-dressed man should wear. There are no hey-hay clothes for this immaculate Eddie who has come a long way since he first juggled plates for Jean Bedini. He chooses quiet blue serge, a brilliant monotone blue tie and chaste azure linen. A felt hat is so chic it can afford to be black and rest on its laurels. Black hair touched with gray and a healthy tan are a climax of distinction.

Though his act is top-notch Cantor stuff, it is not his most important contribution to a swell Palace bill. The knowledge of his presence was enough to pack even the side boxes and make demand for standing room at Saturday's matinee. Anticipation of his appearance created excitement that responded to every act on the bill, reacting as favorably on the actors as the audience. Everybody was on his toes, ready to entertain and be entertained. Only a name that means box-office and laughter can have an effect like that.

Joe Frisco is the sartorial opposite of Cantor. Just a mugg and glad of it, his coat is an ill-fitting white-striped classic that is somehow right with a large bow tie, narrow trousers and a carnation that trims a button hole for the express purpose of becoming moth eaten. It's wonderful to be the Broadway tradition that Frisco is. They love him.

Gracie Allen, the Dizzy Lady who Likes Lamb Chops, has achieved a perfect brilliance of dumb comedy. She works quietly, with poise that gives conviction to every insanity. Underneath every ridiculous crack is the charm that holds audiences. Her frock of blue tulle is as ingenue as it should be, done subtly and with style.

Marion Harris has one of the few voices that need no adornment to strike right to the hearts of listeners. Instead of appreciating her gift and giving it a chance to shine, Miss Harris moves constantly, gestures with affectation and overworks sweetness. Smiles, to be devastating, should be meted out with economy.

The Four American Aces and a Queen, usually trimly dressed, have used bad judgment in selecting their present costumes of silk jersey too transparent to be good style—or taste, for that matter.

Brilliance of the blue costumes of the Three Rhythm Dancers steals the color from their brown faces and are not nearly smart enough for a Cantor Harlem steppers. If the waste matter in Frank and Milton Britton's Gang could be eliminated it would be one of the greatest contributions to Slapstick since Karno.

ANN SEYMOUR
with HARRY SEYMOUR

David Kessler, in the "Rochester Journal," said: "Ann Seymour is on the R-K-O Palace stage and there should be rejoicing among the lovers of good vaudeville. Her ability to "sell" her personality provided the first really entertaining moments in several weeks during stage end of bills here.

Headlining R-K-O, 1930-1931

The Clothes-line

By Ruth Morris

Did You Know That

Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., caused a small riot doing their Christmas shopping in Saks...Bill Frawley is back in town and may do a new farce...Eddie Buzzell is enroute to California and the Columbia studio...There's nothing left of the old Century theatre but the outer walls and proscenium arch...It looks like the burning of Rome, at night, when lit up from within for the workmen...Dorothy Hall would be high hat and have a silver Xmas tree...Eddie Foy has fun with a set of false teeth...Kitty Watts and Virginia Smith were chatting animately at a luncheon the other day...Carmel Myers must cut her vaudeville engagements to two weeks this trip in order to fill a picture contract...Ginger Rogers sang on the "Nestle" radio hour this week...Ona Munson leaves for Hollywood next week for First National ...Ina Claire proves in "The Royal Family" that she is still the best dressed woman on the stage (or screen) and is photographed divinely; a clinging evening gown entirely made of white brilliants was a striking entrance, and a darkish suit trimmed in red fox was worn with a becoming tricorn; a tan wrap had huge sleeves and collar bordered in luscious blue fox and the wrapped turban was a classic. Her lame' evening gown was long and slinky and worn with exquisite large earrings...Mary Brian has much more unction than usual and Freddie March is simply grannnnnnnnnnddddddddd!

Captured brilliance of all the rhinestones used in vaudeville will eliminate electric light bills.

Collected breezes from all the feather fans waved by acrobatic dancers would create a cyclone.

Laid end to end, all the gold crosses used by Spanish dancers would reach to heaven.

If all black laces over pink foundations were thrown in the alley it would be a great idea.

Soiled dancing slippers spoil the style of the prettiest frock.

Manufacturers of silk tights must hate Earl Carroll and stocking manufacturers adore Mrs. Mindlin.

If a picture actress wears a fringed gown, the character she takes is bad—or about to be.

If a picture actress carries lorgnettes she is characterizing a snob.

The purity of a picture ingenue increases with the brim-size of her horse-hair hat.

Gloria Swanson understands style more fully than any other screen actress.

Picture actresses, appearing in vaudeville, won't forsake their diamonds, even when wearing simple organdy frocks.

Montedoro's mad color schemes bring applause-provoking warmth to the cathedral splendor of the Roxy.

Ziegfeld costumes look fresher after his show has been running six months than Earl Carroll's costumes do on opening night.

$7,000 Tossed

The $7,000 scene in "Princess Charming" represents money thrown away.

For stunning stage effect, nothing has surpassed the Hunting Ballet in "Simple Simon."

The world's most malicious costumes are in "Once in a Lifetime."

The girl with Falls, Reading and Boyce, tumbling acrobats, wins the blue ribbon for keeping costumes immaculately neat and clean.

It's news when a woman single appears without a chiffon handkerchief.

Costuming of N.T.G.'s Hollywood Frolic dispels the illusion that vaudeville is devised primarily for women and children.

Costumes of "Madame Satan" eclipsed all others in showy bad taste.

Without checkered suits and funny hats there would be no comedy in burlesque.

Harriet Hoctor's Example

Since Harriet Hoctor's success, toe dancers have discarded ballet skirts for soft chiffon draperies.

Without mythology, night clubs would have a hard time devising show-girl numbers.

If they haven't a desired character costume at Guttenberg's there's no such character.

Dignified long trains invariably trip up Jeritza.

Hollywood—Minus Aristocracy

By Cecelia Ager

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

Nobody appreciates what a hard time Hollywood has trying to established an aristocracy, nobody but Hollywood itself. Nobody knows better than Hollywood how much it needs an aristocracy. People can laugh if they want to at the strange goings-on in that settlement, but they can't accuse Hollywood of not trying to better itself, Lord knows.

Every time Hollywood gets the thing started and is all ready to obey the dictates of the group it has designated worthy of teaching it manners, some member collapses to prove he's just as natural as the rest of them. It's disheartening.

Here is a community lousy with the prime requisite of the Grand Manner—money, yet every time it sets out to do something about it, it finds itself stymied by the downright cussedness of its citizenry. They can carry it off just so far, and then revert right back to the elemental humans as always.

Maybe it's the tropical climate that melts their resolutions to be reserved, and gracious, and so frightfully sporting. Maybe the fear of ousting that gnaws at every one of them makes them too impatient to go through like little ladies and gentlemen. Maybe it's seeing too many pictures in which the people it knows so well, most of them hailing from little mid-west towns, play princes and duchesses to smashing box-office returns. Maybe the foreign version claiming titles are a shade too quick, to snatch at Hollywood's dinner invitations. Maybe Hollywood is too exacting, too childlike in its belief that the private lives of any ruling class must be beyond reproach.

So completely informed as to the intimate moments and desires of its potential rulers, Hollywood in its innocence can't see why it should behave any better.

No Social Arbiter

Each time it makes a brave and genuinely earnest attempt to pattern its existence as it imagines The Best People do it, Hollywood comes up against the stark fact there is no one around for whose approval it's worth the struggle. There isn't any one, where gossip is so completely available, to qualify as social arbiter. There's nobody to accept you, nobody whose acceptance can stamp you as having made the social grade. No inner circle, no upper strata, nothing to strive for. Nobody who's got the jump on the rest of them. Just a lot of people trying every which way to fill theatres, all working for Wall Street.

Gentility, that beautiful, intangible something! How can they tell when they've got it? They study all the formulas. Heavens knows they want to do all the right things, yet who is there to Knight them?

The Mayfair has a tango orchestra, which certainly is correct. Anyone who has been to Europe knows that. The Embassy is a discreet place, almost a sombre room in its straining for good taste. Don't they dress for dinner? Don't they light their homes with candles? Their butler's approval makes them as happy as a renewed contract. Are any children more adapt at curtseys than theirs? Do any study French more rigorously, or ride at an earlier age?

Crabbing Good Form

Then right in the midst of all this such good form, when Hollywood hopes it has progressed so nicely, will comes tales of the most distressing sort. Last night one producer, invited to another producer's home after a premiere, threatened he could and would take any of his host's stars, just like that. No one could help hearing him. Somehow Hollywood feels that wasn't quite correct procedure at a party. But all the guests agreed the supper was served beautifully.

Two stars who happened to arrive at a premiere simultaneously discovered that each was wearing the same model evening wrap. What they said to one another! But at least only those present saw the hatred glaring in their eyes.

Nor was it considerate of that leading man and his equally celebrated flame to choose a ringside table at the Montmarte for their unmistakable demonstrations of a love that must transcend that of Anthony for Cleopatra.

Problems

Should producers' wives lunch downtown to insure a bit of romantic dalliance with their husbands' employees is a question discussed daily in Hollywood. By virtue of their power, producers are as important socially as anyone. If their wives, who no one can deny are conscious of their social responsibility, are so pleasantly broad-minded about their own conduct, surely the rest of Hollywood may follow their enviable example?

It's all very bewildering. No embryo aristocracy was ever faced with more difficult problems. Hollywood is as neatly honeycombed with relatives as the monarchies of Europe, still it has no king, no queen, not even a dictator.

The future for aristocracy in Hollywood looks pretty bleak. It just seems as though nothing can be done about it, unless all the present pretenders will consent to move out and let a new crop move in, a brand new bunch with some sort of respect for one another.

Roxy's Panto

"Christmas Eve" may be just a perfume to a large part of the world, but to the Roxy it is a signal for bigger and better holiday spirit, translated into hearty carols and fairy tale pageantry that is a riot of brilliant, warm color. No child should be without the Roxy this week. There's a blustering flesh-and-blood Santa Claus, a live Christmas tree, a whistling bird, dancing dolls and Christmas packs turning, at the pull of a string, into kicking, smiling, precision-routining Roxyettes.

The fable of "Snow White and Rose Red" gives every member of the Roxy family a chance to shine. Patricia Bowman dances with impersonal and uninterpretive perfection as the Good Fairy, Harold Van Duzee waddles about impressively as a friendly Bear and Montedoro and Clarke Robinson have combined their talents to produce a stage picture that has vitality and character.

Happy New Year.

15 YEARS AGO

(From Variety and Clipper)

New York was indignant at an increase in prices for the theatres to $3 for New Year's Eve, and advance sales accordingly fell off sharply.

"Chin Chin" left Broadway after a run of 64 weeks during which time it had piled up an aggregate of $1,850,000, of which $320,000 represented net profit to Charles Dillingham, who also managed the Globe. Grosses averaged $18,500 over the period of the run.

Report was current in Hollywood that Charles Chaplin would quit Essanay at the expiration of his contract and go into the making of pictures on his own.

Variety published its 10th anniversary number, an edition of 130 pages.

Hippodrome did its biggest week, gross amounting to $72,000.

National Board of Review announced it was broke and approached the leading film producers with a plea to contribute. Producers at the time were reported cold to the idea, but subsequently they came through, which the Board later learned, was the worst thing that could happen to it.

The Los Angeles newspapers got their first film player scandal and hopped to it with enthusiasm and abandon. Real estate industry was just in its infancy in L. A. in 1915.

Indoor ice rinks were the current rage in New York, Madison Square Garden having just decided to install one.

50 YEARS AGO

(From Clipper)

New York held the National Convention of the Elks during the Christmas holidays, drawing the largest attendance in the organization's history. Event ought to have been picturesque in those pre-prohibition times.

Clipper calls attention to the large number of mediocre English actors who sought America, explaining it on the ground that second rate players figured that they could go further here, depending on "the crude tastes of young America."

John H. Clark was touring in the East with an athletic specialty show called "Clark's Sparring and Musical Combination." Bill was made up of prize ring notables, Clark's own club swinging turn, wrestling bouts and like exercises. Music was supplied by a pug who doubled with the Irish pipes.

Sporting world had not yet recognized John L. Sullivan except as a promising youngster. Other boxers slighted him, too. John L. met one John Donaldson of Cleveland in a mill at Cincinnati and couldn't understand what had happened to him. To find out he insisted on a return match which John L. granted promptly. Report of the incident is inconspicuous in the Clipper, indicating that John L. was not yet news.

Skaters were not permitted on the large Prospect Park (Brooklyn) lake which was used for ice boats. Skaters were sent to the smaller ponds.

Clipper assembles a lot of freak baseball plays of the previous season, the prize being a hit ball that fell between the inner and outer fence of the Buffalo ball park and had to be fielded with a fire axe. In another case in San Francisco a foul ball bounced off the catcher's forehead and was fielded by the pitcher.

25 Years Ahead—and What?

Within the life of "Variety," 25 years, the show business of America has performed a complete somersault. So instead of talking about 25 years or of what has occurred since then, which everyone knows more or less, it may be better for the show business of today to look forward 25 years. That will be something which events have thrown out the show business of 25 years ago failed to do. Then or at any time thereafter, up to now.

Of course, "Variety" is naturally appreciative that it has lived for 25 years, and it hopes it may for 25 more, and more. It hasn't much to say for itself. Hobbling along during those 25 years, it's still trying to go along in the best and only way it knows. That is to print the truth about the show business it represents, as it finds it. For no other reason than, as has been said before, a trade paper can't fool its trade, which knows more—about that trade than any trade paper possibly could. Therefore, to print the truth as it is found, located or gathered, appears to be the best, if not obvious to all, policy. And it's much easier without "politics."

In the 25 years to come, contemporary showmen must avoid the stage errors of the 25 years behind. Those errors have been plentiful. They have been the cause of the decline of every branch in the show business excepting pictures, and pictures, on top now, should be the most assiduous in avoiding grave mistakes of the future.

Perhaps vaudeville and the legit will come back. The legit will have a future when the picture business assumes charge of it. Otherwise the legit will linger on the Broadways of say five big American cities, and then but feebly, unless legit's greatest detriment, its ruination in fact, is eliminated. That will likely happen if pictures takes over the legit. Vaudeville will have its chance when there are more managerial believers in vaudeville. The picture and vaudeville hook-up in chains is all wrong for vaudeville. The weight lies with pictures, because the controllers of the chains are firstly picture men, who don't know vaudeville and have no faith in it. Burlesque is negative and immaterial. But the same reasons exist for its present condition as with the others which have been shell-shocked.

The two greatest errors committed by the stage have been the abuse of its producers and their own power. If the picture business will remember that brief statement covering a great deal, it may save itself the headaches those errors cost so many others of the stage.

This abuse started with Klaw & Erlanger. It made the Shuberts possible and impossible. Stair & Havlin tried it and passed out. Keith and Orpheum vaudeville did it, per E. F. Albee, and passed out. The Columbia Amusement Co. (burlesque) did it and passed out.

Producers as employed here do not contemplate merely the men who stage the show or pictures. Producers as a term, embraces everyone concerned in the making of a show or a film. The producers were abused and driven away from the stage, from K. & E. to the Shuberts, from the Shuberts to their own independency or back to K. & E., or from Stair & Havlin to oblivion. While the producers of vaudeville were given the needles by the Albee crowd even as those producers were feeding vaudeville with its life blood. And they were starved out.

Abuse from power for 25 years developed from the K. & E. days until it became so common in the latter years it almost was accepted as a part of stage operation. Of the two, the picture heads should avoid the abuse of power for, when that starts, the abuse of producers follows.

Another highly important matter the stage leaders of the past overlooked, although the entire show business to date has overlooked it, was good will. They neither cultivated good will with the public nor in their own organizations. They never had it with either. And it was important—it is important, most important. Past events have proven how valuable it would have been to K. & E., the Shuberts and Albee, who couldn't get it when they wanted and needed it. Because good will cannot be purchased, only cultivated and in good faith.

There was never one man of the stage big enough to dictate what the public must take. To be remembered by the picture men. For the public may not take. No one man in pictures is big enough to disregard talent. Those of the stage who thought they were all lived to regret it.

It's talent that makes pictures, from the writer to the director and the actors—all the essential talent of the studios. That talent must be conserved and preserved, if the picture business is to be preserved. The picture business cannot afford to commit the faults of the stage, for it knows the faults of the stage, and thereby has the best guide for its business future by simply avoiding them.

If the picture business is so new that it has bragged over its profit last year, without knowing what it is going to be this year, that should be the lesson for that. Nor should the picture man be obsessed with the erroneous belief the general public depends upon him for entertainment. This country thrived before pictures.

In short, if the picture man will run his business for the next 25 years without abusing it or the people in it, he will probably find an enduring prosperous business under him; for then his people will work with him instead of against him; he will have located the best talent and held it; he will have found the foundation for success-team work and good will. With that good will also fostered with the public, now, tomorrow, every day, week and year.

And all of this goes exactly the same for theatre operation.

Perhaps if at home the leaders of the film industry will hang in their bedroom the following card, seeing it night and morning, they never will go wrong in the operation of their organizations:

REMEMBER!
Klaw & Erlanger
The Shuberts.
E. F. Albee.

Research

An offer of $350,000 for the picture rights to "Lightnin'" was thought pretty high back in '21. Was and is.

Shuberts incorporated their vaudeville for the season of '21-'22 in January of '21. Venture lasted about a season and a half with a change in policy.

Chaplin's "The Kid," with Jackie Coogan, was the first five-reel picture to play the big time Keith houses. That was in '21. Circuit had previously played the same comic's "Shoulder Arms," three-reeler.

Equity's "closed shop" went into effect in March, 1921.

Film houses bowed to the 10 cents a seat music tax in April of '21. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers the instigator.

The first two-for-one legit ticket plan bobbed up in the spring of '21. The Shuberts.

The slump in '21 coast film production was as bad in April as the preceding January and eastern bankers were demanding production for the east or Florida.

In July, 1908, Fred Niblo, now directing, was elected "Big Chief," or president of the White Rats, the variety actors' organization. He was then a monologist.

Hollywood was plenty sore at German films during the spring of '21. Showing of "Dr. Caligari" was egged at the Miller, Los Angeles, with the American Legion in on the rumpus.

Williams-in-and-Taft got together in Australia in '20.

Keith-Moss merger of July, '20, increased the big time houses (twice daily) in Greater New York to 11 and 11 in the U. S. and Canada.

Adolph Zukor, through his United Plays Co., offered to produce or finance any play selected from this company's foreign catalog of 8,000 plays on a percentage or royalty basis. Samuel Rachman was in on the concern with Zukor. Offer was unprecedented in '20.

Cohan and Harris dissolve their partnership spring of '20.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Despite the Paramount ballyhoo for Marlene Dietrich, with a campaign to build her to stardom on two pictures, the German girl will take second mention on the current "Dishonored."

Fifth mention will go to Victor McLaglen, Fox player loaned on agreement that his name take preference over all others in the cast.

With George Bancroft stalling on that new contract with Paramount, and Par itself refusing to come up to the star's reported demand for $130,000 per picture, offering only $80,000, the personal appearance the star made at the Paramount, New York, is being talked of in Coast film circles as a faulty move.

Bancroft picked a tough time to go in, week before Xmas, and gross for the house was light. It gives the studio a point to bring up in further discussions.

ERPI's "noiseless recording," just introduced on the Coast, cuts down the ground noise that comes to the ear as a static murmur in moments of supposed quiet. It has been possible to reduce it by printing the sound track dark, but this also reduces the volume of intentional sounds.

The two ribbons vibrated by sounds in the Western Electric light valve are normally separated one-thousandth of an inch. The strongest current just brings the ribbons together. In weaker ones there is considerable waste space in which the ground noise is apparent, making a whisper hiss mechanically audible.

What the auxiliary electric circuit does in the "noiseless" system is to bring the ribbons closer together when the sound currents are small, so that the vibrations almost fill the intervening space. Increasing sound automatically increases spacing in proportion.

RCA-Photophone engineers have been developing a device which will have the same effect on its "tooth-cutting" oscillator, a different problem from the W. E. variable density track.

Paramount writers who think Buddy Rogers muffs his lines, usually save their best and fastest quips for the lips of other characters.

Consequently, Norman Foster, slipped into the Rogers part in "It Pays to Advertise" because of the star's appendectomy, finds himself with few laugh lines. To give the boy a break, director Frank Tuttle has several times let the scene run longer than necessary while Norman ad libs.

Paramount doesn't think Clara Bow should go in for serious drama on the screen. The flamboyant pictures the red head has been doing the past year have not lived up to expectations either, execs admit.

In an effort to establish her box office value for the forthcoming year, Paramount is making a far reaching check with exhibitors over the country, clocking returns on various types of Bow stories. Her future pictures will be based accordingly.

One main stem house in Montreal is already nearly out of business, mainly through the Children's Act barring minors of 16 and under from attending pictures even accompanied by parents. Efforts now under way to secure special censorship of films for children so as to permit theatres to admit them for such films.

If carried through quickly may save the house in question. A difficult problem to solve in Montreal and province of Quebec.

Foreign language talkers in this country have as yet made no special appeal to students of foreign languages. Enlisting teachers and school boards to indorse the foreign talkers might bring increased attendance. It's a point the import films appear to have missed so far.

Jolson doesn't know whether to make his U. A. picture essentially with songs or to minimize that and go strong on story.

Will be guided, sez Al, by further public attitude towards quasi-musical talkers.

Dave Burg, making a silent for foreign release from the "B" takes of Columbia's "Rain or Shine" on the Coast, will probably wind up by identifying Joe Cook, lead, as an eccentric with a constantly moving jaw.

Not screen-credited but Joe Farnham, M-G-M contract writer, did the Graham McNamee spieling for "Fishermen's Paradise," the Metro short, Farnham neither title-credited for his dialog material or personal spieling.

Despite the anti-musical public reaction, Paramount (studio) is peeved at itself for not permitting Chevalier to do more songs in "Playboy of Paris." For the French market, "La Petite Cafe," as it's labeled, has more songs purposely interpolated.

Louis B. Mayer states that no M-G-M writer on the Metro w. c. lot is on a week-to-week basis. When a contract expires, there is a 60-day optional leeway permitting the studio to retain the writer's services until his or her current assignment is completed.

Order at Warner-First National not to divulge advance information on negotiations for stories, plays, players, etc. Claim is that the price always jumps up with premature publicity when bidding becomes keener.

Radio's new contract with Dorothy Lee, going into effect in April, carries a must. Arbitrary provision by the actress is that she will be starred during the first six months of the ticket.

Publix School for Managers is not now in session. It may be resumed in the spring. No immediate press for house managers.

Gangsters have evidently ceased to wallop New York on the funnybone. Censors in the big city last week cut plenty feet, which kidded gang activities, out of Paramount's "The Gang Buster" and U's "See America Thirst."

"Doorway to Hell," with its moral lesson, was hardly molested.

Each time the electric signs on the R-K-O Mayfair, New York, are changed, the cost is reported at $5,000. So far Mayfair's talkers have been at the house for two weeks, only, each.

Legit Stars of 25 Years Ago

By Harold Seton

Twenty-five years ago, long before the era of motion pictures, premieres on Broadway were important events. I attended all the important first-nights of 1905, along with Lillian Russell, Jesse Lewisohn, "Diamond" Jim Brady, Edna McCauley, Abe Hummell and Mrs. Jackson Gouraud. Mrs. Gouraud (now living in Paris as Princess Galatzine, having divorced her fifth husband) and I are the sole survivors of that picturesque coterie. In 1910 I wrote a collection of short stories for Mrs. Gouraud, and they were published under her name, as "Moon Madness."

In 1905 David Belasco produced "The Girl of the Golden West," of which he was the author, and in which Blanche Bates was starred. Lowell Sherman had a few lines.

Ethel Barrymore starred in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire." John Barrymore appeared in the cast. So did Mary Nash. Lionel Barrymore starred in "Pantaloon," by J. M. Barrie.

David Warfield was touring in "The Music Master." Jane Cowl played a minor role.

Florence Reed was playing stock in Providence and Worcester.

Laurette Taylor was in stock in Seattle.

Alla Nazimova was acting with Paul Orleneff's Russian Company at the Herald Square Theatre.

Fred Stone was touring in "The Wizard of Oz."

Billie Burke was appearing in London in "The Blue Moon."

Arthur Byron was in "'Op o' Me Thumb."

Janet Beecher was in "The Education of Mr. Pipp."

Wilton Lackaye played Svengali in a revival of "Trilby."

Mrs. Fiske was touring in "Leah Kleschna." George Arliss was in the cast.

Richard Carle starred in "The Mayor of Tokio."

De Wolf Hopper starred in "Happyland." Marguerite Clark was the ingenue.

Edna Wallace Hopper was touring in "The Heart of Maryland."

Guy Bates Post was in "The Heir of the Hoorah."

Sothern and Marlowe co-starred in "The Taming of the Shrew," "The Merchant of Venice" and "Twelfth Night."

Fritzi Scheff starred in "Mlle. Modiste."

Richard Bennett was in "The Lion and the Mouse."

Maude Adams starred in "Peter Pan."

William Courtenay was in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots."

William Hodge toured in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," in which Madge Carr-Cook starred. Mrs. Carr-Cook's daughter, Eleanor Robson (now Mrs. August Belmont), was in the all-star cast of "She Stoops To Conquer."

Frank Gillmore was in "Love and the Man."

William Collier starred in "On the Quiet."

Jefferson de Angelis was in "Fantana." So was Douglas Fairbanks.

Ferdinand Gottschalk was in "The Toast of the Town."

William Morris was in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

Grace George starred in "The Marriage of William Ashe."

Margaret Anglin starred in "Zira."

George M. Cohan was touring in "Little Johnny Jones," supported by his first wife, Ethel Levey.

Although, of course, there were no motion pictures in 1905, various players who were destined for the new medium were appearing before the public.

Mary Pickford was touring as a child with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "East Lynne."

Charles Chaplin joined William Gillette's company in the London engagement of "Sherlock Holmes," appearing as Billie the Page.

H. B. Warner came from London to join Eleanor Robson's company.

Marie Dressler was at Weber and Fields' Music Hall. So was Louis Mann.

Cecil B. De Mille was in "Lord Chumley."

Al Jolson was in vaudeville. So was Ed Wynn. They were lost in the shuffle.

Among vaudeville headliners were Elsie Janis, Julian Eltinge, Eva Tanguay, Grace LaRue, Leila McIntyre, Louise Dresser, Jack Norworth and James Thornton.

FUTURE PLAYS

"She Lived by the Firehouse," by William A. Grew, currently casting for William Fredlander and Lawrence Weber.

"Maide in Erin," musical by Edmund Rose and Augustus Barrett, will be produced in January by George Ford.

A musical version of Molière's "School for Husbands," adapted from the French by Arthur Guiterman, poet, and written in blank verse, will be produced next month by Erlanger Productions, Inc., under the direction of Lawrence Langner, one of the board of managers of the Theatre Guild.

"Wet or Dry," by Slater La Master, dealing with Prohibition, which will be produced by the Associated Theatrical Exchange recently formed, with Harry Feinberg and Jack Stern in charge of productions.

"Eternal Mother," by Harry Kalmonowitz, is another new one the Associated Exchange will do this season.

"The Baby in the Case," by Arlto Hart and Maurice Braddell, will be produced late in January by Thomas Kilpatrick.

BURG MISSES NOTHING

Allentown House Has Vaude and Burlesque, Now Legit and Opera

Allentown, Pa., Dec. 27.

Meeting with a degree of success with legit attractions since early September, the Lyric is preparing to step out during the next few months. "Street Scene" is booked and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is promised Dec. 31.

The New York Grand Opera Company is due for Jan. 6, with "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria." Since early fall the Lyric played three days of vaudeville, weekly, showing eight acts, and the attendance thus far is satisfactory. Burlesque is given Monday nights and does fairly well.

Texas Has One Legit

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Circle, Texas oldest legit stand, recently lease by James Hayden for repertoire try is opening in January. Hayden is said to be connected with Stuart Walker. It proposes to emphasize any stuff, with appeal for little theatre crowd. Will likely import most of cast from Chi.

House has been dark since May, 1929, when Charles Wagner's road-shows flopped. This will make Circle only legit stand in Texas.

COAST REVIVES "RAIN"

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

As first of series of American play revivals, Tom Kress is producing "Rain" at the Egan theatre here Jan. 19.

Charlotte Treadway will be Sadie Thompson.

SUBWAY DATES FILLED

Dark Theatres on B'way But Brandts Keep Theirs Going

Bookings for subway houses operated by William and Harry Brandt are filled for January, with definite dates running into February. While 50% or more of Broadway legit houses are dark, the suburban legits are being kept lit, with the owners producing when necessary.

Dates begin Dec. 25, with day and date openings in the four theatres of "Hell's Angels" (Hughes). Other shows included "Devil Is A Lady," (Lew Cantor), "Street Scene," (W. A. Brady) and "Dr. X." (Brandts).

EBEY'S ULTIMATUM TO OAKLAND ON STOCK CO.

Oakland, Cal., Dec. 27.

With their backs against the wall following a loss of $20,000 in the 25 weeks of this season, George Ebey and Edward J. Hogarty took the case of the Fulton to the public for support, making a general appeal for co-operation.

The Fulton, built by the late Harry W. Bishop back in 1915, has until recent years been one of the most profitable of dramatic stock enterprises. Last year it was turned over to Henry Duffy by George Ebey. On Duffy's failure it was resumed by Ebey and subsequently Hogarty bought in as full partner.

"We think Oakland should have a legitimate theatre," said Ebey in his public announcement. "It has cost me $100,000 to think that during the last year or so, and has cost me $20,000 since June 14, when we reopened. That is my own funeral. But we shall quit as a legitimate theatre on February 1 or thereabouts unless the tide changes.

"We closed on December 13 to reopen Christmas night... The stage hands' union has voluntarily through its officials cut the wages 20%, effective when we reopen, and the musicians' union will do something of the same sort. These men, of course, have a motive, but they have never, in my thirty-five years of work, done anything like this before."

The Ebey-Hogarty plan is modeled after that of the Savoy in San Diego where a similar appeal to the public met with success recently, but it also follows the Bonstelle scheme in Detroit. There will be a general sale of season tickets, but the Guild idea is also advanced and the theatre is to be renamed the Fulton Theatre Guild.

News From the Dailies

This department contains rewritten theatrical news items as published during the week in the daily papers of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Hollywood and London. Variety takes no credit for these news items; each has been rewritten from a daily paper.

Three Shows Going Out

A sudden stopping last Saturday and two attractions are definitely out this week but other closings are anticipated, there being a number hanging on in the hope of garnering holiday coin. Among the anticipated closings are two of last week's premieres.

"Strictly Dishonorable," presented by Brock Pemberton, will close a long run at the Avon, Saturday. Is in the 68th week. Was a comedy smash last year and consistently bettered $19,000 weekly until warm weather. Rated one of the most profitable productions in years.

STRICTLY DISHONORABLE

Opened Sept. 18, 1929. "A well-nigh perfect comedy," Atkinson (Times). "A comedy smash hit," Winchell (Mirror). "Something more than a good new play," Gabriel (American). No panners.

"Variety" (Ibee): "A hit and no foolin'."

"Flying High," presented at the Apollo by George White, also goes to the road after playing 34 weeks. Was a musical smash last spring, holding over quite successfully. Considerably better than $40,000 during the early months; down around $25,000 and less recently.

"Inspector General" was quickly pulled out of the Hudson Saturday.

FLYING HIGH

Opened March 3. "Quality show," Mantle (News). "Frisky and amusing," Anderson (Journal). "Enjoyed it fairly well, which is not quite well enough," Littell (World). "Variety" (Ibee): "New musical hit."

Only five days and to heat to nothing. Jed Harris presented this old Russian farce.

SHALL RESUMES LEGIT

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Theo Shall, imported by Metro for German editions, is enroute for New York to appear in a German language legit.

Shall, since being dropped off the Metro contracts list, did one German version for Fox.

WYNNE GIBSON

Who is just starting a contract with Paramount in one of the leading roles in Jack Oakie's starring picture, a filmization of "June Moon." Miss Gibson's contract is the result of her recent work in support of Oakie in "The Gang Buster."

Since her arrival in Hollywood from Broadway last spring, Miss Gibson has appeared in such pictures as "The Fall Guy" and "Children of Pleasure." She carried the title role recently in the Los Angeles stage production of "Molly Magdalene."

Starting as a chorus girl in New York, the actress has worked in musical comedy, drama and vaudeville. She had the title role in "Little Jessie James" and was Richard Bennett's leading woman in "Jarnegan." Among her other work are "The Gingham Girl," "The Clam Diggers" with Fritz Lieber, "Castles in the Air" and vaudeville with Ray Raymond.

NEW YORK

Bernard Granville, featured in a Christmas vaudeville show in Glens Falls, N. Y., completed his act and collapsed. Physicians said his condition was serious.

Michael Acosta, 24, non-pro, was held on a charge of felonious assault on Anna Osgo, 22, taxi dancer in Shadowland, mid-town dance hall, and $1,000 for violation of the Sullivan law. He was arrested following the shooting of the girl, said by police to be his common-law wife.

"Clean up from within or be cleaned up from without" was the warning issued by Mayor Walker to legit producers. Unless the men of the theatre act, he declared, they will have national censorship.

Thieves took $10,000 worth of jewelry from Mrs. Sadie Benny, wife of Jack Benny, comedian in Earl Carroll's "Vanities," after they bound her with adhesive tape in the Park Central Hotel.

Catherine Willard, legit, was revealed as the defendant in a separation suit when Supreme Court Justice Black permitted service of papers by publication. William Edwin Barry, her husband, alleged she deserted him Aug. 15 last and three months ago wrote from Chicago where she is in "Topaze" she would not return to him.

Application of five ticket brokers not recognized by the League of New York Theatres to be included in the league system of ticket distribution was refused at a meeting at the league headquarters. Agencies that applied were the Arrow, Tyson & Co., Tyson & Brother, Louis Cohen and the Superior.

Evelyn Donnelly, showgirl, was arraigned in Bronx Traffic Court Monday (29) on a charge of reckless driving and leaving the scene of an accident. Max Brickel charged that the actress' car crashed into his car, damaging his machine and causing his mother to faint. Neither Miss Donnelly or the woman with her could show a driver's license.

Audrey Dale, showgirl, must explain how Alberto Carillo, actor, was beaten in her apartment. Carillo is suing Harry Sturms for $200,000, following an alleged beating he received while lunching with the girl.

LOS ANGELES

Felony conviction of Mrs. Lois Pantages, for the death of a Japanese in a driving crash, was dismissed by Judge Hardy in Christmas cancellations of charges against 149 persons on probation for felonies. Judge Hardy's term of office expired a few days later.

Alice P. Glazer divorced Benjamin Glazer, director, for "gross indifference." Alimony $1,200 monthly.

Tyler Brooke, pictures, divorced LaRuna W. Brooke as "a poor housekeeper and quarrelsome."

Bette LeRoux, dancer, suing the proprietors of the Nikabob Cafe for $25,000 damages for burns received when a bystander threw a lighted match into a can of benzene she carried in a "fire dance."

Rex King, singer, arrested in a Hollywood backyard when caught, dressed cowboy, collecting washing from the line.

Kathleen Collins, pictures, awarded $125 month alimony from Richard A. Edwards. Formerly the wife of "Big Boy" Williams, film cowboy.

ROUND TRIP

Billy Pierce and Buddy Bradley of the Pierce Studios, N. Y., here from London said they were going right back Jan. 3 to stage the dances for the new C. B. Cochran "Revue of 1930."

The colored dance producers went to London on a one-shot Cochran contract to put on low down and hot numbers for his "Evergreen" musical now running in London.

This Year in the Legit

By Jack Pulaski

Broadway was talking about tickets last January, and it still is.

The experiment of attempted control of the agencies, the elimination of buys and the limitation to a 75-cent premium on agency-sold tickets started under the direction of the League of New York Theatres early in July. High prices only apply to hits, and the theory of the managers that ticket control will greatly aid all legit theatres appears to be a myth. The League continues its ticket efforts with pro and con results.

Abraham L. Erlanger died in March (7) of this year, providing much behind the scene stuff of his private life for the dailies. What Broadway knew became public property. His estate, estimated at $12,000,000, but yet to be determined, was bequeathed to close relatives. The estate was thrown into litigation by the claim of Charlotte Leslay Fiscal that she was his common-law wife. The proceedings are due for hearing soon.

The Erlanger office instead of passing out became phoenix-like. From the status of desultory production, it is now a most active legit firm. With Judge Mitchell Erlanger (Abe's brother), chairman of the board of directors, and Charles Dillingham and Marcus Heiman the active aides, a number of young producers were attracted to Erlanger's. Latter is backing the shows and participating in the profits on a 50-50 basis.

The plan is working out extremely well, because the younger producers know their stuff and are not hampered by Erlanger's. It is estimated that Erlanger's will have backed some 20 productions during the season. Percentage of successes is favorable to a profitable year. Not only has Erlanger's drawn the young managers to its fold, but several of the more prominent managers switched over from the Shuberts. Included are Arthur Hammerstein and Arch Selwyn. Others will probably go that way, too.

The Shuberts started out so badly that Broadway started to gossip about them. They announced some 20 plays from abroad and most of them promptly flopped. One lasted but three days. Shuberts brought over a bunch of London actors for the flops, and that made it no easier on the thousands of actors out of work here.

Half Dark

Mid-May of last season saw Broadway 50% dark. There was a steady decline and there was but a single summer revue presented. In July there were but 13 shows playing, the lowest number within a dozen years. During November more dark theatres than at any time since Broadway went wild in theatre building. About 25 theatres were seeking attractions. Season started late, running a month behind. Production for the first two months was under normal, but the percentage of successes was higher.

Business out of town during the summer was duller than New York. Chicago, for instance, had but one legit attraction for a month or so, while other keys were completely dark.

Last spring all the talk was Hollywood, with producers, authors and actors going west. Suddenly there was a halt and the trend this autumn was back towards the east. Musical talkers went into a decline, and that released many of the Broadway flock the pictures had drawn out. Several managers while on the Coast started casting about for film names to be used in legit shows. Half a dozen were easily secured, but were mostly proffered to the sticks.

Still Decline

The decline in legit so evident last year still prevails, but applies mostly out of town. Broadway is still liable to furnish big trade to the shows that are real smashes. The opposed attractions, such as pictures, radio and bridge do not count as much in New York as elsewhere. There was a talk of a chain of auditoriums throughout the country to book legit shows, but while there is some use made of auditoriums, there are not enough attractions right now to keep the houses in the keys and the eastern stands lighted consecutively. Legit bookers asking guarantees spoiled the auditorium chance. The decline in the number of stock companies continued. Lately there was an increase, but early in the year the number operating were 50% under that of the previous year.

Equity's long contemplated plan to place legit casting agents under some sort of control was finally gotten through. The permits as originally framed by Equity were radically changed. The leading casters stood out against Equity until the latter was willing to talk things over. It was finally agreed to try the present plan for a year.

Equity's coast ambitions appear to have entirely dissipated. The leading picture players signed a five-year agreement not to participate in a strike with the producers. A 54-hour week was adopted and other concessions were granted without fuss and in contrast to the "strike" that Equity staged the summer before. Nearly 100 members had been suspended during the strike. Several were stopped when trying to enter the legit, but finally the entire list was whitewashed. That had been predicted and was Equity's only way out.

Leading Critics

The box score of New York's drama critics found a newcomer, John Mason Brown of the "Evening Post," the winner with a percentage of .898. Brown was right in rating 79 shows, being wrong only nine times, but always giving an opinion. Robert Garland of the "Evening Telegram" was second with .852. He was right 81 times, wrong nine times and failed to express an opinion in five reviews. John Anderson of the "Evening Journal" was third with a rating of .835. The three leaders being on afternoon papers again indicates that the critics on morning papers have no edge in having to rush copy to the presses.

The police were active in rubbering at dirty plays. The early summer was enlivened with Earl Carroll and one of his players in "Vanities" were taken to the station house in police sedans. The complained about material was taken out and when the case reached the grand jury it refused to indict. Police, too, lost out in the case of "Pleasure Man," which had been hanging fire. Trial was something of a burlesque as to evidence. The jury failed to agree and the case was finally tossed out by the prosecutor.

Two shows were pinched on the subway circuit at the start of the season. One case dismissed. The other pulled the court stuff as a press stunt and got away with it. Sentence suspended.

Coast vs. B'way

By ABEL GREEN

Hollywood, Dec. 20.

A feeling still exists on the west coast against the Broadway influx. It is more with an attitude of tolerance than frank resentment, for now, along with the Hollywood layoffs, the Broadway bunch who are out here are laying off even more successfully.

Then, too, the westerners take pride that after all is said and done, when the film thing reduces itself either to its fundamentals or to its highest manifestations, the basically film people are the ones who cop off the honors.

It's the actresses like Shearer, writers like Frances Marion, directors like Milestone, et al., who take the highest awards by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, although there are exceptions like George Arliss in the male acting division whom the coast defenders grudgingly admit is not so bad either.

But argue the loyal colonists in Hollywood, it takes the screen to make the Arlisses and Jolsons and Cantors and Dresslers really famous. This is something not to be argued against, although just as often the picture bunch forgets altogether that it's the basic legit training which tells in a screen personality.

No. 1 Attention

Right now, for example, Robert Montgomery is the fair-haired Metrolite, getting No. 1 attention on stories, direction, grooming etc., just like Gilbert did three years ago. Chances are that this up-and-coming juvenile will never be now as now thought of in relation to his Broadway stage antecedents.

That the screen as a world-wide star-maker is beyond dispute cannot be denied. But the coast defenders, in their jealous pride, blot out every other equation and see nothing beyond Hollywood.

No B'way Blah In Death Valley Writes Farnum

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Ralph G. Farnum, New York theatrical agent whose disappearance worried his friends, writes the local "Variety" office, thanking his friends for their concern, and expounding unusually (for a Broadwayite) on the charms and advantages of primitive Indian life.

Farnum, writing from Death Valley Junction, on the edge of the famous Arizona-California Death Valley desert, utilized the backs of the labels of canned goods as follows:

"A messenger just brought in some messages for me and among them were your telegrams to (Sheriff) Harry Goper. I am dreadfully sorry you and everyone else were put to such trouble. Don't know why they got so excited at the Junction, but anyway, want you to know how much I appreciate your interest.

"Away From Worries"

"I am all OK, living out in the desert away from people and worries and trying to get back my health. Have been bothered very much this past year with severe sinus pains and doctors think this climate might help me so I won't have to go under another operation.

"Am sending this in to the Junction by Indian runner, also sending word there that I'll keep them posted where I am in the future.

"I thought the gang at the Junction knew I knew this country well. Also in future will keep my office posted where I am so tell anyone wanting me to communicate with Mrs. Furst in my New York office; she will always know where I am.

"Pardon this paper to write on but it is the only thing I have handy.

"Different From N. Y."

"It will be difficult for you and others to understand my liking it here, but I do. The Indians and prospectors are marvelous to me. They are all so honest and considerate, quite different from people I've been thrown in contact with in New York. An Indian does not judge a man's success by the material things he possesses as the white man does. An Indian gauges success by the happiness and health that a man attains.

"Quite a contrary idea but worthwhile philosophy. Nothing worries them; they know how to always have enough to eat, utilizing what nature provides. They are healthy, they sleep well, they eat well and they have great times at their various celebrations, I like them regardless of what anyone may think of me for doing so.

Haven't another can label so will cut this short. Thanks again for your interest. Merry Christmas to everyone.

Sincerely, Ralph.

Producers of Costly Musicals Call For New Ticket League 'Buy' Rush

Wine With Legit

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

The head of the police vice squad went to a little theatre last Saturday night. He dropped in at the Hollywood Play Shop just after a ration of port wine had been served to quiet customers' nerves after the midnight Grand Guignol show.

Ralph Herman, manager, was arrested on a technical charge of "possession," a charge facing any California host caught serving drinks to his guests.

30 Musicals Promised, 15 Actually Produced, Only 4 Really Hits

With the exception of four, every musical show produced since September has run into difficulties. Reported closing in January of Ziegfeld's "Smiles" and salary cuts for "Fine and Dandy" have taken two of the solid hit list.

Fifteen musicals have been produced. Originally more than thirty were announced for production. Majority have not happened and highly doubtful.

On the okay list are "Three's a Crowd," "Girl Crazy," "The New Yorkers" and "Fine and Dandy," which by virtue of its business and run is considered a hit, despite cuts.

Outright flops were scored by "Luana," "Vanderbilt Revue," "Second Little Show," "Well of Romance," "Of All Things" and "Love Thieves," latter two caving in before coming to Broadway. Shuberts "Hello Paris" left after seven weeks. In the first few weeks of "Paris," cast salaries were chopped.

Billy Rose's "Sweet and Low" took salary cut of 30% shortly after the play opened.

Shubert's musicals have not fared well at all, only one doing anything, being "Nina Rosa." "Arms and the Maid," folded before Broadway. "Hello Paris" did poorly and "Wunderbar" is still waiting for a production. "Meet My Sister," for Shuberts, comes in soon.

Musicals not produced include "Aces Over" called off by Cort & Abramson, revue for Percy Oakes and "French Dressing" for Herman Cantvoort.

Boston's Art Spot Goes From Drama to Films

Boston, Dec. 27.

The Jewett Repertory theatre has passed from the hands of the men who financed the project into the hands of the mortgage holders. With the transfer has ended a period of money-losing repertorial drama in Boston.

The Screen Guild, Inc., has taken over the management of Boston's most beautiful legitimate house. The first film, "Secrets of the Orient," a UFA production, opened at the house this week under Screen Guild auspices. This means the passing of the theatre from the legitimate to pictures, although a small stage show will be featured with each film.

"Wunderbar" Off

Almost certain now that the Shuberts will not produce "Wunderbar" this season or next for that matter.

For some time the Shuberts are reported having a lot of faith in the show but finding difficulty obtaining suitable cast. Not going overboard on salary said to have caused the present sidetracking of the foreign piece.

BRANDTS' SUMMER SHOWS

William and Harry Brandt plan a combination of stock and films for their subway circuit next summer.

Present layout calls for a newsreel and three or four talking shorts, followed by dramatic stock shows. Shows will include guest stars.

The League of New York Theatres, formed last summer to control agency prices of tickets, faced at least partial disintegration early this week, with the indicated alternative of a radical reorganization.

At two sessions last week between younger producers and League leaders, the latter virtually admitted that the League is a flop to date. It is now certain that certain showmen who were so hot for League control a month or two back, have modified their views.

At the first conference to which the "recalcitrant" younger producers were invited, although not all are members of the League (not owning or having theatres under lease), some pertinent questions were fired at the League spokesmen, Lawrence Langer, Arthur Hopkins and H. D. Savage. Among the producers present were Aarons and Freedley, Schwab and Mandel, Herman Shumlin, Robert V. Newman, Max Gordon, Morris Green (Green & Gensler).

The League, appealing to the producers for moral and actual support, admitted however that there are 30 or more new gyp ticket speculators on Broadway, than before, and that higher prices are being demanded by such specs for front locations than before. Following the session, announcement was made by the League that it had turned down the application of five brokers who had been of the 16 accredited agency group and who sought reinstatement.

Significance of the move on the part of these brokers was not clear. Most agencies appear to be getting tickets enough for their trade. It is true that the League cannot be blamed for the b. t business on Broadway, but the point is that it was not tried at the right time, nor has it helped business through having Postal Telegraph as an agency.

At the second conference with younger producers last week, one of the League's other weaknesses was canvassed. The point in contest is the League's attempt to control tickets for all classes of productions along the same lines and same rules and the rules shall apply to a show whether the production investment is $20,000 or $100,000 as with musical attractions.

Friday the producers of musicals petitioned the League for the right to sell tickets for their shows to whomever they chose, asking that there shall be no strings as to the resale price and that such shows be permitted to sell blocks of tickets to any agency. The musical show producers are virtually demanding the privilege of getting protection or "insurance" (buys) so that a new musical has a chance to get into stride, contending that what may apply to only one class of attraction has been illogically applied to all.

Not only did Arthur Hammerstein, Schwab & Mandel, Aarons and Freedley, Green & Gensler and Max Gordon join in the petition, but a representative of the Shuberts was also present and sought the same privilege. Nearly all concerned have suffered because of the elimination of the buys system. At least three high cost and high scaled musicals were claimed to have been victims of the League system. Some still running have suffered severe losses within the past month.

It is conceded that those who formed the League went ahead on theory that with no more buys brokers would have no excuse to charge high prices.

Insurgent producers now argue that the old order of things was not so bad, agency buys as such are not actually an evil, but are an aid to producers of shows calling for huge investments and to some of the other shows which start slowly. The trouble with the buys system as it developed they seek to show was the insistence of certain show-producing producers, who insisted the brokers buy for poor shows in order to get tickets for the good things. That caused agency losses and the allbi that they had to charge high prices to even up. If agencies are permitted to buy tickets according to their own judgment, says the group, the situation will be smoothed out.

Weather Smothers Xmas B'way Boom; Pin Last Hope on New Year's Week

Broadway did not expect the holiday business to start until Christmas (Thursday), but the last two days of the week were hope-crushers. Rain and snow so affected matinees that gloom dimmed the bright lights.

A few shows elected to take a chance on Christmas afternoon, when matinee trade was okay. The bulk of the list switched to Friday and were weather victims. However, there was a ray of sunshine, showmen figuring it better that the elements run wild then than this week, with New Year's the high mark of the winter and the season. Last week it was expected the week-end would balance the losses of the early portion, but trade dropped down sharply. The current week figures to be harvest time—with variations. Broadway's legit list is not long. It presents fewer attractions than usual, and if the trade is to come at all, it should show then.

The season certainly was not brightened by the holiday card of new shows. Excluding Saturday's two premieres, three of the four other new productions did not rate having a chance. "Ballyhoo," at Hammerstein's, may make the grade but is no stand-out. "Inspector General," regarded as tiresome at the Hudson and closed; "Purity," draggy, at the Ritz; "Life Is Like That" got scant attention at the Little. The others are "The Truth Game," Barrymore, and "The Life Line," Vanderbilt, with such other added attractions as "Elektra," Fritz Leiber, Ruth Draper and an indoor circus. "Five Star Final" was postponed at the Cort until Tuesday night (30) and is touted as a cinch.

None of the musical shows got anywhere near capacity last week, but "The New Yorkers" stayed away out front with better than $50,000. All others down to $30,000 or less, some much less. "Grand Hotel" played 10 performances and easily topped the non-musicals at approximately $33,000—but did not sell out at the matinees and blamed the Ticket League.

"Once in a Lifetime" eased at matinees with the same complaint, but with added prices got over $23,000. Last week was mostly pre-holiday and figures are not indicative of actual merit on the whole. It will take this week and next for any number of shows to rate themselves.

In addition to "Five Star Final," opening week of 29th, are: "Midnight," Guild; "Queen at Home," Times Square, and "Meet My Sister," Shubert. Closing are "Flying High," Apollo, and "Strictly Dishonorable," Avon. Latter gets "Gone Hollywood," only definite premiere indicated for next week. At least half a dozen or more shows hanging on for holiday money may take the air this Saturday.

Estimates Last Week

"Ballyhoo," Hammerstein's (2d week) (M-1,265-$5.50)—Opening four days before Christmas no break for new musical; got $20,000 or a bit more; good business after holiday and expected to improve and stay.

"Brown Buddies," Liberty (13th week) (M-1,982-$3). With no colored show opposition this troupe ought to stick through winter; bettered even break until pre-holiday slide with average of $11,000 claimed.

"Elizabeth the Queen," Beck (9th week) (D-1,189-$3). Moved here from Guild Monday; last week trade held its own and the gross topped $18,000; big money show.

"Fine and Dandy," Erlanger's (15th week) (M-1,531-$6.60). Among the musicals which the seasonal slump affected materially; should climb back well over $30,000 this week.

"First Night," Elfinge (6th week) (CD-902-$3). May get a little holiday money this week; in the red and paced under $4,000 so far.

"Five Star Final," Cort (1st week) (D-1,043-$3). Premiere postponed from last Friday until last night (30). Highly regarded according to advance reports.

"Flying High," Apollo (34th week) (M-1,108-$4.40). Final week; goes to road after a good business record and run; was over $40,000 in early months; house probably dark for a time.

"Grand Hotel," National (9th week) (D-1,161-$4.40). Dramatic smash played two extra matinees last week; in 10 performances estimated gross bettered $33,000; one of two matinees somewhat off.

"Girl Crazy," Alvin (12th week) (M-1,387-$7.50). Popular musical comedy should get back into stride—late last week; average, $35,000; less lately but this week's indications are for a comeback.

"Greeks Had a Name For It," Harris (15th week) (C-1,060-$3). Out in front and among the leaders through autumn; off to about $14,000 but should come back.

"Green Pastures," Mansfield (45th week) (CD-1,050-$4.40). The withdrawal of "Strictly Dishonorable" this week leaves this holdover hit the longest run show on list; around $16,000 and should recover to big money again.

"Inspector General," Hudson. Taken off Saturday night; five days; general impression adverse to Russian farce; business after premiere reported nearly nil.

"Life Is Like That," Little (2d week) (CD-600-$3). Reviewers did not think much of this one either and trade low first week; management figures it has chance, however.

"Lysistrata," 44th St. (31st week) (C-1,323-$3.85). Expected to pick up in holiday going; has been slipping with claimed recent pace, $14,000.

"Man In Possession," Booth (10th week) (CD-708-$3.85). Doing fairly and not as well as first indicated; might get a break and is said to be profitable; about $7,000 last week.

"Meet My Sister," Shubert (1st week) (M-1,385-$6.50). Presented by the Shuberts; something musical from the German with score by Ralph Benatzky; opened Tuesday.

"Midnight," Guild (1st week) (CD-914-$3). Presented by the Theatre Guild; written by Claire and Paul Sifton; first known as "In the Meantime"; opened Monday.

"Nina Rosa," Majestic (14th week) (M-1,717-$5.50). Couple of parties saved this from dying in the days before Christmas; estimated around $20,000; light for high scaled musical.

"Oh, Promise Me," Morosco (6th week) (F-893-$3.85). Most shows elected to play a matinee Friday, the day after Christmas; it rained and attendance very bad; true of this one which was estimated around $9,000.

"On the Spot," Forrest (10th week) (D-1,015-$3). Wallack melter doing fairly well but not with the leaders; estimated pace last week about $12,000.

"Once in a Lifetime," Music Box (15th week) (C-1,000-$3.85). Friday matinee off and one night performance prior to Christmas; with added holiday scales, however, comedy leader again over $23,000.

"Overture," Longacre (5th week) (CD-1,019-$3). Claimed to have more than held its own last week, with the gross quoted between $9,000 and $10,000.

"Pagan Lady," 48th St. (11th week) (D-969-$3). Has been slipping along with most others; should last through January, however; $11,000.

"Petticoat Influence," Empire (3d week) (C-1,099-$3). Business second week, with gross around $12,000 or more, indicates promise of successful date.

"Purity," (Ritz (2d week) (C-945-$3). Opened Christmas (25) and failed to impress; drama from French does not figure to land.

"Queen at Home," Times Square (1st week) (C-1,067-$3). Presented independently (John Henry Mears); written by Shirley Warde and Vivian Tobin; opened Monday.

"Stepping Sisters," Royale (37th week) (F-1,118-$3). Still here, and no telling how long it will last; cut rate coupon thing has kept it going; $5,000 average, but probably less lately.

"Smiles," Ziegfeld (7th week) (M-1,623-$6.60). Liable to stop after holiday going, business only fair for a high-scaled musical; around $30,000 estimated.

"Strictly Dishonorable," Avon (68th week) (C-830-$3.85). Final week; long run comedy going on tour and then to England; "Gone Hollywood" postponed, due Jan. 12.

"Sweet and Low," Chanin's (6th week) (R-1,413-$5.50). This week should establish status of musical, which has drawn but moderately; $20,000.

"That's Gratitude," John Golden (17th week) (C-900-$4.40). Was well up in the going first 10 weeks; off like most others, with about $10,000 indicated last week; should recover and stick.

"The Life Line," Vanderbilt (2d week) (C-771-$3). Opened Saturday night; attraction reported guaranteeing house.

"The New Yorkers," Broadway (4th week) (R-2,000-$5.50). Broadway's money leader; because of large capacity and scale, can gross $65,000; rated well over $50,000 last week which is regarded as remarkable at this time.

"The Truth Game," Ethel Barrymore (2d week) (C-1,090-$3.85). Opened Saturday night, drawing attention because of Ivor Novello and Billie Burke co-starred.

"The Vinegar Tree," Playhouse (6th week) (C-868-$3.85). Started out like a hit and, while somewhat affected last week, should again attain its approximate $17,000 pace.

"This Is New York," Plymouth (6th week) (CD-1,042-$3.85). Dropped to around $7,000 last week; figured to have a chance and should pick up smartly this week.

"Three's a Crowd," Selwyn (12th week) (R-1,067-$5.50). Eased off to about $30,000; much stronger than most musicals and returned to capacity after Christmas.

"Tonight or Never," Belasco (7th week) (CD-1,000-$3.85). Eased off in last week's slow and sloppy going; had been getting $19,000 and more; should approximate or better that mark this week.

"Up Pops the Devil," Masque (14th week) (C-700-$3). After week's layoff had no easy time of it last week; estimated around $6,000, but should also do better.

"Vanities," New Amsterdam (27th week) (R-1,702-$5.50). A new "Follies," announced by Ziegfeld due in this house this winter; Carroll show doing fairly; $20,000 or a bit over last week.

Other Attractions

Fritz Leiber, Ambassador; repertory of Shakespeare; 2d week.

"Art and Mrs. Bottle," Maxine Elliott's; playing throughout week, with "Twelfth Night" discontinued.

Ruth Draper, Comedy; monologs.

"Mrs. Moonlight," Hopkins; doing very well.

"Elektra," New Yorker; performance in Greek.

Civic Repertory, 14th Street.

Davenport's Indoor Circus, Jolson's; 2d and final week.

JAN RUBINI

The Internationally Known Violinist, Composer and Conductor

Wishing Fanchon and Marco, Mr. A. M. Bowles and my friends in the profession the heartiest Season's Greetings.

Still playing to a vast following at Loew's Warfield, San Francisco.

Shows in Rehearsal

"She Means Business" (James Elliott), Knights of Columbus Hall.

"Dr. X" (The Frandts), Erlanger.

"Philip Goes Forth" (Roland Stebbins), Times Square.

"Gang's All Here," Comedy.

"Strange Interlude" (Theatre Guild London Co.), Guild.

"Rock Me Julie" (Green & Gensler), Harris.

Frisco Grosses

San Francisco, Dec. 27.

Customers of legit had lean pickings to choose from, the only two houses offering attractions being Henry Duffy's President with "It's a Boy," third week, and the Alcazar with Leo Carrillo in "Mister Antonio," first week.

Curran, Geary and Erlanger's Columbia have been dark for a couple of weeks. The Tivoli finished up with "The Clutching Claw" last Sunday night and stayed dark Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday preceding Christmas, reopening the holiday night with "Cradle Snatchers."

"It's a Boy" claimed $4,000 last week and "Mister Antonio," at Alcazar, $5,000, neither gross being near normal for these houses.

Next week Curran gets "Peter Pan," Geary "The Shyster," Erlanger's Columbia "Lost Sheep" and Tivoli "Cradle Snatchers."

"BUZZ" ENDS TWO-FOR-ONES

Minneapolis, Dec. 27.

The Bainbridge Players discontinue their two-for-one tickets after this week.

John Dilson supplants Bernard Suss as director of the stock, Latter goes to Bainbridge Co. in Seattle.

Henry Horton was a guest star at the Shubert in "The Old Homestead" this week (22).

NEW SHOWS SUFFER LEAST IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Usual pre-Christmas desertion of the legit followed by the equally usual stampede from Christmas night and thereafter gave Chicago spotty grosses. The brisk week-end was naturally largely neutralized by the starvation first half.

Leslie Howard got through act one at the opening of "Berkeley Square" Christmas night at the Selwyn, but thereafter refused to go on because of what was variously described as laryngitis and temperament. This necessitated a refund on a sell-out with nobody in the box office at ten p. m. Bad start won't help local engagement.

Studebaker, failing to find an opus for the Yuletide season, grabbed off the German film "Zwei Herzen im ¾ Takt." It is not the first time this house has resorted to films to fill-in. Chi having 285,216 Germans by the last census count, the "Zwei" is looked to get a little of the holiday cheer.

Jonsey," at the Playhouse adjoining the Studebaker, opened the 28th to a fair start. Pop prices, in vogue at this house, always help. Other changes were "As You Desire Me," replacing the Dramatic League's "Michael and Mary" at the Harris. Each of the pieces stays four weeks, with "As You Desire Me," opening the 29th.

New Shows

The Princess, old home of the Dramatic League, gets open Jan. 5 with "A Bird in the Hand," while "Young Sinners," at the Apollo, goes out the 10th to make room for "Bad Girl." Rest of the pieces are settling down for as many weeks as they can make it pay, with the subject "cut-rate" getting a mauling here, the likes of which the town has never seen.

Across the line "Ripples" in its opening week led with $26,700, followed by "Simple Simon" to between $24,000 and $25,000. Both, having a draw for children, rolled up excellent mat sales.

Long tenant dramas didn't fare so well, with many just holding their own. Most felt the three days before Christmas strong, with the after season and good receipts pulling them out.

Estimates for Last Week

"As You Desire Me," Harris (1st week) (D-1,084-$3). Had a strong opening, with the League followers making it a holiday.

"Berkeley Square," Selwyn (opened the 25th) (D-1,086-$3)—Advance sale indicates a winner. Nice campaign.

"Jonesy," Playhouse (opened the 28th) (CD-603-$2)—Pop prices of this house helped much. Opened to a good crowd.

"Lysistrata," Majestic (7th week) (D-1,997-$3.50)—Felt the pre-holiday slump, but built strong after Christmas and came through with $13,000.

"Mendel," Inc.," Adelphi (7th week) (C-1,110-$2.50)—This piece, under the guidance of Ralph Kettering is making a terrific play for the business from factories and clubs. As a result held to $11,000, which is something.

"Old Rascal," Garrick (7th week) (D-1,276-$3)—Hodge felt the squeeze and sunk to $9,000.

"Ripples," Illinois (1st week) (M-1,500-$4.40) Led the parade with $26,700. Ideal Christmas material for kids and adults, with excellent newspaper notices to help carry on. Sellout for the holidays.

"Simple Simon," Grand (3d week) (M-1,200-$4.40) — Between $24,000 and $25,000. Both this piece and "Ripples" have what Christmas audiences want.

"Subway Express," Erlanger (6th week) (D-1,319-$3)—Climbed to $10,000. Uses cut-rate, which seems to help.

"Three Little Girls," Great Northern (13th week) (O-1,365-$3.85)—Biz has climbed here, with Sunday night performances being restored. Good at $12,500. Cut rate, but looked to stay another month.

"The Tavern," Blackstone (1st week) (D-1,219-$3) — Got around $15,000, good.

"Young Sinners," Apollo (18th week) (CD-1,443-$3) — Last two weeks of this, and holding its own at $13,000. "Bad Girl" follows.

Pittsburgh Figures

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

Those three starvation days before Xmas cut deeply into the legits here last week, and it's doubtful if the near-capacity biz during the last half gave any of the attractions here an even break.

Doubtful if "Sketch Book," at Alvin, kept out of the red, despite $4.40 top. Maybe $24,000, but that's doubtful, because Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were terrible.

Same condition existed at Nixon, where "Ladies of the Jury" was on display, but cheaper attraction might have just managed to keep its end up. In the neighborhood of $10,000, perhaps, and this, of course, due chiefly to following of Mrs. Fiske.

George Sharp stock company found things dull at Pitt with "Broken Dishes."

L. A. GETS GOOD LEGIT GROSSES

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

"Up Pops the Devil" and "Stepping Sisters" opened at Belasco and Hollywood Playhouse respectively Christmas night. Former did $2,700 and latter $1,800 on the three days.

"Elmer the Great," with Joe E. Brown, at El Capitan, $7,500 opening week. Brown meant everything to Lardner piece, which has repeated here several times and rated as not so hot. El Capitan, Duffy house, despite conditions, will show $80,000 profit this year.

"Peter Pan," Civic Repertory offering at the Hollywood Music Box, scored a good $7,000. Daily matinee for kids on cut-rate made this possible. Week generally was good for legits, with the four houses doing above average.

"Between the Covers," new play presented by Oliver Morosco with Raymond Hatten featured, is opening at the Biltmore Monday (30). Production is Morosco's first here in several years. Bankrolling is credited to Sam Rork, the former picture producer, whose daughter is in the piece.

PUPPET SHOWS IN VOGUE

Small Towns in South Going for The Marionettes

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Puppet shows gaining prominence in southwest, with several outfits on the road and making a living at it.

One femme, Emma Pettey, has a regular organized company with five assistants. Works through tie-ups with little theatres, with special plays for the children and adults. Has been at it since 1922 and has grabbed a bank roll.

The puppeteers draw both in keys and small towns, especially the small towns, where anything that gives a change from pictures and a coupla tent shows per annum has b.o. possibility. Only trouble is a dearth of marionette talent, with art comparatively foreign here and few teachers.

"Inspector General" Flops

"Inspector General," which Jed Harris presented at the Hudson Tuesday, last week, was taken off Saturday night. Harris sent telegrams to the dramatic editors announcing the abrupt closing of the antique Russian farce.

It was the quickest flop Harris has had since he started producing. The message to the papers was: "Owing to the phenomenal indifference of the public I closed 'Inspector General' Saturday night."

After the premiere business was as bad or worse than anything on Broadway, nightly takings being reported not more than $150. It was an unfortunate break for Mrs. H. B. Harris, who operates the Hudson.

$4,000 "Tragedy"

Seattle, Dec. 27.

Absence of a guest star is blamed for the poor showing "The American Tragedy" at the Moore last week when the play is estimated at $4,000.

Advertised as a "lesson for the young and frivolous" even they remained away.

Advance sale for "The Scarlet Woman," with Pauline Frederick as guest star, is big and the show, now in rehearsal, may remain three weeks.

Minneapolis Okay

Minneapolis, Dec. 27.

The popularity of John Dilson, who returned after a three years' absence, pulled the Bainbridge dramatic stock company at the Shubert through Christmas week nicely. Dilson was starred in "The Khibitzer" and boosted the gross to nearly $5,000. Good.

"Smiles and Kisses," stock burlesque offering at the Gayety, with the aid of wrestling match one night, drew in about $3,000. Not so good.

The Metropolitan and Lyceum light up next week after darkness—"Michael and Mary" and "A Montie in the Country," respectively.

Hollis St. for Stock?

Boston, Dec. 27.

E. E. Clive, who quit the Copley theatre after 13 years there, may take over the Hollis Street theatre with his Copley company.

Stock at Its Worst

By Mark Vance

Stock has had its worst season. By November of this year when stock should have been at its peak, it was just beginning to show a sign of restoration.

With 100 or more stocks, stock has a right to a place in the sun, but when it drops below 40, it is wobbling. It went below 40 this past year.

Many reasons for the body blow dealt stock. The travelers found former stands unavailable; available houses were either in a most undesirable location or the terms impossible. Where a few suitable theatres were to be considered the talker competition with pictures playing to much cheaper admissions forced stock to take in its legs.

Old Stuff

Stock tried hard to salvage some of its lost ground. All forms of anticipated draws and novelties were tried without success. The "guest star" gag seemed to be the only straw. It worked in a few towns and fell flat in others. Where the "star" racket couldn't be kept up the regular company was used and then stock seemed too tame for the locals.

Stock does a lot of repeating. A play from Broadway either a hit or a miss is used in a certain town. It does business. That fixes it as a stock seller. Others jump to it and lose. The reaction is that with a few losing weeks, the stock promoter, throws up the sponge. And yet despite his failure another stock man attempts to succeed where the others flopped. In other years this has worked time and again but not last year. Just one series of flopps.

Stock managers have talked and they have worked and they have even tried organization, but nothing could stave it off.

Future

Stock managers say there is a future but that there must come some radical changes. They claim local stage crews have been the worst factor. Maybe so or maybe not. They say the play brokers can lend a helpin' hand by chopping down the royalties. That's also true. Sure would help if they did but it's 100 to 1 in the winter books they won't.

It may be that big circuit interests controlling all the houses especially the new ones and the big seaters and the best located can see the way clear to lay out a stock string of those not needed for pictures. But stock as a steady diet in an old legit house faces destruction. It can't live and fight the cheaper competition. For right across the street or just around the corner is a Broadway play, either new or old, on the talker screen with an array of talent and "names" that would cost the stock manager a mint were he to attempt to corral them in the "flesh" for his Co.

Flop Showmen

Some showmen not in the stock end seem to believe that with the flood of legit lay offs, almost anyone could gather together a stock playing group of some weight in names. They are not in stock, though. And the stock man says that's just a theory.

The real trouble with stock at present appears to be that there is nothing but shoestringers left in it. Stock producers who want actors to appear at $50 a week, top, and get them through playing the actors on a percentage of the gross, if not an outright salary. If they have the means and some have made it in other days in stock, they won't gamble any more; they want the actors to do the gambling.

Stock men won't even gamble on the admission. If they have what is considered a fair company the management wants the biggest top stock can charge. While with the cheap salaried company that couldn't draw coffee and cakes under any condition, the manager chops the scale and then says nothing will get over in stock anymore.

Meanwhile the picture house is playing a two and one-half or three-hour show with a dramatic or musical talker and the trimmings at a price far below the stock's. The stock man sees it but won't believe it; they just don't want stock.

It's what put big time vaude on the skids. The big time managers never knew enough to meet their oncoming picture competition with a cut in sale. They wanted $1.50 or $1.25 top for vaude when the picture house was selling its show across the street at 50c. That broke big time; that's what has broken stock, for the real show men of both, if any, left each, to go with the money, and the money was not in big time vaude or stock.

Stock managers blame the public, the royalties or the times. Like all other flops in the show business, they never think of blaming themselves.

MEXICAN COMEDIENNE IS STAGING COMEBACK

Mexico City, Dec. 22.

Maria Conesa, veteran Spanish comedienne, and darling of the Mexican stage a couple of decades ago, is staging a "comeback." She is heading a tabloid musical company which is playing the Teatro Principal at a half peso (about 25c.) top, and doing fairly well.

"La Conesa" as she is affectionately known, was deported out of the country a couple of years ago as the result of getting into a jam over a silk smuggling scandal. The present administration gave her a pardon and a permit to return.

Although better than middle-aged, "La Conesa" has plenty of charm, including a smile that drives the boys crazy. In the exciting days and nights of 1913 she demonstrated her nerve, show after show, by appearing on the stage before a house filled with armed and half drunken Villa men. At each show she wore thousands of dollars' worth of jewels. She was always able to keep the audience in hand with her repartee.

More Legit Productions Backed by Film Co.'s

With Universal already announcing its legit producing plan, Metro and Fox are the two latest companies reported lining up for similar work. Metro now, it is given out, has another play which it will produce in the same manner as "Grand Hotel," the first of many Metro subsidized legits. Nature of Fox's fling is not known.

With Paramount represented by the Charles Frohman and Gilbert Miller offices, and with Warners backing legits, the legit entry by picture producers, forecast earlier this season but denied by them and scoffed at by legit managers, has come through.

Miller Actors' Fund Rep. on West Coast

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

New Coast representative of the Actors' Fund of America will be Charles Miller, Equity's representative here.

Miller has sent his acceptance of the appointment. He succeeds Will Wyatt.

Bonds Pay Off Two

First week's salaries for casts of two shows were paid off from the shows' bonds last Saturday (27) by Equity.

Plays were "Life Is Like That," produced by Curtis Emery at the Little, and "Devil Is a Lady," produced by Lew Cantor, which played Jackson Heights.

Emery had an $1,800 bank letter posted, Cantor $3,700 in cash.

Marathon Pianist

Capetown, Dec. 27.

Alfred Bain, Johannesburg pianist, attempting to make a new world's endurance record at the keyboard, kept on playing without a pause for 81 hours and 10 minutes and then collapsed.

New Zealand holds the endurance record for the stunt with 11 hours.

"LIFETIME'S" COAST CAST

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Bryant Washburn has been cast for the coast production of "Once in a Lifetime."

Charlie Lawrence, Marie Nordstrom and Robert Arnold are being brought from New York for the coast show.

Hits and Flops of '30 by Indies

1930 has been a banner year for independent producers.

"Green Pastures," produced by Rowland Stebbins, Wall Street broker, new to show business; "Strictly Dishonorable," produced by Brock Pemberton; "Fine and Dandy," produced by Green & Gensler and "Three's A Crowd," produced by Max Gordon, all money smashes, are mute testimony that the Indies copped heavy over the veteran producers.

Herman Shumlin also has hit heavy after three previous futile attempts, with "The Last Mile" and "Grand Hotel." The latter is also now a smash. Shumlin quit trade paper reporting several years ago to align with Jed Harris and then quit Harris to go it alone.

Robert V. Newman is another who has finally hit after several tries, with "Bad Girl," and Edward A. Blatt with "Subway Express," although rating a demerit through the flop of his subsequent production, produced in association with M. J. Nicholas "Tic Up and Up."

The Theatre Guild which had an uneven balance on hit averages last season, has started the current season okay with "Roar China" and "Elizabeth, the Queen," both demand shows.

The Independent producers hit average, although far ahead of the vets, was not roses for a number of others, rating independent classification.

Michael Mindlin's attempted comeback with "Sweet Charlot" was short lived. Adler and Gerton's experience with "With Privileges" about the same. Murray Phillips did a brodie with "Love Technique." Ray Payton fared slightly better with "Sisters of the Chorus," which got him some money in Chicago but folded after three weeks in New York. Paul Streger, who got a flying start with "Jarnegan" and looked set, slipped back with the dismal "Sweet Stranger." Lew Cantor couldn't pick a money winner like "Courage" in either "Many A Slip" or "Mendel, Inc.," but is about to make another try. Lew Leslie dropped a load with his "International Revue," but is trying a none too forte comeback with a new edition of "Blackbirds."

Notorious Flops

The indie field in the past year, like others has been infested with plenty of newcomers, short rollers and shoe-stringers. Among the notorious flops in the latter division were "A Noble Experiment," produced by Miller and Durandy; "Puppet Show," by Samuel Golding; "Bridge of Sighs," produced by Leo S. Friedman, and "Well of Romance," musical.

Plenty of others produced with short capital were scrapped before coming in to New York.

Mexico Drops Santa Claus For 100% Mex. Substitute

Mexico City, Dec. 22.

A couple of dozen actors and actresses were given a one-day engagement by the government by the "firing" of Santa Claus, who, although an importation, has received a cordial welcome from all Mexican youngsters.

Officialdom gave Santa the blue slip because he is a foreigner, and gave his job to a just remembered old time idol of a race that flourished in Mexico some 40 centuries ago. Idol, named Quetzacoatl, was made the official Santa on the ground that he is 100% Mexican.

Player folk were hired to impersonate Quetzacoatl and his court at a big official function staged in the National Stadium here Dec. 23. Government passed out gifts to 15,000 children of the poor.

PLAYS ON BROADWAY

THE TRUTH GAME

Comedy in three acts, presented at the Ethel Barrymore, Dec. 27, by Lee Shubert. Written by Ivor Novello. Billie Burke and author co-starred. Phoebe Foster and Viola Tree featured. Staged by G. Hamilton Gay.

Rosine Browne	Phoebe Foster
Max Clement	Ivor Novello
Sir George Kelvin	Gerald McCarthy
Harris	Gwen Day Burroughs
Evelyn Brandon	Billie Burke
James Hubbard	Burton McEvilley
Atkins	Jean Fullarton
Lady Culver	Viola Tree
Sir Joshua Grimshaw	Albert Garcia Andrews
Lord Staffield	Forbes Dawson
Vera Cromble	Dorothie Bigelow

Ivor Novello, something of a London stage romanticist as an author, and highly rated as an actor, makes his second debut on Broadway this season at the Barrymore. His first try was "A Symphony in Two Flats," which flivved. "The Truth Game," a success in London (and revived there later) seems the better play and has a better chance. Not brilliant but should get across for a moderate engagement.

Four names figure, Billie Burke, returning to the stage after a lapse and co-starred with Novello, while Phoebe Foster and Viola Tree are featured. That makes it a British-American cast. Miss Burke finds a part to her liking; Miss Foster supplies the love interest for Novello, and Miss Tree affords the comedy.

Not that "The Truth Game" is funny. It merely has its moments. Novello in teasing Rosine, the hard to get girl of his heart, presumes to be one Duval and chatters in dialect. That's the most amusing part of a fairly good enough second act. Third act okay, too. First act is weak.

Novello came over with an all English cast for "Symphony" and when it closed, Equity's alien actor rule was the bar for further appearances here at the time. New rules on English stars were then formulated and indications are they will be adopted formally by Equity this week or next. Main idea is to exempt such players from the six months' lapse regulation. Fact of Novello's present appearance makes it appear the rule is sure of passing. The Equity conditions call for the use of American players in such casts, otherwise, although any British resident of alien standing can also be so employed.

Max Clement meets the young widow Rosine Browne and promptly falls in love with her. She is wealthy but the will provides that should she remarry the money is to go to a cousin of her late husband. Therefore she has schooled herself against the thought of again falling in love. At a house party Rosine and Max meet again. She has admitted to the hostess, Evelyn Brandon, that she nearly slipped. After dinner the guests play the truth game, which is Max's chance to tell how Rosine is charming, sincere and adorable. Alone they embrace and she agrees to give up the luxury she pretended to want above love. But she becomes curious when he tells her that he is the husband's cousin. She thinks he is just after the money. Third act, however, smooths the complications in more ways than one and two weddings are on the way.

Novello is English but not as violently so as some other lads from across the pond. He grew on the audience although in that first act he's a pest, as much to the house as to Rosine. Miss Burke is Mrs. Brandon, a business woman getting 10% from shops to whom she sends customers, and a like split for all other things she arranges. As for instance the case of Lady Joan Culver, played amusingly by Viola Tree. She is 35 and gets herself engaged to a 60-year-old title with the connivance of Mrs. Brandon—who is to get a share of the marriage settlement. Miss Foster did not seem out of place amid the accents of the visitors any more than did Miss Burke. Both fitted nicely without the clashes that have been noted in some recent shows.

"The Truth Game" impresses as a class draw and should get a fair share of business for maybe 10 weeks. Ibee.

PURITY

Drama in three acts. Presented at the Rita Davis, 25 by Lee Shubert. Florence Reed starred. Adapted from the French of Rene Wachthausen by Barie Dunbar and Ralph Roeder. Staged by Stanley Logan.

Gustave	Jan Lindermen
Park Guard	Frank Horton
Man with a Dog	Helene Girard
Yvonne	Peggy Conklin
An Old Man	James Moore
Lady	Loretta Shea
Man About Town	Walter Fenner
Henri	Richard Bird
Purity	Florence Reed
Little Girl	Frances Tannehill
Jeanne	Marcella Swanson
Henriette	Pearl Ramoy
Julie	Muriel Robinson
Walking Advertisement	Edward M. Favor
M. Leon	Malcolm Williams
Madame Michaud	Maude Odell

A long play minus excitement, a drama not lightened with any humor, but nevertheless well acted. Best chance lies not in the play but the star, Florence Reed, who has been absent since her colorful Madame Goddam of "The Shanghai Gesture." Yet indications are against popularity for "Purity," French, but not Frenchy.

It is a story of frustration. Since the principal character is a woman of middle age, her secret passion for a 23-year-old youth is not altogether believable.

Victoire (Miss Reed) was a peasant, having come to Paris 25 years before. She is a scrubber of floors, a hard worker, a drudge, a lonely woman. In the park she meets Henri, a penniless, hungry young man, and she proffers him sandwich or dinner. Learning he has no home and has just buried his mother, she arranges for a room in the building where she lives. A bit later she rearranges her one room and places a bed in a curtained recess for him. She mothers him and she gives him money. She is like a second mother to him.

But when Victoire learns that Henri has a mistress she rages and at the same time understands that for the first time in her life she is in love. He never knows the old girl hungers for him. She is tormented with the craving for affection, but she isn't attractive and, to all appearances, Victoire is just a kind old lady, and it is so that Henri regards her.

Henri and Henriette plan to wed. Their affair is carried on in her home, her mother going out to work at night. When Victoire discovers the intended marriage and the hopelessness of her affection, she goes to the bank of the Seine and contemplates suicide. But the philosophy of M. Leon, an aging scholar, brings her to a different understanding, and the decision to help the young lovers instead of destroying the boy by her willful death.

As a story it is not heavyweight. Its characters are hardly attractive. There is indicated intelligence from people not expected to have such mentality—except in the case of the scholar. In other words, it is a drab yarn about drab folk.

It is understandable why Florence Reed selected the play, but that it gives her the opportunity for the scope of her acting skill is not apparent. Richard Bird is the young Henri who wants to be kind to his benefactress, but who follows the inclination of youth. Good play by him and Malcolm Williams, who is the old friend and adviser. Most of the other parts are brief. First scene in the park, with its flitts, cadets and the like, has plenty of color, the show slipping into a groove thereafter.

Victoire is regarded as a pure woman by the old scholar. Her unrequited passion at her age may be interesting, but it is hardly entertaining. Ibee.

LIFE LINE

Comedy drama in three acts and one scene by Gretchen Damrosch, daughter of Walter Damrosch. Presented at the Vanderbilt Dec. 27 by Leo Bulgakov. Seats $3.00 top.

Bronson Cutler	Carroll Ashburn
Lilly	Helene Ambrose
Italy	Eunice Stoddard
Jay Dunham	Lucile Leveque
Gildersleeve	Harry Greer
Ogle	Robert Parson
Rev. Dr. Truesdale	Shepherd Strudwick
Mrs. Irving Ives	Rosalind Ivan
Irving Ives	Herbert Ilcmets
Marie Thazeau	Akim Tamiroff

Not to be taken seriously. The play is important in that it again brings forward Eunice Stoddard, who outpresses the surrounding cast and suggests her ability as a film personality. It's an obvious story, and ancient, and bilgous in somebody practicing what he preaches in this case it's a banker, totally unreal. One set and small cast that doesn't look strong for subscription, and to struggle a year, but Bulgakov, if he has exhausted his rep by previous efforts, must lose ground in this one.

An extraordinary youthful preacher turns back a big donation to a banker because he would rather have the latter do something kindly in a human way than merely give money. That's unreal to begin with. But it happens, and the banker turns boy scout. That's ridiculous.

He starts looking for people to help and finds it among his best friends, a married couple, on the verge of splitting. What the banker did not know was that his daughter

Leading Legit Producers

By Jack Pulaski

A youthful group of Broadway legit producers has come to the front rapidly within the past three years. Among the more mature managers there are still front runners, most of whom appear to be just as good pickers of scripts now as 10 or 20 years ago.

It is almost a rule that producers who specialize on dramatic and comedy plays, are all at sea when it comes to musicals. Men who made their reputations within the fields they are best at rarely make good at the other fellow's, so that conversely the revue or musical comedy specialist generally flops with a straight show. An exception now and then.

David Belasco has never dabbled in the musical field and he never will. He is the eldest among producers and at 77 is astonishingly alert and active. A list of Belasco successes is as long as two arms. His recent attack of pneumonia has taken him out of the field for the balance of the season. He is still abed.

There are few consistent hit makers, either, as is Sam H. Harris, whose record for producing successes deserves a medal. Frequently, when a play at try-out looks poor to the average observer, Harris has taken it back to town and advised the authors what should be rewritten. He did it last season with "June Moon," which didn't seem to have a chance. Same is true of "Once in a Lifetime," this season's comedy smash.

Cohan Many Sided

George M. Cohan is, of course, the most many sided of all producers, since he is also a star actor and author. Day was when he presented revues, but probably not again. No showmen works harder than Cohan. His world is the theatre back and front. Failure means nothing to Cohan. Writing plays is just theatre to him. Hard work is his middle name, and to his friends he is a five-star marvel.

A. H. Woods is perhaps the most prolific producer of the lot. Once he lands a hit he gets in the coin with great speed, his team-mate, Martin Herman, seeing to that. The way they ran "The Trial of Mary Dugan" into a young fortune is the answer. Woods has had comedy hits, but his forte is melodrama. He got that way in the old ten, twent' and thirt' days and will stay that way. Last season was one of those things for him. He trotted out half a dozen mellers, two or three appearing on Broadway, near each other, at the same time. But they were not clicks and he will kid about it. And then at least two came from London where they were successes. All good men have their ups and downs in the theatre; Woods is liable to spring a sensation almost any minute.

The Selwyns

The Selwyns, Arch and Edgar, have been broken up as a production team. Edgar, author-manager, has not given up the theatre, but for the present is in the production of pictures in Hollywood, where the renumeration offer was so munificent that he could not turn it down. The legit has had plenty of troubles lately and until there is an upward turn, Edgar will stick to pictures.

Arch Selwyn is one of the first showmen to snare picture names into the legit this season. He has one money maker of the kind on tour and another was called in for repairs. He, too, is clever in handling hits. The Selwyns' first big smash was "Within the Law," which they selected after other managers had turned it down. Archie has presented a number of musicals but they are of London origin, the product of Charles B. Cochran—"Charlot's Revue," (1st edition being the outstanding of the group). Last season there was "Bitter Sweet," with Ziegfeld interested also.

Ziegfeld

Florenz Ziegfeld is primarily a musical producer, his rating being accomplished by the "Follies" which started as an annual summer show, then developed into an all year round affair. He led the way in production prodigality and claimed that some of his shows cost more than $200,000. Zieggy's ability to whip a ragged show into hit form is rarely failing. His ability to apply himself to a show once it is started is native. With a weight of detail to be done he never hurries. Sometimes even the people on his staff can't see how it is possible to get to scratch on time, but, somehow, Zieggy does it and always unhurriedly. Zieggy is just as good with musical comedy as with revues, which he is off of for the time being. He likes big money and lives that way. When he tries a straight play, it is always floppo. He did that mainly for Billie Burke.

George White, who was a dancer-manager and is now sticking to the managerial end, may be among the younger group, yet he has been putting on his own shows for a dozen years. He was the first to give Zieggy a battle for revue leadership, going in for elaborate production with effects from abroad. There was no little feeling between the pair when White's "Scandals" was among the biggest shows on Broadway. Zieggy never would actually concede White's ability, but has probably changed now. So has White. As evidence he used to do all his dance direction. For his present "Flying High," Bobby Connolly stepped it and did the job and at a time when Bobby had just put on a big success of his own. White can't be switched once he makes up his mind, and sometimes he is right. Georgie is undecided about new production at this time but is due for a revue in the spring.

A.P.A.

Earl Carroll is among the younger managers, too, but with a record of too many seasons to be classed with the new-comers. He is a revue specialist and a natural press agent for himself, though he consistently denies that. Carroll's "Vanities" has made a name almost as big as the "Follies" and "Scandals." He might switch titles, but his shows are revues. The theatre built for him has been razed and he is putting up a 3,000-seater on the same site, where he proposes to gather a flock of big names and put on a revue at $3 top, he says. Carroll is charged with putting too much rawness in his shows. He claims differently, seeing the questioned material as just a little fun. A quiet man as a rule, but he has his moments.

William A. Brady is one of the managerial veterans. A couple of years ago looked like he was licked and then came "Street Scene." Last season he came through again with "The First Mrs. Fraser." Brady is getting ready some new ones but is going along slowly in view of the times.

Plenty of color about this man, Brady, who once was a bear in the market. Had he not quit that some time ago he would have cleaned up another fortune in the past year. Brady has been best with melodrama. In the earlier days he did them in spectacle form, but got wiser.

Dillingham Versatile

Charles Dillingham is one of the managerial exceptions, having musical and non-musical hits to his credit. He seems to be strongest in the musical field and rose to the top with the Montgomery and Stone shows. Fred Stone is still his ace. Dillingham was more or less inactive for a time. Upon the death of A. L. Erlanger last year he stepped into the Erlanger board of directors and has been on the job daily. He is a good showman and liable to work out a hit at any time.

Gilbert Miller maintains the Miller name in Broadway's limelight. He has directed the activities of the Charles Frohman office for Paramount and has rapped out some sterling successes. Despite the picture connection, Miller does not select plays which may have a screen value. At times he does the opposite. When "The Captive" started a furore a couple of years back, it was agreed that he use his own name on the Frohman productions and that has held true for most of the presentations.

Miller railed against production costs and started to make his try-outs and productions in England. Most notable success in that direction was "Journey's End." That he will continue that way is doubtful, but he likes London, where he has theatre interests.

Hammerstein-Hopkins

Arthur Hammerstein is a musical comedy and operetta specialist. He tried a drama or two, but passed that up. Likewise, the lighter of the musical forms. His "Firefly"

Out-of-Town Reviews

COLONEL SATAN

Columbus, O., Dec. 26.

Booth Tarkington's first play in 10 years, "Colonel Satan," based on a night in the life of Aaron Burr, was cheered to the echo at its world premiere at the Hartman theatre here tonight (Friday).

Quite talky throughout and with but little action, each scene was so well done and each line so cleverly inflected as well as written that this production will undoubtedly find tremendous favor when it opens at the Fulton, New York.

Aaron Burr, once Vice-President, and very nearly President, of the United States, is superbly drawn. He is romantic and adventurous, a polished man of the world, more persuasive than any other gentleman of his time. A feminist, utterly courageous as well as unscrupulous. The plot concerns itself with one eventful night in his Parisian career, after he had been forced to flee because of his duel with Hamilton. He is a potential pawn of plotters against Napoleon, but only to gain his ends—as in truth, according to history—through the aid of his fascination for the gentler sex he wins his passport back to America by the hands of a woman.

It is a dramatic tale having to do with spies, plotters, disguised royalty and lovely ladies of that day. But while it is dramatic, it is also sufficiently humorous, at least witty, through the ever telling skill of Tarkington's lines.

Tarkington gives ample time to a defense of Burr's duel with Hamilton and goes so far as to have Burr fire into the air in a duel with a fellow-countryman in the play's most dramatic scene.

The three acts, each of only one scene, are short enough not to tire. The tempo is at a spirited pace. The lighting for a premiere was extraordinary in its deftness.

Chief fault of the first night was that at times the conversation was set at almost too fast a pace. Openings of the first two acts are in French, but this moves quickly enough into English. With but little action, the dialog naturally must be set fast.

Cast, which is to be taken complete into New York, McKay Morris stands out in a truly remarkable characterization of Burr. Jessie Royce Landis is a competent foil for Morris and gave a splendid performance.

Leading in support were Arthur Treacher, Ben Smith, Louis Casavant, Montague Shaw and Aristides Leoni, all able and forming one of the most capable supports seen here in many months. The balance of the players are far above the average.

Premiere here was sponsored by the Columbus Civic Theatre, Inc., which turned out in a body.

"Colonel Satan" moves to Cincinnati and Indianapolis from here before hitting Broadway. Most interested spectator was Bill Munster, of the Fulton theatre, New York, on for the opening. Show ran two hours and 20 minutes. Harvest.

ELMER THE GREAT

(Coast)

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

A coin grabber as a picture with Jack Oakie (titled "Fast Company") and a mild success in Chicago with Walter Huston creating the "Hurry" Kane role, this coast revival with Joe E. Brown is an equally happy casting. One wonders, in fact, how much different might have been the stage fate of "Elmer the Great" had Brown, instead of the more staid and legit Huston, created the dumbbell baseball pitcher which he is now recreating at the El Capitan, Hollywood.

It's a worthy revival production, and should do more than a fair business.

That comedy Joe E. Brown pan, with its silly leer, seems made to order for Ring Lardner's play. Brown milked every line and situation, and, to top it, he injected one of those braying Bert Lahr "maaaahs" that topped everything else.

This revival is limited to in-between pictures for the Warner comedy player. It is a stop-gap for the El Capitan, under Henry Duffy's direction and lease, with Brown carrying off his stage stellar honors in great style. It's his first stage attempt in three years.

Casting in general was expert. Jane Darwell as the mother, Emerson Treacy as the sincere and ambitious brother, Lottie Williams in a sure-fire slavey assignment, Ruth Matteson, Jean Reno and Mia Marvin in sympathetic femme roles, along with the rest, were all well cast.

Apropos of nothing, an unusual manifestation of home-town pride asserted itself at the premiere when, most casually somebody in the play observed that "New York was the greatest city in the world," which got as much of a salvo as anything else before or after that.

was the cause of the impending split. But the audience did.

When finally he does give advice, he finds his own wife has taken the tip and left him. So the banker drinks champagne from a woman's slipper to prove he's changed, and daughter marries his secretary. Then the wife returns, and everybody is happy. Why, doesn't matter.

Two or three characters are spotted in between, and one supplies comedy relief, bringing some laughter. He's Akim Tamiroff as Mario Tinzoni, tea shop owner, who harbors the banker's wife when she runs away. Tamiroff does a good bit, but it has no logical spot here.

Carroll Ashburn is featured, but he hardly fits the role as it has been conceived.

One could make the guess that the author was not certain what style of dramatic essence was most desired, and so auditors get a little serious drama, farce, comedy and satire rolled into three acts and one day's happenings.

So far as types go, the banker's secretary, the butler and Miss Stoddard alone looked as though they belonged. Yet, since it promises laughter, even if misspotted, the play shows up as likely stock material. Shan.

When Alan Dale Wrote for 'Variety'

About 1915 Alan Dale left Hearst's New York "American," owing to a clash in the policy of both on dramatic criticisms. Dale wanted to say what he pleased; poison on a Hearst paper for play critics, then as now.

After off the "American" for some time and no other theatrical newspaper work taken up by the late Alan Dale, he suggested to "Variety" that he conduct a column in this paper, just to keep his hand in on theatricals, as he stated. Dale remained on "Variety" for a year or more. Shortly after stopping his "Variety" column he returned to "The American" as its dramatic reviewer, but a greatly subdued Alan Dale. He never regained his following nor prestige that he had enjoyed for some years, firstly as the critic for the New York "Evening World," where he erected his rep, and later on "The American," where he finally lost it.

Dale was probably the first reviewer of the drama in America to be noted for his sarcastic notices. Later he became flippant, and more latterly indulged in much slang of the day.

Dale was a good critic, an excellent judge of a play, but the Hearst system killed his spirit, for Dale restrained was not Alan Dale, no more than this column typifies the great Alan Dale of his own untrammelled day.

The department was headed weekly, like this:

AMONG OTHER THINGS—

ALAN DALE

"She must be fifty," said an English actress, referring to a prominent star.

"I don't know her age," retorted the other, "but she's so old that a cup of tea rests her."

It is very comforting to know that vampires are going out of fashion as picture subjects. We've had such an awful dose of 'em. Vampires are all very well in their way, but they do pall. As soon as a woman is known as attractive, pretty and alluring, she is cast for a vampire. Surely, there could be fat, ugly and vulgar vampires. It isn't fair to vamporize all the nice girls.

Miss Izetta Jewel has inherited the neat little sum of $3,500,000. It probably isn't a jewel, but real estate.

Isn't this lovely as a "musical criticism" of Geraldine Farrar in "Sans Gene" at the Metropolitan: "She raised her skirts knee high when Leroy put on her slippers and when her dancing master Despreaux tried to teach her to curtesy she fell on one knee, and then raised her court dress fully that high and rubbed the injured surface sympathetically—and in full view." Cute, eh?

"Things are so much easier today," sighed a young woman who sat near me at the New Amsterdam theatre on the opening night of "Henry VIII." "Just think! Poor old King Henry had to behead two of his six wives. De Wolf Hopper and Nat Goodwin really have a good deal to be thankful for."

The Bowery wants its name changed for the reason that the late Charles Hoyt's song, "They Do Such Things, and They Say Such Things" hurt it so badly. They tell me that I'm responsible for entitling a certain "Lobster Square," and that the inhabitants of the Longacre district are kicking about that. Evidently there's something in a name, in spite of Shakespeare and his tercentenary.

William Locke, who wrote that dreadful play known as "The Revolt," thinks that churches should advertise preachers just as theatres do actors. "Before I die," he said, "I hope to go to church and be able to clap my hands at a sermon." Possibly Mr. Locke lost the "clapping habit" by watching his own plays, and is anxious to get busy.

"What shall I do for rough hands?" writes a distressed gentleman to an evening paper. Be thankful for them. You can get a decent price for them at several theatres where claques seem to flourish. Don't use cream or oils, and above all, avoid gloves.

It seems that the real reason why actors are so anxious to appear in the movies is that the films hand their names down to posterity. Before the screens happened the actor's "art" was lost. They all dote on posterity, you know, even though it isn't a bit nourishing. Formerly they had to be satisfied with the "rose tinted obituaries of friendly critics." However, poor old posterity will have its troubles.

The very best Falstaff I ever saw was that presented exactly twenty-one years ago by Victor Maurel at the Metropolitan Opera House. The same year Sir Herbert Tree—who was then just Beerbohm—acted the part at Abbey's theatre (now the Knickerbocker) and William H. Crane did the same thing at the old Star. Maurel beat them both at their old game.

Somebody was "stringing" me when he wrote that there was a sign outside Daly's theatre to the effect that "gentlemen without collars" were not admitted. I took the trouble to investigate and discovered that no such sign existed. Therefore, it may be reasoned that gentlemen with collars are admitted and I am glad to know it, because I always consider that snobbery is to be deprecated. True nobility is oblivious of collars!

At the opening night of Mr. Lou-Tellegen in "A King of Nowhere," Mrs. Lou Tellegen "occupied a box," and it was duly announced that she would actually do that. I think it was awfully nice of her, don't you? No marriage contract carries the awful clause that "each party" shall endure the histrionic efforts of the other.

Old Operetta Goes Ritz

A comic opera that De Wolf Hopper played in way back in 1883 will find its way back to Broadway again in new form when "Boccaccio" is given at the Metropolitan Opera House Jan. 2.

"Boccaccio" has never before been played as grand opera. It was originally produced at the Wallack theatre by John Mackaye

Oh, my dear, you must throw on a shawl and run over to the Biltmore in two weeks to see Mae West's "Pleasure Man." Monday night at the Bronx Opera House it opened cold and was adorable.

It's the queerest show you've ever seen. All of the Queens are in it.

Lester Sheehan will kill you in drag in the last act.

You haven't seen anything like it since the gendarmes put the "curse of the seven witches" on "The Drag."

Must give you a vein full of that last act. One of the Queens who used to be in show business throws a party for all the performers on the bill. The female impersonators, four strong, and some other queens all go in drag. Are you screaming?

They all do specialties and make whoopee until the tragedy occurs. And, dearie, it's some tragedy.

If that Mae West can think of the oddest things!

This heavy, a conceited ham who tries to make every dame he meets, is at the party with the wife of a dancer on the bill. He has been making a heavy play for her and, my dear, she's teetering. He tells her to return and join him in a certain room. She does, and finds out he's been sneezed. Her husband is suspected, for he broke up the party in a jealous rage and was given air. But when the police get through questioning everybody, including two of the Queens, the brother of a girl the heavy had ruined confessed he did it.

But that's not the half of it, dearie. It seems he was a medical student, and he explained that he didn't intend to kill him—just wanted to fix it so he wouldn't do any more stepping, and performed an operation. Can you imagine! (Mae must read the Denver papers.)

The whole thing is backstage stuff and surefire. Those Queens will sell the show if nothing else does.

And who's in it now die. Alan Brooks is the shelky ham with a dame complex; Stan Stanley, who used to bounce on trampolines until he discovered he could talk, plays a gagging stage manager, and plays it. Walter James, juvenile for years and years, changed his name to Wally, but still the bookers wouldn't give in. Well, he's in this one as a low comedy vaudeville performer, and very good.

Every time one of the impersonators opens his mouth the house shrieks. So much so that it was crabbing lines and laughs for the others. That will all be spotted, though. The first act is back stage and has some laughs between four scrub women. Stanley also gets a few bellies the way he imitates the impersonators, and, dearie, the woods are full of them.

A tough hoofer with a new partner discovers him making lamp shades before the week is over.

The second act has dressing rooms, and it's like a three-ring circus. Four dames make a strip change right down to their moles in one corner upstairs. In the next room the four impersonators are changing. Downstairs are the principals in the dancing act in one room, and next door Alan Brooks, two acrobats and Stanley, who is filling in for a sick tumbler.

Things happen fast and furious. The dancer's wife and Brooks are framing right under his nose. The kid who croaks Brooks has just been hired as an electrician, and he sees his sister's picture on the actor's dressing table.

Brooks tells the world he slays 'em and leaves 'em, so the kid knows he's out for no good. The sister busts backstage to ask Brooks if he's going to keep his promise and marry her, just as he's due on the stage. He slams her against a wall and, as she's that way, she up and dies later on. This Brooks guy must have had two motorcycles. He's hard to believe, but the peasants will go for it.

The party is the pay off. If you see those hussies being introduced to do their specialties you'd pass out. One, Sylvan Repetti, was just too adorable as a snake dancer, and stopped the show. The host sang a couple of parodies, one going "When I Go Out and Look for the Moon," now I ask you. Another guest very appropriately sang "Balls, Parties and Banquets," and I ask you again.

The thing ran two hours and a half. It needs plenty of cutting and rewriting, but will it get the pennies? You and I should have a piece. Even Gus Hill had his dough out.

That West girl knows her box office, and this one is in right now. It can't miss, and if you think it can, hope you get henna in your tooth brush.

But don't miss it, because you must see it to appreciate the strides we girls are making. You can't possibly imagine it.

And go early, for some of the lines can't last. Con.

SYRACUSE LEGITS MAY PLAY IN HIGH SCHOOL

Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 27.

New York Grand Opera Company, with personnel of 100, will give two bills in the auditorium, of Central High School Jan. 12-13, marking the first use of that new auditorium for theatrical purposes.

Engagement is under auspices Syracuse Teachers Association, and proceeds will go to the Community Chest's emergency relief fund.

Allied Theatre Corporation, New York, also has had a field representative here surveying conditions, with the idea of booking road show into the auditorium on a semi-subscription basis.

Syracuse now has no legit house.

Guild Official Goes Producer on His Own

Lawrence Langner, one of the board of managers of the Theatre Guild, has joined the Erlanger office as an associate producer and is now readying a play for production next month. Langner retains his connection with the Guild while producing on his own account under the Erlanger sponsorship. Rules of the Theatre Guild prohibit any member of the board of managers producing a show for the Guild Theatre individually, all productions there being sponsored by the Theatre Guild organization.

There is nothing in the rules, however, that prevents a member of the board that picks plays for the Guild from stepping out as a producer elsewhere. Langner, who has been with the Guild since its organization, is a foreign patent attorney.

Sharp's Stock Try-Out

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

A new play by John Charles Brownell and Mann Page, tentatively titled "Hell Is Paved," will be tried out at the Pitt next week by the George Sharp players. Piece has never before been staged.

Eugene O'Brien will play the leading role during the local engagement. It's the first time in Sharp's three years here that he has tried out a new one.

Cellar Addicts Spot

Close of the Triangle theatre has sent many of the Village cellar theatregoers to the new Cellar Player group on 27th street. Latter is operated by Dorothy Chesmond and Mrs. Arlene Erlanger. "Ned McCobb's Daughter" current.

'VARIETY' ANNIVERSARY NUMBERS FOR 25 YEARS

Below is the number of pages in each Anniversary Number of "Variety" since its founding.

"Variety" for the first 15 years ran on a sheet 9x12, printed on a flatbed press. In 1920 the paper changed to its present tabloid size, printing on a rotary press in newsprint.

When changing to newsprint and the cylinder press "Variety" was the first trade paper to purchase newsprint by the carload from the International Paper Company. It continues to buy its newsprint from that company.

That contact by "Variety" with the I. P. C. opened up a new and unthought-of field for the International, one in which it has expanded.

For the year 1918 it may be noted that "Variety's" Anniversary issue of that year was of 48 pages. The previous year it had been 204 pages and the following year 166. From the late fall of 1912 until the summer of 1914 "Variety" had its first desperate battle with the Keith circuit. Keith's "blacklisted" "Variety" and threatened to "blacklist" anyone associated with it in any way who read or advertised in "Variety." It explains the small Anniversary Number of 1913.

At times during the 20-month fight with Keith's "Variety" often went to press weekly with less than one page (48 inches) of advertising. Meantime its circulation was jumping up, for that is something no trouble "Variety" ever has had with any theatrical interest has affected.

Last year with "Variety's" usual Anniversary issue was incorporated the first Anniversary celebration by RKO, accounting for an unprecedented theatrical issue of 324 pages.

By years, the list reads:

YEAR	NO. PAGES
1906 (9 x 12)	64
1907	124
1908	140
1909	172

Olympic Art Contest

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

A drama festival for community theatre groups is being organized for spring as preliminary to Olympic Games of 1932. Los Angeles County Drama Association, recently organized clearing house for little theatre groups, is working up the festival with the idea of securing dramatic section in the games.

Prizes are offered to winning contestants, with probably production in regular theatre.

Parallels in Literary Field

Literary field at about the time of the establishment of "Variety" in 1905, was surprisingly like conditions as they are today.

Price of fiction was generally at around $1. The dollar book is back again. Book editor of the "Evening Post" commented, just before Christmas, 1905, "The public, we suspect, would be better served were the book list for the forthcoming year one-quarter as long, so that the important titles might not be crowded and obscured by the indifferent and bad." An important book publishing executive issued a statement along exactly similar lines a few months ago, as a possible remedy for the poor book biz of today.

Books like "The Long Day," anonymously authored, and subtitled, "The True Story of a New York Working Girl Told by Herself" were very popular. Today, known as true stories, they are just in as great demand.

Twenty-five years ago booksellers complained that the lending libraries, then in vogue, were ruining their biz. Today they make the same complaints against the chain drug and cigar stores.

It was hinted, then, that there were too many publishers in the field, getting out too many books. And the booksellers were reported as about folding up. Now there are even more publishers, issuing even more books. And today there are a great many more booksellers and some of the reputed starving ones are still in business.

Meaning, of course, it's always a condition. Or maybe a situation. Anyhow, the alarmists should be squelched.

Still Best Sellers

Best selling writers 25 years ago are still among the best sellers today. Booth Tarkington's "The Conquest of Canaan" and Edith Wharton's "House of Mirth," were books most in demand in 1905. Those two writers are still in big demand.

That was just the time, too, when George Bernard Shaw was coming into his greatest fame, only he was just Bernard Shaw then. Two of his plays running simultaneously in New York, it was thought advisable to bring out some of his books. For the American edition of "The Irrational Knot" (anybody remember that one?) Shaw wrote a special preface. The preface proved more exciting than the book, though Shaw had not yet started telling about his drunken father.

Funniest book of the year 1905 was "My Friend the Chauffeur," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. Book detailed the adventures of a young man in driving an automobile over Europe. Autos, then, made much comedy. Williamsons were active until recently, when one of the writing team died.

Book publishers then, as now, centered in New York. All the old-line publishers still in existence with the exception of G. W. Dillingham and McClure, Phillips. Dana Estes and Co., of Boston, also passed out since.

One Chain Publisher

Only chain magazine publisher 25 years ago was Street & Smith, then just getting under way. "Ladies' Home Journal" had biggest circulation, 1,300,000, and featured such choice pieces as "What College Girls Eat." "Satevepost" was coming along fast, and could even afford to buy Owen Wister's new serial, "Lady Baltimore." Wister had previously gained a high rep with his notable "The Virginian."

"The Smart Set" had not as yet come under the control of H. L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan. It featured poems by an English Duke. It's probable that when Mencken and Nathan got in, the poems by the English Duke got air.

Old-line book publishers were Dodd Mead, G. P. Putnam, Henry Holt, Macmillan, Dutton, Scribner, Brentano, Century, Harper, Doubleday, Appleton, Revell, Little Brown, Houghton, Mifflin, Lippincott and a few others. Added to these now are Horace Liveright, Albert and Charles Boni, Brewer & Warren, Cape and Smith, Cosmopolitan, Covici Friede, Coward McCann, Crowell, John Day, Duffield, Harcourt Brace, Longmans, Grosset, Macaulay, Minton Balch, William Morrow, Sears, Simon & Schuster, Richard R. Smith, Rinehart & Farrar, Frederick A. Stokes, Vanguard, Viking, Ives Washburn, and a few others.

2 Classes

Trend of magazine publishing has been toward chains, both because of easier merchandising and lowering of overhead. In addition to Street & Smith, the chain mag operators are Bernarr Macfadden, Curtis, Hearst, Crowell, Fiction House, Dell, Fawcett and others. Even independents banding together, like mutual working arrangement of "Scribner's" and "Harper's," together with a number of others.

Earnings of authors have gone higher and higher in the past 25 years.

$1 Per Word

Dollar a word for serial rights not uncommon for first-line writers like Zane Grey, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Louis Bromfield, etc. Harold Bell Wright, Rex Beach, Booth Tarkington, etc., reported well in the millionaire class, and all through their earnings as writers.

Any number of authors do very well even from their writings for the pulp-paper mags only. Twenty-five years ago the lesser mags rarely if ever paid for material. Couldn't afford it, and the authors never wrote for money, either. Now, an Erle Stanley Gardner or a Fred MacIsaac can become rich writing for the pulps only.

Naturally, rackets in the literary field, as in any other. Publishers who get out books at "vanity" authors' expense, story "critics," etc. But, then, they had something of the sort 25 years ago, too. By-lines were all many writers got for their tales.

Book and mag business just now in bad shape. Current business depression has cut down advertising to the extent that numerous mags are tottering, and many are passing out. Circulation, also affected, indicating that people will go to places of amusement, and will read, irrespective of economic conditions, but not so much of either. But it's only the advertising that holds up the mags.

Book business also in a bad way. Chain drug and cigar stores, selling publishers' "remainders" at cut prices, hurting the booksellers plenty, and the dollar book came in to combat it. Not much results, however, and the booksellers want the publishers to keep the "remainders" away from the drug and cigar stores.

While the mags will get set as soon as the business depression is over, commentators see a readjustment necessary to the book business. For one, too many publishers. Or, at least, too many books. Not enough people to read them all, and that's the strongest argument against the huge quantity of books turned out each year.

No Browsing

No hope for the strictly bookseller. No more browsers among books. Now, they buy and run. And with independent buying, booksellers can't compete against the cut prices of Macy's book counter and the drug and cigar stores.

Book publishers would admit, if forced, that the chain merchandising stores furnish better outlets for books than the strictly booksellers. Expert sales methods, prominent locations and retail advertising make the general chain stores better sales mediums than the strictly booksellers.

Sooner or later the book buyer will be able to get any book he wants at the cigar store at 42nd street and Broadway, instead of being obliged to travel to a hideaway spot for it.

Ask one of two former booksellers, one of whom is now the advertising manager for a pants manufacturer, and the other one of whom now conducts a newsstand on 6th avenue. They know.

Ruling by the Columbia Broadcasting System allowing no mention of contest winners over the air, proved embarrassing to Alexander Woollcott in trying to make known the winners of the book review contest he sponsored in connection with his weekly book talk over that hook-up.

Announcement of the contest, with mention of cash prizes for the three best book reviews, was okay, but the chain demurred at the mention of the winners. Book publishers sponsoring the Woollcott book chats tried to get the announcement of the winners in the dailies, but the newspapers pointed out that inasmuch as Columbia was being paid for time, they saw no reason why the Columbia System should not announce the winners, too. As a last resort, Woollcott will probably have to send letters to all the contestants, announcing the winners.

Entries in the contest proved that despite its broadcasting on a nation-wide hook-up, responses were mostly from the east. The three prize winners were all from the New York area.

A Couple of Dicks

Book League of America has a new editor, Richard Burton. So many editors there they refer to Burton as the "newest" editor. This Richard Burton not to be confused with Richard Halliburton, the writer.

Re Richard Halliburton, he's taken a plane to Morocco to fly over and about the French Foreign Legion for material for a new book. He's the lad who swam the Panama Canal recently, among other exploits, all of which sell his books and also make him very popular with the ladies who go in for the literary teas.

Expect Halliburton's new book at about the time he crashes the newspapers with some exploit in Morocco.

Al Smith's Column

Al Smith's weekly column, syndicated by McNaught, starts running in 62 Sunday papers next week, with Smith guaranteed $500 a week against a 60-40 split of the gross. In New York "The World" will pay $350 for Smith's once-a-week article of from 1,000 to 1,500 words.

List of papers already signed for the Smith feature assures him of an income of $1,050 a week as a starter, with Charley McAdams, who signed Smith as a syndicate writer, figuring that at least 20 more papers will buy the Smith column after its first release.

Lillian Taussig, former woman's page editor of the "Sunday World," is associated with Governor Smith as his literary research secretary.

British "Reminders"

The English invasion of the American book market already begun by Simpkin Marshall, Ltd., the London book house, which has affected a tie-up with an American distributor for English book remainders. Remainders is the name given to odd lots of books, broken set, left overs, etc., of the type carried in the chain cigar and drug stores.

It means the flooding of American retail book marts with cut-price books, one of the biggest headaches to the booksellers. Probably will force additional cuts on the prices of remainders in the chain sigar and drug stores.

It's a Bargain

Fourth annual tournament of the Artists and Writers Golf Association will be held in Havana this year with a secondary golf tussles to be held in Palm Beach on the way home.

Committee in charge of the migration to the south has arranged for a 13-day all expense tour at $291 for members and invited guests, starting Jan. 17.

Grantland Rice, Rex Beach, and Claire Maxwell head the tournament committee, Rice being the present golf champion of the pen and pencil pushers.

Dailies Grateful?

Chicago dailies regularly send up prayers for the picture houses. Rain or shine, holidays or depression, they come through with their share of advertisements like clockwork.

Publix-B. & K. took their biggest splurge in the history of the local B. & K. theatres, when on Christmas morning they took full pages in the "Herald-and-Examiner" and the "Tribune," with the latter spread in two colors.

Save In Own Country

Herman Landon's detective novel "The Unknown Seven" is the first of his 23 books to be translated into Swedish although they have been printed in practically every other language and the author is a native of Sweden where he is well known by those who read English.

Hecht's $10 Signature

When Ben Hecht's first novel in four years, "A Jew in Love," makes its appearance late in January Hecht will sign a few copies printed on special paper to sell at $10 per. Probably intended to make Charlie MacArthur envious.

No Anti-Dry Move

That contest announced by Dorrance for an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the liquor question is off, with the prize money unclaimed. Publishing house has returned all entries, claiming it couldn't find a single one worthy of the prize.

Slump Hits Magazine

National weekly said to be dropping circulation so fast it's alarming its publishers. Expected a drop under current conditions, publishers can't understand it going in such quantities. The mag is making fantastic gift offers to new subscribers in an attempt to fill up its cards again before the next A. B. C. audit.

Gene Fowler Busy

Gene Fowler is writing a biography of the late William J. Fallon, brilliant criminal lawyer. It is to be called "The Great Mouthpiece," with Covici-Friede doing the publishing.

Fowler has also completed a play, Emma Campbell doing the score. It is called "Black Narcisus" and is described as a "Hudson River anthology."

Ray Long's Russian Slant

Ray Long is back from Russia, and without a single samovar. Editor of "Cosmopolitan" picked up a couple of book length stories for the Hearst book publishing branch. Also enough material for a series of articles on the land of the Bolsheviki.

Eight Mags

Doubleday, Doran and Co. are publishing eight magazines and not two as previously reported. List includes "West," "Short Stories," "Star," "Country Life," "American Home," "World's Work," "El Eco," and "Le Petit Journal."

Paris, Dec. 18.

For Jules Romain's "Donogoo" the Pigalle is now giving special exhibitions of its stage machinery.

Theatre was built with a special view to using elaborate stage machinery, resulting in any play produced there being chopped up, so as to provide for the use of a considerable number of sets. Donogoo has 24.

Steam-Heat Show Boat Fouled by Land Law

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

Captain J. W. Menke's Golden Rod Show Boat, which was to have opened a downtown "steam heat" engagement on the Allegheny river, got the "run-around" from city officials and cannot open. That was decided last week after Menke had repeatedly tried in vain to obtain a permit.

Since Dec. 17, Menke has been awaiting the official sanction. After much buck-passing the matter got to the Public Safety Department. Director Clark ruled that "the Golden Rod opening was held up pending an investigation of its safety. Our inspectors found it was not fire proof."

IRENE DUNNE

Edna Ferber, novelist, describes Sabra Cravat, heroine of her popular novel, "Cimarron," as:

"Beautiful....finely bred....face, luminously white like lambent flame ....abundant dark hair....eyebrows arched like twin scimitars.... Southern....twenty-one....love, the dominant impulse of her life.... evolves from a clinging vine to a self-reliant woman....through suffering, quality and ability....thoroughbred."

That's why William Le Baron, Radio Pictures production head, picked Irene Dunne, Louisville beauty, and star of Ziegfeld's "Show Boat," to create "Sabra Cravat" in the screen version of "Cimarron," soon to be released.

Donahue Widow Award

Mrs. Alice Marian Donahue, widow of Jack Donahue, obtained a summary judgment against Connolly & Swanstrom, Inc., and the Princess Charming, Inc., for royalties due her husband at the rate of 1½ per cent of the receipts of "Princess Charming" between Sept. 20 and Nov. 15, amounting to $185,246.

Connolly & Swanstrom put in an answer asserting that Jack Donahue knew they were not to be held liable under the agreement with him. Bobby Connolly said in an affidavit that only the Princess Charming, Inc., was to be liable, because Connolly & Swanstrom had no interest in the production of "Princess Charming."

The judgment for $2,823 was entered against both corporations.

Kate Smith for Palace

Due to a salary dispute Kate Smith will leave "Flying High" when the show starts its road tour at Philadelphia Jan. 3.

The blues singer has been booked as a guest artist on the radio Fleischmann Hour, Jan. 8, and opens at the Earle, Washington, Jan. 12, for a couple of weeks, following which she returns to play the Palace (R-K-O), New York.

The European Runaround

Star Follows Soph—Closing

"Follow a Star," which followed Soph out of the Winter Garden because Paul Murray and Jack Hulbert couldn't get anybody to fill Soph's ample unmentionables, opens again Dec. 20 with Maisie Gay in the revamped Tucker role.

Soph's cut was heavy and with her in, the show needed three mats weekly to do $16,000. On two it couldn't gross better than 14 grand—the actual nut.

But three mats and six nights were too hard on the Tucker trachea.

Not Dirt, If Dear

Paris press dirt-chasing. Thin line between smart stuff and indecency has them all steamed up.

Fernand-Laurent of "L'Oeuvre," red rag of courage, is asking Chiappe, who bosses the cops, for "A Little Modesty." Insists gagging morals only ends by infecting them.

Vautel of the "Journal" is with Laurent in insisting Paris has lots more dirt now than in the old "Naughty Paree" days—even though dirt is a field in which you can't really invent anything new.

Cops, oddly, are on the other side. If it's artistic and dear, say the bulls, it can't corrupt morals of the peasants and, ergo, can't be prosecuted as obscene.

An Epidemic of Windy Titles Has Been Arranged

Duck your head. A mob of simply elegant titles designed to relieve unemployment in the printing and bulb trades are coming your way.

London has followed Emlyn Williams' "A Murder Has Been Arranged" with "A Marriage Has Been Arranged," with Lady Tree, Mary Newcomb and a few other big shots in the cast.

Copy-cats on "Arranged" thing are Leonard Ide, author, and Leon M. Lion, producer.

Plugging the Peepul at a Price

J. T. Grein, an old hand at the sure-seater show biz in London, opened the People's theatre with "The Man from Blankley's"—a Hawtrey hit of 30 years ago.

"People's" is out to capture Theatre Guild subscription sort with Basil Dean after the same type of hardy annuals, but at higher prices.

Ages ago Grein put on Shaw's first play, "Widower's Houses." Floppo. Lots of others followed.

Hereafter he plays 'em close to the chest. Hence the revival thing, and even that payable in advance.

Jeritza Stops a Sloughing

Jeritza got Dieterich Arndt's "Bagage" seized and destroyed by the Vienna cops, citing 130 passages from the book as pointing meanly at her.

Met Op. star has been in public jams recently, making her fair game for novelists.

At least so Arndt thought. Decision may slow up these sloughings under crepe-de-chine covers which has become the "novel"-writing of the day.

Arndt's real name is Roderich Muller Gutenbrunn. Court decision doesn't really kill the book. Merely drives it into bookleggin channels.

"Bagage" means about the same as "baggage" in English-riff-raff, trollope—anything but elegant.

Savoy's Smacking Serialized Now

Savoy's annual pre-Christmas present of a slap went to Tallulah Bankhead this year. Last year it was Swaff.

Off-season smacks are pulled off at the Trocadero, but the big numbers usually go to the Savoy.

The Bankhead, with "Let Us Be Gay" having gone dolefully to the storehouse, is due for a few weeks of vaude before heading for Hollerwood for two talkers.

Face-slapping done by another acterine has all the earmarks of a publicity plant as o. a.'s identity seems to be well concealed.

Swaff Swings to Talkers

"Sunday Express's" munsification of Swaff's draymah and Atkinson's picture pages was made Nov. 30.

On that day Swaff went messianic on the newer films, taking Atkinson's left hand spread (page 4) for his lead and his own right hand spot (page 5) for the run over.

Wise overseers figured 1,700,000 readers would never spot the doubling in brass, figuring the double-page spread would fool 'em all. Later Swaff will get down to 50 closeups to the reel.

Meanwhile, George Atkinson went quietly to "The Daily Telegraph," Clement Scott's old sheet, which began the Thursday thing of theatre news.

Swaff said nothing new in 10 cols of talker-talk except that he invented the quota law, forced the film censor on the industry, told everybody three years ago that talkers would drive legit to the wall (but nobody would believe him), has every big shot in Hollywood as his best pal and insinecerest critic, and believes Charlie Chaplin is the greatest entertainer the world has ever seen.

Or if not that, pretty good.

The Charlot rave is cross-headed "The Truth About Chaplin." It must be great to be fearless.

And Not by Her Torso Technique Either

Further proof of how the show biz can pave the way to easy street, even in remote corners of the world where women are still classed with cattle, is Fatma's Rushdy's rise to fame in Egypt.

Six years ago she couldn't even read and write. Then she got a break in a Cairo theatre and after that Aziz Eid took her in tow.

She got up to Henri Bataille's "La Possession" in no time, and now at 23 is the smash hit of Palestine, Syria, Lebanon and all of Cleopatra's old caressing country-side. Shakespeare, Shaw, Guitry, Urfy, Scribe—they're all low hurdles to her now.

She carries a nut of 75 grand, operating her own company and has credit to burn. In short, wherever the Nile wanders, and it does a lot of wandering, they're nuts about Fatma.

She should be approached any day now for a cigaret or anti-halitosis plug.

After that, "Who's Who," sure.

This Thing Called Taste

You know after every performance in every London theatre whether floppo or smacko, Bolshevik or Bourbon, rowdy or restrained, they play "God Save the King," thereby stopping all walkouts in their tracks.

Why the King's health should be made a vital issue at the end, say, of "On the Spot" is one of those things you have to be born in England to understand.

To an outside sappo it's just the chune of "My Country 'Tis o' Thee" yanked in to plug a show—and flagwaving to him is always the tipoff that the show must be not so good.

Swiss visitors wonder what their national anthem is doing in an English theatre. Germans just look on it all as a quaint way to use one of their fine old drinking songs.

But to the native peasants it's okay, plus.

Year in Radio

By Abel Green

Radio broadcasting, in its commercial manifestations (only form that matters to anybody), became a Big Business last year. It kept on as Big Business in 1930, but didn't get bigger, as was hoped, or, as in the American trend of progressiveness, it should have.

The reason was because Commercial Radio, being the wedding of entertainment to commercial enterprise, reflected the national economic depression of this year. Radio, whose very vitals are fed by the hard-headed merchandiser from whom flow the wherefore of Radio's progress, found itself curbed through the nation's big businesses deciding they would go easy on giving the public bigger and better and grander entertainment.

With it evolved the attitude that the expensive "names" which cost up into the tens of thousands for one night's entertainment didn't mean much in the long run, that a good, sound, well-rounded institutional program, designed to weekly bring a national trade-mark to public attention is much more to be preferred to dominating everything in order to build up one name.

At the same time, like any other form of amusement purveying, some individual draw has to be featured. They grew tired of the bands, but finally concluded they were the most logical as any other attempts to build up circulation or dial-consciousness [through the media of dramatic stock companies or singers], didn't quite have the same effect as a good syncopating orchestra.

The big networks, the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System, set the pace for everything worth-while in radio, and are still doing so.

With the NBC and the CBS doing so well, ever and anon talk concerning a third large chain popped up this year. First Hearst, then the Warners, then Fox were supposedly all set to grab off WOR, the Newark (Bamberger) station, as an eastern nucleus. It finally got so that Edward S. Bamberger of the department store family had to deny everything, but cagily conceded that "all worth-while offers" would receive due consideration.

Radio Rackets

The lesser stations meantime took advantage of the "booked solid" and general conservative conditions of the networks by slipping in all sorts of radio rackets. They ran the gamut from radio fortune-telling, astrology, sex secrets, and hi-pressure salesmanship to the boobery of everything from land lots to the "white stuff" (gin), such as some daring bootleggers essayed to put across.

In between, both the big and the small stations, in a common desire for conservation and economy, went in for the "electrical transcription" (phonograph record) broadcasts. The lesser stations fell for the idea of getting a "Pop" (Glenn H.) Warner or a professionally prepared "canned" program on disks, discoursing topically on football (as in the football coach's case), or entertaining their own hinterland audiences with talent recruited and recorded in the big cities.

The purveyors of the "canned" disk services carefully primed everything for cut-outs for the announcers, and even had things so synchronized as to permit a station to lend the misimpression that the talent was broadcasting in the flesh.

Radio is still too new and too vigorously in its stages of development not to permit even a slack year to slip by without anything of moment.

There cropped up sundry tiffs and squabbles. The big networks started delving into allied enterprises. Paramount took 50% of the Columbia system and went into the Publix service a bit. The NBC had its own Radio Music ally and started discriminating—or so it was alleged—against the Warner group of music publishers, and favoring the Feist-Fischer songs for plugs. This created quite some to-do at the moment on the inside.

Personalities

Amos 'n' Andy and Rudy Vallee were still the envy and pride of everybody, depending on which side of the fence you were on, and even the NBC's third outstander, "The Rise of the Goldbergs," a sketch idea which was getting some attention, gave the National chain 1929's batting average on producing the outstanding features on the air.

Regionally, of course, each sector had its own local favorites. You may never have heard of the Beverly Hills-Billies, but their gross of "gifts," for which they deliberately ask, would be enough to start a mail-order house. They could never use the shoes, clothes, hats, edibles and other gifts which the Beverly Ozarklans of California collect each week.

Also terrific along the Pacific Slope is Capt. Dobbsie, or, in another form, the Rev. Bob Schuler is no slouch as an ether personality.

The midwest had its Little Jack Little and also Correll and Gosden, until the latter went dusky as Amos 'n' Andy.

The networks in truth supply what there is in the best on the air, so far as personalities are concerned.

Radio at one time reached such proportions that there was every indication Radio would head all the show business. The National Broadcasting Co. through its multi-affiliations (R-K-O theatres and pictures, R-C-A Photophone, and R-C-A-Victor records) still bids fair to be a dominating factor in any form of amusement.

Picture Companies

The picture companies, taking their cues from the NBC's domination of things, figured that it wouldn't be a bad idea to get in on this radio thing themselves. The Warners had their KFWB in Los Angeles, but still fancies a network. Fox, as previously mentioned, had similar air-minded expansion ideas. Paramount went even further and bought in on the Columbia network. Metro, through Hearst's or Fox's ideas, figured it would be well taken care of on the radio thing.

Metro, most of all, saw great prospects in radio. Its successful advent in the music publishing field as the control of the Robbins Music Corp. and the manner in which the theme songs were proving of great help in exploiting their pictures had already shown them the way. When the music thing dwindled Metro was still satisfied and they figured it was worth while charging off losses on the song publishing end to institutional exploitation and ballyhoo for their pictures. It went so far that when it no longer got to be the fashion for an announcer to herald a certain song, and also give the picture from whence it originated a free mention, the Metrolites hit on the idea of having the titles of the pictures coincide with a central theme song. The song title thus would inevitably be an ad. for the picture title as well.

Meantime, in the general trend of economics, the disc program thing was being developed and still is in process of development. There are any number of ways and means for shipping elaborately "canned" programs on a booking schedule similar to a can of film. One proposal was to record long programs on celluloid sound-tracks similar to the Movietone process and then reproduce the sound-tracks via microphonic transmission for general broadcasting. Paul Whiteman was mentioned as one basic artist who would take general charge of such enterprise to "can" the best in music for circulation among the lesser broadcasters.

The very small stations when hearing that the big league radio-casters were flirting with the idea went back anew to the old gag of broadcasting phonograph records. It got to be so that the music interests decided the mere purchase of a phonograph record for 75c or less didn't privilege its public dissemination, but insisted upon a 50c per record broadcasting fee. This threw the minor stations into an uproar considering that almost all of the 24-hour stations regionally spotted must rely upon Paul Whiteman, Rudy Vallee, Abe Lyman, Guy Lombardo, et al., to play "for you" such-and-such dance number, with the fact that it "is an 'electrical transcription'" only slurringly referred to in many instances. However, this must be mentioned by order of the Federal Radio Commission.

The NBC, still with an eye to general progress, had been laying plans to shunt some of its expiring contracts westward and in the middle of the year the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet of the NBC became the midwest sector's capital for commercial etherizing, with 40 "hours" or programs slated to be shifted to that source in time.

Congestion

The commercial hours in the east are so congested with the choicest hours, i. e., practically all of the night periods, booked solid, that a number of disgruntled commercials were forced to take some less satisfactory afternoon or morning periods. These, while less costly in the lease of wire facilities and programs, do not have the "circulation" of the night periods. Hence the switch to the west, especially for those using coast-to-coast hook-ups, was one way out of it.

Financially, Radio's Big Business manifestations are evidenced by the National Broadcasting Co.'s $20,000,000 annual turnover, of which $5,000,000 is lost to "radio dead-heads"—i. e., the necessary church and political hook-ups—another $2,000,000 for land wire leases, plus equally staggering costs for talent, personnel, etc.

Commercial Radio must necessarily be economically attuned with general business conditions nationally, and 1931, when the Tin Pan Alley paen about "Happy Days Are Here Again" becomes a reality, should see an even more interesting development in the general evolution of Radio.

Among other things pertaining to this form of electrically transmitted public entertainment, Television must necessarily be mentioned, but that too is still in its early stages of development for practical purposes and will not become a public factor until Radio has run its normal course of development to its highest peak.

Whiteman in Chicago 52 Wks. for NBC's Paint Commercial

Chicago, Dec. 27.

First big account secured by the local N.B.C. offices, since their recent expansion program, is the paint company, Sherwin-Williams. Program calls for the Paul Whiteman orchestra every Tuesday night from eight to 8:30 over a coast to coast hook-up on a 52 weeks schedule.

Starting Jan. 27, it will probably necessitate the residence of the Whiteman organization in Chicago for the entire year, since the program will go out through the studios and not from an outside spot.

Whiteman will also continue at the Casa Granada for the entire period.

Two New Air Contracts Pay Lombardo $150,000

Guy Lombardo, finishing a year's contract on the air with the Robert Burns program, had the thing renewed at an increase in money. He will also play once a week for the Blow hour, a jewelers' group, for additional pay.

Both contracts negotiated by William Goodheart (M.C.A.) amounted in total for 39 weeks of broadcasting (one day each a week) to $150,000. Each program will be over the Columbia system.

Music in 1930

By Abel Green

1930 in the music business will go down as one of the most negatively colorful years of the business—black in outlook and reality, blue in its indigo manifestations of weeping the financial blues, and plenty of red on the books.

The gold of 1929 petered out quickly just one year later. Those firms who split up the biggest melons around the holidays in 1929 this year went plenty into the exchequer to keep things going along.

The screen's influence with its negation on the musicals in one quick topsy-turvy heave—induced of course by the public reaction—started the songwriters on their trek back with as much rapidity as their westward ho! clarion call when the Hollywood gold rush was on.

All of a sudden, surfeited by everything in music, the public voted no on matters musical and pop music in any shape, manner or form couldn't be given away. The sole outstanding exception was the "Stein Song" in those bleak dreary spring and early summer days which, in a six-month period of financial bleakness, sent the biggest firms into the red and, in turn, proved the salvation of many of the old-line music firms which had no picture connections and were saved just because of that. The most notable instance of this was Walter Donaldson's firm (Donaldson, Douglas & Gumble, Inc.), which, dodering along aimlessly, took advantage of the film-music break and burst through with "Little White Lies" (a straight pop), which re-established that firm.

Through all this turmoil sundry cycles and evolutions were quickly transpiring. Music had to be cut to 25c. Music had to be cut to 15c. Music had to be cut to 10c. These were the successive cries of the industry in the hope for economic survival.

Causes

Radio was killing the business.... the screen was doing ditto....too many theme songs....15c Durium records....too many "angles" for radio plugs and cut-ins....the hillbillies were the thing....the 5c bootleg lyric pirates....the studio's song factories....no good songs being produced, hence "St. Louis Blues," "Avalon," "Whispering," "Chasing Rainbows," etc., were being revived and further cutting in on the current business....

In rapid succession new elements asserted themselves. A Tin Pan Alley commentator found himself a busy Boswell of the industry at all times.

Those independent music publishers without film connections found themselves at a standstill. Pretty soon they would be running out of picture companies, was the common complaint, and so they all swooped down upon Universal and Tiffany, among the remaining film hold-outs, resulting in U practically controlling its own music ally and Tiff tieing in with Jack Mills, Inc.

Meantime, legislatively, the copyright owners were still carrying on their perennial battle for the individual bargaining privileges on copyrights, with the right to reserve all rights or restrict them and vend them at best offers as they saw fit. This would constitute a dis-legislation of the existing copyright provisions and it's still as far from success as before.

Amidst it all, a truly noble music pioneer, Leo Feist, passed away, and it seemed to have a generally sobering effect on everything and everybody.

Shortly thereafter the Feist firm, looked upon as a "family" enterprise, with a warm co-operative integral unification, lost its very definite personality. Although Mr. Feist, at his Pelham Manor retreat, had been away from Times Square for many years, he was at all times the personality of his firm. But soon the strictly co-ordination between E. C. Mills, president of Radio Music Co., Inc., and Edgar F. Bitner, vice-president and general manager of Leo Feist, Inc., asserted itself and other changes came to pass as expected. Phil Kornheiser was forced out after 17 years as the guts and personality of what made the Feist firm what it became, a great professional house, and Kornheiser, Inc., resulted, as an independent publisher, after being the firm's secretary and a stockholder for so long.

The Durium's disk sales on the newsstands at the popular 15c scale with 500,000 to 600,000 turnovers indicated on the earlier releases soon focused all attention on Durium's hit-of-the-week record as a life saver for those firms who might have a hit, although with the combination of the over-plugging by radio and screen, the saturation point of a song's sales could not exceed 200,000 copies.

The studios' "song factory" scheme of things with every writer on the staff submitting songs and the music head selecting the best and discarding the rest created a disgruntled feeling on the creative end. The writers, inured to writing by what might liberally be termed a form of "inspiration," or by the exigencies of market demands—being trained to catch the tempo of the times—found themselves writing "I love you" ballads to fit situations, until every song sounded as pretty and poetic as its sister.

Radio Plugging

The Radio plugging undoubtedly boomeranged. That was why song lyric bootleggers with their five-cent song sheets flourished. Two hearings of a tune and you knew it; knew the words as well as the melody but just to make sure the bootleg peddlers of the song sheets gave you a flock of words for a jitney in the event one got stuck for a phrase. No question but that before a loudspeaker one heard the same popular airs repeated in sequence by each broadcasting orchestra and if a tune caught on so fast, what was the use of buying the record or sheet music?

Disc royalties fell off 40%; sheet music sales even worse.

The mechanicals were killing the goose that laid the golden tunes. The music men looked to the mechs for some added source of compensation. That was when they decided that the various deals made for them through E. C. Mills weren't as fortunate as originally considered.

Everybody was excited then. Instead of one Al Jolson plugging a song, 100 screens with 100 Jolsons, or Chevaliers, Novarros, Tibbetts and Lawrence Kings would be blasting forth a Tin Pan Alley lay to edify 10,000 different audiences per night. What a grand plug! What a song plugger's millenium!

The studios in time, i. e. last month, found themselves tasting a little of the bitter medicine themselves when they found themselves overboard with staff writers who now accustomed to California sunshine, golf and tropical laziness, didn't mind being unproductive at so many hundreds of bucks a week.

Norma, Again

Then Wall St. and the bankers stepped in and wanted to know the why and wherefore of these many extraneously expensive contracts which was when the supervisors got busy and decided to smoke out the die-hard songsmiths who wanted the last penny on the value of their written covenants. Most of them finally compromised.

The biz is now back to normalcy or at least that phase of normalcy of the pre-theme song days.

No more fitting 'em to match the profile of the heroine. Songs are written in the same vein as pre-gold rush of 1929, Hollywood style.

Daily Television Is Broadcast Outlook of Big Chains in 1932

Daily television broadcasts for home consumption may be adopted by both CBS and NBC by 1932 is the belief of execs in both systems. It is also forecast that both networks may start broadcasting those television programs the latter part of 1931.

CBS has announced it has secured the sanction of the Federal Radio Commission to enter into the field of experimental television broadcasts. That system is now setting up a television transmitter on the roof of the home office at 485 Madison avenue, N. Y. CBS is at present also erecting a television laboratory on the 18th floor of that building.

Currently the only daily television broadcasts in the country are conducted from WXPAP, Chicago.

This Phonograph Year

Disc Leaders of 1930

BRUNSWICK (Bands)	COLUMBIA (Bands)	VICTOR (Bands)
Ben Bernie	Ted Lewis	Rudy Vallee
Phil Spitalny	Guy Lombardo	Leo Reisman
Ozzie Nelson	Paul Whiteman	Waring's Pennsylvania
Earl Burtnett	Ben Selvin	Wayne King
Abe Lyman	Ted Wallace	Nat Shilkret
Isham Jones (Artists)	Paul Tremaine (Artists)	High Hatters (L. Joy) (Artists)
Al Jolson	Ruth Etting	Maurice Chevalier
Harry Richman	Cliff Edwards	Gene Austin
Nick Lucas	Art Gillham	Johnny Marvin
Libby Holman	Lee Morse	Helen Morgan
Marion Harris	Roy Evans	Helen Kane
Belle Baker (Red Hots)	Ethel Waters (Red Hots)	Buddy Rogers (Red Hots)
Red Nichols	Charleston Chasers	Duke Ellington
Jungle Band	Fletcher Henderson	King Oliver

Other High Rankers:—Richard Crooks, Lawrence Tibbets, operatics; Jesse Crawford, Lew White, organists; Philadelphia Symphony (Stokowski).

In a Nutshell

Theme songs, and picture songs generally, went into eclipse; the so-called "red hots" continued to leap forward into popularity while at the same time the vogue of the Negro "race records" pretty well evaporated; the sale of machines declined 30% because of business depression, whereas disc sales held up quite well, not over 10% off; the tendency of the better class families to buy "album" series markedly increased; there was a high pressure sales campaign to place 15-cent composition records on the market; and finally Maurice Ravel's "Bolero" was the sensation of the 12-inch division, and still is.

The above paragraph outlines the highlights of this phonograph year of 1930. There are some significant changes in the recorders and their respective importance. "Variety's" chart above is necessarily incomplete and takes no cognizance, for instance, of such busy mechanicalizers as Irving Mills, who makes records under an assortment of names, as, in fact, a lot of others do.

Nor are the smaller companies, Okeh, Velvet Tone, Perfect, etc., included. Seger Ellis, Chick Bullock, Vincent Lopez and others would rate recognition in this direction. Many of the recorders on the 3-for-$1 waxings are quite as popular in their particular bailiwick as are the more urban names of the three majors.

Few Survivors

Whether they are aware of it or not, a number of bands formerly cutting their insignia into lots of shellac are gradually fading. In the last several years reputations gained during the jazz and dance crazes of the immediate post-bellum period have collected a lot of rust. It may be noted how few of the top-rankers are really old timers, Bernie, Lyman and Jones for Brunswick; Lewis and Whiteman for Columbia, and Waring for Victor are about the only vets holding their own. Their contemporaries are chiefly names that have come forward in the last season or two, many, of course, radio-developed.

Collegiates are almost wholly responsible for the popularity of the heated negroid dance records. This department is chiefly a monopoly of colored bands, although some of the leaders, Red Nichols, Paul Tremaine, Charleston Chasers, are white organizations. Duke Ellington's is the kingpin in this division.

Among the high-priced concert records the former pre-eminence of the vocalists has been replaced by the new ascendancy of symphony orchestras, of whom the Philadelphia under Leopold Stokowski is first. It is only within recent years that advances in recording permitted any sort of successful transference of the big orchestras to wax.

One for $3.50

An oddity of the present is the existence on Victor's list of one record selling at $3.50. This is a rarity. Only a very few in all the history of the graniaphone have sold at this figure. "Rigoletto" and the Sextet from "Lucia" are the reasons.

In the album groups Victor has added a Rudolph Friml collection that's very popular. Stephen Foster and Victor Herbert are other Americans so represented. George Gershwin has yet to be albumized. Jesse Crawford (Victor) and Lew White (Brunswick) are good sellers. Both are picture house organists of premier prestige in both activities.

Film Reps

Following his picture, "The Rogue Song," the former Metropolitan Opera baritone, Lawrence Tibbett, jumped tremendously as a seller, about tied with Richard Crooks. A number of film names are included, notably Chevalier, who seems to have edged Gene Austin from his traditional top notch for Victor.

Buddy Rogers, Bebe Daniels, John Boles and Noah Beery are just a few of the strictly film names to do records, while, of course, many other recorders were seen on the screen to the possible increase of their sales.

Always a considerable variation as to the frequency of releases, Columbia's list is interesting as a comparative tally. Among the bands, Ben Selvin made 17 records, Ted Lewis 7, Lombardo 13, Whiteman 9, Wallace 9, and Paul Tremaine 5.

Of the individuals Ruth Etting led with 9, Lee More made 8, Ethel Waters 5, Cliff Edwards and Roy Evans each 2 and Art Gillham 5.

BIG VOCAL ASSEMBLY

Texas after 100 Singers As Quota—Will Tour Europe

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Earle D. Behrend, local music teacher, is organizing a group of 100 Texan singers to join a national envoy for their song fest tour of Europe next summer.

Idea is to corral the biggest assembly of warblers ever put together, with tourist party promoters getting the gravy. Three boats to leave simultaneously from New York, Montreal, and Houston.

Contest picking for personnel singers in solo quartette and en-masse with selections to be made via radio and concert.

Song birds get the trip free.

Troy Musician Dies After Street Assault

Troy, N. Y., Dec. 27.

Going to the assistance of a woman who had appealed to him for protection, Frederick Wilkes, Jr., 43, Troy musician and orchestra leader, was so badly beaten by a drunken man that he dropped dead a short time after he had left the station house, to which he had gone with a policeman and the prisoner.

Heart disease, caused by excitement, believed to have caused Wilkes' death.

James Jannson, 33, Cohoes, N. Y., was arrested, but claims to have no recollection of any trouble with Wilkes.

OLSEN'S $7,000 WEEKLY

George Olsen and band (17) will get $7,000 per week for their eight weeks' engagement at Deauville, Miami Beach, Fla. Transportation also paid one way.

Olsen, who opens Jan. 16, takes with him eight principals from his club in Culver City, who will split an additional $1,000 per week.

Abe Lyman will double at the club in Culver city from the Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, after Olsen leaves the Coast.

Road Salesman Turns Publisher

Mort Beck, former road salesman for Donaldson, enters the music publishing field after Jan. 1.

NO MORE COAST TRIPS FOR WB SONGWRITERS

Warners will not send any song-writers to the Coast. Plans are to have all songwriters work in the east with the songs submitted to the Coast for picture spotting wherever possible. Those not used, besides others not submitted for pictures, will be published as pops.

Warners have about five ace songwriting teams under contract to them, some of which expire around March 1.

MORE PEDDLERS PINCHED

A. S. C. A. P.'s Investigators Bring Song Vendors to Court

A. S. C. A. P.'s investigations among bootleg song sheet peddlers and distributors resulted in two more alleged copyright pirates being arrested.

William ("Chick") Kim was pinched in Philadelphia last week on the charge of distributing bootleg lyrics. He was held in $1,000 bail by the United States District Court for hearing Jan. 2.

Harry Boydick was arrested in Boston on charges of printing and distributing the lyric sheets and held in $1,000 bail by the United States District Court for hearing Jan. 12.

Each offender is liable to one year in jail or a fine of $1,000 for each offense.

Sammy Fain Back With Famous

Sammy Fain, composer, has signed a new contract with Paramount Pictures which returns him to the writing staff of Famous Music.

The Song Pluggers' Microphone

By Bob Landry

A. C.'s $310,000 Plum

American Society's quarter-annual royalty payment to its members, distributed a few days before Christmas, totaled $310,000.

Sum is about the same split among the author, composer and publisher members as the previous quarterly royalty payment.

Union Rule Squawks Keep Musicians From Extra Studio Dough

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

No rule enacted by the local musicians' union in years has drawn as much fire from members as the one restricting musicians holding steady jobs, to a limited number of hours in the studios.

Union has made a general appeal to its members to support the new ruling in view of the unemployment conditions extant. A minority of musicians, most of them name bands and personalities, have registered loud squawks to union officials contending the limited time allowance is unfair where a band may get work at a studio calling for more than the one day a week limit set by the union.

Big argument put up by the union is that those musicians fortunate enough to be holding on to good steady positions should help the others, more needy. At one time about 1,500 men in this local were employed at the studios. Now several hundred of these men are idle.

Warners Wants to Buy D. Mendoza's Contract

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Warners is trying to buy off its contract with David Mendoza, one of the two remaining musical directors at the studio, Geo. Forbstein is the other.

Mendoza's ticket has another year to go, with the baton wielder understood to be asking a high release price.

NO KAHN PAPER

Roger Wolfe Kahn states that he has no intention of publishing any paper, especially one in the music trade.

Report around was that the young maestro was thinking of becoming an editor. Kahn's concern is that someone may be using his name in connection with such a venture. If so it's without permission, says Kahn.

Song pluggers are beginning to talk, act and look like business men. They are losing their picturesque manner of speech and buying their clothes in more conservative shops. There is almost a touch of restraint in their descriptions of their own hits, and they speak politely, even admiringly, of the other fellow's product.

This revolution is the result of one thing. Radio has made contacters out of chiselers. The red plush studio carpets have softened the voices and shined the shoes that once climbed to dressing room doors.

Radio now is the thought by day and the dream by night of all song pluggers. They still conspire, they still employ the insinuations of flattery, cases of Scotch, cigars, and floral offerings to bandsmen's wives, but all of the old tricks, gimmicks and ethical sleight-of-hand are now performed with but one purpose—to get on the air.

No bandsman without a radio outlet is worth bothering about. A mere vaudeville act is received with modulated enthusiasm. Every plug that used to be important is now treated simply as an incidental by-product, helping to keep the ball rolling after radio has started it, and continues to give it the real shoves.

It being necessary to do business with radio and with non-theatrical officials behind most of the NBC and CBS desks, the song pluggers have to develop at least an approximation of business world finesse. It's altering the whole type of the species.

Practical Politicians

A bird's-eye view of the development of show business can be obtained from the history of the song plugger. Always a realist, always a believer in direct action, ever a wooer of the moment and the men and women of the moment, the song plugger has made eyes at every branch of show business in the course of time.

It is hard to believe and impossible to remember but at one time song pluggers devoted flattering attention to burlesque. Then there were the beer garden and music hall singer, the illustrated slide vocalist, later the vaude headliner, the big Broadway revues, the cabarets. Still later, the picture house presentations and public ballrooms. Both of these are now of but minor consequence in the scheme of song pluggers.

Since last spring the short-lived Hollywood picture plug has ceased to be vital. Nothing remains but the radio. In the eyes of the song plugger the moon, the stars, the earth, the hope of salvation and the quintessence of ambition is wrapped up in a microphone.

NEDBAL A SUICIDE

Czechoslav Composer Leaps From Window in Zagreb

Belgrade, Dec. 27.

Oscar Nedbal, famous Czechoslav composer, committed suicide in Zagreb by plunging from the third floor window of his hotel to the stone pavement. He came here to conduct his own works at the Zagreb theatre where he had scored many successes.

He was disturbed in mind by fears of imaginary enemies he who he thought had followed him from Bratislavia and intended to attack him. Nedbal's best work, "Honza," was played the world over under many titles.

French Musicians' Plea

Paris, Dec. 18.

French musicians are appealing to Parliament to relieve their current plight, mostly due to the introduction of sound equipment.

They also complain that, out of 315 musicians working in 43 Montmartre establishments, 219 are foreigners.

HOTEL'S FEMME LEADER

Colon, Dec. 23.

The new Florence Hotel here will have a woman as director for the dance orchestra. She is Vera Machado, wife of the band leader at Fort De Lesseps.

Chicago as a Good Town

Chicago, Dec. 20.

Back in 1906 or so:

Gunmen lived west of the Rio Grande.

A racket was a noise.

Stir meant to twirl the fudge brewing on the kitchen stove.

Pineapples were fruit.

Mouthpiece meant the rubber human circus butterflies put in their mouths before they went aloft to swing by their teeth.

Gangs were bunches of youngsters hanging around the arc lights on the corner after dark.

Bombs were found only in the dictionary and Russia.

A hold-up was news.

Squealer meant a pig.

Moonshine came from the heavens.

Gin was made in England.

A blind pig was one that couldn't see.

Love-sick swains stole the pictures from the frames in front of vaude houses.

Pig Latin was used on carnivals.

Applesauce was something to eat.

Forgotten Glory

The Revere House was the ritz spot.

Vaudeville was a profession.

Only guys carrying gate were policemen.

A rap was a crack over the knuckles.

A bum steer was a sick steer.

Bull could be heard only at the ballyards.

Top of $2.00 at best legits.

Hinkey-Dink beter known than Congress Hotel.

Newspaper charged 12c. line for theatrical ads.

"Babes in Toyland," "Wizard of Oz" and "45 Minutes From Broadway" all had a year's run in Chicago.

Leaders of beer garden orchestras would have wanted to fight if called m.c.'s.

Prize fights were for men only.

Coliseum was the biggest hall in town.

Guys took their gals boxes of candy instead of bottles of gin when fussing.

R-K-O were three letters of the alphabet.

Still Hot Stuff

Press agents took shots of their stars sitting in gasoline buggies, always good for the papers.

Agents of show had patsys to carry their bags.

Legs only seen at burlesque shows.

Pansies grew in gardens.

Stoogie was a stogie.

Bad men dressed like bad men.

Chewing tobacco favorite western sport.

Rats were what dames wore in their hair.

Double crossing was what devout people did when they knelt on the altar.

Civic opera a new idea.

Musical comedy a new idea.

Church people said the land was full of wicked and new ideas.

RADIO SWEEPING COUNTRY

Newark, N. J., March 8.

The Theatrical Managers' Association of this city has voted that no artists in the employ of any of its members shall be allowed to contribute to any performance for the radiophone.

This action, the first of its kind in the country, was taken on the ground the radiophone offers direct competition to the theatres and as such should be opposed in every way possible.

As Newark has the largest broadcasting station in the vicinity of New York, it may be a serious blow to the new fa'.

Portland, Ore., March 8.

Loew's local Hippodrome is erecting a radio receiving set on the roof of the theatre, under the supervision of the house manager, W. W. Ely.

The Hip will receive direct wireless communication from the Loew headquarters in San Francisco, but whether the radio is to be utilized for the receiving of radio concerts has not been announced.

Mozart's Opera on Radio

Percy Hemus, baritone, will lead the William Wade Hinshaw production of Mozart's "The Impresario" which will be radio broadcast the evening of March 15 from the Westinghouse Electric Co. station at Newark, N. J. The Newark station call is WJZ.

This is the first time an opera has been radiographed through the ether, although at divers times around New York and in Chicago whole musical comedy scenes were broadcast for the benefit of the listeners-in. In Chicago, Van and Schenck, George White's "Scandals" and the Ziegfeld "Follies" put on musical numbers for the local sending station. In New York any number of musical comedy people, including Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and others have broadcast solo and ensemble numbers. Operatic soloists have obliged for the publicity from time to time, but this is the first time an entire grand opera will be broadcast.

The Aeolian Co., which has been co-operating with the Westinghouse Co. more heartily than any other musical organization, arranged the opera engagement. Charles E. Popnoe, director of the Westinghouse Radio division, states that at first the various musical societies, artists and the press were most skeptical of the practicability of the radio idea as an entertainment medium and would not co-operate in the least. The Aeolian Co., open to conviction and quick to grasp the potentialities of the fad if it became popular, solely furnished the entertainers for a time, in addition to an Aeolian talking machine and records gratis for broadcasting when a band in person or an artist could not be obtained. This sidelight also disproves the prevalent bugaboo in talking machine and music publishing circles that the radio will hurt the record sales business. It stands to reason that a phonograph company would not cut its own throat by having its very own "canned" music broadcast.

The radio service is only governed by schedule and the listener must be pleased with what selections are being offered. The Aeolian Co. incidentally received a national advertisement via the ether through the announcement that an Aeolian disk and title will now be performed.

Kansas City, March 8.

The radio craze has hit this part of the country with a vengeance. It is being pushed and promoted by two of the leading papers. They, with the assistance of theatre managers, are broadcasting vaudeville entertainment, grand concert, public speeches, etc., offering an inducement to the amusement lovers to stay at home.

In the last week concerts from here have included the best acts from "The Greenwich Village Follies" and a number of standard acts from the different vaudeville houses. Last week the "Post" announced a concert featuring Trixie Friganza, headliner at the Orpheum; Carroll Ault, grand opera baritone, and others, while the "Star" stated that commencing this Monday night it would broadcast entertainment nightly, furnished by the "best vaudeville attractions here weekly."

Rapid Spread

So rapid has been the spread of the fad that dealers in radio apparatus report they will be unable to supply the orders for several months. Installations of receiving sets are being made by the thousands, not only here but in all the surrounding towns and cities.

That the question is a serious one to the amusement manager is pointed out by E. B. Garnett, the "Star's" dramatic critic, in a feature story.

San Francisco, March 8.

Radio broadcasting from this point is going thousands of miles across the Pacific Ocean.

Professionals from opera and vaudeville have sung into the radio, attracting wide attention. The broadcasting extends as far inland as it does oceanward. Securing prominent artists has given the radiophone more publicity of late than it previously received. The concerts are published as in other broadcasting cities.

Radio Sweeping

Radio, the new science, its wireless telephonic angles and aerial entertainment possibilities, is regarded in certain sections of the country as a new factor in the amusement world, through the value of radiophone as a serious contender with theatricals is to be set down at this time as potential. Speeches and music—instrumental and vocal—as now heard by radiophone, ether via head telephones or horns, sound very much like an imperfect talking machine record; that because of conflicting wireless waves. So rapid is the daily development of the new science and its appliances that radio is likely to become of material benefit to professionals, particularly so that class now enjoying the benefits of making talking machine records.

Professionals have to date not recognized the possibilities of the radiophone as a means of profit, but it is foreseen that within a few months favorites will be paid fees by the big appliance makers for the broadcasting of their voices or instruments. To date radio has been a novelty to the layman. In the early days of the talking machine artists made records for the advertisement. The same argument is being used now by the managers of the several broadcasting stations in the East.

Should Demand Fees

The concerts sent by radiophone from these stations every evening must be maintained, and it is up to the professional to secure fees. Any field of development that permits the formation of million-dollar corporations for the manufacture of receiving sets, as is the current history of radio, must possess voluminous possibilities, inclusive of the entertainment feature, which shapes up as important.

Advices from various cities throughout the country show that professionals are giving their services free. That may mean taking money away from the box office, but indications are that only to a limited extent. The radiophone and talking machine are believed to be more opposed than either or both are to theatricals.

There has been no means of profit to the company or companies handling the broadcasting stations up to now, other than through manufacturers' sales of sets. It is reported an association of the major electrical appliance makers have started plans for the building of a broadcasting station in New York for the main purpose of sending out advertisements by radio. The charges to commercial firms will be a profitable revenue, but such broadcasting will of necessity include entertainment features, and the professional will have an opportunity.

The second annual radio exposition is in session at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, this week. The crowds attending are astonishing, and that the "radio craze" has swept the country there is no doubt. Whether it is a novelty, so far as the entertainment feature goes, is a matter of conjecture.

It is estimated there are 1,000,000 receiving sets for radiophone now in use. The number of companies making receiving sets for radio is unknown, for the apparatus itself is comparatively simple.

The broadcasting control by the group of big electrical concerns was brought out at a convention. There is no legal bar to prevent anyone from setting up a broadcasting plant. It is necessary to secure transmitting apparatus, however. That once gotten the government will grant a permit. The price set by the Westinghouse for a transmitting plant is $10,000. Whether a purchaser can secure delivery is another matter. The De Forrest Company, which is not in the "combine," is said to be ready to lease such apparatus.

There are six companies which have pooled their patents, which forms to handicap any individual or group that might plan the establishment of a private broadcasting station. They are the Westinghouse, American Telephone and Telegraph, General Electric, Western Electric, Tropical Electric and Radio Corporation of America. Any one securing the transmitting apparatus would be in a position to fight the broadcasting of the big radio concerns with conflicting concerts and advertising programs. The regulation of Radiophoning is an important topic for government survey and the fixation of wave length and hours of broadcasting may result. If the radio conference at Washington should result in extending the wave length to 1,000 metres, it will be possible to operate a number of broadcasting stations within the bond of such a radius. That is the expectation. Should the wave length be enlarged it would necessitate the scrapping of many receiving sets possible of tuning only for 360-metre broadcasting.

Six Best Sellers

Six best sellers in sheet music for the week ending Dec. 27, according to the Plaza Music list, were:

"You're Driving Me Crazy" (Donaldson).

"Three Little Words" (Harms).

"When the Organ Plays at Twilight" (Santly).

"Sweet Jennie Lee" (Donaldson).

"Little Things in Life" (Berlin).

"Moonlight on the Colorado" (Shapiro-Bernstein).

Snooty Pitts. Joint

Pittsburgh, Dec. 27.

Pittsburgh for the first time has one of those snooty nite clubs the villagers have read so much about but which they've never seen until recently. It's the Towne club, privately owned, and admission by membership card only, with the latter plenty scarce.

Club is situated in the heart of the Oakland sector, and caters chiefly to the city's "400." Bands recently have included Johnny Hamp and others, with nifty floor shows changing fortnightly.

Towne club doesn't advertise in the dailies and restricts its patronage.

Not-So-Gay Paree

Paris, Dec. 13.

Hard times slashing about 30% off advertised prices for Christmas Eve supper in the various establishments.

Peak price was reached during the postwar boom. Current prices about half of the price then, 30% tax included.

PHIL COOK'S R-K-O DATE

R-K-O has booked Phil Cook, "The Radio Chef," from NBC for the Flushing, first half, Jan. 17.

Leaders Dodging Pluggers

Orchestra leaders in choice plug spots develop a tact worthy of the diplomatic corps. Attacked on all sides by music publishers, in self defense they build up a kindly but non-committal attitude that promises nothing yet yields a faint gleam of hope for each song plugger to take back to his boss. The suavity with which these conductors circulate amongst the swarming petitioners for their favors, giving a pat here, a handshake there, but all the while skillfully avoiding the orchestrations thrust towards them is as neat an example of hedging as the wiliest booking agent can put forth.

These hounded men, particularly if they have regular radio hours, become in time nervous, jumpy, and to all appearances, absent-minded. While they conduct a dance number, their eyes are furtively searching for a place in the room where they may retire for a bit of surcease after the number is over. Some of them enlist the help of the headwaiter who is instructed to group all song pluggers and publishers in the same part of the room, so that the leaders may escape to the opposite corner, even though he knows he will be tracked down soon enough.

It is not a difficult task for the headwaiter to separate the pluggers from the customers. Their pockets bulge with orchestrations and contracts for cut-ins. There is a predatory look in their eyes. They greet the other pluggers with a heartiness that doesn't ring true. When they choose the dinner hour for their assault, they neglect to don dinner clothes, thus hurting the feelings of the captain, who so yearns to have his room look like it was a class draw.

If Listening

Dance band leaders know just what is in store for them when they pause to listen to the pluggers. The line seldom varies. They hear once more that they have a great band, that only they can really make a song, that they do a bigger business than any other place in town, that all the other places are dying, that their arrangements have a flavor that none other can imitate though it isn't for want of trying, that the plugger is going to do them a personal favor by giving them first chance at his firm's newest smash, that the number is stupendous, that they owe it to themselves to get in on it quickly, and that they are going to thank the plugger for his tip, just wait and see.

The Leader's Routine

The leaders nod and murmur during each harangue, while their minds are busy dusting off their own monologue. As soon as the plugger stops for breath, the leaders leap into the breach with their routines. It's nice of the pluggers to single them out for this opportunity, but their books are so filled with numbers already that the boys never get a chance to catch up with what they've got. Playing every night till three, rehearsing every day for the radio broadcasts, playing shows between times, they're so dizzy they have no judgment left.

Wait a few weeks till they have the stuff that's in out of the way. They'll be glad to try out the number first chance they get. They must keep up with the show tunes; their customers demand show tunes and it seems a new show opens every night.

They'd be glad to play this orchestration the very next number, but their boys are rotten sight readers and it wouldn't be fair to the number. Come around in a couple of weeks. No thanks, they've just finished dinner.

Now when in the world would they get a chance to play golf? This isn't California. Yes, it's a great title. Maybe next week. Their radio programs are arranged a month in advance, and the company would never stand for their changing them.

In the Stations

Hurrying over to the broadcasting stations, these leaders know they must keep their eyes straight ahead or all is lost. Always ante-rooms thronged with eager representatives of music business, edging forward, pursuing, determined to corner them. Nothing warmer than a nod now or they'll never make the broadcast room on schedule. No need to suggest waiting till the broadcast is over. Experience has proved that the gang will be just as alertly on hand when they come out. Ready with alibis, placating one publisher, soothing another, yet never making a statement of intent they work their way steadily to and the elevators and peace.

It's an exciting chase. The leaders have a great time creating such a fuss. They are followed about like movie stars and no one objects to being flattered. The pluggers, goaded by the knowledge that somebody's songs must be played, keep their spirits up, certain that sooner or later it will be their turn.

MINNE. HOTEL REQUESTS GUESTS TO 'DOLL UP'

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

Customers of local night clubs have been permitting their attire to deteriorate to such an extent that the Flame Room of the Hotel Radisson now is requesting "better dress" in its newspaper and other advertisements.

Before other of the more exclusive night clubs follow suit they will wait to see what effect the Flame Room's ads have on the public. It's the first time that local cabaret habitues ever have been called to task for the way they clothe themselves.

Song Plugger Wins Six Year Old Court Fight

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 27.

The six-year fight of Fred Hughes, song plugger employed by Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co., of New York, to collect compensation insurance for an accident while broadcasting in the studio of the Kansas City "Star," has ended in victory for the singer. The Court of Appeals, the court of highest jurisdiction in New York State, has affirmed an award made for a permanent injury. The Appellate Division, Third Department, had previously upheld the award. Case was carried to the Court of Appeals by the United States Fidelity & Guranty Co., insurance carrier for Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co.

The fight started over a release for $104 which Hughes had executed in the offices of the Travelers' Insurance Co., carrier for the Kansas City "Star," delayed a compensation award to Hughes for more than five years and delayed payment for more than a year longer.

Drop Radio Stock Co.

London, Dec. 18.

Repertory play company established a year ago by the British Broadcasting Corporation for the production of its radio plays has been broken up.

Unit consisted of nine stock players.

Idea is to expand the broadcasting of plays and broaden the circle of artistes.

OSBORNE EXTENDED

Will Osborne's engagement at Warner's Beacon, N. Y., was extended two more weeks (Jan. 2-9) which gives Osborne seven weeks at that house.

It's reported when Osborne leaves Warners will put the house back on a straight sound policy.

Just for New Year's

Galveston, Dec. 27.

Rum Macolo's Hollywood right club, dark since last summer, opened briefly Dec. 27 through New Year's Eve.

Closing again immediately until next summer.

Carnivals Dead, Won't Lie Down

Chicago, Dec. 20.

Twenty-five years ago chumps were walking about carnival lots demanding their money back. The biz was new then and a novelty, with the word "carnival" supposedly meaning fun. Within five years all the chumps realized they were mistaken and began giving the carnys the runaround.

Carnival business is the only branch of the show world that, though dead, has persisted in existing. Once a thriving racket, employing around 10,000 people, it has shrunk and disappeared, until today probably less than 1,000 find work in that field. Only the fair dates now keep the remains moving about the country. As the fairs are likewise going into the limbo, another year or so and Henry Ford will likely begin buying stray bits of carnival paraphernalia for his Dearborn museum.

Old Rides

Same rides that wowed 'em back in 1905 are still being lugged around the country whenever transportation can be raised. Most are the original rides. When the natives see them they laugh and go the other way. The same goes for the ball game, knock down joints and all the other things once carnival.

Taking of the natives in the old days was another high spot in the carnival field. It got so, on the fixed joints, that anyone who could see and had two hands could put a gaff wheel on and make himself money. For awhile it was easy picking. In the end it has become the toughest of rackets, because everybody who knew where they sold wheels and had a keyster had a carnival.

Today you can't get a native to go against a carnival wheel. A few carnys are trouping around the sticks sans gaff joints, but that doesn't mean the gooseberries are not frisked or the local sheriffs short changed.

The Gypsy in Them

Carny gang claim they can't help this chiseling. They say it's in the blood and if they can't run gaff joints they have to do something to keep from growing stale.

A big outfit this year in Pittsburgh, tried to bring back the good old days, with some 50 joints along its midway. After the first day the joints were sloughed, the papers had carried headlines, and it was all over.

This same experience goes for the other troupes who still cling to the idea carnivals will come back.

Many of the fairs have stopped booking carnivals in as attractions, figuring the grief hardly pays. To offset this some carny owner borrowed money and bought a few dates. They proved flops.

The answer to the carnival field is anyone's guess.

PUBLIX HOUSE MGRS. SWITCHED IN NEW SETUP

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

Instead of a wholesale letout in the Publix Pacific Coast division, through lease of houses to Fox-West Coast, majority of the managers and others have already been taken care of through transfers.

In one case there is a promotion, for Stanley Brown, United Artists theatre manager here. He leaves Jan. 2 for Omaha to become district manager for Publix in Nebraska.

Bob Blair left Friday (26) for New Orleans as city manager there, with J. R. Fraser, of the Paramount, Portland, also sent to that key as assistant manager of the Saenger theatre.

A. W. Baker, manager Paramount, Seattle, goes to the Texas theatre, San Antonio, while Zack Friedman, assistant manager under Baker, goes to New York for further assignment.

John C. Smith, Paramount manager in San Francisco, is being transferred to the World, Omaha, and Bob Hicks manager of the California, S. F., is going to the Newman, Kansas City.

INDIE STAGE BURNS

San Francisco, Dec. 27.

Coliseum theatre, big neighborhood picture house, was partially destroyed by fire last week by a blaze that originated on the stage. House was undergoing repairs at the time and some workman is believed to have left a cigarette.

Damage was confined to stage and estimated at close to $5,000.

BARNES MARRIES

Phoenix, Ariz., Dec. 27.

Al G. Barnes, circus magnate, and Mrs. Margaret Goldsborough, wealthy Denver widow, were married here Dec. 24.

EDGAR BERGEN

"DONKEY BUSINESS" is BERGEN'S third of a series of Vitaphone shorts for Warner Brothers.

New Pa. Venture

Reading, Pa., Dec. 27.

An amusement enterprise, covering eight acres of land at Ephrata, prosperous tobacco growing town 18 miles southwest of Reading, is planned for next season. Louis J. Burns, Philadelphia, and W. F. Mackin and Harvey S. Zimmerman, of Lancaster, Pa., have bought the property.

Louis G. Kendig, Lancaster, is attorney for a company to be organized to operate the plant, which is to include an indoor golf course, skating rink, theatre, dance pavilion and other features. A large swimming pool will be constructed. The cost has not yet been estimated.

Ringling May Be Angel Of Odum in Carnival

Chicago, Dec. 27.

John Ringling may step into the carnival field as the money man for Dan Odum, former general manager of Hagenbeck-Wallace circus, who is now in Deland, Fla., trying to close a deal to take over the Johnny J. Jones carnival, following the death of Jones on Christmas Day. Ringling was a close personal friend of Jones.

SHOWTIME IN MEXICO JUST ONE BIG LOAF

By D. L. GRAHAME

Mexico City, Dec. 22.

Going to a show in Mexico is always fun for everybody. Especially those whose mother tongue is English.

You are advised by the incessant ringing of a bell, which sounds as though some guy was leaning against an apartment house call announcer, that the show is about to start. You find the lobby filled with customers. Entering, you are pounced upon by a flock of "specs," each trying to sell you the "best seat in the house." It is impossible to buy good seats at the box office in this land, even as on Broadway. The management turns these billets over to the "specs," who are tolerated by the law which, however, allows them to charge only 25% over the face value.

Must wait for the doors to open. Mexican shows never start on time. Going to the theatre teaches you Mexico is a land of leisure. When you get inside another wait. As you inspect the curtain, covered with ads, including those of undertakers, you are advised as to the progress of time toward the start of the show by the ringing of a series of bells like the dinner bell of the old-fashioned boarding houses.

Several funny things, chief certain male customers standing before their seats and blandly inspecting the audience. Now and then a woman stands up, Continental European fashion, and scans the customers through opera glasses. Candy butchers peddling marsh mallows made in Los Angeles, each box with a prize, and sweetmeat that looks like cedar shingles and taste like ice cream cones.

The Prompter

When the curtain is hoisted, the first thing you see is the prompter's box. The prompter is indispensable in all theatres in this country—legit and variety. His job is active, for the actors play as many as five different and involved shows a day. When enthusiasm runs away with the prompter and his whispers and arms become too evident, he is put back into bounds by hisses from the crowd.

Mexican audiences are highly sensitive. If they are peeved by a noise in the house they hiss. The guardians of bawling babes are frequently hissed out of the theatre and this reception is also accorded actors below par.

But, when things please the customers they know how to applaud with their hands as well as by mouth. A player who does something that especially tickles is given the "diana"—a few bars played by the orchestra from the spirited music of "El Jarabe Tapatio," the national dance. Even though all the players' thoughts and hopes may be for the dressing room he or she must respond to the encore demanded by the "diana."

Show folks are about the hardest working people in this Republic. They average three shows a day—hard and involved pieces that call for much rehearsing—and five and even six on Sundays and holidays. The actor's day starts at 2:30 p. m. Sundays and finishes a little after 1 a. m. Monday, with but a few minutes of rest between the numerous performances, each different.

Leopard Kills Boy in Texas; Owner on Trial

Dallas, Dec. 27.

Unique case in Texas is one involving Capt. Charles Howard, former circusman, charged with negligent homicide because his trained leopard fatally clawed a four-year-old boy at Littlefield, small town near here.

Leopard sprang on the boy in a drug store, scalping him and fracturing his skull. The trainer will be tried in January.

Howard had been barn-storming the tanks with the leopard in an advertising stunt.

The Chicago Front

By Dan Goldberg

Chicago, Dec. 20.

Nothing has happened theatrically in Chicago during 1930. The town was constantly in the public eye and the page one headlines around the country because of the persistent target practice between the various mobs.

Gangland topped its own records when it hoisted $18,000 worth of jewels from Mayor Thompson's frau and made the racket situation look like a musical comedy.

January

Genevieve Harris of the "Post" had 840 in "Variety's" mid-year box score....Oriental was worrying B. & K....Edgar Benson was up before the Musicians' Union charged with owing its members $7,000. Benson was once the town's orchestral kingpin....Loew was reported figuring on invading Chicago....Somebody said backstage racketeers trying to shake down actors were really harmless. Pauline Fredericks' show, "The Queen Was In the Parlour," was a flop....Actors at the St. Regis Hotel were eating pigeons.

February

Martin Beck reported liquidating to live permanently in Europe....Carrell Agency evaporated and presented the office furniture to its manager....Zack Terrell got $12,000 salary to manage Sells-Floto, but Ringling omitted the %....Already observed Chicago's epidemic of lead poisoning wasn't making the 1933 Fair so easy to handle.

March

Sam Thall, R-K-O, was getting in his annual propaganda for an all-year rate to the Coast..."Strictly Dishonorable" was accused of hoisting a cheap cast on Chicago....Club Algiers was bombed one night and padlocked the next....A "Variety" reviewer discovered that Gene Castle's "Land o' Lee" was a "distinct plug for the Illinois Central Railroad."

April

Local indie neighborhood houses started opening charge accounts for patrons....Mandel's, loop dept. store, installed talker equipment and broke its weekly sales record....Police started their fight against Bootleg sheet music....Last of the Pan time blew when Nan Elliott closed the local office.

May

Censors suddenly got tough, bringing on an epidemic of "pinks."...Seven exchange managers start studying the law....Lou Clayton of "Three Schnozzolos" got sued for $5,000 by Lou Simon, with the judge voting for the Schnozzle.

June

Actors and agents started finding their life work in the cleaning and dyeing business....Club entertainers and agents started hot battle....Palace, one of two remaining straight vaude spots in the U. S., went vaudfilm....Warners and R-K-O blew into town looking for a fight with B. & K....Those futile zoning meetings got under way....Tom Maloy, operators' union chief, got a banquet and $25,000 as he sailed for Europe.

July

Robbins Bros. circus cut to 10 cars....Hunter Endurance fliers (remember?) at the Palace for five grand, died standing up....For the first time in 98 years the loop had but one legit show....Last minute rush for divorces as season ends....Baseball was in the midst of one of its greatest seasons.

August

R-K-O managers held their convention here and wondered what they're going to do for next year....Fanchon & Marco gave hope for seven weeks of family time in the midwest....Paddy Harmon, who built the gigantic Stadium, died broke....Jimmy Coston went to work for Warner Bros....Amos 'n' Andy signed for five more years of air for $1,000,000....Hazel Flynn and Art Sheckan, local critics, contributed couple of skits to "Three's a Crowd."

September

B. & K. thought of its advertising costs and kicked the out of McVickers....Air races grossed $800,000....Regal inaugurated showing nights just to keep the agents out of crap games....Epidemic of re-christening among neighborhood houses, with short names for marquee lights in demand....Chautauqua finished its worst season....Decatur "Herald" editorial calls "Variety" and show business unromantic.

October

N.B.C.'s new plenty million dollar plant reopened with the niftiest bunch of hostesses that ever pleased an eye....Pettijohn came to town once more to patch up zoning scheme....Chicago went wide open, going for everything, in spite of the dailies insisting reform movement is on....Some 80 lay-off musicians organize a band on commonwealth and gather $0.70 apiece for first and only week....Opera opened and off 30%....Double features epidemic....Slate-Lake went all-sound.

November

For the first time a Chicago critic failed to lead the picture box score....Paul Whiteman came to town for the first time in years and clicked heavy....Ringling announces the Hagenback and Sparks shows were to be dropped....Chicago cashiers wondering which one is going to get a gun in their ribs next....College Inn reopened and began plans to bring back the wise mob....Double features start flopping after six weeks....George Brown came to town.

Salvation Army grabs off best corners.

Cyclorama's Egg

Dallas, Dec. 27.

"Battle of Gettysburg," cyclorama which went bankrupt during the state fair here in October, is headed for auctioneer to liquidate a $17,000 debt for construction labor.

Painting has been offered to other fairs, but no takers so far.

Obituary

JOHNNY J. JONES

Johnny J. Jones, 56, owner of the Johnny J. Jones Shows (Carnival), died at Deland, Fla., Dec. 25. Mr. Jones's sudden death was attributed to heart trouble.

Jones was a coal miner in early life at DuBois, Pa. His rise in carnival operation was rapid and an acknowledged leader with all the larger fair dates being played by Jones the last few years.

A widow and small son survive.

JULIAN WINTER

Julian Winter, 42, actor, who had been playing the part of the Health Commissioner in "Inspector General" in its preliminary dates, committed suicide Dec. 23 by hurling his 250 pounds through the window of the living room of the eighth-floor apartment at 205 West 57th street, New York. Death was instantaneous.

Winter had been suffering from a nervous ailment. He had appeared for rehearsals for the New York opening of the show but became too ill to appear in the Broadway premiere. At home he had complained of being sick and as a call had been placed by Mrs. Winter for a doctor the actor dashed to the window and had made the fatal leap as his father, Leo Winterfield, tried to hold him.

Among other shows in which he had played were "The Vagabond King," "Loud Speaker," and "My Princess."

His wife and father survive.

CHARLES NELSON

Charles Nelson, 66, veteran clown of Christy Bros. Circus, died last week in Houston, Tex., of heart attack while entertaining group of friends in a restaurant near outfit's winter quarters.

Nelson, one time friend of P. T. Barnum, had worked with nearly every big circus in the country. For past 13 years he had been with Christy Bros.

John Gordon, 91, father of Jimmy Aloz of R-K-O, died Dec. 26 at his home in Hampden, Mass.

"The New York Clipper"

By Al Greason

"Variety" still gets mail addressed to "The Clipper," although its existence has lapsed for half a dozen years now. Only recently a professor of journalism from a mid-west college opened correspondence in pursuit of facts of the publication's career. Just a couple of echoes of the important place the old "Clipper" occupied in its epoch.

An epoch, by the way, when American life was rather simpler, especially in the newspaper world. When it was at its peak publishing a journal was a moderately leisurely business. Until the opening of this century you could lift a Sunday newspaper with one hand and nobody had so far thought of eight pages of colored strip cartoons.

"The New York Clipper" started modestly in 1853 as a six-page magazine, made up of scrap-book anecdotes, a series story or two, and a haphazard collection of essays, nearly all the matter touching on some phase of sports. The paper was all set by hand, of course, and illustrated in the crude woodcuts of the era, the illustrations mostly having to do with biographical tid-bits.

Probably there is available nowhere else than in the "Clipper" file a more faithful picture of the man-about-town phase of New York during the mauve decade, and the two eras preceding and following that particular slice of time.

Skimming through these ancient volumes, it comes as a surprise to note that the "Clipper's" genesis is so profoundly antiquated that it makes casual reference to the Slave Trade with an indulgent complacence such as we modern take toward prohibition. As it happens, the reference to the Slave Trade occurs in a brief biographical sketch of the Siamese Twins incidental to the reminiscences of one Dr. Judd, old time showman, who had managed the American tour of Ole Bull, the great Norwegian violinist.

"After I finished traveling with Ole Bull," relates the venerable doctor, "I was engaged by P. T. Barnum to go out with the renowned Siamese Twins. A man named Zimmerman attempted to exhibit the twins when they first came to the U. S., but the venture was not a success, and he turned them over to Barnum.

Broke When Slaves Freed

"The twins did not receive much for their services. It all went to a Capt. Coffin, owner of a trading ship who brought them to this country. He had secured them by some trivial contact with the King of Siam.

"After the twins had been in this country for a while, their eyes began to open, and they learned they could not be held as slaves nor by any contract this Capt. Coffin might claim to have. They left Barnum and went into business for themselves; quickly made a fortune, settled down in Kentucky and went into the slave trade."

The doctor continues the sketch to record that when Lincoln freed the slaves the twins lost their entire fortune, but recouped by another tour of exhibition and died in comfort on their own plantation in the Carolinas in the '70's.

During its more than three score years of active life, the "Clipper" devoted itself strictly to sporting news and the events of the theatre, but in its scope of keeping abreast of these activities it cast an interested eye in many directions. Its political opinions were genially non-partisan, but jollingly cynical, having to do mostly with the current price of votes in Indiana in a close presidential campaign that was news to the "Clipper," because it distracted public attention from the theatre and sports arena.

But its credo of editorial democracy was unflinching. A budding acrobat got the same editorial attention that Mary Anderson did, and its columns were open without equivocation to anybody, great or small, whose occupation or purpose made him or her eligible.

For years in its early days the paper was the only journal that gave any consideration to baseball. It was the "Clipper" that devised the box score of baseball games, and for years was the only authority on the game, professional or amateur.

Curved Ball a Marvel

League games were reported fully during the season and from November to the opening of the season in April it furnished columns of what is known as stove-league comment. "Clipper" saw the evolution of the curved ball, and in one place goes into a maze of explanatory discussion of this marvel. The journal saw the American pastime grow up from a rowdy corner lot riot of fisticuffs to an organized sport and, from first to last, stood for the best in fair play and sportsmanship.

It was in the front and center of the growing metropolis, its intimate touch with the theatre and club life of the town giving its printed word a peculiar tang and picturesqueness.

The publication was originally housed at 29 Ann street, New York, now the site of one of those sky-piercing temples of finance. Thence it moved to Nassau street. Later, for a long time it was an Center street, not far from what is now the Court center, and finally came to rest in its own building in 28th street, near 6th avenue, adjacent to the permanent menage of P. T. Barnum himself.

In these migrations it was obeying the impulse of the town itself, as it once observed in an editorial commemorating its 58th anniversary:

"The Clipper has watched the progress of amusement centers move gradually up from lower Broadway and the Bowery below Canal street up to Grand street, to Prince street, to Madison square, to Herald square and, finally, to Times square and Columbus Circle.

That stretch of time marked the winning of the American West, the waging of the Civil War, a period of epic happenings in the fast moving world, but "Clipper" confined itself with simple sincerity to the recording of the things that came within its appointed province.

As a reporter of sporting events, "The Clipper" held itself to fine standards of sportsmanship and the code of ethics it carried into the field ruled all its activities. With professional tricky professional politicians it had no patience and its aversion to trickery crops out everywhere. In its own field it rendered every patriotic service during the Rebellion, but it had only scorn for the profiteers of the day when profiteering reached some of its finest flowering in politics.

Wets and Drys of '80

"Habitual Drunkards," reads a headline during the dark days of '62. "This class of person are, we observe, exempt from the draft. This being the case, we beg leave to suggest that their opportunities for robbing the Treasury and their criminal criticism of our generals be put a stop to forthwith. A man, being all the time too drunk to fight, cannot, we should think, be in condition to fulfill the duties of civil office, or competent to call in question the doings of his superiors. We are sorry to observe, however, that wine bibbing critics and politicians do a little too much as they please."

An editorial that might almost have been penned in the heat of a debate over the 18th amendment.

The original "Clipper" form was a duplicate of the modern "tabloid," 12 by 17 inches. Its contents, printed on a hand press, was haphazard essays and anecdotes. The issue of April 26, 1856, catches the eye principally because it starts with a piece of fiction, entitled, "The Flight of Hell-Kettle," with the line under it "By Tyrone Power," who couldn't possibly be the Tyrone Power we know in 1930, writing fiction 73 years ago.

The next page is taken up with such scraps as a natural history essay on "The Instincts of the Spider," "How to Make a Balky Horse Draw" and "Answers to Correspondents." Page 3 is devoted to reports of regatta, pedestrian contests, cricket, "The ring," and a few jokes as fillers.

All of page 4 is taken up with the epic fight of Ben Caunt and Bendigo for 200 pounds and the championship of England, held way back in 1845 and published thus late as a historical record. The fight is described in detail, round by round, for all its 93 rounds, which occupied two and a quarter hours and ended in a draw.

Appropriately enough the following page has an illustrated article on the cestus, or fighting glove of metal, used by ancient gladiators, together with many illustrations, the whole carved, Gothic, with a reproduction in a woodcut of the human hood in padded boxing gloves. This literary effort closes the page with an article wild in word to worth reprinting today, outlining the various opening moves on each of the possible 36 throws of the dice at backgammon. "Backgammon," it is explained by the way, if you haven't been told so by your professional teacher at $10 an hour, means "little battle" and is Welsh in origin.

Last of the six pages is devoted to talks on various games, principal among them being chess and checkers. "The Clipper's" game department became a nation-wide authority and generations of card players brought their disagreements to the "Clipper" editor for settlement.

Frisco Wire News

Afterward circulation outran the hand press and, with the introduction of the mechanical flat bed printing press, the paper's form changed to a 25-inch column, seven columns to the 18-inch page. The earlier "Clipper" volumes (online themselves almost entirely to sports.

It is not until after the Civil War that the theatre plays an important part in the news, side by side with athletic events. Once the journal ventured in the new field, however, it progressed swiftly and soon was reporting current theatrical events in San Francisco, now an important spot on the theatrical map, by telegraph, a custom that continued for many years.

In its handling of sports affairs "Clipper" was constantly exposing fraud and trickery with a straightforward determination that must have won it many priceless enemies. It reported all penalties meted out to convicted crooks on the trotting circuits; was constantly unmasking phoney "records" that came from both outlaw and recognized race tracks in the American interior and generally policed athletic competition with a thoroughness and energy that undoubtedly did a vast service to American sportsmanship and sports promotion. "The Clipper" is forgotten now, but it probably did a social service to America in disciplining its playtime pursuits, far beyond that in other fields, of the religious and political leaders of the times, for whom, by the way, the "Clipper" had the utmost disregard.

"Racket" Old Time Slang

The paper was written in racy colloquial language and in its pages there appear many piquant words that still are current. "Racket" was a coinage of its time, as note the item some time in the '80's:

"Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady (woman's rights advocates—suffragettes had not yet come into being) have cancelled their lecture tours. Their own racket was overshadowed by the political turmoil" (last reference to the presidential campaign then being waged).

One typical expose of crooked sport competition was an account of a much advertised 100-yard sprint which attracted attention, due to the presence of one Blake. Blake came in second with the time clocked at 13½ seconds. "Clipper" was prompt to point out that Blake had frequently gone the distance in 12 and the contest was obviously fixed. Anyhow, "Clipper's" judgment was accepted by the umpire, who promptly called bets off.

Life in the last century had a flavor all its own and nearly every phase of it found reflection in the widely read pages of "The Clipper." Mark Twain's bon mots found circulation there; happenings at the gay resorts of Long Branch and the old Monmouth race track, where was ordered, however, and went through to a loss. From that failure dates the undoing of the White Rats. Out of that strike arose the N. V. A., the phoney actors' organization that despite its phoniness became the ruination of the Rats.

Feared "Scab"

It was not difficult to form the N. V. A. during the Rats' trouble with the managers. A very large number of Rats were against the Mountford strike policy. They did not believe the time was opportune, but they remained with the Rats to avoid that heavily padded cry of "scab," ever present when trouble between actors and managers occurs. The Keith office, scenting the opportunity, in its customary sleek way, started an opposition actors' club, calling it the National Vaudeville Artists and promulgating as well as propagandizing it as a haven for variety artists dissatisfied with the White Rats. That presented the refuge for the discontents and many immediately joined.

After the strike's failure the Keith office per Albee made it mandatory upon acts playing for it to join the N. V. A. Those obliged to join in this manner, to procure stage work, or some of them, continued with the Rats and paid their dues for a time, but not openly.

This meant the slow death of the White Rats, although Mountford, through his understanding with Equity over the White Rats' A. F. of L. union charter, under which the Rats should have been paid a certain amount of the dues given to Equity by vaudevillians when in legit, tried to keep the order alive. Mountford was aided to an extent in this by Rats who had left vaudeville for musical comedy.

Fred Stone

Among these was Fred Stone, formerly of Montgomery and Stone, a team that had suffered like a thousand others through Keith's. Montgomery and Stone (with the late Dave Montgomery, Stone's partner) had been driven from vaudeville, with their exit made emphatic by Kohl & Castle of Chicago. Like many others also driven out of vaude by the managers who sought in this way to "discipline" variety artists in whole, Montgomery and Stone advanced rapidly in the musical comedy field, to become stars.

It was therefore a blow to all vaudeville and especially to those few faithful of the Rats, when Fred Stone accepted the presidency of the N. V. A. It still remains unexplained. The question, a daily rene-leanty and gallantry gathered around the gaming tables of Daly's Pennsylvania Club. Saratoga boiled for its brief summer splurge, but Newport had not achieved nation-wide fame in the 80's, while Leadville, Colorado, was one of a thousand boom mining camps that sprouted overnight, lived their hectic day and dropped back to tank stations. "Clipper" glanced at had through its noisy variety theatre.

Resting quietly in its cabinet and belonging to the receding past the "Clipper" file for nearly 75 years is a panorama of American history from the inside looking out.

Equity

The subject of "Variety" again attempting to support or build up the Rats was never broached. If it had been "Variety" would have declined. This paper had had another experience meanwhile with Equity. In the 1919 strike by Equity against the legit managers, "Variety" had strongly supported Equity. It has refused even suggestions to the managers when requested, although the 1919 Equity strike could have been ended against Equity at any time before it wound up in Equity's favor.

After Equity had won, "Variety" received a glowing letter of appreciation from Equity. Within six months later Equity had "blacklisted" "Variety" and told its members, as had Mountford, "don't read or advertise in 'Variety'." Because "Variety" advocated Bill Lackaye for president of Equity instead of John Emerson, apparently, since there seemed no other reason. Although it was Mr. Emerson who later conferred and ended the feud between Equity and "Variety."

Guessing

That "Don't read and don't advertise in 'Variety'" slogan had been heard since 1908, from Klaw & Erlanger, the Shuberts, the White Rats and Equity, besides everyone else who wanted to start something with "Variety." It has been "Variety's" best circulation maker.

Exactly why any actors' organization that had the support of "Variety," voluntarily given and lived up to, would toss it away can only be explained by the leaders of actors' organization. Equity also stated in its own paper, a monthly which might have been a contributing cause there, although no actors' organization's house organ anywhere has ever amounted to anything, including "The Performers" of the V. A. F. in England. None could have better support than from an independent paper.

Mountford

In the record of the White Rats from its first days with its true value and great performers, they should not be forgotten the 23 years spent by Mountford in its behalf. However misguided some of the years were, he spent them and retired from the White Rats without a dollar. Mountford's honesty was never questioned, his judgment only, and that he passed up a bigger chance than anyone who has followed him successfully in other show divisions has ever gained. Mountford's misfortune. He deserved more than he received.

Nor should the great performers of the early 1900's ever be forgotten by vaudevillians. They were great, on and off, so great [illegible] are listed, for fear of overlooking some [illegible]

Training Correspondents

"Variety" has around 40 foreign correspondents in about 30 nations, and 200 in the U. S.

In recent years the American correspondents have required none other than the rudimentary instructions, since they are newspapermen who have been abroad for years, mainly attached to news services. Their training to correspond for a show trade paper in America has not been so difficult. The trouble in building up a foreign news service for "Variety" was encountered with the natives who act for "Variety."

The domestic correspondents are merely told "Variety" wants show news only, occurring locally, of national interest. That covers the U. S. Foreign correspondents were advised "Variety" did not want the national news of their respective countries; only the interesting international news. That covers the world.

For the first six months after Abel Green had organized the foreign news service during his year in "Variety's" Paris office the cabled news was a 40% total loss. Advices were continued by mail on top of the useless cables, and, without losing a single foreign correspondent, "Variety" at this time is using 95% of all foreign news matter cabled in.

Some of the foreign correspondents cable but sparingly. They say cabling is unnecessary; that the news they can mail in as well will still be exclusive when "Variety" with it returns to their country. That indicates a dull trade paper press in those countries abroad, if they have their own trade papers, and also that the native daily press is not giving much attention to the trade news end of their own show business.

Funny Cables

Many of the early cables from the foreign newspaper men were funny as evidence of what the correspondents considered international show news. Many reported the simplest matters, such as a native cabaret performer making a local hit. One of the burn ups was at the 15c per word cable press rate detailing how a foreign star in a country foreign to him had had a narrow escape. It was not printed and the correspondent was advised by mail if the star had been killed it still could have been told within 100 cabled words, which he used to report a harmless accident.

Another correspondent with a 12c per word cable collect privilege sent a message over the wires to tell a fellow on the New York staff that a girl performer in his city sent him her regards. When Andree's remains were discovered near the North Pole one of "Variety's" foreign correspondents cabled in to say such a story had been received in his city, but it sounded like a fake.

"Variety's" Staffs

In "Variety's" New York office the news staff, including five women, numbers 18; in the Hollywood office the news staff, including two women, number 10; in the Chicago office are three, and in "Variety's" London office, four or more or less. Anyone would have to hang around that London office for a month to figure it out. The Chicago and London offices are the oldest, with the London office, except for a year or two during the war, having been established for around 20 years. There is also a Paris "Variety" office maintained by the paper, with a "Variety" representative only.

The foreign news papers of "Variety" always have been looked upon as part of the service of a general trade show paper. There is no possible income from abroad to stand off the expense of the foreign news and offices.

With the talkers coming into existence and "Variety's" belief the talker would make the film business international in fact, from both sides, as well as the native made talkers to come, the foreign service was expanded until at this time "Variety" correspondents outside of the U. S. are in the following cities:

was a smash operetta of its day, while "Rose Marie" was the leader more latterly. That show made Hammerstein more than $2,500,000. Most of that money has gone into the office building and memorial theatre, Hammerstein's. He made a cropper this season with "Luana," but blamed it on the Theatre League as much as anything else.

He knows music and spends much time with his composers and authors. Last season he went to Hollywood and was prepared to stay there, only occasionally coming back to produce a show. But musicals in talking pictures passed out, so he is staying right on Broadway attending to his knitting.

Arthur Hopkins is among the most colorful of the managers. Taciturn and studious around his office, he is really an out of doors man. He has clicked off some ripping hits since operating the Plymouth. Hopkins was once in vaudeville as a producer. He dug up "On Trial," the dramatic novelty of its day. It was produced by Cohan and Harris, but that show put Hopkins into the legit. Hopkins goes in for the unusual in lighting and productions. Latter hardly elaborate but different. Hopkin's forte appears to be smart comedy but there is generally plenty of drama in his shows. When sold on a script there is no half way about it. Says little if the show flops but burns plenty inside. Persons of a literary trend see the value of the Hopkins plays, even those which do not land. Likes his golf, along with others.

Golden

John Golden is rated among the smartest of showmen. With Winchell Smith they put over hit after hit, at low cost, always. Golden is now on his own and from this season's start he will continue among the success makers. Golden made his mark prior to being a producer. He composed several great melodies. A stickler for finesse, he has presented some of the longest run shows in Broadway's history. "Lightnin'" for instance.

William Harris, Jr., is rather a solitary producer. He may be absent from Broadway for several seasons, suddenly popping up with a live one. He attained managerial caste with "East Is West" and "The Thirteenth Chair." Back this season after a lapse with "The Greeks Had a Word for It."

George Tyler has managed some of the most distinguished stars of the stage. He has handled great successes in his prime and can be expected to repeat. Revivals with all-star casts are one of his accomplishments. At present he is tied up with Erlanger's and was always affiliated with that office.

The Shuberts

The Shuberts were once about the most prolific of producers. They have been trying hard this season to land with imported plays, most of which promptly flopped. Musical shows were formerly their most important department, aside from buying and building theatres. Lately they have flopped with that type. Probably the system they use. It's vintage. One of their largest houses, the Winter Garden, is used for pictures and that tells their story in a way.

The Younger Ones

The younger group of younger producers are an interesting addition to the list—they are the men who figure to be important in the future of the legit stage. Laurence Schwab and Frank Mandel are among the cleverest of the young musical producers; Alex Aarons and Vinton Freedley are smart producers of musicals; Bobby Connolly and Arthur Swantrom equally as well rated. Brock Pemberton is a lone wolf who smashes through now and then. So does Jed Harris. Morris Green and Louis Gensler are the newest managerial team that is slated to be important, if they stick.

Max Gordon is among the livest of the new producers. He came through with a smash revue, "Three's a Crowd," this season and has one of the most active production schedules, in association with and backed by Erlanger's.

Erlanger's may again become the most productive of all managerial enterprises. It has jumped to the fore by financing a likely group of young producers who have already scored outstanding successes. Not only the backing counts in this outcome, Erlanger's giving its affiliated producers a free hand—not stepping in with opposed ideas as some others in the past. Erlanger's may be concerned in a score of attractions before the end of the season.

Another new producer is Herman Shumlin, who had to go against many obstacles, to emerge with the season's dramatic leader, "Grand Hotel."

W. A. Brady, Jr., and Dwight Deere Wiman looked like a crack production team among the younger managers. They put across several hits, musical and otherwise. "The Little Show" was a high scorer. The firm split recently, Wiman has gone ahead and clicked with "The Vinegar Tree."

Then the Theatre Guild, more or less among the younger generation of producers. It has done very well but not all of its shows are successes. By the subscription system anything they do is good for six weeks. At present, the Guild seems to be extending. Perhaps the Guild's outstanding success has been "Strange Interlude." It is an unique organization.

Freeman Bernstein Tells It All

By Freeman Bernstein

Newark, N. J., Dec. 20.

Editor "Variety":

I can't let the 25th Anniversary of "Variety" pass without at least trying once in those 25 years to ease my side into this lousy paper. For years you have ruined my reputation and I've grown used to it. I suppose my reputation has been ruined by this lousy "Variety" more often than any rep anyone ever had. I didn't know I had so many reputations to ruin until you started it.

My biggest mistake was made years ago, I think it was in 1909, when I had you down to the District Attorney's office. That was through my friend, Big Tim Sullivan, who was in on the Sullivan-Considine Circuit then and I was booking it. And when the District Attorney told me afterward that you said anything you printed against me you would like to prove, I just said to the D. A.: "Them 'Variety' guys are good fellows, let up on them," and he did.

But that's when I should have sent you away and saved at least one of my reps.

The rottenest thing you did was when I was living at the Hotel Plaza, on the cuff, and you printed that I sneaked in and out the back way. That was lousy because they caught me doing it. And you always said "Variety" is no tip off paper. That's the nuts to me.

Driven Out of Town

Just another case, because as they come to me, I burn, kid. And what you done to me with that one. It was when I was living in Mt. Vernon and you thought it was funny to say I had Mt. Vernon kidded. And your cheap alibi was no one but show people reads "Variety." Well, here's what they done to me in Mt. Vernon. First the butcher asked me to come across or be cut off, and the son of a gun cut me off, too, although I was way in to him. He must have tipped the grocer who done the same thing, and then someone told the bank and they foreclosed the mortgage.

I had stalled the bank anyway for 14 months on the interest, but you done it just the same, ruined my rep in Mt. Vernon. When the bank foreclosed I moved, but it was a rotten break.

So I hope you have a happy anniversary, like me, because when I mention "Variety," I spit. That's what I think of you, bum.

But I didn't get the worst of it all of the time. You remember when I gave you that $15 money order, taking it out of my upper left hand vest pocket? Well, I had over $50 in cash on me then and I just gypped you for what I should have paid.

In Berlin

But about a vest pocket. How you got hunk without knowing it. Again with that lousy paper and ruining another rep. When I was in Berlin that time and rolling easy through having an in on every track over there, you printed one of those rep ruiners. I didn't care about that because you never could hurt me with the people who knew me, but in that story you said I had had all of the jockeys around New York in my vest pocket.

Some mugg sent that story to the race track people in Berlin and they blew my racket. I had trouble getting out of the country too, and that was another rotten trick.

So you see I'm telling the rottenest tricks you done to me so if you print it and I know you won't, then all of the people will say, "Lay off that lousy Variety, look what it done to Freeman Bernstein!"

Freeman's Wish

I was going to start out nice in this letter and hope the next 25 years would be your toughest, but what's the use of wishing you dirty double crossers anything? You would cross me somehow. If I said I hoped the next 25 years would be your toughest, you would make that greatest. I know your work, kid.

I'm half way evens with you, though. You think by writing those panning stories about me you can make me buy a "Variety" every week, eh? Yeh? Well, I slip it to you there. Every week I'm planted in front of some newsstand and when a chump buys a "Variety," I follow him, give his arm a push and get half that lousy paper when it falls apart as it falls. Then I push another guy and get the other half. Some days I get two "Varietys" that way and then just to get you madder, I read only one. I ain't paid the full price for a "Variety" since you started to put on the slug.

I don't know what is going to happen to you in the next 25 years, but you have my worst wishes as you have had for the last 25 years. Of course I can't hope to see you in jail because I wouldn't go to a jail you was in, and there's no use wishing smallpox on you because I hear you have had it all your life. So I don't know just what to wish you, but anything you are wishing for yourself, I copper it. That's worse than a nance's curse and as you are as close to a nance as a "Variety" mugg could get and still keep it a secret, you know what I am thinking about you, always.

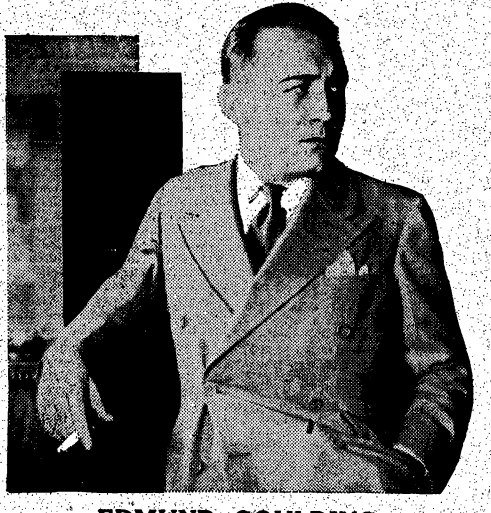
New Act Notice

As for myself I have no wishes. I'm Freeman Bernstein, the well known sport from coast to coast and sometimes in South America. You can wish anything you want to against me, kid, it just rolls off my knife.

And if you print this letter, you can say anything you want to about me at any time after, because the people will believe this letter written by Freeman Bernstein, but they don't believe what you print about me because they know "Variety" is lousy.

I wrote a New Act notice on you once, but didn't send it in. Here it is:

"VARIETY" (0)
Freak Act.
5 Mins.; Long Enough.
New York.



Not good even for small time.

Bern.

How do you like that signature, Kid? Nifty, eh, you crosser? You don't have to answer.

So long, lousy. Will write again in 1955.

Freeman Bernstein

EDMUND GOULDING

A prolific, showmanly writer-director, Edmund Goulding's reputation as a box-office picture artificer is now well established. Now in New York (for the first time in a year), following completion of "Reaching for the Moon" (Douglas Fairbanks) which he directed for United Artists, advance preview reports from the coast are most flattering.

As in "The Trespasser" and "The Devil's Holiday" Goulding both authored and mogged "Reaching for the Moon," including the dialog, continuity, etc.

Goulding's rep as a "money" or box-office technician embraces both the silent and dialog eras of the picture business, and dates notably, in talkers, from the time he wrote "The Broadway Melody."

Film Colony Plays

Cycle of Hollywood plays, started by "Once In a Lifetime," is being continued. Two more plays with the picture colony as their locale have been announced.

One of them, "The World's Greatest Lover," by S. K. Lauren (supposed to be Rudolph Valentino's life), has George Auerbach, a new producer, in back. Other is "The Woman in Red," which Gus Hill has taken.

So far one other Hollywood play has flopped. Piece was "Passion Preferred," by Crane Wilbur and Al Boasberg, which George Choos showed out of town but closed before Broadway.

A SMALL TIMER'S DIARY

By Fred Allen

Aug. 31, Battle Creek, Mich.—Finished packing tonight. Got everything in the grips but my big shoes and my nose putty. Sorry I bought the bungalow now, it don't look as though it will stand up till next summer without I starch the four walls. Not a lock in the joint. I'll put New-Skin on the front door when we leave. Wife glad to get back to Chi tomorrow. Heard Revere House has changed hands. Hope it has changed linen. Off tomorrow.

Sept. 1.—Tough trip on train. Wife sore, left sweatclothes at cottage with bathing suits. Argued about act. She wants to put toe dance before my rope spinning. Ain't got a day booked. A wife is like a dancing mat, you can't get any where if you get one. Forgot to wire reservation. Hope we get in Revere okay.

Sept. 2.—Revere filled up. Tent show laying off there. Great Omar Company I think it's called. Hotel owner is holding their center pole for board. Tried to talk wife into getting room on south side. Nothing doing. She's against the South on account of Delmar and the civil war. She thinks the Grant Hotel is run by the General. Finally got room out North. Don't know how far North, got off the El before running into Peary. Got to see the agent first thing in the morning. Panic nearly on. Every time the wife takes a deep breath the grouch-bag slaps her on the chest. If she'll wear it between her shoulder blades it will save me the trouble of patting her on the back.

Sept. 3.—Saw the agent, he just got back from N. Y. Nose looks like a Stop Light. He spent two weeks with his pet act, the Dancing Abramsons. Said he didn't enjoy it, they rehearsed all the time he was there. Lucky he didn't visit the Australian Wood Choppers. Said he was glad to see us but you can't believe agents. Wants to see us tomorrow. Will get us an opening. Hope he does. I need a new street suit. The cloth in my pants is as thin as a 6-day bicycle rider's tights on Saturday night.

Sept. 4.—Came down to the loop early. It's a sleeper jump from the room. If I have to start walking it I'll only see the wife every other day. Met Wilbur De Rouge, top-mounter with the Arabian Nights. They haven't worked since the last World's Fair. He lost his shoes in a municipal bath. Has a great idea. He wears white stockings with black spats. Looks like sport shoes. Waited all morning for Wilbur to get breakfast. He steals phone slugs and uses them in the Automat. Saw the agent. Wants to see me tomorrow, important.

Sept. 5.—Sick all morning. Got my own breakfast. Room so dark put Lux in saucer instead of corn flakers. Didn't notice mistake until I drank my coffee. Wife said I looked like a plugger after an encore of "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles." Room too dark. Should move unless we can rent it to a photographer during the day for developing. Too sick to see the agent. Wife wanted to phone him, reverse charges. She's ignorant. Actors stand all reverses.

Sept. 6.—Everything looks great. We open Saturday at the Mildew. The agent says we've got to take coffee and cakes to show the act. It will be mostly cake. The sugar we're getting won't sweeten a damiack.

Sept. 7.—Today is Thurs. Two days to rehearse the act. Rome wasn't billed in a day but Gloversville was played in two. Plenty of time, we'll routine it tonight. Don't know whether to open with the parodies or the new song I wrote. Thought of a great line after the wife's toe dance. I can hop out and say "You've got to have strong feet to do that." Then right into that wow about jumping out of the window. "She told me her husband was doing 60 days." I'll ask for two and a quarter. We can't miss.

Sept. 8.—Rehearsed all day. Open tomorrow. I'll ask for two and a half. It looks great. We open with my new song: "It's high time when we left the Low time" with the patter. Then right into the scarecrow dance, 16 bars "Way down yonder in the corn field." Then the wife's toe dance and hand stands with the music "Ten baby fingers and ten baby toes." I follow with the Will Rogers imitation and the nip up. We finish with the parodies, "Ireland must be Heaven" from "Shuffle Along," "Yes, We have no bananas" from the California Orange Packers, "Waiting for the evening males" by the Y. W. C. A. All surefires.

Sept. 9.—It looks as though we're all set. The agent caught the fourth show. They have to send the theatre out to the cleaner's. The office is going to start us Monday. They didn't ask me the salary. I'm asking three hundred. Tomorrow I get contracts. Looks like a great season.

Sept. 10.—Today was Sunday, went to church. It's a good thing the agent knows what I do. From the knees of my pants he'd think I was a ventriloquist. We leave town in the morning. Seven one-nighters to break the jump to the Grind, St. Louis. I had to shade the salary a little. Taking a hundred and a quarter. It's all in one pocket, though, like a sailor's tobacco. We open in Canville tomorrow.

Sept. 11, Canville, Ill.—Big hit here. Manager great guy. Only two at night. Helped manager tack new cushions on orchestra chairs all afternoon. He wants us back next season; he's going to fix the balcony. Stopped the show, put the lights out on us. Manager said electricity bills have been too big lately. Great date.

Sept. 12, Snalesburg, Ill.—Manager here all wet. Has a black eye. Tried to close a quartet last Friday. Should stick to canning single women. He told the wife we were terrible. I told him he's so yellow his mother must have been frightened by a taxicab. If he had a blackboard outside the theatre he'd have a good filling station. Every one-horse town is the same. Even the blacksmiths get wise to themselves.

Sept. 13, Gloomington, Ill.—Two acts here. We're still next to closing. Didn't see the other act work. The guy must have been a magician. My cane and towel disappeared after rehearsal. These jumps are awful. Before we left Chi the agent said to get "Conkey's One to Fill." He meant "Around the World in 80 Days," by Clara Phillips. The manager here owns the joint in Scentralia we play tomorrow. After he seen the act he said there was an epidemic of smallpox there, and perhaps we should skip the date. We're going to get vaccinated and open. All the chances ain't taken on punchboards. Wowed them here.

Sept 14.—No smallpox here. That guy was kidding us. Maybe he didn't want to pay the jack. It can't be the act. Don't know where we go tomorrow. The wife always sleeps with the contracts for the next day under her pillow. Last night she dreamed she was breaking in a paper tearing act, and when I woke up the contract was in a million pieces. I'll wire the office. Asked the stage manager where the acts generally go from here, and he said the poorhouse. Them guys hate performers.

Sept. 15, Cannibal, Mo.—Nearly missed the matinee on account of the wife tearing up the contract. If I'd a-knowed we played here I could have rode over with Charlie Ahearn. He was on the bill yesterday. He does a bicycle act, and makes all these jumps on his props. The manager of this house used to own a hotel. He wouldn't let a man and woman act in the theatre unless they had baggage. Had to make a speech tonight. Some one kept applaudling all through the wife's single. I bawled them out proper. The manager came back after and said not to feel sore. No one was trying to crab the act by applauding. Some woman was spanking a kid.

Sept. 16, Rattrap, Mo.—Only one more day of this circuit. It should be called the "Daylight Saving Time." I ain't seen daylight since we opened in Canville. The other act here is "Sawing a Woman in Two." I don't know where they got the two; they work in full stage. The finish of the act is great. After the dame is sawed in half, one half sings Mr. Gallagher and the other half sings Mr. Shean. The dame in the act is a German. She was born in Hamburg. If the saw ever slips she'll die the same way.

Sept. 17, E. St. Louis.—Got here this morning at five bells. Went right to the theatre. The night watchman let us in, and said we rehearsed second. A guy was there at three o'clock waiting to rehearse "Ain't We Got Fun." A guy with popular songs in these towns should have a lantern. Today was Sunday. I never seen so many rubber collars in my life. One yokel had a spare collar under his arm. He was away for a week-end. St. Louis tomorrow. Got to get the cornet and violin part out and dirty them up so the leader won't know the difference. The piano and drum music is filthy.

Sept. 18, St. Louis.—Opened at the Grind here today, a full week. Now I can send the laundery out. I've worn my collars on two sides already. Seen a sign advertising Triangle Collars. If they have three sides I'll buy plenty. Four shows here, but it's a full week to leave the grips on the floor. We've been picking them up so much the handles are red hot.

Sept. 19.—Had a good laugh last night. Came down to the dressing room after the last show, and the missus was packing up. I thought we was canned, but it was just force of habit. We played so many one-nighters she forgot we was here all week. Today is booking day. If we are penciled in I hope there is a shortage of erasers in Chicago. The wife has been chinning with the dame in the closing act. They invited us over to the room after the show for chilli. We've been eating in restaurants since the wife left the can opener in East St. Louis.

Sept. 20.—Pretty tired today. Stayed up till six gongs talking shop with Delahanty and Mame. He's all right, but she's a gym prop. She thinks the Belasco theatre is the house of David. He married her on the Orpheum time; he could have done better for Pan. She blabbed all night what they played and what they had. She looks like a dame I used to know whose father was put out of the Actor's Home. They caught him playing chess with loaded bishops. The wife thinks she is the rat's roquefort. We're moving over to their hotel tomorrow. She'll have my old lady's head so big I'll have to buy her hammocks for hair nets.

Sept. 21.—The new hotel is swell. The rooms is named after the states. I tried to laugh when we looked at Rhode Island, but my cheeks hit up against the walls. The wife said we should take Maine on account of the Bath. The Delahantys came in to see us tonight. I had a Variety. That dame is poison, always beefin'. She said they had just finished Elinor Glyn's three weeks. I never heard of any V. M. P. A. houses of Glyn's except Astoria. The wife started talking about her operation by Dr. Thorex. This dame stops her with a crack about one of her sisters catching the flu from one of the Barrymores. Nothing for next week yet, wired the agent tonight.

Sept. 22.—Was talking to the dancing act on the bill. Told him we didn't have nothin' booked. He said if we wanted to go east, he could fix us the Low time, if we would take three shows a day. The wife says, "How do we take them, before or after meals." The guy thought she was kiddin and looked at me, but I didn't crack. He looks pretty tough. I went in his dressing room and seen his wife reading stories to their kid out of the Whiz Bang. He started telling about the finish of their act. The kid is getting so big they only get two bows draggin it out. I told him they should have given the kid more coffee when it was young. A friend of mine did that and the kid had a beard when it started kindergarten. He got a soft job later, bouncer with Singer's Midgets. This guy is going to try the coffee it's easier than putting the wings back. No news from the agent. Most of them yeggs is so busy they want you to send the commission in silver so they can shake it out of the envelope without unfolding the letter.

Sept. 23.—Got a letter from the agent. Contracts for the American and Lincoln next week to show again. From the salary it must be one day in each joint, but the contracts says three. The letter says the bookers want to see the act. Them guys is a riot. They'll want Gabriel to play the Academy before they okey Judgment day. Delahanty and Mame got the Palace, Chi, next week. He's been drinking heavy. I told him that gin will ruin his stomach. He says you won't notice it from out front. His eye's can't be none to good either. He signed contracts for the Palace at a cut without squawkin.

Sept. 24.—Closed here tonight. When the manager paid us off I asked him if he wanted a picture. He said no he'd remember the act alright. Seen that tough dancer locking his trunks. He don't use no baggage man, he blasts his stuff from town to town. We leave at midnight. Didn't tip the stage hands. The wife took the grips and I went out through the front of the house. Couldn't get a sleeper. All the uppers were gone. A Scotch band is making the same jump.

Sept. 25.—Back in Chi. Got in Revere okey. The clerk is booking acts now. We'll be all set after we open tonight. No matinees. I hung around the theatre all morning. Most of the acts is try-outs. One guy with a dog act unpacked; he hadn't worked in so long that the dogs didn't remember him. When he unlocked the cages three Airdales bit him. There was another thin guy with a violin. The baggage man says, "How many pieces have you got." The egg says, "Two Stars and Stripes Forever," and "Mighty Lak a Rose." I bet he thinks "four in a bar" means the horsemen having a drink. We're the only regular act on the bill. They'll all be in tonight. It's like taking gumdrops from Jackie Coogan.

Sept. 26.—The audience is tough here. We didn't get a bow either show last night. Saw the agent today. We got a break. The bookers wasn't in. They'll be out tonight. The wife was all broke up, someone razzed her in the toe dance. While I was doing the rope stuff a guy yelled out "You'd better get back on the wagon, the kids is stealing your milk." I guess that's why they call this the Lincoln on account of the pennies they throw.

Sept. 27.—Flopped again. Seen the agent, no one caught the show, big managers' meeting. An act came in from Montreal, they were all down to the train. We've got to take the American. Everybody will be out there, there's good beer in that neighborhood. What a dump this is. Some day an ice cream wagon will back up here and throw the theatre in with the rock salt. We nearly lost the salary, the wife left the money laying on the make-up shelf and the property man thought it was a tip.

Sept. 28, American, Chi.—Well, I guess it's all off. It's just the breaks. The manager canned us after the first show. You can't please everybody. Heinz makes 57 kinds of pickles. The funny part of it is I used to know the manager. He was a female impersonator. The last time I played on the bill with him he said he was quitting show business to become a milliner. I told him at least he could trim a sailor. He got pretty sore so I guess he's even now. He's lucky I didn't kill him. I can lick any guy who beads his mustache. The next time he sees me he better have one hand ready to pull off his wig, it will be his finish.

Sept. 29.—Seen the agent today. The office is off of us. There's no demand for comedy acts, only a shortage of mindreaders. The wife want to go east, she has friends in Grand Rapids. Went up to get the money for the one show at the American. Here to go back later. The guy who is good at fractions was out. Seen Diamond, if we can grab a tab, I'll be satisfied. He's copped a lot of houses from the Worst in Vaudeville. He got the seven houses we played the following week.

Sept. 30.—It looks like a great season. We open with a Tab Monday, 60 net, double. A bird in the hand saves the price of a cage. No fares and baggage. I'm doing Irish. I never done Irish, but Jolson never seen Alabama. Rehearse tomorrow. The wife says I should join the Elks in case we get stranded.

Production Best Where?

and literary center for all producing people to closely watch, and contact.

12. Likelihood evils surrounding previews here would not exist in New York and more cosmopolitan population would mean better testing for new product.

13. Accessibility to Europe and saving on foreign transportation.

14. Better radio outlet for star or other ballyhoo purposes.

15. Less tourist curiosity as annoyance to producers.

Climate, Etc.

Added to this, some impartial observers claim that better and more extensive results are obtainable in east through climate that does not produce as much sluggishness as here.

It is claimed that New York could never support mass production because of locations for one thing. Some averages place location work ahead of interiors, yet actual figures reveal that only around 10% of all production is outside the studios.

New York has city, suburb, mountain, river, sea, western (in New Jersey where Bill Hart made many of his horse operas), woods, resort, beach and other locations demanded. It lacks desert and tropical locations obtained here, but has Florida and Cuba, it is pointed out.

With location work down to a minimum, the California sun does not figure as importantly as before. Advancement technically makes it possible to shoot exteriors without the bright sunshine formerly needed.

Uncertainty of rain and losses through that is found as an important New York disadvantage when all are reduced down so far as locations are concerned. Claim that in New York location companies would have to go too far to "get away from things" is generally exaggerated when it is considered that with California's recent fast growth it is now necessary to go farther here than a trifling few years back.

Proximity of technical equipment and other production necessities here is held as an important advantage, claim being studios can get "things done quicker here."

Among unquestioned advantages are cheaper labor, lumber and other materials, saving through necessity for as much heating as would be required east and salaries of supernumeraries, including extras.

Cost of property in New York and space needed for sufficient studio room, expense of construction and freighting of equipment from here, plus loss through vacating Hollywood studios, leads the Coast defenders into believing a general production exodus east will never occur.

$100,000,000 In Realty

One insider, claiming plans recently discussed for erection of a gigantic studio near San Francisco holds that a change in background for location shots might mean a valuable change for the industry after many years of the west.

Gross value of studio properties out here is estimated at anywhere between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 with Fox and Paramount leading.

Of valuation between 50 and 70% is based on land and construction balance on equipment. Net loss of Hollywood through move east would be on construction, including sound stages, plus any deficits incurred through sale or leases of property.

It is doubtful whether the picture industry would want to take a gamble at the present time in face of conditions and business.

That may add a toe-hold to the Coast's hold on production.

The Bankers

The eastern banker influence should not be discounted by the bunch out here. Bankers know nothing but money and statement. It's their first reasoning that if the studio were nearer Broadway and the home office, the huge waste the bankers now believe occurs in the production of films in Hollywood studios would be saved through the close contact; that the million dollar talking headaches in preparation could be shaved down to at least $500,000 before starting; that the "artistic temperament" thing, long distance brought back so it could be kept commercial by commercial minds right on top of it all of the time.

And the higher-ups of the film industry believe all of this just at present. They believe also if Hollywood is in reality a land of enchantment, the picture people have had and will have had plenty of time to get rid of their holdings before the move occurs, if it does occur.

Leading Film Names, 1930

sive, explains Sutherland's standing.

John Cromwell (Par) shows with "Street of Chance," a popular meller, and a big money-getter for what it cost Par, "For the Defense," another of William Powell's strongest; also "The Texan" (Gary Cooper) and "Seven Days' Leave" (co-directed).

Rowland V. Lee (Par), already accounted for.

This inter-relationship of the various ratings, depending on either the success of the picture, or the standing of its star, is obvious throughout. There are exceptions, however.

Best "Money Pictures"

The Big Six in 1930's "money pictures" which follows in alphabetical sequence might almost be rated relatively as alphabetized, excepting that it is difficult to compute their production cost and distribution overhead as against the grosses, without getting into too many local arguments.

The Big Six among "money pictures" of the year gives Metro four, Fox one, and Paramount one:

"Anna Christie" (Metro).
"Blushing Brides" (Metro).
"Caught Short" (Metro).
"Common Clay" Fox).
"Divorcee" (Metro).
"Love Parade" (Par).

Metro and Par should monopolize the Big Six among the "money" productions in view of their superior releasing channels, excepting that Fox's "Common Clay," an outstanding smash of 1930, lifted itself head and shoulders above its competition and commanded attention. "Clay's" extraordinary holdover weeks, doing bigger biz on its second and third weeks (such as grossing almost a half million dollars at the Roxy, New York, alone) force it into the Big Six rating.

"Caught Short" had the Marie Dressler-Polly Moran team; "Anna Christie," Greta Garbo; "Blushing Brides," Joan Crawford; "Common Clay," Constance Bennett; "Divorcee," Norma Shearer and Chevalier in "Love Parade."

It is to be noted that of the Big Six among the pictures, only one Chevalier, and there, too, Jeannette MacDonald figured importantly) was a male starring proposition.

Returning to the Big Six among the femmes, a recounting of what each turned out this year, by picture title alone, will tell the story:

Norma Shearer Leads

Norma Shearer tops easily with "Divorcee" and "Let Us Be Gay," both smashes.

Greta Garbo with "Anna Christie" and "Romance," the latter not so big, but because of the natural Garbo draw, an important element.

Clara Bow. Her "True to the Navy," "Love Among the Millionaires" and "Her Wedding Night," singly and in bulk, edified plenty of customers, and Bow still has a draw, but not as brilliantly as in the past.

Ruth Chatterton, somewhat of a dark horse as a femme name, figures in this spot when you consider her two strong Paramounts—"Sarah and Son" and "Anybody's Woman," plus her "Lady of Scandal" (from "The High Road," stage play), which she did on loan for Metro.

Joan Crawford's "Our Blushing Brides" was tremendous, and "Montana Moon," while no outstander, didn't come out in the red fortified by the Crawford rep.

Marie Dressler's inclusion as the sixth big femme draw may precipitate some discussion as is technically co-star (in "Min and Bill"), but figured on the principle of a "money" proposition her bulked contributions in the course of this past year unquestionably rates her importantly, her "Caught Short" is an individual outstander, while as sub-support to such stars as Shearer and Garbo in "Let Us Be Gay" and "Anna Christie," plus the recent "Min and Bill" (with Wallace Beery) and the immediately forthcoming "Reducing" (with Polly Moran) shows up Miss Dressler as a prolific performer.

The sole 1930 individual outanders like Miss Bennett, Ann arding, Gloria Swanson, Helen elvetrees, et al, cannot take rank ove this sextet's box office grosses.

Men

Among the males, the whyfors of e following sequence are equally vious.

Maurice Chevalier is the smash ale draw in pictures. His "Love rade," combined with "The Big ond" and the healthy trade done a quite weak "Playboy of Paris" ot forgetting his international arket values, no small element th a Chevalier), gives him the ace lling.

George Bancroft, considering the ldover release of "The Mighty," as the 1930 output of "Ladies Love utes" and "Derelict," rates the uee spot for male money. Bancroft led last year (1929).

William Powell, for three strong money makers in "Street of Chance," "For the Defense" and "Benson Murder Case," all relatively inexpensive to make and all good gross getters.

Jack Oakie, with "The Social Lion" and "The Sap From Syracuse," plus his contribution to "Let's Go Native" (all-star), rates importantly for solo draw.

Ramon Novarro still rates big as one of the few romantic stars left, getting heavy flapper and above-par femme draw. His "In Gay Madrid" and "Call of the Flesh," for all their intrinsic shortcomings, evidenced the strong stellar pull by the heavy trade it did. Then, too, Novarro, like Chevalier, figures above the average for the international market.

Ronald Colman, for his "Raffles," but still doing heavy holdover grosses on "Bulldog Drummond" and "Condemned," which is terrific, in the British market especially.

It will be noted from the masculine rating that there is a diminution of masculine s. a. Richard Barthelmess, like Colman, had only one outstanding entry—"Dawn Patrol"—but the quality of the picture was as much of a draw as Barthelmess. Then, too, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in some localities, was given the premier billing.

There is an increasing tendency to create new names, stars and personalities, with one or two outstanding performances in dialog sufficient to cause studios to tear up old contract and issue more favorable terms.

Outdrawing Stars

All through the year there have been instances of featured players outdrawing established stars. People like Dressler, Beery, Edmund Lowe, Harding, Bennett, Twelvetrees, Boyd, et al, are examples.

The Chaplins, Pickfords, Fairbanks, Talmadges and even the more recently established Gilberts and Hainses find themselves not rating in 1930 through paucity of product.

A studio-by-studio survey:

Metro

Shearer, Garbo, Crawford, Novarro are all accounted for.

Buster Keaton becoming too stereotyped and mechanical. The "fresh" William Haines' vogue affected by Jack Oakie. Marion Davies spotty. Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore as operatic stars negatively impressing. John Gilbert slipping.

More fortunate in featured players. Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery, all mean something. Conrad Nagel (you wouldn't suspect it by the manner in which he is farmed out) ditto as a Metro contract player. M-G-M probably does all right by itself on the loaning proposition with Nagel. Ditto on Lewis Stone, Leila Hyams, Hedda Hopper and Kay Johnson (until recently dropped); all jobbed around quite a bit on loan.

Metro's sub-alignment of featured players continues well with the roster showing John Mack Brown, Polly Moran, Anita Page, Raquel Torres, Ernest Torrence, Cliff Edwards, Adolphe Menjou, William Bakewell, et al. Torres and Menjou also on foreigns, and valuable in that alone, along with the other foreigners under contract.

Paramount

Par is bullish on males, among stars and featured players alike. Also takes in Harold Lloyd, as an outside producer-star, distributing through Par; Chevalier, Oakie, Bancroft, Gary Cooper, Powell; with the featured male contingent including Clive Brook, Fredric March, Skeets Gallagher and Paul Lukas.

In the femme line, Bow, Nancy Carroll, Chatterton, among the stars; also Mary Brian, Claudette Colbert, Mitzi Green (juvenile), Kay Francis, Marlene Dietrich, among the long roster of sub-features.

Par's contracted stock companies of players, which includes only three foreigners, numbers 49. Metro has 53, but 15 of these are foreign satellites now in Hollywood, whereas Par does its foreign production chiefly in Joinville (Paris). Par's normal domestic roster exceeds Metro's, therefore, but this becomes necessary through the east and west coast studios.

The Fay Wray-Richard Arlen team has been mild. Charles (Buddy) Rogers has commenced easing off. Nancy Carroll proved a different Nancy in "Laughter."

Of the featured group, Colbert-March have been most outstanding. But in Dietrich, Par has its strongest "comer." Mary Brian continues a saccharine standby. Paul Lukas they're trying to build up into a sophisticated "lady's man." Regis Toomey a comer. Leon Errol and Charles Ruggles, comedy standbys, and in demand. Others are subplayers.

Fox

Fox isn't strong on star personalities, yet this studio, as have others, during the year, has seen stardom forced on its featured players by the theatres. This was particularly true of El Brendel and Warner Baxter.

Theatres all over the country figured these two names as draws. Despite any studio contractural agreements to the contrary, the houses billed them as stars, figuring on getting a play through their name values which were considered above the picture.

The split of Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell took somewhat away from the name draw of this combination. In pictures, each singly, the two fell below their draw ratings as a team. McLaglen and Lowe failed to be sensational during the year, though listed as a valuable combination.

Warner

Only two personalities on the Warner list are billed for star honors, both males, George Arliss and John Barrymore. The featured list at this studio also is scarce on the femme angle, although two of Warners' biggest general money making pictures must be credited in a measure to the pulling power of Winnie Lightner. As the year opened Winnie's "Gold Diggers of Broadway" was still bringing in money and she has added to this with "Life of the Party."

Joe E. Brown, listed as a Warner featured player, gets to the top of the list in this grouping only through pictures he appeared in at First National, such as "Top Speed." Grosses were sufficient to virtually guarantee the comic star billing for next year.

Olsen and Johnson clicked in "Sailor Behave," but rating for this vaude team is premature yet as their second picture, "50 Million Frenchmen," has yet not been released.

First National

Richard Barthelmess gets to the top of the First National star rating without opposition. Much of his pull for the year can be credited to "Dawn Patrol," although Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in second spot in this picture, produced audience reaction that will have him elevated from the featured to the star ranks on next year's program. Barthelmess' other picture for the year, "Son of the Gods," was not so hot at the box office, but whatever draw it held can be checked up to his name.

Another featured player at this studio who proved she called for bigger than featured parts was Loretta Young, who is scheduled for stardom spots on the coming program.

Universal

Universal, due to its new policy of fewer but bigger pictures, didn't get under way until late in the year.

Mary Nolan takes the honors here in the star rating with good business reported from "Outside the Law" and "Shanghai Lady." The three other stars only got under with one each, John Boles with "Captain of the Guard," Lupe Velez with "The Cat Creeps," and Genevieve Tobin with "A Lady Surrenders."

In the featured list Charles Murray and George Sidney go to the top with their "Cohens and Kellys" features and their short product.

Although appearing in one of the outstanding big grossers of the year, "Western Front," Lew Ayres comes in second, with the promise that this player may be a significant draw in the future. While popularity for "Western Front" cannot be credited to this actor's presence for it was a picture that didn't depend on a name, the impetus given Ayres in this picture gives him a rating, the effect of which is now being felt, as for example, in "Doorway to Hell," for which he was borrowed by Warners.

Slim Summerville who had been going along in pictures as a more or less negligible personality also came to the fore in "Western Front" and Universal realized that in this comic there was a spot in featured billing and perhaps later stardom. His shorts are getting a big plug and likewise are proving anything but disappointing at the box office.

None of the others on the Universal feature list have had sufficient spots yet to give a slant on their drawing power.

Radio

A curiosity and publicity angle can be credited for taking Amos 'n' Andy to the top of the Radio star list. The tremendous pull this blackface team had when "Check and Double Check" was released simultaneously in almost all the keys is one of the outstanding features of the film year. Here was a condition perhaps that had never previously been experienced in the theatre, yet it is doubtful if a second picture with these two in it would have anywhere near the popularity, it was strictly a freak.

Bebe Daniels rates second with Richard Dix third. Miss Daniels was still grossing from "Rio Rita" at the beginning of the year and added to this were the far less spectacular business from "Dixiana," "Lawful Larceny" and "Alias French Gertie."

Pictures given Dix could hardly be considered of the type that should be accompanied by star billing. Neither of his two, "Lovin' the Ladies" or "Shooting Straight," proved anything but mediocre.

Wheeler and Woolsey are head and shoulders above any other featured draw on the Radio lot. Much of the draw of the Radio musicals that would otherwise have suffered from the turn against musicals can be ascribed to the comedy of this pair. Proof of this was seen in "Half Shot at Sunrise," where, as in previous pictures, they carried with them Dorothy Lee. All three are now slated for stardom on future product.

Betty Compson proved she was still a draw, not only in pictures on her own lot but also on loans to other companies. Ned Sparks, who has a pull of his own, slipped down in the rating because of the studio's reluctance to put him in films after the first half year.

Pathe

With only seven persons on its combined star and feature list, Pathe has Ann Harding and Constance Bennett at least two of the current biggest draws.

Strangely neither of these was starred until late in the year, and, as was the experience of other companies, the boosting came first from the theatres where sagacious managers sensed the pull of these two.

Bill Boyd, the lone male star, was off the lot most of the year. The two for his own company, "Beyond Victory" and "Painted Desert," are not yet released.

Eddie Quillan and Helen Twelvetrees run neck and neck for top feature honors, and both are slated for stardom. Quillan had two fairly good grossers late in the year, "Night Work" and "Big Money."

Helen Twelvetrees' home lot releases were "Swing High," which coming on the far end of the musical regime, didn't do so well. "Her Man" did better. These should build this young player's popularity.

Most of Robert Armstrong's work for the year was done at studios other than his own lot.

United Artists

Anomalous condition exists at United Artists, where the three names, traditional to the "picture business, go to the bottom of the list because of no pictures during the year. These are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, and Charles Chaplin. Chaplin's "City Lights" is scheduled for first of the year release.

Al Jolson, who topped the UA list last year, is also down on the list because of his long "Big Boy," his last, for Warners.

Top honors on the UA list go to Gloria Swanson and Ronald Colman, both "silent" favorites. Miss Swanson gets there for grosses still coming in from "The Trespasser" during the early part of the year and "What a Widow."

Ronald Colman still proved a heavy draw at the box office with "Condemned" and his early year release and "Raffles," plus over-hangings from "Bulldog Drummond."

Norma Talmadge, one of the outstanding of former day stars, proved disappointing with her two starts, "New York Nights" and "Du Barry."

Heading the featured list is Chester Morris, although all of his work of the year was under other studios banners.

Walter Huston for his "Abraham Lincoln" (and "Bad Man," on loan to First National) is a close second.

Columbia

Columbia has no star list. At the top of this studio's feature grouping is Jack Holt, who has been the most consistent b.o. name on the lot.

Ralph Graves is now off the list, engaged as a writer for Metro, and can be considered for honors in some of the pictures in which he appeared with Holt. Particularly in "Submarine," that was grossing heavy at the year's opening, as also "Flight."

Holt had also "The Squealer" to his credit.

Barbara Stanwyck, with the outstanding "Ladies of Leisure," is the top femme on this lot, with Dorothy Revier and Evelyn Brent consistent deliverers, both on the Columbia and on outside lots.

Remaining on the Columbia list are Richard Cromwell and Constance Cummings. Former is in his first big picture, "Tol'able David."

Tiffany

Tiffany has no players under contract but draws its people from the other studios on a picture-to-picture basis.

Booking agents started formulating plans to book the picture theatres in September, '20.

ing a smash release and will tickle most in those spots where the price is least.

Very much a matter of punning through an anemic story which, if it weren't for the dialog, could tally as an old-fashioned picture. That's about what it is, with sound. Farfetched plot has been loosely put together with inapt dialog, poor cutting, and direction which has failed to fully realize upon its two main comics. When a third comedian can make a house sit up and take notice every time he hits the screen, with Wheeler and Woolsey in the same corral, and the interloper only doing a bit at that, there's something radically wrong. It doesn't help either of the lead funny men.

Comic in question is Hugh Herbert. Far from an indifferent performer himself, Herbert is really a funny guy. That goes here even though he never speaks more than one line on any of his spasmodic appearances. This comedian knows pantomime and can talk if so assigned.

Both Wheeler and Woolsey are too experienced to hold any brief for their efforts in this one. Dorothy Lee is no help and cannot show to advantage with the experienced Jobyna Howland on one side and Natalie Moorehead on the other. These round out the femme contingent. About to be starred by Radio, Miss Lee is due for some studying, and cameramen best keep the angle above the knees.

Story rambles along aimlessly, having the Wheeler-Woolsey combo as a couple of insurance agents who start running a dilapidated hotel inherited by the girl. Opening footage is awkward and the succeeding reels never fully recover. A phone call to a newspaper makes the hostelry a society sensation and two sets of crooks join the clientele, the objective being the hotel safe. Ends in a gun battle across the lobby as the unsuspecting comics wander between the bullets wondering what it's all about until the cops arrive. Woolsey lands Miss Howland, as the girl's mother; Wheeler gets Miss Lee, and the mother's lawyer (Ralf Harolde) turns out to be behind all the villainy.

Harolde has now been playing heavies for Radio since "Dixiana," and has yet to equal his early footage in that picture. Perhaps, because of a lack of opportunity. George Marion has not much more to do than Herbert but, at least, is working minus a dialect. It's not a heavy production. Camera and sound work okay.

Just poor deluxe house fare. Especially if the policy is straight pictures. But it's one of the features which will enhance the importance of its vaudeville to R-K-O. Film will get by on a combination bill, but it's not an optimistic full-week entry. It provides the spot for the Wheeler and Woolsey prestige to be put to the test.

Mayfair theatre has a selection of drab shorts around it, inexcusable in lieu of the holiday week with the new program coming in the day before Christmas to take advantage of the post Yuletide trade. Sid.

Under a Special Plan

"Variety's" Special Publicity Plan has been functioning for some years. It has been employed by many of the newly-made stars in Pictures and Vaudeville, while the standard players and attractions have long since discovered its value in the advancement of stage position and salary.

The campaign is designed to keep a professional name continuously before the show business, all over the world, every week for 52 weeks in a year. This publicity may be used in displayed type or pictorially, but does not include reading matter, other than a limited caption under cuts.

"Variety's" Publicity Plan is made sufficiently flexible in cost to meet almost any condition.

A copy of the plan with other information as may be desired can be obtained at any "Variety" office.

BRITTON MUSICIANS STOP PALACE SHOW

Wild Goings-On Resemble Madness in Beholders' Eyes

And perhaps, as far as Saturday night's patrons were concerned, even this average would not have been reached were it not for the mad antics of Frank and Milt Britton's Entertainers. You may remember these musicians as the Brown Derby Band. But even if you do, you'll not recognize them in their present state of mind.

What they intend to do, is go one step farther in insane goings-on than Clayton, Jackson and Durante—and apply the result to an "orchestra act." Before they're through, they're gone several steps farther than the famed trio. They lay "orchestra acts" lower than low, by breaking scores of instruments, falling into all sections of the pit and convincing you they have escaped from Matteawan. Bro Washer.

"MORNING TELEGRAM"
Monday, Dec. 22, 1930

"The act of Frank and Milt Britton, with an orchestra of ten pieces has not been seen around New York in some time. The present offering is by far the best they have ever done. There is no comparison with the 'Brown Derby' act that they did several seasons back. This new act is hokum to the Nth degree—buffoonery—rough and tumble—but it is cleverly conceived and the audience could not get enough. The Clayton, Jackson & Durante nuttery is exceeded in this dizzy whirlwind of nonsense."

NEW YORK AMERICAN, DEC. 21, 1930

BRITTONS BIG HIT AT PALACE!

New Act Highly Amusing; Frisco Comedy Pleases

With Joe Frisco, Ramon and Rosita, Nan Halperin and Tom Patricola on the same bill, something may be expected of the show at the Palace Theatre. But it is the unexpected which carries the bill far above ordinary expectations. For in this new show is a new act, and, without hesitation, without exaggeration, it can be said that this new piece is the most sensational debut act the year has seen at the Palace—and 1930 is almost out.

Practically unheard of, Frank and Milt Britton bring their entertainers into what is bound to become fame in an act that is wilder than anything Clayton, Jackson and Durante, or other such groups have ever done; that is quite as musical as some of the best musical acts, that shows as much versatility as any group performing today. It is all one long mad spell of fun which ends in a riotous frenzy, with the audience wondering amid its applause how these boys left the walls of the theatre standing. Of all the mad and merry acts, this is the best.

Sid Gans.

"VARIETY"
Wednesday, Dec. 24, 1930

"The Brittons sessions of disorderly conduct was scheduled No. 4 and stopped the proceedings for the time being, and pretty nearly for the performance. This group of banksmen probably tops the civilized world for violence of technique and versatility of antics.

Versatility is a mild word in this connection, but this gang of hoodlums have everything, not the least being a magnificent set of teeth by one of the Brittons capable of rending a wooden violin to pieces with sound effects like the collapse of the attic."

"EVENING GRAPHIC"

Today's Star

For today we call your attention to the Britton Entertainers, headed by Frank & Milt. They are playing a week at the Palace. Putting it very mildly, the act can be compared with one of those recent riots up around Union Square. The basis of the act is a band, and each member of it has a different way of interrupting and hindering the work of his fellow bandsmen.

Before the middle of the act, the air is full of flying violin cases, violin bows and anything else that happens to be within reach.

For an opening the boys have a screen short showing the entire company trying to get in one taxicab bound for the Palace. The whole thing is an extraordinary entertainment, and followers of vaudeville should see the act at least once.

The Britton Entertainers are a band of musical clowns who break instruments over each other's heads and appear to get immense enjoyment in the process. The enjoyment is reflected in the audience, too. The Sunday crowd out front gave them a headline ovation, and the boys certainly earned it. Bob Grannis.

BILLBOARD," DEC. 27, 1930

"Frank and Milt Britton, entertainers, successors to the 'Brown Derby' Band act, scored an unrelenting show-stop with a new and hokier version of their musically intersticed comedy. The act has a novel opening and there are few deviations from the original character of unorthodox comedy throughout. The Brittons are among the pioneers of the latest broke era, and this act represents the highest point in their achievements along this line."

ACTON DAVIES ON VAUDEVILLE

VARIETY

FIRST YEAR, NO. 1 DECEMBER 16, 1905 PRICE, FIVE CENTS

The First

VARIETY

This cover and the succeeding 15 pages are a reproduction of the first issue of VARIETY on Dec. 16, 1905, in 16 pages.

On the cover in this space were several type lines, listing stories. Otherwise the copy is wholly reproduced herewith.

Of the first staff of VARIETY there remain at present attached to the paper, O. M. Samuel, correspondent for 25 years at New Orleans, 'Skigie' (Sid Silverman, then 7), and its publisher.

What I Don't Know About Vaudeville.

By ACTON DAVIES.

"Vaudeville—a place where a great many bad actors go before they die." I don't know that this definition of this word has found its way into any of the dictionaries as yet, but it certainly ought to. In the first place, I should never have been asked to write about vaudeville because, for one thing, I know very little about it nowadays, and for another I have got a grudge against it. Vaudeville has robbed me of too many happy hours in the variety theatres to ever expect a boom from me. I feel quite sure that I am not the only dramatic critic who is free to confess that there was once a time a good variety show was the spice of his life. And why not? What could be more restful and soothing to a man tired out by reviewing a long series of "new and original American plays," from more or less foreign sources, than to find a quiet afternoon's intellectual fun in watching the performance of first-class acrobats, erudite dogs, or listening to the dulcet strains of a first-class serio-comic. Nowadays if a dramatic critic goes to a vaudeville performance he finds the greater part of the headlines are made up of dramatic extinct volcanoes, names which in many instances have outlived their usefulness and cleverness on the legitimate boards and now distended out of all proportion to their worth are starred at the head of the performance. Some of them have been fortunate enough to secure these short plays; in that case they may be pardoned, but even then it's altogether too much like work for a critic to sit down and enjoy their performance. I don't think I exaggerate the case at all when I say that there are hundreds of true lovers of variety show who are kept away from the performances by the number of plays which are now infected into the bill.

Again, it takes a highly clever actor to adapt himself to the new environment of a vaudeville. Between him and the legitimate variety performers there is a wide gulf fixed—one of those gulfs which no suspension bridge can ever span. The actor, in nearly every instance, regards his dip into vaudeville as a vast condescension on his part, and looks down on the legitimate variety actor as a being belonging to an essentially lower orbit, a being of a distinctly cruder grade. The variety man meanwhile detests the interloping actor with all his soul. The fact that the star of the moment draws just about three times as big a salary as he does is enough to madden him, but there are usually abundant other reasons as well.

I have yet to meet an actor even among those few who have really scored big hits in vaudeville who have a good word to say for it. Of course, they nearly always preface their denunciations with a request that they must not be quoted—probably because they might want to return to vaudeville some day—but that doesn't lessen the force of their roasts in the least. Even so high salaried a vaudeville star as Miss Lillian Russell looked as elated as a child just out of school when I met her in the foyer of one of the Broadway playhouses on Monday night. I was astonished to see her there, as I thought she was still drawing in three thousand dollars a week for singing four songs twice a day, so when I asked her, "What does this mean. Are you no longer a Proctoress?" she replied: "Thank heavens, no. Little Lillian has packed her little dinner pail away in lavender and is going to be a lady again until next March." From which remark I gathered that even in Miss Russell's exceptional case all that vaudevilles is not Valenciennes.

The whole method of the variety stage is so different to that of the regular boards that I cannot see why the average actor should ever expect that he could score in it. Tabloid drama or comedy may be all very well in its way for those who like it, but it needs an exceptionally strong and magnetic actor to hold a variety audience for eighteen or twenty minutes, the length of the average "turn." In a legitimate play this same actor would have secured important scenes strung through three or four acts. In vaudeville if he doesn't hit out straight from the shoulder at once he is lost. The variety performer has been brought to this line of work and scores accordingly: it is his business to do and to do quickly almost everything which an actor on the regular stage is taught and schooled to avoid. To my mind there is infinitely more charms and originality displayed among the variety actresses today than there is among the actors. I could name at least a score of variety performers who have gone into legitimate musical work in the last few years, but if you asked me at a moment's notice to name the actors and actresses who have established themselves as permanent successes in vaudeville I am sure that I could count them off easily on the fingers of one hand. And here's another thing against vaudeville from my point of view. Variety actors may transfer to the regular stage and then return to vaudeville and prove just as clever as ever, but I have yet to see a single actor who having played in vaudeville for any length of time returns to his stage as good an artist as when he left it. Almost invariably the vaudeville rapid-fire methods of accentuation and playing for points tell against him when he reappears in a legitimate drama.

That actors and actresses by their wholesale rushing into vaudeville have hurt their financial standing with the theatrical managers is undoubtedly true. One of the biggest managers in this country, who usually had from one hundred and fifty to two hundred actors on his salary list, whether they were playing or not, said to me: "The actors are simply cutting their own throats by rushing into this vaudeville business. It's true that they draw a very large salary for a few weeks, but how long does it last? And then thrown down and out in most cases. Take my own experience, for instance. This year outside of the few really important artists I have no actors under contract. I merely engage them for the run of a play, and thereby save myself a great deal of money. If the actors don't stand by the manager why should I stand by them? They don't hesitate to rush into vaudeville for a few extra hundred dollars and cheapen their market value to me, but if they have any following at all they draw their clientele along with them, leaving a yawning space in my balcony or gallery, as the case may be. And once having seen an actor for fifty cents it is against human nature to expect that anyone is going to cheerfully pay $1.50 or $2.00 to see him again. It would be foolish for me not to admit that vaudeville has hit many of the regular theatres hard during the past two or three years, because it has. Its cheap prices and the big attractions it frequently offers that have seriously affected our receipts, particularly in the upper portions of the house, so for the future I am going to make it a rule not to employ actors who have figured in vaudeville unless I discover that I cannot possibly get along without them."

Talk with any of the theatrical managers and you will find that their views of the subject are very much along these lines.

A good variety show is one of the finest tonics in the world, but vaudeville when for the most part it consists of fallen stars in mediocre wishy washy one-act plays is one of the finest producers of mental dyspepsia that I know of.

HOBBIES OF VAUDEVILLE MANAGERS.

While the average vaudeville manager never strays very far from one or the other of the houses under his direction, he invariably has some hobby or fad in which he seeks recreation and surcease from worry.

Oscar Hammerstein steals away from the cares of the Victoria Theatre to write orchestral scores which are really played by real orchestras other than his own.

F. F. Proctor spends his brief periods at rest in his automobile. He belongs to the Larchmont Yacht Club, but leaves yacht racing to his son, F. F. Proctor, Jr.

B. F. Keith quiets tired nerves by using the long distance telephone. This acts like soothing syrup. At the head of his bed is a long distance 'phone and when he feels insomnia hovering in the vicinity of his couch, he calls up Philadelphia and gets the statement of receipts from his million-dollar house.

Percy Williams finds relaxation and pleasure in writing lurid melodramas which he sends on the road under an alias—beg pardon, I mean a nom de plume—and incidentally makes money with them.

J. J. Murdock, head of the Western Booking Association, goes in for amateur photography. He acquired this fad in a peculiar way. His wife (the Girl with the Auburn Hair) had been a camera fiend of long standing and likewise the butt of her husband's humor on the subject. One day when they were ascending Mt. Lowe, in Los Angeles, California, she persuaded Mr. Murdock to press the button. The pictures came out finely and Mr. Murdock was doomed from the moment he looked upon the prints. The next day he bought a ten dollar camera. It worked. The day after he gave the ten dollar camera to his sister-in-law and bought a better one for thirty-five. The third day the maid at the theatre had the ten dollar camera, sister had the thirty-five and J. J. was pressing the button on a sixty-five dollar article.

George Castle runs trotting horses and flees from vaudeville worries to smoke peacefully on a Mississippi stern-wheeler.

E. F. Albee, of the Keith forces, amuses himself drawing up elaborate plans for new theatres.

Tony Pastor, the veteran of them all, finds his respite from business cares in running Elmhurst in the way it should go. Mr. Pastor is the only man in the variety business who takes an active, personal interest in the Actors' Fund. His right hand man, Harry Sanderson, finds entertainment in running the fire department of the Jersey suburb where he resides.

Hurtig and Seamon seek relaxation in building up a summer colony for vaudeville actors in Arverne.

M. Meyerfield, Jr., head of the Orpheum circuit, seeks relaxation and rest in traveling and is especially fond of ocean voyages, while Mr. Beck, his right bower, takes infinite comfort, when his day's or rather night's work is done, in "roasting" the actors. There is nothing, from their ancestors to their acts that escapes his rapid-fire, vivid criticism. Then in the morning he goes down to the office and books them all over again.

DID HE QUIT OR WAS HE FIRED?

Billy Van, the minstrel man, who does his monologue in white face now, did not appear at Proctor's Twenty-third Street after last Monday, although booked for the week. At the theatre the information was that Van did not "make good" so was dropped after the evening performance.

Along Broadway it has been said that being dissatisfied with his position on the bill "Billy" quit. It is a matter of record that Van was number two on the programme.

There is nothing further. You may accept either version.

VARIETY

A Variety Paper for Variety People.
Published every Saturday by
THE VARIETY PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Knickerbocker Theatre Building,
New York City.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Annual $2
Foreign 3
Six and three months in proportion.
Single copies five cents.
Variety will be mailed to a permanent address or as per route, as desired.

ADVERTISING RATES ON APPLICATION.

First Year. No. 1.

VARIETY in its initial issue desires to announce the policy governing the paper.

We want you to read it. It will be interesting if for no other reason than that it will be conducted on original lines for a theatrical newspaper.

The first, foremost and extraordinary feature of it will be FAIRNESS. Whatever there is to be printed of interest to the professional world WILL BE PRINTED WITHOUT REGARD TO WHOSE NAME IS MENTIONED OR THE ADVERTISING COLUMNS.

"ALL THE NEWS ALL THE TIME" and "ABSOLUTELY FAIR" are the watchwords.

The news part of the paper will be given over to such items as may be obtained, and nothing will be suppressed which is considered of interest. WE PROMISE YOU THIS AND SHALL NOT DEVIATE.

The reviews will be written conscientiously, and the truth only told. If it hurts it is at least said in fairness and impartiality.

We aim to make this an artists' paper; a medium; a complete directory; a paper to which anyone connected with or interested in the theatrical world may read with the thorough knowledge and belief that what is printed is not dictated by any motive other than the policy above outlined.

WE WANT YOU FOR A SUBSCRIBER. If you don't read VARIETY you are missing something.

Do you want to read a paper that's honest from the title page to its last line? That will keep its columns clean of "wash notices." That WILL NOT BE INFLUENCED BY ADVERTISING? That's VARIETY.

To insure you receiving VARIETY REGULARLY, send in your subscription now. You will find it coming to you regularly to any permanent address given, or "as per route."

The only positive way to get VARIETY is to subscribe for it NOW.

This paper is for variety and variety only in the broadest sense that term implies.

Is honesty the best policy? VARIETY will give the answer in its fifty-first number.

The recent reversal of a lower court decision by the Appellate Term of the Supreme Court in this city where the question as to an artist's right of recovery under what is known as a "Sunday" contract was involved is an important question. The Appellate Term in its findings said that the artist could not recover, having contracted to give an illegal performance, thereby nullifying the contract in its entirety.

The Supreme Court is popularly supposed to dispense good law, so that decision may be accepted as final in so far as the strict interpretation of the law is concerned. But the wording of the contract which the court had before it must also be considered.

If the contract mentioning Sunday by name or date read in the usual form, as it is supposed it must have, there was no distinction made as to what kind of a performance the artist was to participate in. On the theory that if a performance is allowed by the law or police on Sunday, it is a legal performance, and therefore the artist is not committing an illegal act in taking part, the agreement to take part in that performance would be legal provided the artist insisted that "Sacred Concert" be inserted in his contract.

Another and more plausible way of getting around the question, however, and one which would protect both the artist and manager, would be for the contract to read the full agreed price for the week (6 days), with a memorandum or separate agreement wherein the artist agreed in consideration of the payment of the price contracted for, he would give his services, without charge, to the manager on a certain Sunday in such manner as the manager may direct.

Under such an agreement, the manager would not be obliged to pay the artist the contract price until he fulfilled the Sunday date. The two agreements could not be classed as one, and the validity of either would not be affected.

Dave Robinson, the hustling manager of the Alhambra, did good work this week for his house and in behalf of Smaun Sing Hpoo, "the Little Black Man," who is playing there. After each performance, Mr. Robinson caused the little fellow to be placed in the window of the box office, which he hardly fitted. The theatre emptying at the time caused a congestion in the lobby and street, well advertising the bill for the week.

The Sunday night vaudeville performance at the Casino may be seen for $1 hereafter, commencing to-morrow night, instead of the regular theatre price as heretofore charged for these performances. B. A. Myers, the booking agent, was insistent upon this point, and finally induced the Schuberts to see the advantage of a popular scale.

Paul Durand, formerly in the office of the Marinelli agency, is no longer connected there. Mr. Durand left an aching void, always having had the details of the business at his finger tips.

Nicholas E. Kaufman, who was appointed executive for the Artisen Loge for this country upon Willy Zimmerman leaving for a tour, left for Europe last week. A new executive now reigns.

A report has it that James H. Moore cleared $165,000 net (not "nit") at his Temple Theatre in Detroit last season. It seems too much to be true.

B. A. Myers expects soon to have in full blast a Connecticut circuit. On Monday night the first of the chain at Hartford (Hartford Opera House) will open under his management in opposition to Poli's in that city.

Thompson & Dundy provide each foreign act brought over with return tickets on the understanding they shall work no other place while here. The majority do not have occasion for the return part of the transportation.

Richard Pitrot, who has made a very long stay on the other side, is expected back in a couple of months or less. Charles Bornhaupt, who is also over there, will sail for home about Jan. 4.

Nanon Jacques, a vocalist who has made infrequent appearances in the vaudevilles, announces that she will head a new act around February that will be a startler. It is understood that Henry W. Savage made an extremely advantageous offer to Miss Jacques for a three years' contract. Nanon's father insisting upon accompanying his daughter during her travels spoiled her prospects in that direction.

A story goes about James T. Powers that while booked to play the Amphion, was asked to cancel the engagement. Powers replied, "No, sir. I have given my word and I wouldn't break it for $10,000."

Notwithstanding previous reports, William Morris will not book exclusively for W. T. Grover's houses after January 1. Mr. Grover running three acts at his New Imperial (old Montauk) in Brooklyn before the stock company commences work caused the sparks to fly off the edge of the negotiations.

One of the burning questions of the minute is: "Did Martin Beck stop in Texas on his way from New Orleans to San Francisco?" There has recently been established in Texas the Majestic Circuit, controlled by the Interstate Amusement Company. These ten-cent houses would give the performer a number of additional weeks down South if his salary was small enough to enable him to take the headline salary of the lesser places and terms might be advantageously arranged. The probabilities are, however, that the Orpheum people will not bother with the lesser fry, though the ten-cent house is becoming more or less of a feature in the West and Southwest, and, as McIntyre and Heath have it, he "did not even hesitate."

The Chicago managers like to travel. Martin Beck is probably back in Chicago after a trip over the Orpheum Circuit, and Mr. Middleton has just returned from a ten-day trip to French Lick Springs. Early in January George Castle will start on a three weeks' trip to California, and John Murdock will go somewhere sometime when he is a little less busy with office affairs than he is at present. His current trips are as far as Schlessinger & Mayer's for planked whitefish.

Alfred Meers, the English wire walker, met up with a new word the other day. He used it in an advertisement and then casually mentioned the expression to a friend. "What does 'mot' mean?" he asked in a broad accent. It was explained that it meant a clever saying. "That can't be the word then," he declared. "It's one that means a silly fellow. It's spelled m-u-t-t." When it was broken to him that a mutt was slang for a small yellow dog with a scandal in his family, Meers changed his advertisement to read "a chump in vaudeville," and he got the change in just in time to save himself from being classed with the other dog acts.

PROCTOR'S EXTRAORDINARY DEMAND.

F. F. Proctor, the vaudeville manager with a circuit embracing Albany and Troy, has caused quite a stir among artists through his demand that his contracts be lived up to according to the Proctor construction; which is without any regard to the rights of the artists in the matter.

Were the artists in this country properly organized, an indignation meeting would have been held ere this. As it is the members of the International Artisten Loge of Germany, who are now playing over here, have had a conference on the subject and the matter has gone to the German head in Berlin.

The trouble arose over Sunday performances. In New York city the Proctor houses have Sunday performances. Performances on this day are not permitted in the up-the-State houses. Artists who were booked for the week at Albany and Troy were notified, after contracts were signed, that they would be expected to play one of the New York, theatres of the circuit designated by the Proctor management on the Sunday following the closing up the State.

The artists objected strongly. Not alone was it not so mentioned in the contract, but Mr. Proctor generously offered only one fare to each act. It was pointed out that their services on a Sunday in New York city were of value and no provision had been made for that in the Proctor demand. Some were willing to play New York the Sunday preceding their opening at Albany or Troy, but not following.

They were given the alternative of acceding or being cancelled over the circuit. Paul Sandor, a foreign animal act, was notified after contracts were signed, to play Albany three days, Troy three days and New York Sunday night. Mr. Sandor replied tartly to Mr. Proctor, saying he had not contracted to play "by the day," and unless his contract was fulfilled, he would institute suit under it. He was told to play as originally agreed.

Nicholas E. Kaufman, the new executive of the Artisten Loge in this country, left for Germany last Saturday, and will present what the members here consider a gross imposition, in strong language, to the home body for its action.

Fynes and Proctor Part.

The important item of the week's gossip has been the probable plans of J. Austin Fynes, who resigned his position as general manager for F. F. Proctor two weeks ago. Mr. Fynes said at that time that he would shortly announce his future plans, but he is not yet ready to make any statement.

This much may be definitely stated. His new connection will include both dramatic and variety performances. Mr. Fynes' wide knowledge of plays and players will doubtless be turned to good advantage in the formation of stock companies. It is a fact that the stock companies of the Proctor houses were never better administered than when Mr. Fynes gave the matter his personal attention, and it is to be anticipated that the new announcement will be along the lines of a stock company with a variety bill preceding the performance, in accordance with what is generally known as the "Chicago plan." Of this matter Mr. Fynes refuses to speak, contenting himself with the statement to intimates that he will shortly have interesting announcements to make.

Mr. Fynes' departure from Proctor's was not much of a surprise to his intimate friends, for it has been to them no secret that for more than a year past the relations between Mr. Proctor and Mr. Fynes over the matter of policy were somewhat strained.

Mr. Proctor, upon his return from his Western trip, something more than a year ago, decided that bigger bills and a more important stock company would work to his advantage. Mr. Fynes was not in harmony with the idea of $1,000 leading men and women and $3,500 variety bills, and as his arrangement with Mr. Proctor called for a percentage of the net yearly profits, he apparently considered that he had some reason to demand consideration in the matter.

Matters appeared to have culminated recently, for Mr. Fynes has amicably retired. As his contract had not actually expired, it is to be presumed that he gave up the position because the new project appealed to him more strongly, and it is not unlikely that by next week an announcement of importance will be made.

Mr. Fynes, through his long newspaper career as a dramatic writer, is one of the best posted men in the theatrical business, and this knowledge will be put to good use.

As to the much discussed question: "Who will be his successor?" this newspaper is in a position to state with absolute accuracy that there will be none. Mr. Proctor himself made that statement early last week to several of his acquaintances, and strengthened his declaration by officially repeating it to all his resident managers at the first "council meeting" held by them after Mr. Fynes' retirement. The resident managers were told by their employer that each of them would hereafter be held strictly responsible for the success or failure of his house; that the position of general manager had been abolished, and that the duties and responsibilities formerly "passed up" to the "G. M." would hereafter be performed by the "G. O. M." himself.

This announcement was received with sedate, almost mournful, silence by at least two of the resident managers who may be said to have "had hopes." It is no secret that Mr. George Edward Graham, late of Albany, had for some time dreamed of an ultimate elevation to Mr. Fynes' post, although that dream never seemed to have inspired Mr. Graham's employer. It has been whispered, since Mr. Proctor's emphatic announcement of his intentions, that Mr. Graham is again seen in the company of politicians of high standing, and that if he can eventually "land" a government job with a good salary and easy working hours he will "grab it quick."

The other and perhaps more natural aspirant for the vacant chair was—and possibly though hopelessly still is—Mark A. Luescher. His boom, prior to Mr. Proctor's declaration, had been skilfully engineered in the newspapers and in general theatrical circles. Mr. Luescher is young, shrewd and energetic. He is the only Proctor employee permitted to have outside interests ("Le Domino Rouge," for example), while still working for Mr. Proctor. Those who know his restless ambition predict that he will find it more profitable to go into business on his own account than to remain in a subordinate position at Proctor's. That he was bitterly disappointed by Mr. Proctor's action is conceded by his intimates.

"SHEP" FRIEDMAN AND "BILL" LEWIS.

Sheppard S. Friedman is well and favorably known as a newspaper man. William H. Lewis has some similar fame.

At one time in the not long distant past, when Mr. Friedman recognized "Bill" as his "boss," while on the staff of a daily newspaper of this city, throughout which at present the Lewis family predominates, "Shep" was given a hurry assignment to cover a murder story.

The assignment happened just in the midst of a serious argument between Mr. Friedman and his superior, relative to a raise of $5 weekly, to which Mr. Lewis, as the superior, strenuously objected.

Friedman went out on the assignment, however, subject to a future adjustment of the money proposition. While on the way, some friends insisted that he dine with them. The dinner extended to such a late hour that it was useless for "Shep" to report back to the office, the paper having gone to press, so under the circumstances, he decided rather than to be "fired" as a delinquent, he would "quit" without notice.

Wandering around Broadway for two or three days without hearing anything, he finally met "Bill," who said: "What's the matter?" "Oh, you know," Mr. Friedman replied, expecting to get a toasting for not reporting back on the assignment. "Well," answered Mr. Lewis, "if that $5 is all that's keeping you away, you had better come back to work."

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING.

The evaporation of Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall in Harlem, following the opening of Williams' Alhambra around the corner, hasn't occurred up to date. And when it is further said that the Music Hall is now actually drawing more patronage than at this time one year ago, before the Alhambra was its opposition, an explanation will be demanded by the predicting wiseacres who fell decidedly short.

The logical explanation is simple and harks back to the day of the Circle as a vaudeville house. When Percy Williams conducted that composite theatre at the lower entrance to the Park, it was the strongest opposition Hurtig & Seamon had, although situated some four miles further downtown.

The business of the Music Hall was affected to an appreciable extent by it, but this firm has not the capacity to compete with larger houses or more expensive bills. Also saddled with the added disadvantage of being an "upstairs" house, it was freely opinionated that the doom of the Hall would be sealed upon the entrance of the Alhambra into the field.

Meanwhile Williams secured the Colonial, discontinuing the Circle for vaudeville, trusting thereby to divert the latters' clientele intact to the new venture. It was found necessary, however, to build up a patronage for the new house, as most of the former Harlem patrons of the Circle commenced to circulate, dropping in anywhere that promised a good show—having been educated to recognize one—with the assistance of the Subway.

The underground mode of rapid transit whirls your Harlemite downtown in no time, and he was "downtown." All vaudeville houses between Fourteenth and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth streets were easy of access and often visited.

Presently the "sameness" of most of the shows in town began to pall. A bill at the Colonial one week would be found in its entirety at the Alhambra two weeks hence, while the bills at Hammerstein's and Proctor's Twenty-third and Fifty-eighth street houses always had a familiar sound. The tangle became so involved that it seemed as though a portion of every show you had seen was playing at some house. The starting point of an act could not be conveniently located, and even so, that discovery was clouded by the multiplicity of other acts in conjunction which had already been dodged for five or six weeks.

The matter became complex, and how to see a vaudeville show above Fourteenth street that was new or at least seemed so was quite a serious question. This condition tended to restrict the vaudeville going public to its own localities. Consequently a bill promising some variety, if not novelty, was sought.

In the Harlem section the rebound was in favor of Hurtig & Seamon's. The realization came that a show there did not contain names that had been continuously flaunted in the newspapers and on the bill boards for weeks.

It is a matter of booking alone. The Alhambra, Colonial, Proctor's Twenty-third and Fifty-eighth and Hammerstein's are booked through the office of William Morris. Without reflecting leastwise upon Mr. Morris or his manner of conducting business, the condition is apparent. Anxiety to furnish the best always gives the same often, and satiates rather than satisfies.

The Business of Song-Writing.

BY WILL D. COBB.

I am a song writer, with both hands raised. May I speak? Why is it that ever and anon some self-styled and erroneously-labeled "critic" dips his sarcastic Spencerian in the jealous jet of human unkindness and criticises a calling he wots not of? It is of him I would speak, for I am a song writer. I have rhymed "love" with "stove," "baby" with "lady," and have not been ashamed to take money for it. Of all the reviews, printed comments, or alleged "write-ups" on song writing in the magazines or the daily press, I have yet to read an article written by a man or woman who knows the song business. There are scores of writers to-day taking jealous jabs at the successful "songsmith," who would gurgle with glee at the merest prospect of having a song of their own composition accepted by one of the music publishers. I wrote "Good-Bye Dolly Gray," and received $6,000 for it; "Good-Bye Little Girl" netted me $7,500. A writer on one of the evening papers recently ridiculed the sameness of these two songs. I put that "sameness" in the second song because I wanted a sameness in the money I received.

One of my latest songs, "Good-Bye, Sweet Marie," has the same sameness, and so far the same sort of money in royalties is rolling in. Believe me when I tell you the song writer is the highest paid man for his writings in the world. The chances are open to all. The public wants songs and is willing to pay for them. Try to write one. No, I am not laughing. A baseball writer on a morning paper foolishly frittered away a column of valuable space recently endeavoring to burlesque popular songs and their authors. Indignantly mentioning the article to a fellow song writer a day or so later, I was amused to hear my confrere reply, "That's peculiar, for it was only yesterday he was seeking my assistance, seriously intending becoming a song writer himself."

The music publisher is pestered daily by writers of "higher class poetry" who, allured by the mirage of "paydirt," fall from their perch on high and offer him a few little things they have "just dashed off." One poet out of a hundred can write a popular song, but it has been shown and proven that song writers who write hits can nearly all write poetry. But why should they? If there were a great demand for cotton goods on the market and silk had gone entirely out of vogue, would you admire the exhibition of "gray matter" displayed by a manufacturer who kept his mills running for silk? How many writers, Mr. Critic, do you suppose would refrain from adopting a certain highly paid for style of writing if they could "make good?" I believe, and I believe that the public believes, the paper and magazine critics' caustic comments on successful song writers savor strongly of sour grapes.

"Skigle," the Youngest Critic in the World, Expresses His Opinion of the Bill at Hurtig & Seamon's. Likes Everything but the Ginger Ale.

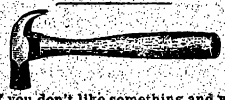
("Skigle" is a boy, seven years old. Having been a constant attendant at vaudeville theatres since the age of three, he has a decided opinion. "Skigle's" views are not printed to be taken seriously, but rather to enable the artist to determine the impression he or his work leaves on the infantile mind. What "Skigle" says is taken down verbatim.)

"They had a dandy moving picture there. ('The Train Wreckers'; Hurtig & Seamon's, Sunday afternoon, December 11.) They put logs on the track and the girl took off a red dress and kept waving it until the train stopped and then all the people got off and shook her hand and then the train goes on and then the train robbers get sore and put the girl on the track and then go away on a hand-car and then the girl is picked up by the fireman, I guess, and then the engine starts after the robbers. They catch up and shoot them and all get killed. It was a peach picture all right, but it always takes so long before the moving pictures come.

"The first act was all right. (The Maxsmith Duo.) Two fellows stand on ladders without holding and tries to light a cigar. They try to get together and then cakewalk and then he takes off everything from the ladder except a stick and dances 'Yankee Doodle.' It was all right.

"I liked the last act. (Harper, Desmond and Bailey.) Two girls and a colored man. One in white (mulatto). They danced and sang but I forgot the songs they sang.

"The two children were all right. (The Two Pucks.) They came out in Scotch dresses and sang and danced. That's all I liked in the show.



"I liked that fellow that talked about the Rough Riders and his horses. (Pete Baker.) I can't tell what he said, I forget and that's all I liked in the show. And I liked that other sketch of the Brooklyn Bridge. (Charles Sabine and company.) It's a good sketch. Three boys and a girl and a man. They hide behind barrels and then they hit the man in the eye. You see the houses on the other side in Brooklyn and there's a moon. Tommy has no home so they sleep on barrels.

"That other sketch was fair. (Billee Taylor, 'Wanted: A Stenographer.') One of the girls had a wig with blond hair and the fellow gets a watch with dynamite in it and tells the girl to run because when it is eleven o'clock the old man is going to get it. That's all I liked.

"Those musicians were good. (Waterbury Brothers and Tenney.) He comes in on a trunk with a sail on and takes two bottles for a looking glass (binoculars) and then he takes a sprinkler and then a blower and then he blows the trunk away. That colored fellow puts $2 up so high the short man can't reach it and then he says 'I win' because he can reach a higher note on his trombone than the other fellow can.

"That crazy sketch was all right but the girl hollered so loud. (Atlanta Spencer and company, 'Mr. and Mrs. Nagg.') I liked the whole show.

"I had some ginger ale during intermission and it was rotten."

If you don't like something and want to tell about it, send it here if you think it will interest others. Variety does not assume paternity for any opinions expressed in this column. Items will be printed (if not libelous) whether we agree with the statements or not. It is desired to make this the artists' forum.

Sir.—Permit me in congratulating you upon the idea of Variety, and while wishing you the greatest of success, to use your journal for advancing a proposition to the variety actors of America. Briefly it is that we organize ourselves into an order similar to the International Actors' Association of Europe, a body that has done more than everything else to give us a reputable standing in society and mutual protection for the good performer and the good manager. In short, it ensures what President Roosevelt terms "a square deal."

This society shall admit only performers of recognized merit and good character. There shall be regular assessments and initiation fee to insure a fund, and the best qualified members shall be elected to the executive offices.

Its operation would be manifold. For instance, if a performer has grievance against a manager, or vice versa, the matter is brought before the executive board. If they cannot bring about an agreement, it shall then go to a committee of members and managers, equal in number, whose decision shall be final. You can see, I hope, how this method would settle many cases amicably that, if brought to court, would cost greatly and arouse animosities that might never be overcome.

Furthermore, with a benefit fund, performers could be aided at times when a little help means a great deal. Survivors of deceased performers could be assisted—indeed, there is no end to the efficacy of such an order.

With its benefits the order must also have a penalizing plan to expel or punish members who violate contracts or otherwise act in a manner unbecoming to a society of ladies and gentlemen. These ideas are not experimental. They have been developed in the European society and the same can be done here.

Yours truly,
WILLY ZIMMERMANN.

Editor Variety.

Sir.—Why is it that the managers always howl for new acts and new faces and novelty, when it is right at hand if they would take the time to investigate? After being away from New York a year it would seem likely that upon returning with an entire change of act the manager would at least give consideration instead of that old gag. Why is it? Do you know?

IN THE OLDEN DAYS

Reminiscences of the Early Days of Variety by the Veteran Manager and Professor, Nick, Norton.

NUMBER ONE.

NOTE.—There is probably no one now engaged in the vaudeville with the exception of Tony Pastor, who possesses as wide a knowledge of the variety business than Nick Norton, who gave up professional work to associate himself with the managerial end and who for several years has been a valued member of the Hyde & Behman forces. Mr. Norton has kindly consented to give some of his recollections for the benefit of Variety. The series will be continued in subsequent issues. A picture of Mr. Norton appears in the upper left hand corner of the title page.

"I guess all of us boys were attracted to the theatre," said Mr. Norton in his office in Hyde & Behman's Adams Street Theatre in Brooklyn the other afternoon. "I was intended for a printer and had been apprenticed to the Detroit Tribune. That was in 1859, and among the other 'devils' were three of the MacCelnnell boys, including Will MacConnell, who died the other day. Charles and Joseph. Joe died shortly after the war from a disease contracted in the army, but Charles is still alive and in the drug business. He was with Haverly in the days of the latter's startling success, but is practically out of theatricals now.

As there were but four matinees a year in those days, Christmas, New Years, the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, it was easy enough to fill a job in the theatre as assistant flyman, and after a day in the office I would go over to the Metropolitan Theatre and put in an evening pulling on the ropes.

"It was not a variety house, but a stock, playing all of the stock stars who traveled about the country. After a while I got so that they would let me come downstairs and fill out in the farces used as afterpieces, and it was a natural result that I decided to become a specialist.

"The banjo was my first love, and for six months I strummed away under a local teacher. Then I decided that singing should be added to my accomplishments, and for three years my teacher labored with me. At the end of that time he gave up in disgust and advised me to try something in which I should not be called upon to sing.

"The first thing I saw was a trapeze act, and I decided that Fate had placed me on earth to become a trapeze performer, largely because a trapeze performer is not called upon to sing. I rigged up the swings in the flies over the paint frame and put in every minute I could on the bars. I was getting so that I could make the leaps very well when one morning I slipped and landed on the paint table.

"I landed on top of the sheet iron stove in the centre of the table used to keep the glue liquid. There was no fire in the stove, but the impact was sufficient to smash it and to add to my discomfiture I overturned the huge pans of paint. When I struggled to my feet Joseph's coat of many colors was a somber hued garment in comparison. I slipped out of the theatre unperceived and so escaped the scene painter's wrath, but that ended my aspiration toward aerial flights.

"Then came Silas D. Baldwin, who in the summer traveled with Robinson & Lake's Circus (the original of the famous John Robinson show, and from the wings I watched his juggling.

"That is what I want, I told myself. I do not have to sing and I stay on the floor.

"I began to practice, and from Henri Augoust (father of the famous Augoust family) I learned other tricks. The foreman of the printing office objected to my practicing with types and other furnishings of the shop, and before my time was out he informed me that he thought I never would make a good printer and that he had his doubts about the juggling, but thought I had better take chances with the latter.

"My chance came in '63 at a benefit to Tom Vance, a popular comedian, and brought a traveling engagement. A theatrical man by the name of McMurty came along with a band of Indians for the old Barnum Museum. He was ahead of his engagement and he and the proprietor of the theatre formed the scheme of taking the troupe through Michigan playing the fairs.

"In addition to McMurty and his Indians there was a man to act as doorkeeper and myself. We played in a tent through the day and in the evening at whatever corresponded to the town hall.

"The programme was a lengthy one, being opened by the Indians in a war dance. My juggling was the second number, and for the third feature there was another dance. I came on after this in light and heavy balancing, and after that there was a third dance.

"This gave me time to change to a Dutch costume, and in spite of what my teacher had told me I came out and sang 'Fighting Mit Siegel,' then a popular comic war song. A dance followed this, and then I came on in cork and sang. There was more dancing and I came on to do the 'Essence.'

"During the next dance McMurty (who sold tickets) relieved the doorkeeper, who blacked up and went on with me in a banjo specialty, and after another dance by the Indians, we two did an afterpiece, 'Stocks Up and Stocks Down,' which is still in use; being the one in which a chair turned down affords a safe or risky support, according to which end you sit upon.

"The tour of the troupe came to an abrupt close at Pontiac, Mich. The day performance had been concluded, and the tent was already at the railroad station. The Indians were to give a performance in the evening, however, in the Opera House.

"After supper, the Indians secured a supply of liquor somewhere, and, possibly with a view to preventing the performance, threw the benches out of the Opera House and wrecked the stage.

"I carried my box of traps down to the train, checked that and the canvas to Detroit, and so ended my first theatrical tour.

"For this I drew $15 a week and my board, and that was not such a small salary for those days at that. I remember paying John T. Kelly $35, in a later day, though I paid him $600 lately.

Shows of the Week

RE.—ROBERTS.

Variety gossip the past few weeks has been busy with the rumor that the secret of the quick changes made by R. A. Roberts, who opened at the Colonial week before last, and who is now playing at the Orpheum in Brooklyn, was a double. It was pointed out that Mr. Roberts not only masked the entire stage with black cloth, but was most exacting in his demand that not even the stage hands should be permitted to look on.

Mr. Roberts' changes are so remarkably complete that there was some ground for the suggestion, so far as those who were on the stage was concerned, but while Mr. Roberts' changes are far more elaborate than those done by Fregoli and other protean artists, there is no need of a dummy, nor would the employment of such a device serve, since the act is virtually a succession of monologues broken by changes to the character of an old hag which serves to save time.

The play recites the story of the events preceding Dick Turpin's ride to York and the attempt to capture him in a London tavern frequented by the highwayman. There is an entirely useless Yorkshire type brought in to show Mr. Roberts' proficiency in dialect work and to provide him with an opportunity for an elocutionary effort; a woman supposed to be in love with the highwayman, a Bow street "runner" and the hag already mentioned.

This latter is made the medium for some of the most nauseating business ever done in variety. Mr. Roberts argues that it is all a part of the character; wherein he errs. Unalloyed vulgarity is not essential to the depiction of a character. If Mr. Roberts believes the opposite to be the case he should cut the character out. Some of his performances left the audiences stunned and gasping.

The various monologues which go to make up the thirty-five minutes' offering are all too long and the speeches of both Turpin and the rural character could be cut with decided profit.

Mr. Roberts gives a performance remarkable alike for the rapidity and completeness of the changes and the nauseating qualities of his comedy. The elimination of the latter would leave him a great artist. He should get sense and realize that he is not now appealing to the type of English Music Hall audience to whom catarrhal comedy seems humorous. In cutting he should also cut about ten minutes of talk.

WILL WILLIAMS QUIT?

The rumor is current that next season Bert Williams, of Williams and Walker, will offer himself as a monologue entertainer. There is said to be some feeling between the two members of the team, and Williams is reported to feel that he would fare better alone. It was impossible to verify the story, but some such development may be looked for before the opening of next season.

ORPHEUM.

Minstrels are the long suit at the Orpheum Theater this week, where Weyburn's Minstrel Misses and the Crane Brothers in their "Mudtown Minstrels" are two of the attractions after R. A. Roberts, whose performance is recorded elsewhere. The Weyburn act is almost a parody of the well drilled performance which, a couple of years ago, scored a hit on the New York roof. Some of the girls still require to be personally conducted by the more experienced members, and there is a lack of the smart uniformity which usually marks the Weyburn acts. Also there is entirely too much of Bertie Herron. Having learned that she was funny she has ceased to possess humor and becomes merely tiresome. The act is rounding into shape and perhaps in a few more weeks will be right. It appears to have been put together too quickly. The Cranes need a little more new material to freshen the performance, but their funny idea of a minstrel show is something a man may laugh at without a sense of shame. It is clean and real fun, lacking only novelty. The Three Meers offer some capital wire walking, much of which is lost to sight in the comedy matter in which it is enveloped. Alfred Meers offers some really novel "catches" and proves himself a comedian. Both the comedy and wire tricks are entirely different from those shown the last time they were here. The Dalton Brothers, a trio of head and hand balancers, spoil many good tricks by a very inferior comedy parade. They would do better did they drop their comedy and offered their act as a straight performance. Alcide Capitaine showed some splendid tricks on the trapeze, but spoiled the effect by appearing to sulk when the audience did not show proper appreciation. The De Witts are out of place here. There is nothing to the act to commend it save Mr. De Witt's diminutive stature, and his repetition of the few eccentric wriggles (they cannot be called by any other name) become tiresome and almost offensive. Binns and Binns have one new seltzer siphon trick that is good. They have some other new work, but when the comedian sought to waken his foot with an alarm clock, the clock went on strike through sheer shame on Monday. It makes a good laughing act and their selections of musical number are well made, even though they do hold to the "Miserere." The Italian Trio sing operatic and classical selections very well and head off further encores with one of those Italian comic songs that suggest an epileptic fit. They get plenty of applause before that, and score a success well down on the bill. The moving pictures held a large share of the audience.

Alexander Steiner will leave for Europe in April to engage acts for the Roof Garden season for the places controlled by Louis Werba, of the New York and New Amsterdam roofs. He will remain abroad for some time.

HAMMERSTEIN'S.

Apart from Tod Sloan (see New Acts), the feature of the show at Hammerstein's this week is the fact that Arthur Dunn is not shot off his piano stool. The trap room space does not permit the working of this time honored trade mark, and, as Mr. Dunn appears to have lost the yellow mat used in his Paderewski imitation, he has left only his queer "pants" and his act. He made an impromptu hit Monday afternoon by sitting down upon a table which promptly collapsed. He should keep it in the act. He needs something new. Matthews and Ashley made one of the real hits of the bill with their Chinatown dream. The coachman would show to better advantage if he did not labor under the delusion that to stoop over when he walks is making a character bit out of his work. He would fare better did he work naturally. They have a lot of good parody material and make most of their hit with this. They have improved greatly of late. Capital hand and head balancing is shown by the Darros Brothers, who are recent arrivals. The head balancing upon the trapeze is quite the best thing of its sort shown here, and in their preliminary ground work they also show some good tricks. Bailey and Austin would do well to work on their act. The newcomer (Austin) does not work with sureness, and leaves the general impression of carelessness. It would seem that he is too certain of his success. Barrows and Lancaster still have "Tactics," which appears to have lost none of its old appeal. The new ingenue has a bad habit of talking at the audience instead of to the persons on the stage whom she is supposed to be addressing. The sketch moved briskly and earned several curtain calls. Mr. Lancaster plays with greater authority than he did, to the great benefit of the general effect. Genaro and Bailey had their dialogue amputated, which makes a variety act of their alleged sketch and, while it does not give them time to catch their breath until the end of their performance, the greater smartness of effect is worth the effort. Abd'el Kader and his three wives (two of whom are said to be his sisters-in-law) make their last appearance here before returning to Europe. The painting is scarcely good enough to make an act, but did well enough in the second place on the programme. Sailor and Barbaretto replaced Murphy and Francis, who decided that they were too good to open the show. The singers took the place and made a hit in spite of the handicap. Miss Barbaretto should be urged not to overwork her face. A little facial expression goes a long way and a lot becomes interminable. The girl with the eyes song is scarcely a fair exchange for the pajama girl. The act needs to be strengthened. Pictures, of course, and good ones.

At the request of Pitrot and Girard, Director Steiner, of the Berlin Wintergarden, has set back the time of Paul Conchas that he may accept contracts offered him in this country.

ALHAMBRA.

Possibly a political pull is exerted to keep the Alhambra open this week. Anyway, one may bet upon the red or the black, the same as at Monte Carlo. Le Domino Rouge is red and odd and Williams and Walker are black and even. Those sitting down front can appreciate the thoughtfulness of Le Domino Rouge. A near view of the lower part of her face makes one joyed that the upper half is shut from view. She is a clever dancer, but the impression is created that she is no raving beauty. She is said to be La Belle Dazie, better known abroad than here, though she is the pupil of a New York dancing master and was taken abroad with one of the Lederer shows. She is a capital toe dancer, and for those who like that sort of torture dance, she is very satisfactory. The mirrors she uses are an old story. They were first shown at Keith's theatre some eight years ago by Arnold Grazer, a California artist. They do not contribute to the effect of the dance, neither does the use of the Shetland ballet add much to the value of the act. The feature is really the mask. Williams and Walker—with more Walker than Williams—held the stage some forty minutes to do about ten minutes of real work—which is Williams' clever rendition of Nobody. The rest is a tiresome copy of the sort of act that was stale when Williams and Walker were new to New York. The last song is interminably drawn out and poorly done. However, they scored throughout. Reno and Richards have worked out the ball game idea and do well with it. It is all very foolish, but most of it is more than usually funny and they scored a hit of proportion. Van Biene plays the 'cello with a bow and much shaking of the head. Kubelik insured his hands; Van Biene his 'cello. This is well, for the 'cello is a magnificent instrument and Van Biene's bowing is no longer as strong as it should be. Still he plays with skill and musical appreciation and a programme of four short numbers was extended by three encores. A. O. Duncan was a strong hit on the early bill, Tuesday evening he had a joke based on an item in the evening papers and little of his material is of the hackneyed sort. Duncan is a comedian rather than a ventriloquist, but as a comedian he is far better than the average run of monologue people. Cecelia Weston does foul murder to Nora Bayes' nonsense song and does some other stunts in the song line. She is tiresome in the extreme because wholly lacking in cleverness. Stanley and Wilson replace Kelly and Kent. Dorris Wilson is replaced by an amateur who is a fine singer, but no actress. She should make up her hands better. They look like a washwoman's. The Eight Shetlands did three stunts. In their first song, something about a "band, band, band," they are so breathless that it sounds like a succession of damns. Smaun Sing Hpoo attracted much attention to the little he does and there was the Vitagraph.

Shows of the Week

PROCTOR'S FIFTY-EIGHTH STREET.

Paul Conchas and Adele Ritchie share the biggest and blackest type at the Fifty-eighth Street this week, but there are other pebbles on the shore—to say nothing of six or seven different distributions of gifts, from dolls for the girls at the Saturday matinee to smoking trays for the men Monday evening. Miss Ritchie's voice shows small damage from the recently announced paralysis of the vocal cords. It is at times more nasal than is approved by vocal authorities, but it is not a wreck. Miss Ritchie in her effort to convince her audience that she is not a condescending prima donna, rendering her selections in icy rigidity, goes to the other extreme and overacts. Her selections please and they are sung with excellent method. She is making good even for a large salary. Paul Conchas with his specialty more than pleased. He works to fine effect and with his capital comedy assistant makes appeal in both directions. Gillette's Dogs are as clever as ever, and the leaping dogs remain the real stars, though the pantomime draws the greater applause. Hines and Remington were a real hit with their old act freshened up with some new stuff. Earle Remington is bright, if not beautiful, and she keeps the act new, though she would confer a favor by sending the kindling wood song to a better land. Greene and Werner were explosive but good. The man appears to imagine that he can make up in volume what he lacks in quality of voice, and at times one wishes that he was further away. Greater restraint would give the act a finish it does not now possess. Eddie Girard and Jessie Gardner have changed their act about a little. Mr. Girard will never be able to get away from his Irish policeman and to some this character has become worse than tiresome, but he plays it with a finish that is rare. Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Barry are showing their "Village Cut Up" for the first time here. The would-be-wise country youth who knows all of the actresses through the pictures in the Police Gazette gives Mr. Barry a chance, but there are some jokes in the act good only to those with an intimate knowledge of show life in the small towns. The rest please city audiences, and the routine is better than the last they had. Still in the line of improvement will Mr. Barry please cut out the cheap and silly street car encore? Edestus with his balancing shows steady improvement, but is unfortunate that he has not been abroad for a couple of years. As an imported act he could command a far better program place with the same work. Trovollo's new act has a real novelty in its dancing figure. The dummy is cleverly worked and the effect is one of reality. Old jokes and stale songs hurt an ambitious offering. There were also motion pictures.

"Special announcement." Robert Grau has not had a company out for more than a week. He must be contemplating an extra large company next time.

TONY PASTOR'S.

Plenty of good acts are to be found at Pastor's this week, the top line attraction being De Witt Burns and Torrance in a pretty little act suggestive of "Babes in Toyland," but scarcely to be called a steal. It pleased much and deserved success. The extra attraction, Nan Engleton, will be found recorded in the New Act department. Jeannette Dupree, who has cut loose from burlesque companies, offers a singing specialty. Her choice of songs could be improved upon, for she takes water at the last and after having sung the praises of beer, lauds the more plebeian fluid—principally for cooking purposes. In between she sings "Jusqu'a la" from ancient days. It gives her a good song; much better than the others she sings, but with better songs and a trifle more refinement of method Miss Dupree could make a hit of size and length. A sketch of the sort Marie Stuart plays might prove effective if she can forget the Australian Burlesquers and similar offenses. Kine and Gotthold sadly need a new sketch. This one they have has been pretty well worked out. It still seems to please, but a Pastor audience is famous for its loyalty to favorites. Reidy and Currier are in good voice and have a splendid selection of songs. The act is a good one and they profit by not trying to make a sketch out of a singing act. Newell and Niblo do good work on the xylophones and better playing on saxaphones, specializing these two instruments. Incidentally they do not play an overture on the xylophones, preferring to make up a medley of various bits. In truth they are friends of humanity. Harry B. Lester fared well with some imitations and winds up the first section of the programme. The lesser acts are less successful. Nibbe and Bordeau show a skit which is a hash of dialect. Mr. Nibbe would do better to stick to one character instead of showing how many types he could play if he had time. It suggests a one man opera without a change of costume. The Paragon Trio offer some dancing of a sort and some talk that might as well be forgotten. Le Clair and West are an accident rather than an act. Frank Elmo narrowly escapes having a good act. He is a trifle too fond of mechanical magic, and there is a lack of cohesion. No matter how much the young woman who assists him desires to sing, she should not be permitted to. Even were she a better singer, a solo is out of place in a magical specialty. Kitty Hart is notable rather for her enunciation than her singing. You can actually tell what she is singing about. There are pictures at both ends of the bill. Mike Bernard should be given a solo. He is really one of the permanent attractions.

Geo. M. Cohan is supposed to have written Tod Sloan's monologue. If he did, he isn't bragging about it.

DEWEY.

Changes have come on the burlesque stage in the past few years. A couple of years ago a show played without obscenity and with very little vulgarity would be the talk of the season. Now the shows are pretty fairly decent, and the Tiger Lilies at the Dewey this week offer a crude brand of farce and split skirts instead of full tights and slapstick comedy. The first part, "The Disputed Check," is a condensation of a farce called "Two Jolly Rovers" (though Dan Gracey says he wrote it) and the afterpiece recalls "The Strategists," "A Hot Old Time" and numerous other offerings. The humor of the latter—such as it is—lies in the pranks of a young male person who in turn makes up as his own father and the parent of his fiancee. It is a somewhat crude effort but pleases. The chorus is not smart working, though both the stage manager and the musical director appear to have been hard at work upon the troupe. The costuming is very poorly done. In the olio the three La Maze Brothers calmly steal the billing of Rice and Prevost and come as close to "Bumpty Bumps" as the limited ability of the comedian will permit. They should cut it out. They could make appeal with their double table work and a more honest hit would be to their credit. There is some small proportion of acrobatic work that is good. Ada Burnett was well liked in songs. She has a compelling style and as a single act is better than when she and Dan Gracey did a sketch. Gracey confines himself to playing comedy leads in the farces, and he, too, profits by the change. The Musical Bells fall just short of being a big act. If they will work on their act they will be able to get important money. The ragtime playing shows skill and some appreciation of phrasing. They should work along this line to the exclusion of the hand bells which they use for an opener. This set of bells is in poor tune. Their concertina work was the worst thing they did. The Clarence Sisters waste valuable time with a song. There is some skipping rope and step dances which serve better but if they were really imported from Australia, as the programme would lead us to believe, it was a waste of steamer tickets. We have equally poor artists here. Zara and Stetson do some very good baton juggling, but have evidently had to cut down their act. It is as well, for a little of this sort of thing is a whole act and a lot of the same sort is a nuisance. Howell and Emerson do such good dancing that it is a pity that they have to spoil it with a lot of talking. It works out a pretty fair olio. The farces might be improved and there is plenty of room for better showing in the costumes of the chorus. There is not one single dress that will pass as good. There was a large attendance, and it is evident that with a better class of shows the Dewey is doing a much better business.

CORKS REDIVIVUS.

He was a trifle threadbare and as he stood in the doorway peering into the cafe, one might have supposed him to be some beggar debating the expedient of trying to "work" the room. The man's eye lit up and he advanced to a table with the air of one assured of a welcome. It was not the same old table, and Fritz, the fat, but human, waiter had gone to his earthly reward in the shape of an uptown all-night restaurant, but there was still some of the gang left and there were seidls, beaded with beery perspiration, on the table.

"Yes," explained the Human Corkscrew, "it's me over the home plate at last. I never did have no luck—until now," he added as the new waiter hove into the offing with a froth-topped cylinder of crystal. "It was me to the land where they fly the red, white and green flag, and it was me for the green.

"Say, down there where they manufacture 'greasers' and call them Mexicans they make you deliver the goods. If you have a three sheet with an earthquake and don't deliver a real earthquake, it's you for the jail for life or until they get tired of paying your board and take you out and shoot you. I had a three sheet of my garden of Eden at where I do a contortion act to a real Eve. Just because Eve wore a pirate suit they pinched me. It she'd been the real thing they'd have pinched me anyway. It was me in a dobe jail for two years. I just got back. When I saw the town—it was like a seidl in Sahara.

"It was me for the real papers and the first thing to hit the eye is the color line. After that sojourn with the plain gulpers I never want to see a brunette again—never again, even if it does mean a lost week. It's not a color line for me—just a horrible memory of a land where the military uniform is a pair of pants and a sword. They all of them have the sword, even the low privates.

"All the same it must gall to see some chap who might be a waiter if it wasn't for the variety stage copping the money that ought to go to us if it wasn't for the coons and the dramatic headliners. It must kinder hurt to see the black type goin' to the black man and the white man getting the yellow or mulatto end, but they seem to hit the bank roll for about all they need for crap money, while the chap with the white skin and the old act can go yell all he wants to.

"Williams and Walker pulled down $1,750 from Willie Hammerstein and $2,000 from Proctor. That's the answer. What's the question?" and Corks buried his face in the seidl of beer.

A peculiar happening of the opening night at the Hippodrome was the vicious rush from the wings of a bulldog at one of Miss Marquis' ponies during her performance. The pony struck the dog with his hoof, and then trotted around the ring with the dog after it, snapping and snarling.

Shows of the Week

HOW IT HAPPENED.

The atmosphere had a moody oppression as I slowly walked up the street. There were doubts as to my reception. The Head of the House opened the door, and in a questioning voice said:

"Do we eat?"

"Sure," says I, "I'm working now."

"Really," says she, "when did the fit come on?"

"Don't get smart," I says, sore as the devil, for I had tried hard enough.

"I'm too hungry," says she. "What are you working at, the Subway?"

"Nope," says I, trying to smile, knowing I would start something: "Vaudeville."

"Vaudeville!" she shrieked; "vaudeville! have I got to go up against that again?"

"Not necessarily," says I, "you look good at home."

"When do you commence this agony?" she says, with the edge a little taken off.

"Right away," says I, "so get your bonnet."

"Me put a hat on," says she, "to see eight acts and some animals?"

"Why the animals?" says I. "Aren't the acts enough?"

"Well, anyway," says she, "the animals don't know any better."

"True enough, wishing we were all dumb," says I.

"Want to hear a secret?" says she suddenly.

"Any news?" says I, never falling.

"It will be to you," she says.

"All right," says I, "hand it over."

"You are going to quit that job," she says.

"Who passed that out?" says I.

"Just made up my mind to it," says she.

"Then you don't eat," says I.

"Rather that than vaudeville," she says.

"Very well," says I, "come on down to the office and I'll get discharged. Did you get that?" I says.

"I did," says she. "Who's the fireman, and how'll you manage it?"

"Money?" says she. "Have you money?"

"Have I money?" I says. "Why, we can eat our heads off."

"How about a dress now and then?" says she.

"Right," says I, "you can go the limit if I hold down this job."

"It's about time," says she. "There's been long waits between square meals since I met you."

"That's the talk," says I. "You should be in charge of a suicide factory."

"Come on," she says, "you will quit that job now."

"Perfectly willing and hope you starve to death," I says, getting my hat and starting downtown.

Just before reaching Times Square she says: "If I let you work will you promise?"

"What?" says I.

"No more waking me up to tell me about a funny finish for a sketch?"

"Easy," says I, "it isn't funny any more."

"Well, then," says she, "let's go to Hammerstein's."

HYDE & BEHMAN'S.

"Old Timers" were the feature of the bill. While this is a figure of speech only in so far as it relates to Maggie Cline, still Maggie was there. As she remarked to the drummer, pointing to a diamond breastpin she wore, "Do you know why I'm working this week? To save that."

"The Evergreen" will never grow old in the hearts of the "regulars" or in the singing of Irish songs. No woman can approach her in that line, and she retains that personality which "gets" the house from her entrance.

Lew Bloom and Jane Cooper in "A Picture From Life" are going very well indeed. Bloom has brightened up his talk and sketch, and it is now a laugh producer throughout.

Lew Hawkins as a monologist depends upon your state of mind. His parodies and songs are much preferred to anything else.

Richard (Dick) Golden presents "Old Jed Prouty in Boston." "Jed" anywhere would get lost without Golden. His character work as the "Down Easter" is the maintenance of the playlet, which has no action. Ninnett Barrett, of the company, made the most favorable impression as the French maid, speaking the foreign language familiarly. Katherine Kittleman enacted the role of a wife to Whiteman Mott's husband. Miss Kittleman did not look the part at all, her husband being very young, and it militated against their scenes together, hurting the effect.

Adamini and Taylor were changed from next to last to number two on the bill. The act is a singing one, called "The Wandering Minstrels," carrying a special drop, which requires the calcium. The setting should be changed, as Miss Taylor is unable to show to advantage under soft colored lights.

The Majestic Trio is composed of the regulation colored people, two men and a woman, singing not any too new songs nor overworking in the dancing department. The funny one of the bunch has helped himself to other persons' "stuff" in plenty.

The three De Koes show good head balancing, but use pads. It is customary nowadays to wear these head pads for this style of acrobatics, but the same work, if not better, was done over forty years ago without their assistance.

Coin's dogs in a pantomime made a favorable impression. The animals do not bark during the performance and the reason ascribed therefor is that the "kiyoodles" are told before each performance that they are going to give a pantomime.

Fred Hallen and Molly Fuller in a new sketch are reviewed in New Acts.

THE HIPPODROME.

Thompson & Dundy excelled themselves on Wednesday night, when an entire new production was given without a single feature imported from their own Luna Park at "the Island."

"The Society Circus" sounds much better than the circus itself, but the spectacular ending overbalances everything else. The wonderful stage management of these immense productions here cannot but excite intense admiration, and is really more to be accounted for in the success of the Hippodrome than the performance itself.

No place of amusement has a more expensive operation on its hands in contemplating something new than the Hippodrome. It was closed for several performances prior to the first night, which meant a large financial loss, in itself, to the management, but the means were justified in the result.

Sidney Rosenfeld wrote the book of "A Society Circus," which is intelligible. Manuel Klein wrote the music, having one particularly pretty number, and the scenery was painted by Arthur Voegtlin, but Edward P. Temple managed the stage—this was the real factor of success.

The variety part of the entertainment is found in a stranded circus being helped on to prosperity by the "tainted" money of a doubtful Duchess, who engages the performers to amuse her friends at a house party.

There are nine acts and although the programme makes bold to state that they "may be seen nowhere else," five of the numbers have played about town before—the Augoust Family, Marguerite and Hanley, Caicedo, Albert Crandall and the O'Meers Sisters.

Miss Marquis and her ponies have been showing here some time. The Powell sisters in posings on horses while slowly moving is not sensational in any degree, and a poor act of its kind. The Heras Family, ground acrobats, is no more new than their acrobatic work, while the four Marnos, another ground acrobatic quartet, depend upon a seesaw board to make the throws. This was first done over here by the Joscarrys incidentally, but the Marnos depend altogether upon it. Claire Heliot and her lions have the stage to themselves. The act resembles Agie's, with a few more animals. Whereas Agie must punch the brutes to have them growl, Miss Heliot must punch very hard to induce the opening of their eyes so the meat dangling in front will be seen.

A very funny burlesque of this is given in the jungle scene, together with a good-looking lot of monkeys, led by the four Rianos, who are lost among the crowd.

Marceline and Frank Slivers Oakley, the clowns, have little opportunity and do not take advantage of that little. Slivers makes an entrance in a boat, and the idea is so obviously taken from "Fantana" that it declines to be humorous.

Those having the "Hipritis" fever will go many times, no doubt, but to the others who consider once sufficient, that will do.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S.

Bessie Clayton headed the bill which had strong opposition at the Alhambra, and in Geo. M. Cohan ("Little Johnny Jones") at the Harlem Opera House.

Miss Clayton consumed six minutes, dancing actually about three and one-half. Barring no one, she is the most marvellous American toe dancer. She opens with a song, which is excused through maximum time required. Miss Clayton gives indication of pain while on her toes, relaxing into a smile only with an effort. The audience could not get enough.

Mark Sullivan should be called an imitator rather than a monologist. He does Lew Dockstader, Willis P. Sweatnam, James Thornton, James T. Power and James McIntyre. Mr. Sullivan has a flexibility and control of voice which allows of a faithful reproduction of the tones of all, excepting Thornton. The others are all equally good. Upon his diverging into stories and recitations, he drops somewhat. "Anthony's Speech" should be cut. It is too evidently burlesque, and the imitations should be used to finish with.

John and Bertha Gleason, with Fred Houlihan at the piano, have an act that would go better if the Gleasons could discover how to go through it without singing. Neither has a voice. Each must know it. Houlihan is not a star performer on the piano. He happily fills in, however, and if the applause of the audience is appreciated each time given, Mr. Houlihan should acknowledge by rising, not retaining his seat on the stool as though it were his due.

Ray Cox is a young lady of considerable height, with an erroneous idea that the time wasted in giving imitations of soubrettes singing coon songs is well spent. It is a mistake. Miss Cox is far too clever in her delineations of the darkey to allow this to prevail, and should devote all her time to the main subject. Although badly placed on the bill, she scored largely.

The three Rio Brothers appeared in ring acrobatics, but whether the "originals" or not is undecided. There have been so many "original Rios."

Charles and Edna Harris were the first to appear. Harris is of the old team and it is judged that Edna, his present partner, must be the daughter. She is a very young girl who sings one song. Even that one is to be regretted. Miss Harris is absolutely without a suspicion of a voice. Her father, if he is that, should try some other make-up and change, just for novelty if nothing else, and also be prevented from parading the fact that the girl is not his wife. His remark that "I am no robber of cradles" is entirely uncalled for.

The orchestra at this house, led by Joe Ali, is repeatedly drowning out the music or singing of acts on the stage lately. Known as one of the best vaudeville orchestras in the city, more care should be exercised before that reputation is lost.

Wilfred Clarke in "No More Trouble" and Metcalf, Paddock and Al. Edwards in a musical act will be found reviewed in the Department of New Acts.

Shows of the Week

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE.

Wednesday afternoon the stereopticon did not open the show. Always go Wednesday afternoon. But To-To did, which is almost as cruel. How the act ever reached vaudeville is a larger mystery than the one advertised regarding the "gold brick."

Josephine Cohan was the headliner in her latest sketch, "Friday, the 13th," which four well known persons of varied talents assisted in making up. All fell down together.

Fred Niblo had a monologue which the audience liked. Niblo's method is to be commended, for you get over the old ones quickly through his rapid delivery.

Paul Barnes is another monologist. With a good voice and rather pleasant manner, it is to be devoutly wished that he never takes a partner again. All his stuff is good—so good that he should cut the songs.

Cook and Sylvia in a singing and dancing turn show fairly. The girl works, while Cook parts his hair in the middle. Mullen and Corell have some acrobatic work which is not equal to the comedy of the act.

Edward Mollenhauer is 80 years old and founded the first conservatory of music in this country, according to the programme. There is a conservatory bearing that name in Harlem. Perhaps that's it. And perhaps the management here had the idea that by engaging him all the acquaintances he has formed in the past eighty years would pack the house ten hours a day to hear Mr. Mollenhauer play his own compositions on the violin. Perhaps they have. But if so they did not get in early.

Harry Pilcer is a young man who sings and dances without much apparent experience. He has a good enough voice to take a girl partner, and clean up in the singing department for his style of act. His imitation of Geo. Nelson giving an imitation of Geo. Cohan is an awful reflection upon Mr. Nelson.

The three Madcaps and the Imperial Japanese troupe were among the many, while McKissick and Shadney, a colored team, made a hit to those in front by the woman wearing a wig. She also wore forty-three different colors in her dress. A change displayed a costume costing possibly $4.50.

Will Rogers placed the large end of a lasso wherever he liked and Parros Brothers did some hand balancing.

Mayme Remington and her pickaninnies were there. Whenever you go to the opening of a new vaudeville theatre you always find Mayme. The managers believe her a mascot, and she is always trying. May fail now and then, but continually getting out something new—excepting the "picks."

It is reported that Joe Hart, Carrie De Mar, Fred Hallen and Molly Fuller will soon join hands in a specially prepared sketch. Whether the name will again be Hallen and Hart, Hart and Hallen or something to be decided upon is not known.

COLONIAL.

Wherever Clayton White and Marie Stuart are located there you will find laughs, and in "Paris" this week there is no exception. Mr. White played the dual role in his best vein on Monday afternoon. Exclamations of "he's good" were frequent.

Miss Stuart gave her usual excellent performance, and Nellie D'Arcy as the wife interpreted the part in an intelligent manner.

Fanny Rice, her cabinet and a drop, monogramed "F. R.," were among the fortunate ones. The miniature figures pleased. An imitation of Albert Chevalier has been added, but the "baby" hit still remains the best. Miss Rice should nurse her voice. It sounds strained.

Geo. W. Day as a monologist does not seem to realize the difference between Oshkosh, Wis., and New York city. He is still talking about Rockefeller and "tainted money." His "family" talk does not send the audience into convulsions either. If Mr. Day will attempt to convey the idea he believes there is some humor, at least, in the patter, those in front may be induced to share it.

Watson, Hutchings and Edwards in "The Vaudeville Exchange" manage to have their names printed on the program twice. "And Company" is added to the title, but as the "Co." seems to be only a monkey, that invites invidious comparison. A new act or sketch is due, and it can't be accepted that Harry Watson is a real funny man until that has been accomplished. Ed. Edwards plays a critic in an almost human manner.

Chas Guyer and Nellie O'Neill are doing their "rough-house" dancing to the unmistakable delight of the public. The violent exercise is having a peculiar result on the couple. While Miss O'Neill is growing somewhat stouter, Guyer is losing. But Nellie's added avoirdupois does not appear at the extremes.

Louise Gunning is back again singing Scotch songs in a similar dress. Miss Gunning presents a very pretty picture on the stage.

The Outlaw Trio are on the bill, while Lawson and Namon in trick bicycle riding and bag punching opened it.

A review of the Military Octette will be found in the Department of New Acts.

Nella Bergen, having been thoroughly initiated into the mysteries of vaudeville, is enjoying it immensely, she says. The first week she played in the continuous she was at a complete loss to understand just why the usual agent's commission should be deducted from her weekly stipend—inasmuch as Manager H. B. Harris signed all her contracts for the first few weeks. Miss Bergen was completely innocent of the aforesaid clause, and refused to accept the money until Manager Harris came to her rescue. The singer is full-fledged now in all the intricate details of vaudeville contracts.

PROCTOR'S TWENTY-THIRD ST.

The bill is well put together, and ran through easily. The most noticeable thing in connection with it was one song, which was first parodied, then sung straight, and finally blown at you through the end of a horn in three different acts. One was ready to believe before leaving that this music publisher, whoever he is, has secured a corner.

Hayman and Franklin opened the show in what undoubtedly is presumed to be a sketch, as it is called "A Matrimonial Agency." As a matter of fact it is nothing more or less than a conversation, and more particularly "nothing."

The man attempts a Hebrew character, forgetting the dialect in the talk, and recalling it in the parodies, where it is lost. If there is any ability here, it will never be discovered in the present offering. The woman overdresses, and what is needed is revision, even if some money must be paid to secure it.

Chassino, in shadowgraphs, did many intricate figures with both hands and feet. It would be a pleasant act to sit through were it not that "Mr." Chassino needs to be cleanly shaven.

Emma Carus was number three on the programme, which speaks better for it than anything else could. Miss Carus sang five songs. She is growing careless of her voice, but does not strike the deep contralto as often as formerly. Two of her selections were good; the others indifferent. She is developing coon singing to a high degree.

"Colonel" Gaston Bordeverry shot away numberless cartridges and impressed the house as a remarkable shooter. Technically any sharpshooter can do as well. The undressing, which is the sensation of the act, is accomplished through aiming at bull-eyes placed on the woman's dress where it is to be released. The woman herself, Miss Leonie DeLausanne, is a very slim target, wearing a bow in the back of her dress to indicate where standing.

The three Keatons do a burlesque on the "Colonel." The "kid" (Buster) seems to be impromptu in several different ways, and if this be so he will grow to be a headliner alone, provided the boy remains in this division.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew gave "The Yellow Dragon," which is somewhat familiar, but was very peaceful in a desert of acts and comedy.

The sketch is good, both give a finished performance and are carrying a capable company.

Avery and Hart, two real coons of different hues, are following the footsteps of Williams and Walker, if they haven't passed them. Too much time is consumed arriving at the point, but otherwise they kill time agreeably.

Paul Sandor, a ventriloquist dog trainer, has an excellent act, introducing the dogs dressed to represent a menagerie. He is a good ventriloquist, and the act, as it now stands, is a delight for children.

THE OFFICE BOY AND THE AGENTS.

Having occasion to drop in an agent's office one day this week I was informed by the Office Boy he had "just stepped out." The Boy further informed me he would be back shortly, and politely asked me to be seated.

We were alone and after a few minutes the Boy attempting sociability said:

"Looking for a date?"

"No," I replied. "Just wanted to see the agent personally."

"Ain't you in the biz?" he inquired.

Receiving a negative reply, the Boy looked me over and said: "Well say, then, you've got a hand-shake coming to yourself, all right. This business has got everything skinned a mile I ever seen. And an agent. Nothing to it. It's soft. Know this feller well? No? You ought to. He's peaches. What gets me anyway is how the performers stand for some of these fellers.

"This one's got more people conned than anybody I was ever up against before. Why, I used to work in an office downtown and when anybody come in we were making money out of or expected to, if we didn't get busy and be polite it was the fire for us.

"But some of these agents. Fine. Wish I could do it. Treat their customers just like hogs. The only live ones to them are the managers.

"Gee, say, you won't believe this, but it goes. When I first started working for this feller he didn't have a chair in his outside office. Let all the people stand up while waiting, until someone tipped him off he was going to get a roast for it.

"But that's not a marker. Why one day he told me to tell two headliners he couldn't see them as he was busy with a manager, and they should come again after they made a special trip down to see him. And who do you suppose he had in the inside room? A shine $40 a week sister act. Neither one of the girls had a license to work outside a laundry either at that. If I ever tell this lobster what I think of him, he'll either fire me or raise my salary. I don't care which.

"It's got me going. I'm commencing to think I'm the only human person on earth. They get away with it, too, that's where I'm stopped. But this business will get right some day, and these fourflushers will have to go back to work again. They'll be mighty glad then to get an act to notice them. You can stick a pin in that.

"Are you going? He'll be right in. Say, don't tell I was knocking."

Jeanette Lowrie has blossomed out as a finished monologist, and is hot on the trail of the male contingent in this line of work. She has a smart new idea to present in the vaudeville houses and will make her debut without Mr. Seabrooke in the act Xmas week at Hurtig & Seamon's. She will also add a song and dance to her "turn."

To-morrow night at the New York will mark the debut here of Amy Ricard, in vaudeville.

AT THE AMPHION.

Anna Laughlin, comedienne, late of "The Wizard of Oz," must have spent most of her time at the Amphion over in Brooklyn this week in wrinkling her cherubic countenance into angry frowns and murmuring through clenched teeth, "Curses on 't."

And not without cause. For, although she was featured in the biggest and blackest type of the printer's case, she was made to follow Leila McIntyre. The latter is almost unhonored and unsung in the billing, but she easily carried off the lion's share of popularity.

Miss McIntyre is the heavy end of the team of Hyams and McIntyre. They did a sketch called "Two Hundred Wives." The name doesn't matter. No more does Hyams. But Miss McIntyre has an opportunity for quiet and effective comedy and a couple of "baby songs." 'Twas these same "baby songs" that did the damage to Miss Laughlin's reception.

Miss McIntyre's child impersonation was as delightful and polished as was the literary creation of "Emmy Lou." One song called "Shame" got encore after encore.

Miss Laughlin's baby songs, coming after this, and separated only by an acrobatic turn and the intermission, made something of an anti-climax. Miss Laughlin appeared first in her "Wizard of Oz" bib and tucker, then blossomed out in long skirts. Her "baby song" did not catch the audience as well as it might have, for the reason already explained, but the graceful dance with which she closed her turn won her an enthusiastic recall.

With these two exceptions, and perhaps Snyder and Buckley, the musical comedy team, who are Brooklyn boys and local favorites, the bill ran very much to mediocrity. John Birch, who attempted to play half a dozen characters at once by the simple process of changing his hat, fell considerably below that classification.

Matthews and Harris had their farcical sketch, "Adam the Second." The act has material that could be made to go if it were in better hands. The woman of the team might be able to give a good burlesque of an amateur ingenue's first appearance. She could make it true to life without half trying.

Cartmel and Harris did an artistic dancing and singing specialty. Both members were dressed in excellent taste and their dancing was good enough to win a hearty encore. They led the bill, too, from the early end.

Caron and Farnum, the comedy acrobatic pair, did some fairly interesting tumbling and worked the slapstick pretty steadily, but much may be forgiven them in consideration of their courage in keeping to their own act and not grabbing off the stunts of Rice and Prevost, which of late has become widely popular with comedy acrobatic teams.

Reggie Vanderbilt was observed around the Colonial last Monday afternoon. A Vanderbilt going into vaudeville. There must have been something very attractive about the bill there.

KEENEY'S

Sadie Martinot heads the procession at Keeney's Theatre, Brooklyn, this week. She is party of the first part in a pale and wobbly twenty-minute farce called "Wedded by Wire," which insistently reminds one of the sort of dramatic entertainment usually written by young high school students and produced at benefits for the basketball team. The trouble is that all the action of the sketch has happened before the audience is introduced to the principals. The result is that Miss Martinot and George D. Parker, in the persons of the reunited lovers, are engaged most of the time in telling each other who they are, what led to the present situation and other items of extraneous interest. This is designed as a delicate and artistic method of letting the audience know what the proceedings are all about. This end is accomplished, but only at the expense of a great deal of crude and tiresome dialogue. Charles F. Gotthold and George D. Parker are jointly responsible for the sketch.

Miss Martinot deserves better things. As the young widow in her present vehicle she makes a decidedly attractive figure, and were not the handicap so hopelessly heavy she might pull the act through.

Frank Bush was among those present with a batch of stories, most of them new, but a few, alas, lamentably old. In the latter class that hapless tale about the restaurant stew in which the oyster ate the crackers was heartlessly paraded. The funny thing about this last mentioned gag is that the audience laughed uproariously at it.

The Dixie Serenaders were an even half dozen negro singers whose voices blended well.

The novelty act of Rawson and June, consisting of boomerang throwing and archery stunts, caught the house. Miss June aforetime was something of an acrobatic and contortionist, but now her figure approaches the voluptuous, and spear throwing at a mark is about the only exercise it permits. She wore tights, however, very acceptably. The Rawson end of the combination did some remarkable manipulation of the Australian weapon, making it skim about the balcony railings and return to the stage.

Smirl and Kessner presented "The Bell Boy and the Maid," as the programme had it. The act is a combination of dancing and gymnastics, and was acceptably done.

Singer's Monkeys and Dogs had some new tricks, the novelties being a Chinese laundry scene by two monkeys and a bicycle stunt by a third. Tascott, billed as "The Champion Coon Shouter," and Wood and Ray completed the bill.

BESSIE McCOY COMING IN.

Bessie McCoy, formerly of the McCoy sisters, and more lately prominent at the Hippodrome, is having an elaborate act composed of herself and six girls put together. About $2,500 spent on costumes is expected to create the best dressed group in the business. Six weeks will be booked through M. S. Bentham, who worked out the idea, and then Bessie will return to the cast of the Hippodrome show, when it opens in Chicago some time during February.

TO ARTISTS.

And by artists it is not necessarily intended that only vaudeville players be included.

As VARIETY is to be an artists' paper, we want you to take an interest in it and its columns.

You are traveling around the country, if not the world. Why not be a TRAVELING CORRESPONDENT for VARIETY?

If you hear what you think is news (and "news" is something that will interest many) write it to us in as condensed a form as possible. If of value, we will print it, and if important enough will sign your name to the article or item, unless specifically requested to the contrary.

Always sign your own name, however, to establish authenticity, and WRITE ON ONE SIDE OF PAPER ONLY.

It need not be news especially. Any occurrence, humorous story or what you may consider to be of general interest to the professional world will be available.

As an incentive to all, the story, article or item we consider the best received each week, judged on all points, will be printed with the full name of writer, who will receive from us FIVE DOLLARS for the PRIZE STORY.

LEW DOCKSTADER ATTACHED.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 15.—The box receipts and scenery of Lew Dockstader's Minstrel Company, which is playing at the Grand Opera House this week, were attached on Wednesday evening on a writ brought by Florian Pincus to satisfy a claim of $980 on an alleged breach of contract. A compromise was made, the terms of which were not made public, and the performance was given. In explaining the case a representative of the company stated that Pincus was acting manager for a Boy's Band which was engaged for the minstrel company, but upon inspection it was found that the band was incompetent and six weeks' notice was given prior to the opening of the season. Pincus claimed a breach of contract, although no contract was signed. It is claimed that Dockstader will institute a counter claim against Pincus for obtaining money under false pretenses.

NEW ACTS.

Variety will have each week a department called "New Acts," covering as the title implies, acts presented for the first time.

Every such act presented for the first time in New York will be reviewed and sufficient space allowed for a thorough digest.

Out of town correspondents will report specifically on any new act presented for the first time anywhere in their territory.

An act will be reviewed once only in this department. If produced out of town, and noticed at that time by our correspondent, it will appear in the department "Reviews of the Week" when in New York.

Variety will endeavor to give managers, agents and others interested a fair and safe line on all new acts.

TOD SLOAN.
MONOLOGUE.
HAMMERSTEIN'S.

It is as well that the racing has left this part of the country, else even the horses would have demanded admittance to Hammerstein's on Monday where Tod Sloan made his initial bow as a mo-nol-o-gist. As it was, the racing crowd left about the Metropole came out in force and laughed at his stories and the audience laughed at two or three. It was significant that the reception accorded the former jockey when he made his entrance was much more enthusiastic than his recall.

He offers a monologue (written by Geo. M. Cohan) of race track stuff and personal experiences much after the fashion of the pugilistic matter offered by James J. Corbett, with the difference that Corbett can command a fair salary as a monologue man without the ring attachment, while Sloan's offering is entirely dependent for such success as it makes upon the fact that it is recited by a famous jockey whom most vaudeville patrons have never seen.

His delivery is weak and uncertain and while, barring a first night nervousness, he carries himself with ease, he does not make a good impression. He wears evening clothes and for no reason at all tops his abbreviated person with a silk hat which he wears throughout the act, save when he takes his curtain bow. It is a very shiny hat, but he does not need it, especially in an interior set.

None of his stories carried much weight, and it is probable that after a single swinging over the New York circuit he will drop out unless he improves mightily the while. As his act stands he is valuable only because of the money he draws.

SOCIETY NOTE: Mr. James J. Corbett was among those present Monday afternoon.

FRED HALLEN AND MOLLY FULLER.
"A MORNING PLUNGE."
BY HERBERT HALL WINSLOW.
HYDE & BEHMAN'S.

The scene of this sketch, which had a "try-out" in Wilmington, is supposed to be the beach at Atlantic City, although from the drop, you imagine Coney Island, Long Branch or any favored seaside resort.

Mr. Winslow in the dialogue has not made it very distinct just what the plot is, but Rose Tracey (Molly Fuller) is evidently stopping at Young's Hotel, at the famous watering place, without a chaperone.

Feeling the necessity or the desire for a bath, she invents an invalid father in the figure of a rubber "dummy" placed in a chair to be wheeled to the beach for protection against one Reddy Merrick (Fred Hallen) who "made eyes" at her the evening before in the hotel parlors.

Reddy, who is an immensely popular author traveling under an incognito, follows to the beach, and converses with the dummy, which he readily discovers to be such, while Rose does a lightning change into a bathing suit. Molly Fuller in tights! It is a sight, and a pleasant one.

Rose learns during the absence of her admirer that he is the author she has raved over, and orders the figure of her father returned to the hotel. Reddy replaces the "dummy" in the chair and returns to the beach, where Rose confesses to the supposed figure that she loves the author, who discloses himself. In the midst of a fast descending curtain the couple are seen entwined after a thirty minutes' acquaintance.

The audience did not enthuse over the playlet. It is too long without sufficient action. Two songs are sung by Mr. Hallen, but the lyric writer has caused "Roses" to rhyme with "Tresses."

When it becomes necessary in a Winslow sketch to require Mr. Hallen to slap Miss Fuller twice upon her bare back to obtain laughs, need more be said?

MILITARY OCTETTE.
LASKY & ROLFE.
COLONIAL.

This is one of the most pretentious musical acts ever presented in vaudeville. Although the disguise is evident through the setting, the veneer is not so thin as that generally used.

The attention to details is worthy of comment, and while this is not the first week this act has been presented, it is important enough by reason of the novelty to receive attention in this column.

The scenes respectively show camps of Russian Hussars, English Fusileers and Union soldiers, laid in Siberia, India and the United States, and appropriately uniformed.

A feature of the act is called "The girl with the baton," who is Rose Stevens. She walks spectacularly down the front aisle, costumed as an English "Tommy," followed by the spot-light in a darkened house, taking her seat in the orchestra leader's chair.

The other members of the company, of which there are nine men and two girls (and the best "prop" elephants ever gotten up) play musical selections on cornets and trombones. There is the inevitable quartet, and "England's Foremost Cornetist," John S. Leick, but the programme is a notorious press agent.

The Misses Simmons and Vale play prominent parts and have an exaggerated idea of their own importance. When "marking time" it resembles a contortion turn, and they should also be coached how to walk properly.

The act is a great big hit, and sufficiently strong by itself without forcing the applause at the close by the playing of the national anthem, which leads some persons to stand up.

WILFRED CLARKE AND COMPANY.
"NO MORE TROUBLE."
HURTIG & SEAMON'S.

A farcical sketch, adapted from the French by Mr. Clarke, according to the programme. Rather slow at the beginning, but soon moves with a rush which is kept up to the finale. A real comedy playlet, with the farcical side always to the fore. Cleverly adapted and a substantial success. Several threads of plot are interlaced and entangled, involving too much space for a detailed description.

Clarke is the mainspring, and with his legitimate acting keeps the piece continually on the go. Theo. Carew ably assists, doing a fine piece of work as an inanimate person under the influence of a narcotic. Rather large of size, Miss Carew maintained a rigid attitude under what seemed extreme difficulty.

Archie Gillis and Miss E. McDe Mott (correct spelling) contributed their share. The farce is superior to Clarke's former offering, "In the Biograph."

METCALF, PADDOCK AND AL. EDWARDS.
MUSICAL ACT.
HURTIG & SEAMON'S.

Called a "High Class Musical Novelty," but a copy act of Waterbury Brothers and Tenney. Inferior in music and comedy to the originals. Edwards in black face is a more cultivated musician than comedian, and the other members of the act appear very amateurish. Customary instruments used with the addition of a 'cello, on which is played "Sweetest Story Ever Told," the "sure thing" of all 'cellists. "The Palms" is also a feature of Edwards' cornet. The brasses are blatant and not in harmony. Fairly applauded.

NAN ENGLETON AND COMPANY.
HOW THE WIDOW WAS WON.
TONY PASTOR'S

Nan Engleton, who used to be the junior half of the team of Anderson and Engleton, made offering of a sketch by an unknown author at Pastor's this week. The author is wise only in that he conceals his identity. A young widow is pursued by a masher who finally sends her a note that unless she receives him within a half hour he will force his way into her apartments. She has an admirer in the person of a youthful army Colonel ("U.S.A.," not Salvation). He brings in a pair of riding boots because the widow objects to the rum blossom at the end of his nose and riding has been advised as a cure. He is also wearing a pair of red flannel plasters inside of his shoes for the same reason. The widow seeks to keep him in the house to ward off the descent of her unknown admirer, while he seeks escape from the plasters. His writhings over the plasters lead her to believe that he is intoxicated, but in an interval she leaves the stage and he removes the plasters and hides them in the boots. These latter he hides behind the portieres, and she believing that the unknown has come to fulfill his threat, because she sees his boots, tells the Colonel of her persecutor, and after locking her in another room the valiant military man pretends to slay the intruder and so wins the widow. The sketch is utterly lacking in balance and probability, and was not particularly diverting at any time. Miss Engleton played with a sad lack of restraint, apparently imagining that the more noise she made the more successful she would be, in spite of her earlier experiences to the contrary. William L. Sheridan, her support, might have been a good actor, but the author did not permit him to exploit this fact. Miss Engleton will have to have a new act if she wishes to get ahead. This offering will never do.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—KEITH'S.—Valerie Bergere is reviving "Carmen," a short version of Prosper Merimee's story and of episodes from the opera and play of the same name. Miss Bergere is a favorite here and while her latest effort proved interesting, it hardly deserves being called successful. Miss Bergere made good here in "Billy's Experiment" and "His Japanese Wife," which followed in vaudeville after her triumph in "Madam Butterfly," which was seen in the high-priced houses. In the new sketch Miss Bergere proved effective and gave the requisite light and shade to the stormy, passionate, winsome and forceful passages in the text, but she was better liked in her lighter characters.

Of the others, but one or two are new. Harry Le Clair presented a specialty founded on the same lines as his old one. His character of a "hag of the streets" was bad. Taylor Holmes got through with a monologue and some imitations, but failed miserably in his attempt to imitate George M. Cohan. There was an extra offering of blackface specialties, of which the Nichols Sisters carried off the honors. Clifford and Burke used a lot of Williams and Walker's stuff and mainly through the singing and dancing of Clifford, managed to do well. The Norcross Minstrel Troupe gave their idea of an old-time "first-part" act. There were several other acts on the bill, all of which have been seen here before.

CASINO.—The Trocadero Burlesquers are at the Casino, with the European weight juggler, Brinn, featured. Many of his tricks have been seen performed here, but he is claiming originality and was well received. The show is up to the average and opened to the best business of the season.

TROCADERO.—At the Trocadero Joe Oppenheimer has his "Fay Foster" company, with a big company and a number of entertaining specialties. Business has been big at this house all season and the Foster show has been getting its share.

BIJOU.—There has been but little change at the Bijou, where the "Cherry Blossoms" are holding forth, and the bill has not been changed any since seen at the Trocadero earlier in the season.

LYCEUM.—The "Bowery Burlesquers," who are entertaining at the Lyceum, are also making their second bid for favor this season. The Three Hickmans, in their musical specialty, carried off the honors.

BON-TON.—Dick and Alice McAvoy, in their sketch, "A Wife's Christmas," are about the only ones worthy of mention on the bill in the Bon-Ton.

BOSTON, MASS.—KEITH'S (B. F. Keith, Manager).—Foremost among the funmakers on this week's bill are the clever Elinore Sisters, Kate and May, late of "Mrs. Delany of Newport" company, whose absence of about four years inspired a rousing reception, and kept the audience convulsed with laughter. That inimitable monologist, James J. Morton, who, by the way, returns to the legitimate soon, with his ridiculous talk, song and recitation, is still a sure cure for the "blues." Ed. F. Reynard, the world famous ventriloquist comedian, with his wonderful mechanical figures, and Sam Watson, with his farm yard, a decided novelty in the way of an animal act, contribute pleasing entertainments. The surrounding show includes such favorites as O'Brien and Havel, in an acrobatic comedy skit, "Ticks and Clinks," with specialties. Tom and Clara are just as funny as ever. The three musical Johnsons, expert xylophone players; M. Alphonse Sylvano, a European equilibrist; Mr. and Mrs. Cal Stewart, in a laughable conversational sketch, "Uncle Josh on the Bowery;" Les Durands, Parisian street singers; John F. Clark, monologue; Louis Guertin, skillful novelty jumper; Morton Temple and Morton, knockabout vocalists and dancers, all have fine specialties and established themselves anew as prime favorites. Topping the bill, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Crane present a delightful playlet, "A Yankee's Love for Dixie," which is well acted and worthy of individual mention. As usual the kinetograph shows a complete new list of comedy and interesting motion pictures, including "The Reception of Prince Louis of Battenberg in New York," which is a capital film. Crowded houses prevail.

HOWARD ATHENEUM (Carl O. Lothrop, Business Manager).—Charmion, queen of sensational aerialists, is the headline attraction on one of the best bills ever seen at this house. Of course, she throws out "personal" souvenirs as usual. Charmion is the strongest single drawing card the old Howard has ever known, but she is not the only "topnotcher" the excellent programme includes; Emil Hoch, Jane Elton & Co., in "Mlle Ricca," a bright comedietta; John D. Gilbert, monologist with songs and steps that are the "limit" for laugh creators; Leona Thurber and her Four Black Birds, Marvelous Frank and Little Bob, with their wonderful dog "Tip," Dolly Jardon, balladist; Delmore and Darrell, singers and dancers; Allaire and Lind, club jugglers; Connelly and Rowe, vocalists and pedalists; and Balancing Stevens; Anger and Hanley, dancers; Henella, magician, and the Howard-scope pictures scored in accordance. The burlesque entitled "The Winning Warblers" made a fine showing. This big company of pretty girls are all winners. Immense business.

COLUMBIA (Harry N. Farren, Manager).—"Simple Simon and Simon Simple," followed by "A Hot Time at Reilly's," are the musical absurdity offerings by the Reilly & Woods' Burlesque Co., which is bigger and better than ever. Pat Reilly as "Simple Simon" is excruciatingly funny. Surrounded by a galaxy of royal entertainers, the principals are very much in evidence when it comes to laugh making. An olio of exceptional merit is headlined by Frank Orth and Harry S. Fern, by special engagement producing their famous skit, "Sign That Book." Other acts of various ability include: Ira Kessner, pictured melodies; Kennedy and Evans, Celtic humorists; Reno and Daly, comedy acrobats; the dancing Revere Sisters, and the Golden Ballet, in three scenes, introducing Ada Corbett as Mephisto. A well balanced chorus of pretty girls make a feast of fun and music. There is always something doing with the "hook" when amateur night, every Friday, comes around; this feature is a big drawing card. Good company and business.

NOTES.—Sunday concerts, 10th inst., Eagles' benefit at Grand Opera House; all star bill at the Boston; Elks grand concert at the Tremont; benefit Kingston Dispensary at the Globe; offered the leading talent from all the visiting varieties and were well patronized. Season looks prosperous.

GEO. LESLIE HUTCHINSON.

BALTIMORE, MD.—MARYLAND (F. C. Schanberger, Manager.)—Week Dec. 11-16. A splendid bill to large houses. McMahon's Minstrel Maids and Watermelon Girls is a very attractive act. Also seen are the Chamberlains, lasso throwers and rope jugglers; Tyce and Jermon, in songs and stories; Waterbury Brothers and Tenney, in a comical musical act; the Auberts, European whirlwind dancers; McMahon and Chappelle, in "Twenty Minutes Before the Train Leaves;" La Vine Cimaron Trio and the Kinetograph, in new moving pictures. Next week: Gardner and Vincent, the Piccolo Midgets, Clifford and Burke, Taylor Holmes, Harry Howard's Ponies, O. K. Sato and Brothers Durant, Chevalier Albert L. Guille, late tenor of the Heinrich Grand Opera company and the Hollywood Mandolin Orchestra, entertain the audience before and after each performance in the Ratskeller.

MONUMENTAL (Joseph L. Keenan, Res. Manager), week Dec. 11-16.—Probably if not quite the best bill of the season is offered by Harry Martell's Brigadier Burlesquers featuring Edmond Hayes in "The Wise Guy," supported by an excellent company, to crowded houses. The olio consisted of the Three Kuhns, singers and musical artists; Frank K. McNish and Joe Whitehead, in an oldtime minstrel act; Lester and Moore, as the soubrette and the tramp; the Prentice Four, comedy acrobats; Beufort Sisters, singers and dancers, and Miss Blanche Murphy, vocalist. Next week: Whallen and Martell's Kentucky Entertainers (Empire

NOTES.—Manager Kernan now has a monopoly of the vaudeville business in this city, but the new Gaiety Theatre is rapidly nearing completion and Messrs. Weber and Scribner, of New York, will open on schedule time Feb. 5, 1906, playing the Columbia Amusement Company's attractions exclusively in this city. The resident manager is a prominent business man of Baltimore, whose name is to be kept secret until after the completion of the building. Mr. Eddie Edwards, formerly treasurer of Holliday Street Theatre, will be the treasurer and Mr. Tobe Jacobs the advertiser. The builders are now two weeks ahead of time, but the original date for the opening will hold good in order not to change all plans, bookings, etc. MILTON.

NEWARK, N. J.—Mediocrity makes up the Proctor bill for the current week. Every division of polite vaudeville seems represented. Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar, two favorites at this place of amusement, are the headliners, but the laughs are not all reserved for the twain. They offer "The Other Fellow," an un-bizzare sketch of near-unfelicity. Ed. Gray, the alliterative tall tale teller told twenty-two thoughtless stories successfully. Dan Hiatt was amusing as a burlesque musician, but his wife's vocal efforts relegated the act to the ordinary effort.

The Carson Brothers, billed as acrobats, did not belie their profession, and Joe Reischen's dogs were exhibited as well-trained balancing animals. Tyce and Jermon told some jests of ancient vintage and sang songs. Francis Wood rolled hoops. Why? Charles Burke and Grace La Rue, with the assistance of a few colored comedians (?), presented what once was their comic "Silver Moon" sketch, and would you believe it they introduced a few new old jokes.

M. M. Theise's Casino Girls gave a featureless performance at Waldman's, the local wheel representative. The material handed out to the company by the arrangers of the show will never place the authors in any competition with any good burlesque composers. The aggregation in addition lacks ginger. The Columbia Theatre will not open its doors this week, on account of the poor business that usually troubles managers previous to holiday times. On Xmas afternoon A. H. Wood's "A Wife's Confession" will be put on for a week. The Empire was dark last week. David Belasco bought out the house in order to avoid playing a week of vaudeville offered by the so-called independent vaudeville combine. Fiske O'Hara, the newst Blaney star, will open in "Mr. Blarney of Ireland," at the Blaney Theatre on Xmas afternoon. Mr. O'Hara changed his name for the benefit of the Blaney clientele; it used to be William Fiske.

GORDON E. WHEELER.

LONDON, CANADA.—BENNETT'S (J. H. Alos, Manager).—This cozy vaudeville theatre is now well in its second year and meeting with well-merited success. Dec. 11-16—Mme. De Serris company, in famous bas-reliefs and living statuary, are pleasing large houses with their beautiful reproductions. Fiske and McDonough are going strong with their character sketch, "Good News;" La Fleur, sensational acrobat; Dutch Walton, musical monologist; Mitchell and Love, Wilson and Moran and Antrim and Peters round out a splendid bill. Coming Dec. 18-23—W. Woodford's educated animals; Monroe, Mack and Lawrence, James Walthour and company, Horse vs. Cyclist, Billy O'Day, Robbins and Trenman and others.

The amateur contests every Friday night are proving a great success.

FRITZ HOUSTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—CHASE (H. W De Witt, Manager.)—"The Hazzardous Globe," in which Wizard and Irene Stone do some sensational and nerve racking stunts, heads the bill at this house. Edward S. Kines and company presented an abbreviated drama. This form of play has become exceedingly popular with Chase's patrons. The sketch is entitled, "Tainted Money," and deals with Frenzied Finance, winding up with logical moral. Mr. Kines is assisted by Jas D. Walsh and Wm. Slater. They are both clever, but the sketch at the present time is in the rough and needs a great deal of polishing. The action drags in several places and the actors should pay more attention to minor details. Sidney Grant, in stories and songs, received three curtain calls, which demonstrates that he is an old favorite here. J. Warren Keane, a magician, offered good work. Arthur Borani and Annie Nevarro, eccentric acrobats, were excellent. Coakley and McBride, black face song and dance artists, gave a very acceptable performance. Signor Luigi dell'Oro played on a great accordion and "armonipede" very cleverly.

MAJESTIC (T. P. Sargent, Manager.)—The Fays opened a two weeks' engagement in a mixed exhibition of alleged spiritual phenomena telepathy, thaumaturgy and vaudeville. Mrs. Fay answers many questions pertaining to past, present and future events. The vaudeville features were presented by the Sisters Rappo, very clever dancers; Phil Staats, in a monologue, and Rostow, the Russian equilibrist.

KERNAN'S (Eugene Kernan, Manager.)—Whallen and Martell's clever burlesque company, "The Kentucky Belles," is the attraction this week. Messrs. Whallen and Martell have broken away from the old-time style of burlesque companies, and are offering the patrons a two-act musical farce entitled "Murphy's Mistake," written by Reid and Gilbert. During the performance several excellent specialties are introduced. They are surrounded with a bevy of chorus girls that outshine the choruses of many a first-class musical production. Miss Bello took the house by storm with "The Winding of the Yarn," Hendrix and Prescott, in song and dance; Gray and Grakan, musical team; The Century Comedy Four, and the Four Melvin Bros. completed one of the best bills ever seen in this house.

LAND ON 'EM.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—ORPHEUM (Thomas Winston, Mgr.)—Martin Beck's premier attraction, the Orpheum Show, is holding forth at this popular playhouse for week of December 11. The bill includes Ye Colonial Septette, Merlan's dogs, Jules and Ella Garrison, Sisters and Brothers Ford, Edgar Bixley, Winona Winter and Campbell and Mack. The Colonial Septette have a very neat and cleverly conceived act. Merlan's dogs, by far the best canine act in the business, was generously applauded. Jules and Ella Garrison in their burletta entitled "An Ancient Roman," were also well received. Edgar Bixley was a hit as well as were Winona Winter, the Sisters and Brothers Ford and Campbell and Mack, who are still using their old bicycle act to good advantage. The "Animated Scenes" closed the bill. The Orpheum Show will pack them in this week. Julian Eltinge is the headliner for week of December 18.

GREENWALL THEATRE (Henry Greenwall, Mgr.)—Bob Manchester's "Vanity Fair" Co. opened Sunday, December 10, to S. R. O. at both performances. The company is headed by John Conley and Harry Ward as comedians and Dora Denton as soubrette. Conley and Ward are slapstick comedians, while Miss Denton has a voice that could be used to good service on a farm. Reed and Shaw were very clever in their gymnastic act and a Jap, who styles himself Tokio from Japan, was fairly good with a fan juggling and slack wire act. The girls seem to have been selected with a view as to their weight, not age. Week of December 17, Phil Sheridan's City Sports.

E. M. SAMUEL.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—GRAND OPERA HOUSE (C. H. Plummer, Mgr.).—This city is one of the best show towns in the State, and is vaudeville wise through intermittent doses. The patronage at the Grand since the change of policy to variety has not been steady through the irregularity of the quality of the weekly bills. Syracuse demands good acts all the time, and will support them upon receipt.

This week: Hal Davis and Inez Macauley in "The Unexpected." Well liked, but why was not their latest offering "Pals" given instead? It is a much better and stronger sketch. A house in its vaudeville infancy should have the best, whether the worst has been seen before in town or not. Lee Harrison told some stories which Syracusians thought funny, and made a hit with his songs. Delmore and Lee, best aerial act ever here. Macart's animals well liked. Dixon, Bowers and Dixon fair. Delmar Sisters neatly dressed and good dancers. Anderson and Giles (colored), too much horse-play. Barr and Evans made no impression. Next week: Girard and Gardner, Keeler's wonderful Jap Troupe, Basque Quartette, Grattan and White, Reiff Bros.

NOTE.—Jule Delmar, the Keith representative at the Grand, is becoming very popular. SAM FREEMAN.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — HOPKINS' (Wm Reichmann, Res. Mgr.)—Hart's Boston Novelty Co., with Valerie Bergere & Co. as the headliner, was the offering. Fair show and attendance. This week's bill headed by eight Bedouin Arabs and comprising Ryan & Richfield, Kelly & Violette, Four Emperors of Music, Dan Quinlan and Keller Mack, The Be-Anos, Redford and Winchester, and the Kinodrome forms a diversified and well balanced bill, drawing crowded houses.

Special mention must be made of Kelly and Violette, who are the distinct hit of this attractive bill.

Next: Hopkins' Trans-Oceanic Star Specialty Co., with Kitamura's Japs, Callahan and Mack, Watson and Morrisey, Alf Grant, Harry and Kate Jackson and others.

BUCKINGHAM (Whallen Bros., Mgrs.).—May Howard and her Extravaganza Co., with "The Girl in Blue" as an extra attraction, is turning people away from this popular playhouse this week. The show is up to the standard in every respect and should prove a record breaker. Edward Morris is principal comedian and the olio names the following well-known people: Russell and Locke, Musical Craigs, La Velle and Grant in addition to a series of art pictures and the aforementioned "Girl in Blue." Last week Sam Devere's Own Show played to poor houses. County fair. Next: Star Show Girls.

Notes.—Roma's Aerial Wrestlers, who were brought over to this country from England under direction of Marinelli, will close a special six weeks' engagement over the Empire Circuit at Cincinnati on December 16 and will shortly be seen in New York City.

The Three Graces have been engaged as a vaudeville feature with Anna Eva Fay. ARTHUR STUART.

WATERBURY, Conn.—JACQUES (J. W. Fitzpatrick, Res. Mgr.).—The bill the current week is an unusually strong one for this house. Headed by the Musical Colbys, every act on the bill pleased and in most instances jumped into instant favor. Ned Nye was a close second to the headliners, with his Seven American Girls, a new act now on its second week. The act is bound to make good. Smith and Campbell presented a rapid fire talking act, which went well. Hayes and Carew also scored with their act, "The Lady and the Slavey." Their after bit, called "Jockey Johnnie O'Neil," scored instantly. The others on the bill were Spilk, Roman ring expert; Rae and Brosche, Smith and McGloin and the Electrograph.

NOTES.—There is considerable speculation as to the outcome of the estate of the late Jean Jacques. It is persistently rumored Poli will transfer his vaudeville interests to the Poli house and the Jacques will be turned into a burlesque house. But it is thought Mrs. Jacques will retain her husband's interests in the Poli house and engage Harry Parsons as her representative. Several out-of-town managers are watching the settlement of the Jacques estate very carefully, wishing to gain the late manager's interest in the Poli house if possible.

ARTHUR H. M'KECHNIE.

LYNN, Mass.—AUDITORIUM (Harry Katzes, Mgr.).—Week of December 11, Sherman and De Forrest in "The Battle of San Dago," headed the bill and proved themselves to be one of the best teams yet seen in the new house. Vera King, singing and talking comedienne, was one of the hits of the show. Andy McLeod took fairly well. Brown, Harris and Brown, in "The Spirit of '76," was an act deserving the warm reception they received. Koppe and Koppe, the juggling comedians, are certainly good jugglers, as comedians they did not take so well. The Larson Sisters, European novelty athletes, did some wonderful feats that were well received. Spencer, Lynn and Fay, comediennes, were clever as singers and dancers. Good business.

GEM THEATRE (C. W. Sheafe, Mgr.).—Four shows daily. Week of Dec. 11, Rend and Murray, Roberts and Ralston, Chris Gordon, Kohler and Louise and The Mannings. Business good. P. DAVID CHASE.

PITTSBURG, Pa.—GAIETY.—Fred Irwin again does himself proud in his "Big Show" at the Gaiety. The burlesques are up to the Irwin standard of liveliness. "The Only Pebble on the Beach" and "Wives of the Sultan" are both gorgeously equipped in the way of scenic settings and costumes, and both provided with some catchy songs and effective ensembles. Willard Terre, Frank Carlton, Will H. Cohan, Charles F. Buckley, Harry Devine, W. S. Harvey and Joe Sharp looked after the leading comedy roles, while Madge Anderson, Belle Williams and Marie D'Oyle did well in the leading female parts. In the first skit Miss Anderson and several of the chorus, including Louise Lesser and the three De Faye sisters, had songs that caught the fancy of the audience, while the second sketch included several clever bits, most of them by the chorus. In the olio feature, however, lies the greatest attraction. The Red Raven Cadets—twelve handsome young women, headed by Madame Hilda Carle, do a dazzling series of marches and tableaux, nearly raising the roof with volleys of rifle fire and conclude by scaling a high wall in true army style. W. S. Harvey, who juggles everything in a bedroom and winds up by balancing a big double oak bed on his chin, made a big hit. Devine and Williams did good work in songs, dances and character impersonations, and the pretty De Faye sisters had one of the daintiest musical acts seen here in a good while. Among other vaudeville features are Miss Elsie Bohni, the phenomenal baritone; the Six Ratzenbender Girls in "Austrian Military Tactics," all the acts being above the average.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Merrymakers' Extravaganza Company (Whallen Bros and Martell) at the Academy, is a new organization in the Empire circuit, and it certainly makes good. The opening burlesque, "Running for Mayor," is one of the brightest attractions I have seen at the Academy for months. M. J. Kelly showed himself a comedian of the first water, and was ably assisted by Tom Robinson, Dick Browne, the three Alexander Brothers, James Brady, as the Bowery boy; Jeanette Young, Grace Patton and Alma Kelly. N. and R. Alexander and Horace Strouse carry off the honors in the second piece in their portrayal of rustic characters. The chorus was pretty, handsomely gowned and did clever work in the songs and dances. The olio was good. Brown and Robinson, in "Off and On," an odd comedy turn in Irish and Dutch, made a hit. The Exposition Four, the Three Alexanders and James Brady presented a unique musical act; Strouse and Young sang their own compositions well and Sherman and Fuller, comedy acrobats, amused the audience in "Bumps and Bangs." Grace Patton, a dainty soubrette, was pleasing, and Mlle. Bartoletti, the ballet dancer of local Christmas pantomime fame, executed her great premiere dance during the initial farce. MADAME PITT.

Mabel McKinley, who tempted fate in a legitimate production for a short while this season, has concluded that her destiny in the professional world lies in the field of vaudeville, to which she will shortly return with the astute guidance of her always ever manager, B. A. Myers.

Charles E. Taylor, manager of the Alcazar Beauties company, married Gladys Sears, of the same company, in Chicago, November 23. He will star her next season in "A Female Reporter," in which she plays a part similar to that in which she has made a success this season.

My dear Sime,

Looking back over 25 years of my connection with amusements in this country, there is nothing that looms up more strikingly than "Variety". In point of courage and rugged character "Variety" stands out as a giant among pigmies.

During this long period "Variety" has never hesitated to champion most vigorously what it believed was for the best interest of the artists, the theatre and the industry. It has done this repeatedly during this decade, in face of threatened financial disaster. In none of these contests, in which "Variety" has contended for a principle, could any one question its sincerity or honesty.

I consider it an honor to acknowledge and salute this courage.

Sincerely,

Karl Hoblitzelle

Season's Greetings

Season's Greetings

Come On Over, Sime

This is your old boy friend, Sime. The guy you were hollering at weekly back in '26. Remember?

You may not know it, but an exhibitor in the middle west used to cut out those crazy editorials of yours, eliminate my name, substitute that of the guy on the local daily he was fighting and run them verbatim as ads.

Now you come over.

Come on now, Sime. After 25 years. It's about time. That 25th anniversary goes for the paper. Not you, kid. Let's all be akays together.

Don't be a chump all your life. And they tell me you took a run out powder on this number, too. You must be a great guy to vacation with. Two days out of New York and they've got to sit on you to keep you off the return train.

Well, a mugg's a mugg.

But come on over. It's your turn. You once apologized to me in print. You said I wasn't a damn fool—just a chump. Many a sister act has split up since then. And now we want you to come over.

Is this 25th on the level? Was it really back in '05? No kiddin'. How old does that make you, Toots? 42? Wouldn't you love to be 42? Wouldn't you love to be 52? Put on the wig and come on.

Where we goin? To a resort for Broadway's akays. A lot of other akays there, too. They also call it California. I reformed to make the grade. Have even stopped cussin'. What've you done? Yeah? Walk right in.

Recall the batteries? You ought to 'cause you mentioned 'em often enough. But let go and come over. Wire, don't write. We'll have it all set for you, dear.

Been on the wagon, baby? Heard about it 'way out here. That's a sure sign. Looks like we're both slowing up. I'll break down and confess. Now it's your turn. Guess we're the nuts.

Congratulations on the 25th, babe. That's a long stretch any way you figure it. But it's time to come over.

So what are you going to do about it?

In case there's any doubt. You know who this is, don't you?

Yeah. It's Pat.

Congratulations

to SIME and VARIETY

for twenty-five years of valuable service that have added vastly to the advancement and gayety of show business. With best wishes for a long future life as pleasant and fruitful as the past.

HORACE HEIDT AND HIS CALIFORNIANS

VARIETY 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Gentlemen:

You will receive many deserved congratulations on your 25th birthday. Permit us to add those of RKO—whose traditions and growth parallel your own period of progress over the period of years that you are celebrating.

You have seen the map change several times.

You have seen amusements pass through the greatest development and readjustment of all times.

You have seen the steady growth of theatre attendance in this country until it has reached a total of over one hundred million weekly.

And, for 25 years, you have taken the initiative in all of this constantly moving, changing panorama of the theatre. In many cases you have even anticipated and sensed in advance the various cycles of progress.

You have played, and continue to play, an important part in this dramatic development of the amusement industry.

You have been a dynamic force and a constructive factor.

The pages of "VARIETY" are the history of show business for a quarter of a century.

RKO THEATRES DEPT.

RADIO KEITH ORPHEUM RKO

What it means to RKO SHOWMEN

THERE is a distinct example to be found in the popularity and prestige of "VARIETY" as it proudly passes its 25th milepost. It covers its field in every department.

It is important that you be "vaudeville minded."

It is important that you be "picture conscious."

It is also important that you bear in mind the short subject features of your composite bills.

There is today a tremendous public for sound pictures.

There is likewise a constant and growing demand for in-the-flesh stage shows—R-K-O vaudeville, something we alone have.

There is without doubt a huge following for the tabloid films, educational shorts and cartoons that go to make up your balanced programs.

All of these should be intelligently selected and then skillfully exploited, with forceful, intelligent salesmanship and showmanship.
That is the only way in which the fullest results can be obtained. You cater to a vast variety of tastes and you have at your disposal a list of attractions that run the entire gamut of entertainment.

Radio with its countless millions of listeners-in has not established more entertainment "names" than the screen and vaudeville stage through our houses.

New names and new favorites are created overnight by the screen. Older idols are replaced by the Helen Twelvetrees, the Wheelers and Woolseys, the Richard Cromwells, the Dorothy Lees, and the Irene Dunnes so fast that it is hard to recall them all.

Vaudeville in the past has established more household names in America than any other branch of amusement. Following the usual precedence, our headliners of today are entertainment leaders of tomorrow. Give them prominence, give them the same consideration you gave their predecessors, and don't forget there never was so much talent and so much promising material as there is today—Now.

JOSEPH PLUNKETT
Vice-President and General Manager of Theatres

RADIO RKO KEITH ORPHEUM

VARIETY 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Heartiest Greetings

PROBABLY no branch of show business has greater reason to send felicitations today than vaudeville.

Since "Variety's" inception it has followed and fostered vaudeville. No one has championed its cause more earnestly and no one has given more encouragement when it has succeeded in accomplishment and progress.

The life of "Variety" has seen vaudeville's history written and rewritten. With its continued co-operation and constructive criticism we believe a new and greater period of vaudeville achievement and vaudeville importance and vaudeville development will be recorded during the second quarter of a century of "Variety's" forward progress.

Brings a message to the PERFORMER

PERMIT us to wish you in all sincerity the season's best compliments. Permit us also to hope that the New Year may bring greater happiness and develop new and real opportunities.

We are not unmindful of the present situation. . . . At present the theatres in America are not playing the number of acts they formerly employed. . . . Many of the other circuits are playing little or no vaudeville. . . . Naturally the artists look to us—the parent vaudeville organization and the largest—for booking, for future hopes and for the solution of their problems.

We cannot play all the acts offered. We are doing our utmost to cope with the present circumstances in such a manner as to do the greatest justice to those most deserving and talented; to those who offer the most entertainment value; and to those who appear to present the fullest future potentialities.

The present readjustment in the theatre which vaudeville has survived so definitely—with its permanence and popularity more certainly established than ever before—has brought about a higher and a more critical standard than ever before.

The present demand is for newness and novelty. . . . As always, there is a ready market for comedy. . . . In addition, the present-day programme requires youth, dash, precision and, above all—variety.

There is in many ways and for many performers a greater opportunity than ever before. There never was a time, however, when there was such a premium placed on originality and real entertainment and amusement values.

And surely, there never was a time that called for greater co-operation, more sympathetic understanding and more constructive relationship and production.

EDDIE CANTOR

My dear Sime:

Well, the world has revolved a few times since you started that paper of yours. Twenty-five years is a long time and in the theatrical business it's an eternity.

'Variety' has lasted because of its principles dictated by you. You've been on the level with yourself, with the profession, and everyone connected with it.

I wonder what became of those people who were going to break you and your paper. Where are they? We know where you are!

You've panned actors when they deserved it; you've panned managers and producers when their actions warranted it and you've done your share of boosting.

I want to take this Goldwyn opportunity to congratulate you on your Silver Anniversary.

May you and the "Actor's Bible" have many more years of success.

Affectionately,

Eddie Cantor

P.S.- You'll be glad to hear that your prediction has come true: "Whoopee" is a big hit, depression or no depression. (I'm glad I got that in. After all I'm paying for this ad.)

SEASON'S GREETINGS

WALDEMAR YOUNG

FIRST NATIONAL

N. T. G. writes

My Dear Sime:—

There's a lot of things I'd like to say to you, Sime, on the occasion of Variety's anniversary. I'd like to put into type what I have said to everyone whoever mentioned your name to me, but it would sound like a lot of bull, and people wouldn't believe me, so I'd better not write it.

But there are simple things to say, Sime, which will in some measure tell you and the world what I think of you. I go back a few years, when Variety was only eight years old, and you didn't have as many gray hairs as you have now. I was a kid, Sime, new to Broadway, trying to make good at an unfamiliar job, as publicity director (it was press agent then) of the Loew Circuit. Marcus Loew, the sweetest man that ever lived, introduced me to you, and asked you to help me. You sure did.

Many a time you came to my office and helped me with suggestions and advice. Then I started to write for you my "Joys and Glooms of Broadway," and you kept sending me checks, when I really didn't want them, and you insisted I should be paid for something which was to me a pleasure and a privilege.

That column brought me into closer contact, Sime, and I'll never forget the midnights we sat together in your deserted office while you labored far beyond the time your staff had scrammed (is that a good Variety word?). You helped then, Sime, more than you'll ever know.

You've been a grand guy to me, Sime. I only hope that I can sit down like this and write you another letter and tell you the same thing 25 years from now.

Sincerely,

N. T. Granlund

Gentlemen:-

NESS!

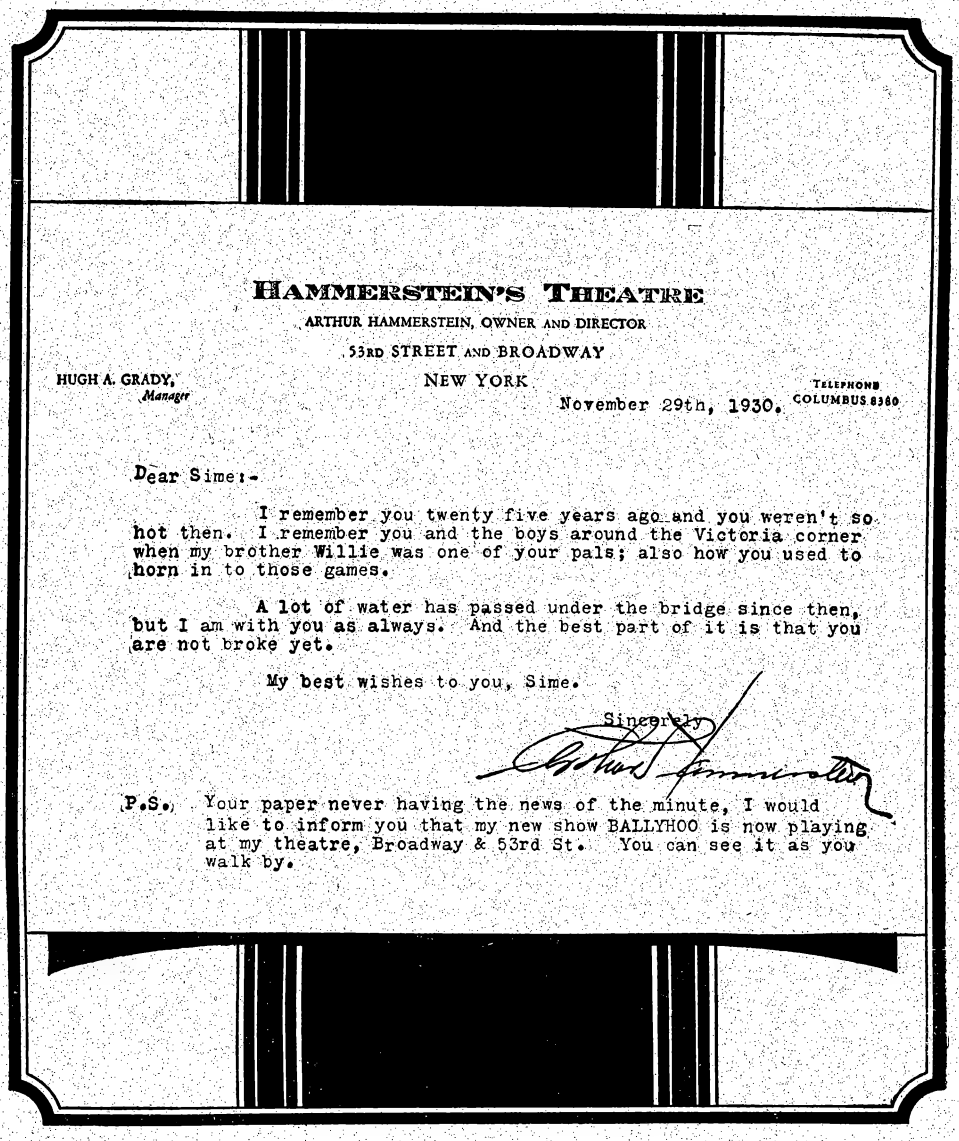
A QUARTER OF CENTURY OF PROGRESS IN SHOW BUSI-

A quarter of a century during which the industry has evolved, until it stands today on the threshhold of new achievement. During that time names have faded and names have grown; the industry has changed and remodeled itself a score of times, but through it all "Variety" inspiring, recording and achieving has travelled with show business, growing and guiding its policies and its people. Upon this Twenty Fifth Anniversary everyone of them must pause, note and congratulate.

"Variety" is no longer merely a mouthpiece of show business. It has become a connecting link between show business and those on the outside. Its popularity with the public in general has established it as an organ which gives a completer understanding of the people who perform for the stage and screen and operate theatres for those who seek entertainment.

The character and personality of the paper itself does not allow for over-worded compliments. "Variety's" directness and bluff honesty demands that its praise be placed in simple words and for that reason I can only say:

GOOD LUCK "VARIETY" AND ANOTHER QUARTER CENTURY OF PROGRESS.



Sincerely yours,

J. J. Murdock

BOB ROBISON... R.K.O.'s master salesman sold SANDY LANG... R.K.O.'s master skater, the idea of this ad. Because BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG being two modest young fellers wants "VARIETY" to know that BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG are 2 modest young men who say greetings... And BOB ROBISON says "listen here SANDY LANG, when you write up this ad, don't forget to tell everybody that BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG are II modest young actors by the name of BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG who want to say Season's Greetings to everybody because BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG enjoy a Merry Christmas with CHARLIE FREEMAN'S intact Unit Show No. 1 .. Greetings, CHARLIE"... And BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG says, "Happy New Year SAMMY TISHMAN. We're just a couple of modest young blokes, we are BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG, the master salesman and the master skater of the R.K.O. circuit." ... BOB ROBISON says, "listen here, SANDY LANG, don't forget to remember me to JACK WEINER, the best agent living," and SANDY LANG says, "listen here BOB ROBISON, if there's room left I'll put your agent's name in after saying season's greetings to FERDIE SIMON, my agent, the best ever"... Then BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG, 2 modest youngsters find the end of this column is drawing near and hurry to say Best Wishes to all from BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG, two modest youthful R.K.O. artists

Two Pals.

P. S. BOB ROBISON and SANDY LANG are too modest young fellows. lows.

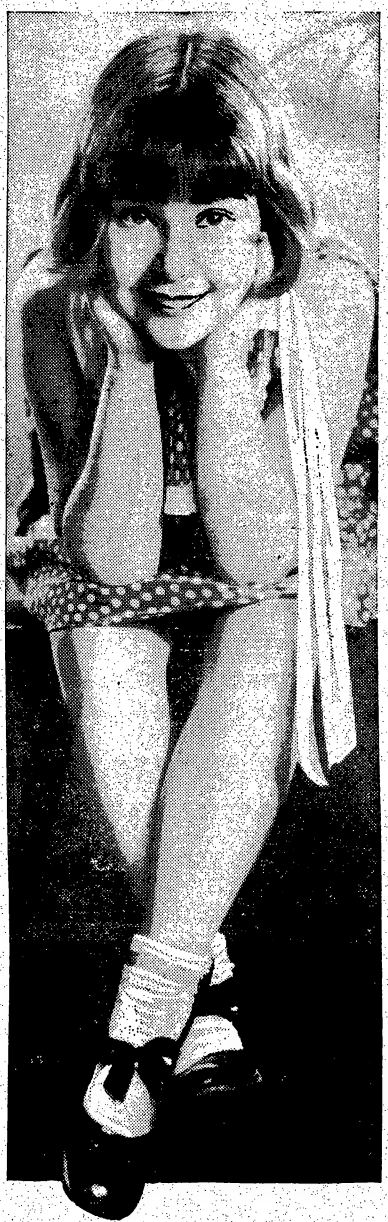
Gentlemen:-

Twenty-five years is a long time in any business.

I had the pleasure of seeing VARIETY born, and have enjoyed watching it grow. I have read every line of every issue with great interest I think you have served all of show business with a deep understanding and a trust that has been inspiring.



You have been a guide, a teacher and a faithful parent.

Long may you live and prosper!

Faithfully yours,

Joy Leblang

To the newspaper that for 25 years has earned and held the love, respect, friendship and confidence of everybody

Says

KENO and GREEN

Parents of

MITZI GREEN

We've learned all that in the 25 years we've been trouping—and watching "Variety" grow towards this 25th anniversary of the world's greatest weekly newspaper

And "MITZI," celebrating her first year in show business, and her ninth year on earth, knows and believes it, too

We all wish "Variety" continued health and prosperity, and we'll say this again when he celebrates "Variety's" 50th anniversary twenty-five years from now!

Think "VARIETY" Is

THE WORLD'S GREATEST TRADE PAPER

Equipped throughout with comfortable, acoustically correct American Seating Company Chairs

So your Patrons may enjoy the play or movie infinitely more . . . RESEAT!

"Came the talkies" . . . sound reproduction to synchronize with photography. Theatres dressed up . . . another era dawned. Beauty, harmony, comfort and acoustical perfection. Sound without reverberation, without echo. That is what the public asked of theatres.

So, American Seating Company saw a modern problem. They undertook acoustical research. They found that chairs of certain types have greatest sound absorption. That seats could aid the ear—as well as make for comfort and beauty.

And soon the motion picture industry found that chairs meant more than physical comfort—more than beauty to harmonize with the design and decorative charm of interiors. That to attract patrons—to keep them coming to the theatre, new sound equipment was not enough. New chairs were needed . . . chairs whose acoustical properties brought to their audiences the speaking or singing voice—clearly and undistorted.

To many, reseating—the replacing of old chairs with new—corrected sound distortions, and brought the bigger box office receipts that new sound equipment failed to bring.

A chair of this type was installed in the famous Chicago Civic Opera House. Full upholstered back, spring edge seat and Moderne Standards. A triumph in building into theatre chairs maximum absorption values. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

Free...This Booklet—"Acoustics and its Relation to Seating"

Our booklet, "Acoustics and its Relation to Seating," will show you how correct seating has a direct bearing on the number of people that patronize your theatre regularly. Our Reseating Engineering Service is at your disposal, without obligation. The facts are available. Just address Department V4.

TO SILVER HAIRED VARIETY SIME:

Sweetheart:

I knew you at your birth - when you were TEN years old you were raising all kinds of H---- getting in Dutch with everyone more or less connected with the Theatre - at FIFTEEN everyone of your competitors were plotting your destruction - at TWENTY you got a strangle-hold on them all - and now at TWENTY-FIVE you have the field all to yourself. Now, Sucker, as you seem to know everything, answer these questions:

1. What do you think of the report of the Vice-President of Postal Telegraph Company, wherein he says we ought to have 15 more theatres in New York?

2. What is your reaction on the Equity ruling about English actors?

3. What do you think of the Theatre League?

4. Do you believe with me that Joseph Leblang is the biggest asset the Managers and Theatre League have?

"5. Where are the motion picture producers going to get from five to six hundred talkies a year."

6. When am I going to produce my next Hit?

7. Why is MOVIE-OF-U the Biggest sensation in the last Twenty-five years, not even excepting "VARIETY"?

Love, kisses and heartiest congratulations.

A. H. Woods

P.S. Confidentially, I expect to have at least one or two hits before you reach Thirty.

Santa Fe
Fred Harvey

Most famous in the Transportation world

Santa Fe trains and Fred Harvey meals are talked of among travelers the world over. And Santa Fe rails reach from Chicago, through the storied southwest, as far as sunny California. You leave on the Santa Fe and arrive on the Santa Fe. Important midwest cities in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas Gulf Coast ports, as well as inland centers, not excluding the fast growing Panhandle region, are served by this mighty system. In brief, the Santa Fe serves twelve great states. No wonder travelers go the Santa Fe way. Yet the service and food always exceed their expectations—for they commend Santa Fe and Fred Harvey to their friends. In this way Santa Fe-Fred Harvey have won international fame.

Besides other service, there are six daily trains to California: The Chief—extra fine, extra fast, extra fare; there is no extra fare on the California Limited or Grand Canyon Limited, nor The Navajo, Missionary or Scout. Certain trains stop at Fred Harvey dining stations for meals—other trains carry through diners.

Travel information will be gladly sent you.

GREATEST ADVANCE SINCE COMING OF TALKIES!

New Process NOISELESS RECORDING

Noiseless Recording means talking pictures with all undesired sounds barred out. No humming, hissing or scratching noises mar the pure tone of recorded speech and music. Every word and note sounds natural, clean-cut, true to life!

• • •

This revolutionary New Process — developed by sound engineers through years of study —marks a great step forward in the perfection of talkies. Its introduction is just one more indication that Western Electric is fulfilling its promise to the motion picture industry: to continually improve apparatus and methods and to make these improvements immediately available to producers and exhibitors.

ERPI Producer-licensees have already installed equipment for Noiseless Recording. They are now making pictures by this New Process. The first—a Paramount production entitled "The Right to Love" and featuring Ruth Chatterton—will be released this month. You will immediately recognize the extraordinary difference.

• • •

Noiseless Recording will still further increase the popularity of talking pictures—build box office for you—attract new patrons to your theatre —bring old patrons oftener! They will demand pictures recorded by this new method.

• • •

And remember—Western Electric reproducing equipment delivers sound exactly as it is recorded. That is why only Western Electric apparatus can do full justice to this wonderful New Process Noiseless Recording.

NINETEEN THIRTY marks the realization of the crowning ambition of my life--the founding of my own publishing company MILLER MUSIC INC.

The step I have taken has not been without its tinge of regret, since it has necessitated my severing a most pleasant association of over fifteen years with HARMS INC. and MESSRS. DREYFUS during which period the American Theatre, of which we are all a part, has made the most important advancement in its history.

In forming my own firm--which is an INDEPENDENT concern in no way connected with nor obligated to any motion picture or other publishing interests--my purpose is to continue to carry on the finest traditions of our craft.

Signs of returning prosperity are all about us. Let us work together in a common cause--the creation of better shows, better songs, better orchestrations, and the return of "Personality" to the business we love.

Sincerely yours,

What Makes Comfortable Travel . . . ?

Not luxurious equipment only.

For behind the clean, smooth and easy travel you enjoy on the Great Northern is a great transportation system which affords, among other comfort features, the following:

- Lowest pass through the Rockies.
- 1200 clean miles behind super-power electric and oil-burning locomotives.
- Rock ballasted and oiled roadbed.
- Minimum curves and grades.
- 8-mile Electrified Cascade Tunnel.
- Electrification of Cascade District.
- Special Pullman Equipment.
- Locomotives with plenty of reserve power.

Like the gay lounge of a fashionable hotel is this Specially Equipped observation car. Comfortable, commodious—it is a luxurious vantage point from which to view the most beautiful scenery in America.

My Dear Sime:-

Please accept my heartiest congratulations on "Variety's" Silver Anniversary. The service it has rendered our profession is surely deserving of the heartiest and sincerest commendation.

The first light I ever saw in "Show business" was through "Variety." The criticism said "Big-time timbre with Small-time material;" "Variety" was right, a new act put me in show business. Later, "Variety" made me realize the possibilities of the Movie Houses; "Variety" was right again. Your policy has been fearless but honest. Your reviews on presentations are more helpful to me than a dozen advice sheets sent from the office. Your reports on business throughout the country on pictures and attractions are invaluable.

If any man in the theatrical profession can be a success without reading "Variety," he must be psychic.

Wishing you continued success, good health and all the happiness you deserve, I am,

Most cordially yours,

Ed Lowry

DEAR SIME:

After taking "Variety" for nearly 25 years, it maybe unfair to say how we feel. And now this advertisement at regular rates besides! Do you ever pay to go into our theatres when you so often annoy us by coming to New Orleans?

So long.

If there are any good wishes around you like best, pick 'em out, stamp our names on them and they are yours, for keeps, too.

So long, again.

Here's a great 1931 for everybody in the show business.

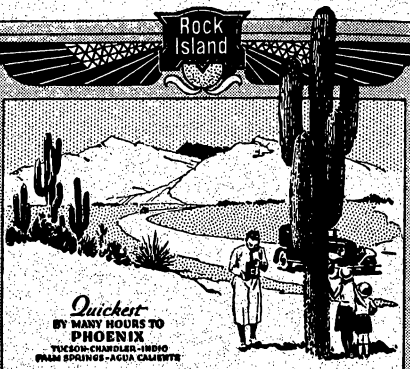
I don't know "Variety" for 25 years, but the ten years I do know "Variety" have been for me the most profitable of my career.



I feel that due to the knowledge of the business of the theatre I have gained thru reading "Variety" regularly and the world-wide exploitation I have received thru my "Variety" advertising has been no small factor in my success.

During my periodical trips abroad, in London, Paris, Berlin and other continental cities and resorts, "Variety" has brought the theatre of the world to me and was my sole antidote for nostalgia.

With my compliments and best wishes for many, many more successful years.

NOW MAKING PERSONAL APPEARANCES

FRANK RICHARDSON

EVERY year we make a canvass of our theatres to ascertain which paper, whether trade paper or newspaper, in the opinion of the managers has the most valuable and reliable information as far as the operation of the theatre is concerned. "VARIETY" always tops the list. To a man, our managers depend more upon "VARIETY" for general theatrical information than they do on any other publication.

OUR bookers look forward to Wednesday to get the "VARIETY" nearly as much as they look forward to pay day to get their pay checks. In correspondence we have had with our managers most of them say "'VARIETY' is my bible of the theatrical world."

FROM my own experience I find that I get more reliable information in "VARIETY" than I do from any other source.

WE congratulate "VARIETY" on its past performance, and feel reasonably assured that because of its progressive management it will continue to become more and more depended upon by all who seek theatrical news.

ALLISON and FIELDS

Chicago's Champ Lobby Act Kids Standees 7 Hours a Day

Chicago, Oct. 14.

Lobby acts, in de luxe picture houses, take it from Allison and Fields, have anything but an easy life. Couple have been entertaining the standees in the Publix-B. & K. Chicago for the past year. During the time they have developed a number of new ideas as to how to amuse a leg-weary mob.

It is quite a different thing to make a gang laugh when they are sitting in comfortable chairs or trying to pull smiles when they are standing on each other's toes, and waiting for pews. To offset the handicap Mary Allison and Irvin Fields have memorized 1,600 pop and classical songs they can render in full.

A few days ago a woman came in and asked for a number that floored both. Fields asked the customer to wait a moment, while he dashed across the road to a music store. Back in the lobby the two rendered the song.

It illustrates how far lobby acts go to please.

Six months ago, when the two retired, their dreams were all of "A Cottage for Sale." Today they are going through the same agony with "Little White Lies," which is the request number of every other customer.

A Week's Work

How hard they work after 12 years in vaude is shown by last week's record when they sang 50 songs an hour for a week's total of 42 hours.

Fields makes himself a m. c. in the lobby, mingling with the waiting customers and asking them for their favorite numbers.

A wise cracker in the group becomes meat for him, with most of the gags being worked up from song titles. Gagging idea is going so well with the t'andees that the couple are thinking of planting a stooge or so to help pull the laughs.

Once the crowd has given a hearty ha, ha, according to Fields, the rest is easy. From then on the folks try to wise crack each other and all becomes merry, and they get a spell off from warbling.

Originally Allison and Fields opened in a lobby act at the Publix Northshore. Here they built up their routine, getting attention and plenty of invitations from wealthy homes, most of which were accepted.

Confidential

When the Chicago came along both were against it, figuring a Loop mob harder than the homers in the suburbs.

Now after 365 days' work in the new spot they have steady friends who stop on the way out to tell Fields exactly what they thought of the performance inside.

Some like the picture, some the stage show, but most have a kick or so.

According to the team, the life beats vaude, although the hours are tougher, being six on week days and seven on holidays.

Lines, in the average lobby, according to count of these two, have to stand 20 minutes. This gives the couple a short space to get friendly, which is pushed hard.

NOW—house managers who want to correct faulty hearing conditions in their theatres the safe, easy, low-cost way, turn to Balsam-Wool Acoustical Blanket.

Balsam-Wool is the scientific sound-absorbing material used in thousands of large and small theatres all over the country. It kills reverberations, echoes, "dead spots" enables audiences to get maximum enjoyment from performances, helps amazingly to increase box-office returns.

And—Balsam-Wool Acoustical Blanket is sanitary, clean, chemically treated against vermin, and durable.

See the representative from your nearest theatrical supply house. Let him show you where Balsam-Wool should be applied in your theatre. In some theatres it need only be applied to a few areas of the walls and ceilings to get maximum results.

JOHN GOLDEN

Lots of people can't tell you who is Speaker of the House or who was President ten years ago. But they all know Will Rogers. "Lightnin'" runs a hotel for lovely ladies who've given their husbands the air and are getting Reno-vated. Great character. Lazy, good for nothing, liar, drinker, but lovable. High hilarity, but pathos too. Bigger than "They Had To See Paris" and "So This Is London."

Oh, FOR A MAN!

with

JEANETTE MacDONALD
REGINALD DENNY
WARREN HYMER MARJORIE WHITE

Directed by Hamilton MacFadden

When she saw him she was like a tigress that has just tasted meat. She wanted him. Everything else could go hang. What a woman!

The PRINCESS and the PLUMBER

CHARLES FARRELL

MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN H. B. WARNER

Directed by Alexander Korda

By actual test Farrell is most popular male star today. This is as romantic and beautiful as a castle on the Rhine. The flaps and boy friends will go for it strong.

RAOUL WALSH'S

THE MAN WHO CAME BACK

with

JANET GAYNOR and CHARLES FARRELL

Together again, that mighty box-office team! Story that tears the heart right out of you. In sincerity, beauty, emotional appeal and tremendous dramatic power it is a revelation. Here's one of the touch-the-top attractions of all time. From play by Jules Eckert Goodman and John Fleming Wilson. Screen play by Edwin J. Burke. Settings by Joseph Urban.

MEN ON CALL

with

EDMUND LOWE

MAE CLARKE WILLIAM HARRIGAN

WARREN HYMER

Directed by JOHN BLYSTONE

Lowe, a sell-out everywhere, as a Coast Guardsman. Tough as the timbers of a ship where women were concerned until he heard the one heart-call. Women who wanted to be won and those who didn't. Hymer gets big laughs as usual. Action.

UNDER SUSPICION

with

LOIS MORAN J. HAROLD MURRAY

J. M. KERRIGAN MARIE SAXON

Directed by A. F. ERICKSON

Fine actionful, romantic story of Northwest Mounted Police taken amid mighty peaks of Jasper National Park, Canada. Murray's personality and gorgeous voice plus Lois Moran's beauty and warmth. Worth a dollar of any man's money just to hear the song of the Mounties, "Saskatcha."

FOX

1931 belongs to FOX

THE SEAS BENEATH: George O'Brien, Marion Lessing, Warren Hymer, Wm. Collier Sr., Walter C. Kelly. Directed by John Ford. The first "he and she" romance revolving around submarine warfare and "mystery ships." Breathless naval battle.

PART TIME WIFE: Edmund Lowe, Leila Hyams, Tommy Clifford, Walter McGrail. Directed by Leo McCarey. How to take a tired husband and make him a fiery lover. Delightful domestic comedy and romance. Story by Stewart Edward White.

THE SPY: Kay Johnson, Neil Hamilton, John Halliday. A dramatic thunderbolt. Love, treachery and sacrifice under the "Tcheka" the dreaded secret police of Soviet Russia. Directed by Berthold Viertel.

ONCE A SINNER: Dorothy Mackaill, Joel McCrea, John Halliday, C. Henry Gordon. Directed by Guthrie McClintic. Is a girl's past her own? Should she tell?

FAIR WARNING: George O'Brien and Louise Huntington. Directed by Alfred Werker. A dead shot, a demon horse, a dog. Tamed by a woman.

THEIR MAD MOMENT: Warner Baxter, Dorothy Mackaill, ZaSu Pitts, Nance O'Neil. Directed by Chandler Sprague. Up to the minute American girl falls for fiery Basque.

SQUADRONS: (temporary title) Charles Farrell, Elissa Landi. Directed by Alfred Santell. War hero runs afoul of woman spy. Mystery drama with big war background.

A CONNECTICUT YANKEE: Will Rogers, star of "They Had To See Paris," "So This Is London" and "Lightnin'," all outstanding. With Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Albertson, William Farnum, Myrna Loy. Directed by David Butler. Great cast in story from Mark Twain's famous novel.

CHARLES FARRELL

Right at the onset Charlie Farrell yearned for Hollywood—in Onset, Mass. He followed his hunch until he was "on set" in Hollywood. Even Charlie's home town sounds like a movie tone.

Young Farrell paid his way through Boston University selling real estate. With this ideal training for California, he joined a vaudeville act and headed west. When he reached Hollywood, he decided he'd gone far enough and started bruising his knuckles on studio gates. He was down to his last dollar when he made his first one.

From one of the mob to one of the stars was a short trip with no stop-overs for Farrell. He has the flair for romance that makes feminine hearts flutter. And how the feminine heart does enjoy a good flutter!

When Frank Borzage was casting for "Chico" in "7th Heaven," he saw Charlie and looked no farther. The rest is history—box office history.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS TO "VARIETY"

OFFICES OF
SAM H. HARRIS
MUSIC BOX THEATRE
239-247 West 45TH Street
NEW YORK CITY

December 12th, 1930.

My dear Sime,

I thought I'd be able to duck down to Palm Beach before I was held up for the usual half a page, but one of your private spies popped out of a closet yesterday while I was arranging for transportation and I signed on the dotted line.

I don't need an ad in your darned paper. I couldn't sell any more seats for "Once in a Lifetime" (now playing the Music Box - matinees Thursday and Saturday) if I took a full page every week. You can't do more than sell out. You know that as well as I do and that's what we've been doing with this play ever since we opened. And "Oh Promise Me" (now playing the Morosco Theatre) is running it a close second.

They say it's a bad season. I wouldn't know about that. I'm not taking any more chances, however. The Palm Beach express leaves in half an hour. Just keep that "over $23,000." line standing in the Music Box announcement every week and say an occasional nice word about "Oh, Promise Me" (phone the box-office for seats - Lackawanna 2520 - if you can't get them, call Jake Shubert.) It's really one of the funniest plays I ever produced.

Always Your Friend,

Sam H. Harris

Good Luck, Sime

FOR twenty-five years Variety has been the ready tongue, the strong arm, the fighting viscera of the whole far-flung amusement world.

ITS uncompromising lingo, its faithful defense of show people, the incorruptible veracity of its columns, have made it the Bill of Rights of the profession wherever entertainment news is read.

VARIETY'S triumph is essentially the triumph of its editor. The show world which owes so much to both cannot do less than make Variety's Silver Anniversary jubilee a personal tribute as well as a public function. Good luck!

Dear Sime:

There should be a special niche to "Variety" in Times Square, for it is here that the whole world finds the spice of life which "Variety" serves to distribute.

Here's to its Golden Anniversary.

December 15, 1930

Dear Sime

It is difficult for even so ardent an admirer of "Variety" as myself to express how indispensable the busy theatrical producer finds its concentrated reports of theatrical news.

In the old days, theatre news was disseminated largely by word of mouth in theatre lobbies, cafes and restaurants, and was usually distorted and inaccurate, as well as incomplete. Incidentally, the more of a home-lover one was, the less informed.

"Variety" has changed all that.

Without distortion, it reports the essence of what is happening today in the Theatre of the United States, Europe, South America, Australia, Asia, and Africa. In a single hour's perusal of "Variety's" pages, one is put in touch with all the really important news of the entire theatre world.

Long may it prosper!

LAURENCE SCHWAB and FRANK MANDEL now have in preparation "America's Sweetheart" by Fields, Rodgers and Hart, with Bobby Connolly in charge of production. This musical play is scheduled to open at the Broadhurst Theatre early in February.

In July rehearsals will start for "Beauty Be With Me," a musical storietta by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Frank Mandel, with a score by Sigmund Romberg.

In August a new musical play entitled "Never Mind Steve," by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Laurence Schwab, with music by Richard Whiting, will go into rehearsal.

Other plans will be announced.

Congratulating
VARIETY
on its quarter century of true Service

Overfrequent use may have cast a cloud on the word "service", but the article itself is unlikely ever to be abundant enough to be a drug on the market.

Through twenty-five years, Variety has fully and effectively devoted its energies to serving the intimate interests of the highly specialized theatrical field. Through 75 years Crane Co. has striven unceasingly to serve the public through its field of plumbing, heating and piping.

Perhaps two more dissimilar provinces would be hard to find than that of Variety and that of Crane Co. But the success which has made of each a national institution is proof that genuine service, wherever found, is a force that succeeds.

Dear Sime:

Although you and I have usually been on opposite sides of questions growing out of the theatre, it is a pleasure on an occasion like this to congratulate you on Variety's Silver Anniversary, and at the same time to record the fact that you were always a fearless protagonist for the right as you saw it, and for the "underdog" in the show world. These human qualities are in my judgment the basis of Variety's preeminence in theatre journalism, and may it continue on to its Golden Anniversary.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Sime:-

I've got a farm up in New Hampshire with four wells, all gone dry, and it is going to cost me $600 to dig a new well. Two hen-coops full of hens had to burn down the other night, destroying everything. One of my horses has black water, and I had to shoot another one on account of a broken leg. My old man had his pension taken away from him. My kid was found down in the basement of the school smoking cigarettes and was expelled. My wife lost her fur coat and three diamond rings. Equity came along with a padlock, putting me out of business, and now you come along with a Silver Anniversary for a hundred and fifty dollar Ad.

My dear Sime:

I'm told by one of your blackmailing henchmen that you are about to have a twenty-fifth anniversary and it's the first time in twenty-five years that I have had a chance to tell you what I really think of you. But on second thought I better not say it, because I know you are a great friend of Al Capone, and besides I understand that stew-stuff around the Variety office don't go.

Nevertheless, I've got to be honest and confess that no paper in my time devoted to the theatre or to the theatrical profession has been as beneficial and as great an asset as Variety.

In addition to this, I would like to add for your benefit, a fact, I am sure you are not familiar with, that the Selwyn Theatre, where "Three's A Crowd" is now playing, has matinees Thursdays and Saturdays, and has not had an empty seat since its opening. It's one of the thousand mistakes you have made about a show since the publication of Variety.

My kindest and best greetings,

Dear VARIETY:

I congratulate you on your twenty-fifth birthday. How times flies! It seems only yesterday that Bill Brady and myself were making our first big gesture, LUCKY SAM McCARVER, and you were cheering for us.

Through the succeeding seasons VARIETY continued a staunch friend, a sound critic, and a splendid expression of show business. I am happy to add my sincere praise on this - your silver anniversary.

The year 1931 finds you the vital and respected organ of the show world; and me, under my own banner, basking momentarily under the shade of the VINEGAR TREE - with more producing plans than ever.

Two plays have been purchased for spring tryouts and next fall production. Knowles Entrikin's A GRACEFUL GENERATION I have had for some time. The other, recently acquired is a farce-comedy, ANYTHING TO PLEASE, by Russell Medcraft and Sheridan Gibney.

The THIRD LITTLE SHOW is also scheduled to have its Broadway premiere April 30th.

Then just in case Mary Boland, star of VINEGAR TREE, should some day need a new play, there is the comedy, HOPE HAVEN, by L. G. Lippman and Philip Dunning.

Long may you wave!

Most Sincerely,

Dwight Deere Wiman

Dear Sime:

So this is Your 25th ANNIVERSARY ..... What of it? In this quarter of a Century you grabbed off a lot of grey hairs, I connected with a stomach ..... You will have to worry about the collections for this ad ..... I am sure of my salary from RKO ..... I married a shrimp that made me kennel master for a Pom, you were taken for better or worse by a Red Head who presented you with a Son who has to rewrite your stuff. You claim to be a critic .... Your column, "DUSTING THE ATTIC," proves that you should have been a janitor. For the last ten years I had to put up with your synthetic English. I lived through Hannen Swaffer, I suffered Granlund (NTG). The cracks by the "SKIRT" have made my home life miserable .... "Bige" on Vaudeville is doubled in Spades, and GREASON on finance has made a bum of my vacation bankroll .... And THAT EUROPEAN RUNAROUND bird is wise—he stays on his side of the deep and salty—and I should offer you congratulations .... Here they are .... NUTS.

Love and Kisses

Dear Sime:

I knew you when you published "Variety" from a bird-cage in the Knickerbocker building. Your staff consisted of Al Greason (Rush), Johnny O'Connor (Wynn) and Joshua Lowitcke (Jolo).

You spent most of your time holding up the back rail at Hammerstein's Theatre. Your paper sold for a nickel, four cents too much. The only English you ever spoke was "What's New" and "Nuts". You used to kid the A.K.'s (How does it feel now?). You first committed grand larceny by increasing advertising rates and sales price. You developed a Charley-horse dodging process servers, but I like you just the same.

TEX McLEOD

Des Moines "Times," Nov. 23:

"TEX" LOSES CHAPS AND ROPE, BUT GETS BY" AT ORPHEUM DESPITE THAT

Des Moines may be the turning point in the life of Tex McLeod, who is spinning the rope and telling yarns at the Orpheum theatre this week.

In coming to Des Moines, his trunk with cowboy equipment and ropes got lost, and Tex appeared at the Orpheum theatre yesterday morning wondering just what he could possibly do.

For some years he had been trying to get away from the comparison of his routine with that used by Will Rogers. At a local hardware store he purchased a rope, and appeared at the matinee in street clothes.

The rope was stiff and Tex missed his chaps and other baldricks which stamp him as a cowboy. When the act closed, he stated that it was one of the worst performances he had ever given, but Tex added that he got the best hand he had received in a long time.

"It took me until yesterday to find out that I didn't need the props utilized by most of the rope spinners, and I think I am getting away from the Will Rogers' comparison," he declared.

Tex was a cowboy down in Texas before going into the show business and at the rodeos he specialized in the wild horse race, winning championships at Cheyenne and other meets. Willard, the pugilist, started him in the show business.

UNEMPLOYED Testimonials

I have been out of work for three years. Am an experienced Snow Letter Downer and have let down snow on some of the biggest scenes ever staged at the FOXY. Nobody is using snow scenes today and I curse the day that I lowered my first flake. Signed, I. Pilot.

Things are lousy in my line. I was official Zipper Inspector of all Prop Horses playing the Mutual Wheel for ten years. As soon as the two men would get into the prop horse, I would close up the zipper in the side and the artiste inside, after getting my okay, would rush on the stage and convulse the patrons. Efficiency men, hired by Mr. Dermmett Callahan, have reduced the personnel of all prop horses, to one man. The horses are much smaller and button up the front. Meantime I am out of work. Signed, G. Whiz.

My line is terrible. For years I was the man who whistled in the balcony when the cowboys mounted their horses in front of the saloon to chase the Mexican who had eloped with Nell. Since they have stopped making Westerns, I haven't whistled in a theatre for months. If you have lost a dog, I will whistle in your neighborhood reasonably. Results guaranteed. If you want a deaf girl to turn around as she passes you on the street, give me a try. Signed, John Shrill.

I have been a Wind Effect Worker for twenty years. I have appeared back-stage in every leading theatre in the country with my machine. I have faked every type of wind—from light zephyr effect to full strength typhoon. Since the talkies reproduce the natural winds, there is no work for me these days. Anyone wishing wind effect for summer resort or ventilation effect for new hotels, kindly write immediately. Signed, Wm. D. Smith.

Science has never discovered

WHAT GIVES THE ONION STRENGTH?

But common sense tells you that

PICTURES MAKE THE PICTURE BUSINESS!

Talk doesn't mean a thing—it's product that counts!

A lot of so-called "experts" flood the industry with printed matter every day—but it doesn't bring a nickel into your box-office!

LEO says:
"The Year's end is a good time to cast accounts. You'll find that from the start of 1930 until now, I have delivered the highest average of money-makers."
LEO Of M-G-M

REMEMBER?

Last summer when the industry was up against it for good pictures M-G-M came through with "Divorcee", "Caught Short", "Romance", "Let us Be Gay", "Our Blushing Brides", "Big House"—and a flock more!

AND NOW WHEN YOU NEED GREAT SHOWS—

—the holiday season is here!
—conditions are getting better!
—the public wants entertainment!

LEO COMES WITH DIAMONDS!

MARION DAVIES in The BACHELOR FATHER

Richly human, uproariously funny. Another "Let Us Be Gay." Based on Belasco's stage hit. With Ralph Forbes. Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

GRETA GARBO in INSPIRATION

(Turn over please)

(The hits continue from the preceding page)

Lawrence TIBBETT Grace MOORE in NEW MOON

With Adolphe Menjou, Roland Young. Book and lyrics by Arthur Hammerstein, 2nd, Frank Mandel and Laurence Schwab. Music by Sigmund Romberg. Directed by Jack Conway.

MARIE DRESSLER POLLY MORAN in REDUCING

With Anita Page, Lucien Littlefield. Directed by Chas. F. Riesner.

JOAN CRAWFORD in PAID

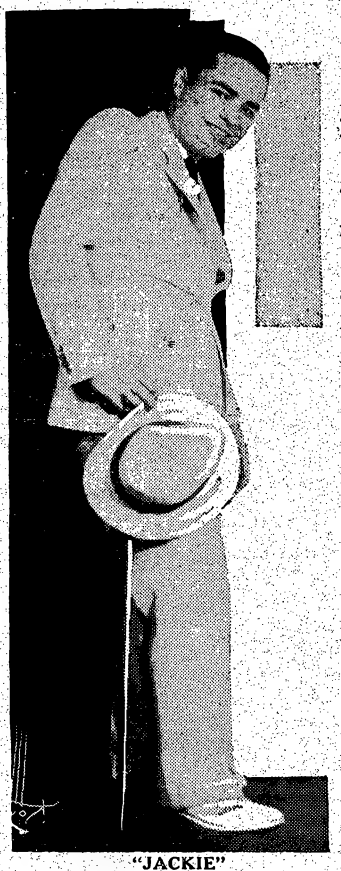
Based on Bayard Veiller's play "Within The Law." With Robert Armstrong. Marie Prevost. Directed by Sam Wood.



Adam had the right idea when he said:

"LET'S TURN OVER A NEW LEAF!"

Resolve to show only the Best pictures in 1931—that means

"JACKIE"

Dec. 20, 1930.

DEAR "SIME":—

Just a few words to congratulate you on the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of your "little" pamphlet, "Variety," which is rapidly becoming the outstanding theatrical medium. You can't miss. Knowing you knew me before my first birthday, it's a real pleasure to wish you the continued success you deserve. I am now completing a very successful R-K-O trip arranged by my manager and European pal, Jack Curtis. I will be back at the New York PALACE THEATRE April 11th. Drop in and see me, will ya? I expect to return to Hollywood this summer and make a picture, story by my first vaudeville author, Eddie Cantor. Would write more, but I'm on any minute. So, with best wishes for 25 more Jubilees, we are

Your sincere pals,
My Mother, KATHRYN,
My Wife, MARY,

CODE

They said it would be TREMENDOUS. It IS!

When authorities versed in screen values said "'The Criminal Code' will make a TREMENDOUS picture" it was a prophecy.

Columbia has created a screen classic which is a memorable achievement. Its casting was an inspiration; its treatment and direction were flawless.

It is a prediction fulfilled.

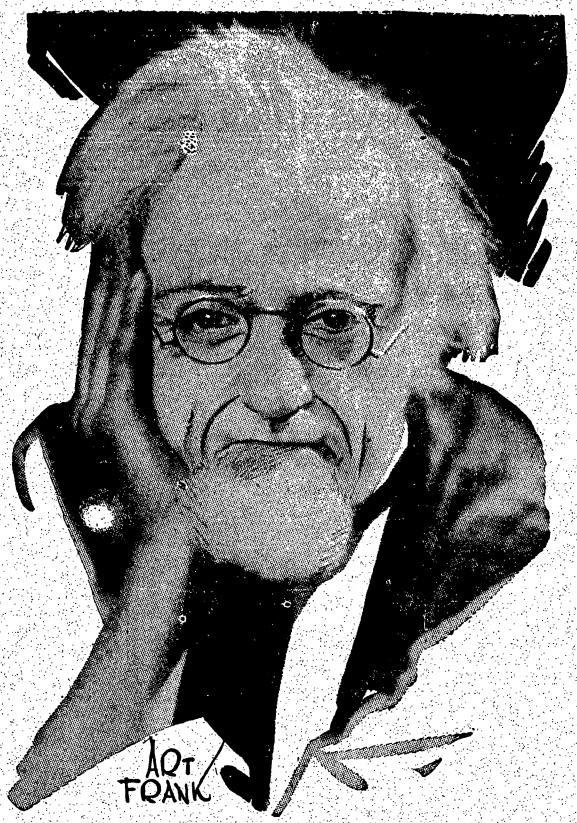
Here Y' Are, Folks

Merry Holiday Greetings



Hope Ev'thin'll be Fruitful for ev'yone nex' year

Be an Optimist. An Optimist is a feller with whiskers who'd rather take it on the chin than get it in the neck cuz he can't face his neck. Worry frightens more people than bad dreams. Anybody kin remove the proverbial stone in the road.

When things went wrong with my act I was obliged t'make changes. I had to cancel a week, closing at the Chester Friday. Wrote new material Sunday; engaged new principals Monday; rehearsed Tuesday; opened at Jefferson Wednesday. Big hit till Friday; resumed route Saturday; and here we are. All's riot for the western front.

PATHÉ

is happy that

——It has produced a greater percentage of big box office successduring 1930 than any company in the industry.

——Ann Harding, Constance Bennett and Helen Twelvetrees, and their sensational successes in "Holiday," "Sin Takes a Holiday" and "Her Man," and the distinct hit of Eddie Quillan in "Big Money" mark an epoch in motion picture production.

——The unparalleled record of continuous hits is admittedly the result of the far-seeing creative genius of E. B. Derr and the able staffworking under his personal supervision.

——That record is an assured promise of many more productions of superior standard for the coming year.

coming for 1931

BILL BOYD in "THE PAINTED DESERT" • HELEN TWELVETREES in "THIS MARRIAGE BUSINESS" • ANN HARDING in "REBOUND" • CONSTANCE BENNETT in an Ernest Pascal story "LONELY WIVES" with Laura La Plante, Edward Everett Horton, Patsy Ruth Miller and an all star cast

Carrier offers THEATRES COMPLETE air-conditioning service

THE world's the stage for motion-picture interests today. A theatre owner may have houses in England, South Africa, India or France, as well as the United States.

To give such owners initially—no matter how far-flung their interests may be—complete and dependable systems of Manufactured Weather in any theatre, and at all times a reliable maintenance service, the Carrier Engineering Corporation offers through its Theatre Division and associated companies an organization of offices and representatives on six continents.

Wherever a system of Manufactured Weather is installed, Carrier assumes full responsibility, not only for its erection and successful operation at the time it goes in, but also for future contingencies that may arise.

To carry out that pledge, the Theatre Division offers a regular maintenance service in principal cities of the United States. Through their associates, Carrier Engineering Company, Ltd., the same type of service is offered in England, South Africa and India. Another associate, Carrier Continentale, takes care of France, and Carrier Lufttechnische Gesellschaft services Germany and Central European countries. In Japan, the Oriental Carrier Company, Ltd., is at your service. In addition Carrier representatives are located in Cuba, Australia, South America and China.

This "next door" maintenance service of our Theatre Division will continue expansion here and abroad along with the motion-picture industry. This is one of the outstanding reasons why more Carrier systems of Manufactured Weather have been chosen for theatres than all other kinds of air-conditioning equipment put together.
